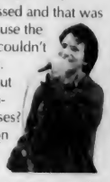
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Pearl Jam's new album barely passed and that was only because the reviewer couldn't say worse. What about other summer releases? See section B.



ARTS & LIVING p. B1

On a team decimated by graduation, senior Kara Green remains a prime-time scoring force. Catch her and the rest of UMass sports in section C.

SPORTS p. C1

Volume CVII Issue 1 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, September 6, 2000

Profs boycott Follett

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

A group of professors is organizing an unofficial boycott against the Textbook Annex and University Store in an effort to protest the recent privatization of the bookstores at the University of Massachusetts.

While sources will not confirm the identity of the professors, records indicate that during the summer, a letter was distributed by the Graduate Employee Organization to the faculty community asking for their support in not encouraging students to buy textbooks at any retail bookstores on campus.

On July 1, the University transferred ownership of the Textbook Annex and University Store to Follett Higher Education. It was agreed that approximately a quarter of the revenues generated would go towards the University. At the same time, Follett guaranteed that University employees would have the option of remaining University bookstore employees or become Follett employees at their current salary and years of service. They also guarantee a 50 percent buyback for used books.

Phill Olson, manager of the University Store, said it is Follett's policy to guarantee the lowest prices.

"If they find the same product in the local community at a lower price, we guarantee to match or beat the price," Olson said.

Nat Herold, manager of Atticus Bookstore in Amherst, said he believes the Annex should be run by and for students and faculty at the University. According to him, Follett doesn't offer the lowest prices and he knows of professors who will order their textbooks through his store just to avoid dealing with the Annex.

"I know of at least two professors who asked Follett what they would sell a book for and Follett gave them the higher price," Herold said.

For Jennifer Lee, manager of the Textbook Annex, this is the first time she has worked under Follett and she said it is a concern to see this kind of organizing by professors.

"Faculty are going off-campus to order books and it's not convenient for students," Lee said. "We haven't addressed the central issue of the boycott; we are making the annex available for staff and faculty to see things aren't going to change that much."

Faculty and staff were given the opportunity to attend an open house at the Annex on August 30. According to Lee, it is Follett's hope that after noticing the consistency of prices and increased service for students, professors will be encouraged to order their textbooks on-campus.

However, Herold said he doesn't believe most professors and faculty make their book ordering decisions with the students' interests in mind. In fact, he said most professors don't really care much about it.

"I think that a lot of the professors who ordered at Textbook [Annex] did so out of ease rather than for student's interests," Herold said. "I personally don't care where people order their textbooks but I think where they order them should be for a reason rather than because it's there and the most convenient."

But Professor Emeritus of Psychology John Donahoe said professors would order their textbooks with the company that will generate them direct revenue.

COURTESY AUXILIARY SERVICES

A group of University professors has joined together to boycott the newly privatized Textbook Annex

"I know of two faculty members who made deals with Jeffrey Amherst Bookstore to buy only new books and that way the faculty member who wrote the book would get royalties for the purchase of the book," Donahoe said. "If the book is bought used, they won't get any [profit]."

In addition, he said the Textbook Annex makes more profit by selling students used books instead of new. When a book is returned to a used book company, the student is only credited a small portion of the original price. Donahoe said this allows for the Annex to sell it back to a student at a greater price than it's worth.

"Jeffrey Amherst would sell students both used and new books at a lower price than the Annex and that's why I've always used it," he said.

According to Donahoe, he said he wouldn't be surprised if professors were going behind their departments' backs and pocketing the profit they make off their books. Some departments specify that all personal profit made on books should go towards educational purposes.

"If they [Annex] tell the faculty they will purchase new books, the faculty will start ordering books from them," Donahoe said.

Meanwhile, Olson said the disturbance would not prevent his business from moving forward. He did not wish to comment on whether Follett would bring litigation charges against the University pending an official boycott.

Croci, sophomore, dies in accident

A University of Massachusetts student is dead and another is critically injured after a five-car accident on the Massachusetts Turnpike ended in tragedy.

Peter J. Croci, 19, of Southborough, died Monday Aug. 14 at approximately 12:15 p.m. when a sport utility vehicle heading west on the Massachusetts Pike near Grafton jumped the guardrail and careened into the oncoming eastbound lane, striking Croci's truck.

Police reported that both vehicles were slammed under an oncoming tractor-trailer, which split the SUV in half and pinned another car against a guardrail.

Police said Croci and the female driver of the SUV were pronounced dead at the scene.

Croci's passenger, identified as 18-year-old Jennifer McCormick of Natick, is listed in critical condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester.

McCormick had just graduated from Natick High School and friends say she was anticipating attending UMass this fall. McCromick met Croci this summer as a waitress on Cape Cod. Croci was working as a boat builder and at a golf course nearby. According to friends, the two began dating and her college choice seemed perfect. The pair was returning to Natick from a concert in the Berkshires when the accident occurred.

"She was very excited about coming and looking forward to being in the marching band," Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin said. "Both families are devastated and right now are focused on Jennifer's recovery."

Croci was born in Framingham, the son of Paul and Doreen (Johnson) Croci of Southborough. A graduate of the Class of 1999 at Algonquin High School, Peter was co-captain and pitcher for the Algonquin High School varsity baseball team that participated in the 1999 State Championships at Fenway Park.

Croci lived in the Southwest Residential area and had just finished his freshman year at the University.

Donations can be made to the Pete Croci Memorial Sports Scholarship Fund, Westborough Savings Bank, 53 West Main St., Westborough, MA 01581.

- Jason Trenkle

COURTESY MAPQUEST.COM

This stretch of Route 90 near Grafton was the site of the fatal accident involving UMass sophomore Peter Croci.

Students, RAs brace for housing shortage

By Jason Trenkle and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is faced with a larger housing shortage than last year with almost 400 students still seeking permanent housing.

Meanwhile, UMass housing officials maintain that they will not turn temporary living spaces into permanent spaces.

The housing shortage is being attributed to the greater demand by upperclassmen for on-campus housing. Housing Services has projected that 11,038 undergraduates have requested on-campus housing, but the system only has 10,691 permanent spaces. This doesn't include the large demand by graduate students for on-campus housing. However, the increased demand for housing is a new cause of over-crowding, as the problem has generally been over-enrollment at the University.

For example, last year's housing shortage was caused by the University being swamped by a larger than projected freshman class. However, while projecting the number of admitted students that will enroll is no easy task, Joseph Marshall, dean of enrollment services, said UMass is expected to have 400 fewer freshmen compared to a year ago. UMass decided to enroll fewer students this year in an attempt to prevent problems similar to the housing problem that was faced last year.

This is similar to the problem that Northeastern University located in Boston, Massachusetts in currently facing with a housing shortfall of over 600 students enrolled in the University. The school blames technology failure for the problem citing that PeopleSoft, a software system common to many colleges and recently implemented at UMass, as "losing" the tally of the students. The school is currently resorting to temporary housing in order to deal with their current shortage, and is currently placing students into temporary triples.

To accommodate the shortage, Housing Services has decided to use some of the same methods used to accommodate the lack of housing spaces last year, as well as coming up with new ways to try to more efficiently deal with the problem at hand.

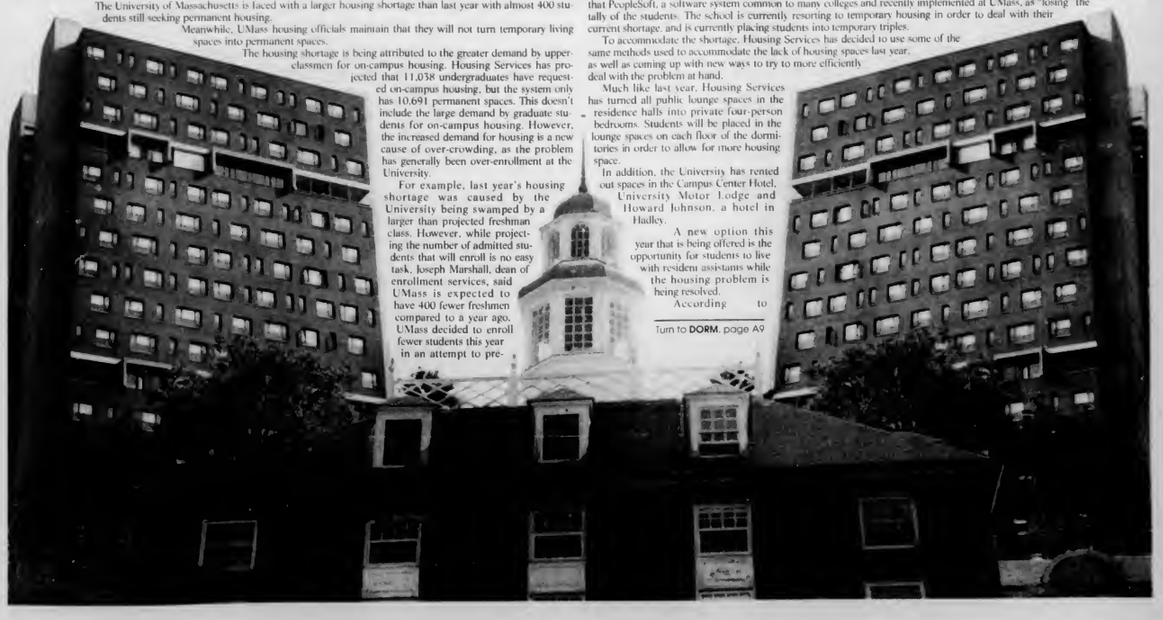
Much like last year, Housing Services has turned all public lounge spaces in the residence halls into private four-person bedrooms. Students will be placed in the lounge spaces on each floor of the dormitories in order to allow for more housing space.

In addition, the University has rented out spaces in the Campus Center Hotel, University Motor Lodge and Howard Johnson, a hotel in Hadley.

A new option this year that is being offered is the opportunity for students to live with resident assistants while the housing problem is being resolved.

According to

Turn to DORM, page A9



ATTENTION:

JUNIORS SENIORS GRADS FACULTY & STAFF
FOR THE BEST DEAL ON CAMPUS
CHECK OUT

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Eat in any of the Dining Commons or in your favorite campus retail food outlet.

Bluewall, Hatch, Coffee Shop, Snack Bars, Starbucks

For more information: Call the Meal Plan Office 545-1362 or visit our table on the concourse from 11:00 am to 1:30 pm

YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

UMass listed as "anti-male"

'Anti-male' campuses
a. Antioch College
b. Brown University
c. Columbia University
d. Dartmouth College
e. Georgetown University
f. Oberlin College
g. University of Massachusetts Amherst
h. University of Michigan

Friendlier campuses for men:
a. California State University-Long Beach
b. Davidson College
c. Illinois Wesleyan University
d. Indiana University
e. Lewis & Clark College
f. Princeton University
g. Vanderbuilt University
h. Washington & Lee University

source: Men's Health magazine

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

According to an article printed in Men's Health magazine, the University of Massachusetts is listed as being one of the 10 worst campuses in the nation for male students.

The report is based on a survey of students and professors about campuses that are unwelcoming to men. The criteria used in assessing universities in the nation consisted of evaluating the strength of the Women's Studies Programs and sexual harassment policies.

This kind of thinking is what Steven Botkin, director of the Men's Resource Center, terms as being "old fashioned" and "bullshit."

"It makes it seem like just because there's a Women's Study Program at a school makes it a threat to men," Botkin said. "As if having a policy on sexual harassment is somehow anti-male. It's embarrassing people would think that."

According to Men's Health, these universities regard men as drunken, horny predators.

"We're not an unfriendly school to [illegible] Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos said in a Globe article.

"According to Men's Health, these universities regard men as drunken, horny predators."

According to some students, the effect of the assaults that streamed across UMass last fall may be a contributing factor as to why some men feel the campus is anti-male.

"It's tough being a guy around here," junior English major Ryan Girard said in a statement to the Globe. "You get dirty looks from girls all the time."

Carol Wallace, director of the Everywomen's Center, said it is their attempt at the center to work for a safe campus for both men and women and building healthy relationships.

"I would hope that we work to create a safe campus for everyone and create a climate I hope parents would see as being beneficial to both their sons and daughters," Wallace said.

Some men said they are made to feel uncomfortable when university orientation programs warn them of rape and harassment as problems on campus. Chris Bombardier, a senior bachelor of music at UMass, recalled attending the New Students Program and having student counselors warn women to be on guard constantly, something he said was unfair to the men.

"I would hope that the fact that we do a good job reporting campus crimes would not be seen as a negative," Wallace said. "Part of promoting a safe and healthy campus is addressing sexual assault and other violent crimes."

"The only men it would be threatening to are the ones who might be abusive," Botkin said referring to sexual harassment policies being anti-male. "Sometimes we end up feeling threatened about things and we're trained to fight back."

According to Botkin, the strength of the women's movement and the fact that women outnumber men enrolling and graduating today has led some males to feel that they are being out numbered by "male-bashers."

"The article was very biased," Botkin said. "One thing they said about pro-male schools is that they have equal ratios of males to females and approximately 17,000 tanned coeds."

However, Alan Charles Kors, a professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania and co-author of The Shadow University, wrote against the women's movement saying that universities are to blame for placing men under false light.

"We believe your sons are the sexist, privileged beneficiaries of a system of patriarchy, and for massive taxpayer subsidies or $30,000 a year, we'll assign them unequal rights," Kors wrote mocking political correctness in college advertising.

Kors reflected on what so many universities are stressing to males: when engaging in relations with members of the opposite sex, males risk being criminalized unless they follow the rules of a detailed playbook in associating with women.

"Verbal consent should be obtained with each new level of physical and/or sexual behavior in any given interaction, regardless of who initiates it," an Antioch College student code reads. "Asking 'Do you want to have sex with me?' is not enough. The request for consent must be specific for each act."

"Because of the way we socialize, some men and women don't always understand what constitutes sexual assault," Wallace said.

While this may seem uncomforting for some males, Wallace said they are necessary in helping students make the correct choices.

"Because of the way we socialize, some men and women don't always understand what constitutes sexual assault," Wallace said. "Our intent is to give information to people so they can make the right choices. It's not to make people feel uncomfortable or point fingers."

"I love you" rape leads to $10 million lawsuit

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A $10 million dollar lawsuit has been filed against Hampshire College for inadequate dormitory security following the rape of a former student.

A female resident of the College, awoke in her room in Enfield dormitory in 1998 to find a stranger in her bed next to her. The woman, who was a 21-year-old junior at the time, testified at the trial that she believed the man to be her boyfriend.

She explained that she began having sex with the man but then realized that he was not her boyfriend when he said, "I love you." She testified that her boyfriend had never said those words to her before.

The man continued to have intercourse with her after she asked him to stop, she explained in her testimony, and she was finally forced to push him away from her. After turning on a light, she identified the perpetrator as 22-year-old Erik A Davis of 152 Pendleton Ave. in Springfield, a man that she had previously seen on campus.

Davis was found guilty of raping the woman by a Hampshire Superior Court and was sentenced to two and a half to four years in prison.

According to witnesses, Davis entered the room of a male housemate earlier that evening without permission, and was also found in the room of another female student. The student found that her bed was messed up and her bureau drawers were pulled out when she returned home.

The victim explained during her civil trial that she had left the door to her dorm room unlocked in order to allow her boyfriend to enter the room. She claims in her suit that the College was lax in its security and failed to protect her due to the fact that they had neither locks nor alarms on the outer entrance doors to their dormitories. She also accused the College in her suit of not taking action to deter crime in the future.

According to a statement made to the Union News, Boston attorney Jeffery A Newman, who filed the suit in Suffolk Superior Court on the woman's behalf, explained that he felt that the woman should have the right to expect more adequate security on campus.

According to the article, Newman argues that there is a "substantial violent crime" in Amherst due in part to the presence of the University of Massachusetts. As a result, he said the students should have the expectation that the school will protect them.

"They don't have (outside) doors that self-close and lock, which is the standard in the industry," Newman said. "Hampshire College can't believe that it lives in isolation."

Security measures at Hampshire College consists of a campus security force that has officers trained at State Police academies, but because they aren't a police department, they do not have the same kinds of jurisdiction that a campus police department has.

The University of Massachusetts has its own security measures for dealing with crimes on campus. Last year, the UMass Police Department was faced with alleged reports of students being sexually assaulted on campus. However, even with the high reporting rate on the campus, in the past three years there have been no reports of students suing the University in regards to campus safety issues.

Some of the security measures provided by the police department include nightly dorm security, walking escorts and escort vans, and 24 hour locks on all dormitories with key access.

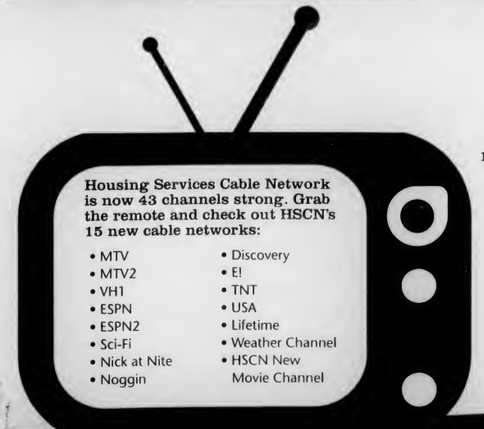
These security measures have led University officials to believe that the campus is making efforts to clamp down on its "ZooMass" party label that has curbed its reputation.

UMass officials have shut down numerous fraternity organizations for alcohol violations and enforced a zero-tolerance policy for underage drinking in the residence halls.

Hampshire College officials declined to comment about the safety measures on their campus.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

Housing Services • UMass Amherst



Housing Services Cable Network is now 43 channels strong. Grab the remote and check out HSCN's 15 new cable networks:

- MTV
- MTV2
- VH1
- ESPN
- ESPN2
- Sci-Fi
- Nick at Nite
- Noggin
- Discovery
- E!
- TNT
- USA
- Lifetime
- Weather Channel
- HSCN New Movie Channel

YOU ASKED

for more sports, more music, more weather (you did?), better channel surfing, more movies, more cool stuff, more fun.

WE DELIVERED.

Questions? Programming ideas? HSCN Movie Channel suggestions?
Call Housing Services Telecommunications, 545-2103.

Great TV at UMass Amherst. Thanks to SGA and Housing Services.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

After all, this is a student newspaper

It's the start of a brand new school year, and with this new beginning comes, inevitably, news.

Good news, bad news, right news, left news and as always, The Daily Collegian will be here to cover it.

But this isn't last year's Collegian, and for incoming freshmen, it isn't this summer's Collegian. Everything from our look to how we hope to do things is changing.

However, these changes can't be completed simply because we will them too. We need others to participate in these changes. You might now find yourself asking how.

It all depends on how you want to participate, we suppose, but here are a few suggestions.

-Why be on the outside looking in when it comes to campus news? You don't just have to read the newspaper; you can be a part of it. We're hiring in practically every department. If you're interested in taking photographs, writing stories, laying out pages, selling or designing advertisements or editing, we have a job for you. Feel free to come down to our offices and ask around.

-Why let us dictate the news when you can tell us? Feel free to call us (545-3500), fax us (545-3699), email us (thedailycollegian@yahoo.com), snail mail us (113 Campus Center Basement, UMass, Amherst, MA, 01003) or just come down to our office and talk to us. We don't know what's going on with you unless you tell us. Is your club hosting a speaker, having a performance or doing community work? Contact us for coverage.

-Why simply get mad at us when you could tell us what's wrong? Please feel free to voice your complaints with the newspaper because this year, some important things will be changing. We are challenging ourselves to cover more of what's really going on and to make that coverage more diverse.

Did we miss something?

Please contact us and tell us or feel free to write a letter to the editor. If you don't agree, that doesn't mean you shouldn't be heard. Contrary to some accounts, we are not an elitist organization that shuns outside ideas.

Furthermore, keeping an objective stance on such a wide array of topics, day in and day out throughout a school year can sometimes be very difficult. It has been said that our coverage of certain ongoing issues has sometimes taken on a slant, that we have on occasion leaned a little too far to one side or relied too much on one particular source in a story with many diverse angles.

Well, that's where we need your help. If you think there is an aspect or viewpoint that we're missing, the answer is simple: let us know! Too many people spend too much energy criticizing this newspaper to an audience of their peers, ranting and raving to individuals who, quite honestly, can't do a single thing about it. Why not use one of the above-mentioned avenues and take your pot shots directly at us?

To tell you the truth, we find it rather humorous to walk through the Campus Center Concourse and watch people shaking their heads and muttering curses at the newspaper staff. Come on, people! What good is that going to do you?

The bottom line is this: we will never know what we're doing wrong unless someone like you takes the time to tell us. So take this as a suggestion, or even a challenge. If you think the Collegian could be better in any way, yet you'd rather not get involved and fix it yourself, at least have the guts to speak your mind.

Adam White is the Editor-in-Chief and Sam Wilkinson is the Managing Editor of the Daily Collegian.

Adam White Sam Wilkinson

Making sense of an election

Speaking as neither a Democrat or Republican, but merely as an individual with a passing interest in the politics of this country, I must admit that the conventions held by both major political parties this summer were my first true means of exposure into the beast that is "Campaign 2000." The Ghosts of Conventions Past had left me indifferent and bored with the election process; candidate after candidate have been dangled in front of us before, like lifeless puppets whose eerie grins and empty promises hold the American people captive.

Matt Despres

The conventions of 2000 did little to sell their product to me, but were effective as a primer as to what topics these parties will be addressing (or side-stepping) in the next two months. In no way do I pretend to be well versed in the details of this election, in fact, I'll readily admit that the political process is a foreign entity to me. However, I was able to turn off the television with a much clearer picture in mind of why my interest in both major parties is such a distant one.

Al Gore is a legitimate candidate in the sense that his most important asset is the one thing George W. Bush can't produce: eight years of White House experience. While performing his Vice Presidential duties under Bill Clinton for the better part of a decade, there is little doubt that Gore has also been absorbing every moment and further educating himself for the role of Commander in Chief. Bush may be a Governor who has promised and delivered many things to the fine folks of Texas, but nothing can put him on par with Gore in terms of the inner workings of the White House.

The inside track will not win an election, however, and Gore has a number of obstacles to overcome before even thinking about his Republican opponent. Since naming Senator Joseph Lieberman as his running mate, Gore and the rest of the Democratic Party have gone out of their way to emphasize the Senator's religious background. Through the media, we have been reminded time and again that Lieberman is the first Jew to be named to a presidential ticket. Great. Does this make him a better candidate? No. Does it make him a weaker one? No. It simply gives those involved with the Democratic ticket an issue to thrust to the forefront, as if to say, "Look, we're not afraid."

Well, that's fine too; discuss the characteristics that set him apart, the ideals that should make me get up and vote for him. Discuss his work as a Yale undergrad, when he helped to register black voters in the South, and not how he plans his holiday calendar.

Religious beliefs interest me very little when determining if an individual is fit to lead. As a country, we should be past a point where color, creed or background is a factor in determining the quality or character of another human being.

Easier said than done, I realize, but can you disagree?

The religion factor hasn't been the only issue dredged forth from the Democratic Party to raise eyebrows. If, in fact, the Gore/Lieberman ticket is such a bold duo, then why has the Senator spent a good deal of his recent time dismissing remarks he made in 1995 concerning affirmative action?

As someone who opposes affirmative action, the thought of a candidate conveniently changing their platform to appeal to a certain group, the black voters, is certainly a distasteful one. Senator John Breaux, a Democrat out of Louisiana, told the Boston Globe recently that Lieberman "is willing to challenge the conventional thinking of the Democratic Party." At one time, maybe. Now he finds his name attached to bigger politics and, more importantly, bigger headlines. Suddenly, he is going against things he believed in simply to appeal to the masses. An old political tactic, perhaps, but a cowardly one that offers him no excuse. Put somebody in the White House that stands by what they believe in.

The common link between the two parties has been, not surprisingly, Bill Clinton. While the Gore posse has been stressing how the success of the past two terms will continue with a Gore victory, the Bush camp aimed their fire at the very same time period. In his convention speech, George W. seemed more fascinated with the faults of President Clinton than he did with any of the issues raised by the man he should be worrying about: Al Gore. True, Gore was at Clinton's side during many of the crucial decisions affecting our nation. However, he is a different animal now, free from the Clinton shadow and following an agenda of his own. If Bush could focus on what's important instead of slinging unnecessary trash, he may find himself swaying some of those undecided voters.

What I find most disturbing about Bush and his Republican peers is their willingness to embrace the Charlton Heston led National Rifle Association. In the Bush camp, Moses has seemingly found his disciples for the 21st century. I'll stand up and support the right for free speech, to assemble, etc., as much as the next guy, but certainly some guidelines must be etched into the issue of firearms. Considering the Republican Party devoted ample time discussing the youth of America, you would think they would be more focused on curbing the ideals of this firearm obsessed contingent. Anyone with a television on in the past few months has been subjected to the infomercial that concludes with Heston raising an antique musket in his waxy old hand, proclaiming, "From these cold dead hands." Cast a vote for George W., Mr. Heston, and you may not be far from the truth.

So here you sit, in the wake of the conventions, entirely unsure of what both candidates are promising, but entirely sure you don't agree with any of it. Do something about it. Pick up a newspaper, punch in a URL, talk to a friend; look beyond what the media spoon-feeds you on a daily basis. The great thing about this country is that, along with our many faults, we are largely (yet still not entirely) free to choose a path that suits our personal needs best. Cut through the Bush and Gore crap, and seek out a candidate running on a smaller ticket. Ralph Nader, the nominee on the Green Party ticket, will sway both the liberal minded voters, and those simply fed up with what the front-runners have to say. Find someone that thinks like you and that genuinely seems to care about the cause they are pursuing. Invest some time out of your day to learn more about them. Some individuals use their option not to vote as a form of protest. While this practice may serve some sort of satisfaction on an individual basis, it certainly does no harm to those they are so set against. One vote, perhaps just a whisper in a sea of millions, is still a dent in somebody else's campaign. More importantly, it is a vote of confidence for those lesser-known candidates; that they will know their cause (and yours) is being supported.

Matthew Despres was a Collegian staff member.

Write for Ed/Op!

Come talk to Rob in the Campus Center Basement.

NATIONAL ZOO
GREGES: The American Child
SCIENTIFIC CLASSIFICATION: Adolescentus Outofcontrolicus
HABITAT: Close to Cover
DIET: Thrives on steady supply of media violence, parental neglect and guns
SOCIAL ORGANIZATION: Travels, hunts in packs
MARKINGS: Gang colors
STATUS: Endangering
DO NOT FEED

Letters to the Editor

Of pedestrians and drivers

Almost one-and-a-half years have passed since student Allison Lustig, 19, was killed at dusk while crossing Commonwealth Avenue. She was the last member of our campus community tragically struck and killed in a crosswalk. Since then, many more students, faculty, and staff have been seriously injured in our crosswalks.

Since Allison's death, we have seen an increase in crosswalk signage and traffic controls, and shifts in cultural attitudes and pedestrian awareness. We have all worked very hard to build a campus environment and a cultural attitude that promotes safety and respect towards one another. As our community is enriched by new faces this school year let us also start afresh promoting a culture of safety in our streets.

Aggressive pedestrians and aggressive drivers share a common disrespect for the laws of the road and for one another. Aggressive drivers feel the primacy and power of their machines. They believe they have the right to intimidate pedestrians and disregard their safety. Aggressive pedestrians have a belief in the primacy of the individual - that they come first in any environment. They avoid "Don't Walk" signs and drivers' eyes as they step in front of on-coming rubber and steel.

The bottom line is that pedestrians must do more to protect their own lives. They need to obey traffic signals - and use them - use marked crosswalks, and call a friend when they have had too much to drink. If you are a pedestrian, bicyclist, or rollerblader, do not step out in front of moving vehicles where they would be required to swerve or apply their brakes to avoid hitting you. Be particularly careful at dusk or in rainy conditions. If at a signalized intersection, push the crosswalk button and wait for the walk signal to cross. Do not join the half of all pedestrians in the Nation who ignore the crosswalk signal.

As a driver, it is a state law that you must stop for pedestrians in the crosswalk. You must stop the moment they step off the curb. If they are on the other side of the road, you must stop when they are within five feet of the centerline. You must remain completely stopped until their feet are firmly on the opposite curb. As a driver, do not stop and wave someone off the curb if you can not guarantee that the other drivers will also stop. As a responsible driver, do not create an unsafe condition into which you invite the pedestrian to walk.

Allison Lustig was a member of the band, and a vibrant, intelligent, talented and much admired young woman. I remember more than 300 people attending her memorial service at the Newman Center. As a graduate student and staff member, I appeal to all of my colleagues, especially those new to our community, to remember Allison. Act responsibly, be respectful, and help create a culture of safety in our streets.

John Mathews Facilities Planning

Minimum wage blues

I can safely say that college made me unemployable.

This is no joke, I know that there are still some fossilized professors rotting away in the way-high floors of Herter somewhere that will insist that higher education exists for its own sake and that the point of learning is learning, but most of these people probably already have heart problems and won't be with us much longer. As for the rest of us, we long ago gave up the illusion that we are here for any reason other than job training – we pay the big bucks now to get our dream jobs later, and that's it. If you asked people why they came to college, you'd hear 'good job,' 'booze-fueled sex,' and even 'my parents said if I did good they'd buy me a Jetta,' but probably nearly never would the words 'I like to learn' pass someone's lips without some serious prodding.

Rob Schulze

That's cool with me. I came to college so I could write for newspapers when I graduated. I don't really like much of the learning I do – it's a pain in my ass, to be frank, to take all these science courses and such just doesn't interest me. I enjoy certain kinds of learning, but most of these are in the area of my prospective employment anyways (which makes sense when you think about it) and don't make me any kind of general scholar. Sorry, all you professors whose hearts I've just broken, but that's simply the way it is today. I'm fairly sure I'm not alone in this, either.

Which finally brings me to my point. If the whole logic of me going to college was getting a job, why has the college experience made me totally unfit for actually working?

Well, since you've been so patient so far, I'm going to tell you. I have. I think. I been doing quite well in developing skills for employment - for the newspaper industry. I mean, I work for the Collegian, I take journalism classes, and I write all the damn time. I'm almost ready. I think, to take the plunge into that field.

That field.

The problem came when the summer rolled around and I had to actually get a job, and I was a little shaken to discover that there weren't any newspapers on their knees begging to pay me for my skills. Little-town backwater South Shore-area Massachusetts isn't the literary capitol of the world, after all, and that's where I have the privilege of being from. I ended up working at a K-Mart Garden Shop in Plymouth.

It was a bit shocking.

At school I sit around drinking water from a bottle and talking about things like layout strategies, column lengths, plagiarism, and other such intricacies (well, at least they're intricate to me). I write papers on books I've semi-read. I sleep through lectures in Hasbrouck 124. I watch a lot of Cartoon Network. This is my job training.

At K-Mart I picked up and carried damn heavy patio sets, lots of the time by myself. I ran a cash register. I loaded bags of dirt and manure into trunks. I tried to explain the difference between Dursban insecticide and Diazinon insecticide to customers when I actually had no idea myself. I took lots of crap from people who were obviously lower on the food chain than myself. That was my job.

See the discrepancy?

College has prepared me for a position of independence, management, mental exercise, and hyperintelligent computers. Reality handed me servitude, physical labor, and antiquated cash registers.

Reality sucked. I much prefer to sit around discussing War and Peace with Young Republicans in Dockers and girls who don't shave because of 'gender slavery' than to run around taking abuse from white trash on power trips because I wasn't carrying their ten thousand pound K-Mart bar set fast enough.

College has prepared me for one certain job experience – and only one. It has also made me too educated (read: arrogant) and ignorant to do anything but my one job field. Ignorant because while I was writing papers about the history of the American Federation of Labor I was forgetting the proper way to carry a heavy box, use a cutting razor, assemble a grill, be polite to a rude customer, push shopping carriages, and any number of other things that I was called upon to do in my daily life this summer. I have a high GPA, but I was totally unqualified to work in retail. I mean, I figured out what to do, but I can't shake the feeling that I shouldn't have had to, and I still don't like the feeling that it was somehow beneath me to do so.

My summer job sucked but it was, in many ways, a better learning experience than a million semesters of Gen Eds and protests. Every college student who thinks they're so freaking smart because they aced their Philosophy class should be required to work a retail job in a rural town just to show them just how stupid they really are.

And now, as this new semester grows like a hells-be-damned cancer, I can get back to my real job – falling asleep on my couch watching The Powerpuff Girls.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Adam White Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1944. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

GOP squelches McCain

Someone said to me, "hey, there's Bill O'Reilly," an odious television 'reporter' from FOX news whom I greatly despise. I turned to look over my shoulder, but I kept walking forward. Straight into a short, white-haired man.

Sam Wilkinson

I was then pushed out of the way by reporters and cameramen who clamored for a shot or an answer. By the time I went to apologize, he was hidden behind a wall of stocky men. He smiled while people called his name: "Hey John!" or "Mr. McCain, over here."

It probably didn't feel like it then, and Republicans still don't feel like it now, but John McCain was the possibility of his party, his cross-party appeal redefining his party. But the speech he delivered at his party's Philadelphia convention? It was an awful reminder of what party politics have become.

Since his speech, the honorable Arizona Senator has announced that he has melanoma, a skin cancer that will hopefully disappear as quickly as it appeared. The short white-haired senator, quick with his tongue and true to, mostly, himself, will (I hope fight) his current ailment much harder than he fought George Dubya Bush.

McCain, a man who brought a new issue to the forefront of election politics, campaign finance reform, has been on the campaign trail for the younger Bush, pushing for the election of daddy's President. But he certainly can't mean it, all of those pro-Bush superlatives, can he? And if indeed he does mean it, what does that say about where our nation is heading?

When strong thinking ideologues of any party cave to the needs of the overall party, what happens? The party doesn't suffer, that's for sure.

Republicans have done quite well for themselves on the national front, and while their hold on the House of Representatives is up in the air, their assault on the White House is looking like a somewhat, maybe sure, thing. At least it was anyway. Suddenly, Bush's once insurmountable lead is shrinking, and in some polls, it's gone all-together.

McCain, in his push for campaign-finance reform, touched on a proverbial nerve of the American politic: the corruption of the people sent to Washington to represent us.

Pharmeutical companies, logging companies, computer companies, cigarette companies, gun companies, and God-only-knows what other companies, they run our government. Sure, we'd like to believe that the people we elect are voting for us, to better our lives, but we never really contributed that much to their campaigns, did we?

No, and McCain knows it. And on a solid stump of reform, he started talking about the issue, and the centrist groups in the United States started listening. He won in New Hampshire on his stump; which, truth told, was some sign of his campaign's imminent death. For all the importance of that state, the last two winners of the primary haven't gone on to be president. Steve Forbes and now John McCain: big New Hampshire winners who ended up losing bigger.

After that message and his win in the North, McCain bitterly battled Bush until finally being knocked out on Super Tuesday, the message, however, had been sent. All of Bush's dollars might by him his bid for the presidency, but McCain could win on substance, not just money, and substance is a serious threat to a man with none of his own.

Popular substance is, arguably, even more serious when the major ideals of a political party don't really appeal to enough of Americans to win such things as Presidential elections. Its funny how Republicans push for states rights, and their main appeal is generally on the state level: see Congress, don't see the last two presidential elections. As this country has swung slightly left, the hardcore Republican stalwarts have had a serious problem, and Bush's money and his ability to mask his own conservatism as centrism is the current solution. But the problem is, it is only being masked, for Bush is still conservative.

After publicly saying he supported abortions in some cases, he came out against any and all abortions in front of his delegates. He will barely discuss the issue of homosexuals. One of his main goals is a powerful military force to fight off our easily countable enemies. All of that neverminding that he is running with a vice-president whom Newt Gingrich praised as voting to the right of himself, a man considered to be amongst the most "right" without being Pat Buchanan.

But McCain's the issue, not Cheney, and McCain, for all of the appeal for his message, for his ability to with on his substance, now meekly endorsed George W. Bush for President. He first started doing so after Super Tuesday, but his convention speech was the icing on Bush's cake, a thorough endorsement of a man he once hated.

Campaign finance reform? Try telling that to Bush, a man with a party in which one in five delegates was a millionaire. A key issue that appealed to Americans? Stick a fork in it, it's done.

The once great short white-haired man was reduced to pawn like support of the new king. He could only shill for a man that he once despised, simply because it would benefit the party.

Perhaps this is indicative of the greater problem in American politics: the lack of true leaders. Where are the great leaders who stick to their guns and win elections? Have they truly gone the way of the dodo bird?

Of course, there are a few of them out there. People such as Paul Wellstone and, don't laugh, Jesse Ventura of Minnesota, and Angus King of Maine, but, besides Ventura, how many people have heard of these leaders? There are more of course, but where, and who?

And would it matter? True ideologues have started to cave under pressure from parties desperate to win majorities and the presidency. The importance of ideological independence is being shitted to the importance of party loyalty. While that great benefits the Grand Old Party and those "sick."

Liberals, the American people end up losing, as it isn't about issues, it's about the party.

Parties that are owned by donors, parties owned by companies, parties that have lost sight of Americans in exchange for victories.

And that's where campaign finance reform might have helped, but one thing's for sure: McCain's speech couldn't have hurt worse.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

The time has come to seize the day

Do you see yourself doing what you want in four years? Do you want to make the most out of your college experience (academically, of course)? Do you want to be taken seriously at the part-time job that provides you with alcohol money? Will you be accepted and respected in social situations? Well, these are questions that students ask themselves at the start of the fall semester. Incoming freshmen have the extra burden of figuring out how they fit into a huge university. In fact, the options are so overwhelming that many students get lost and give up. If you can relate to this, then what you need is some initiative.

Ben Downs

It is written in the Book of Boo that, "The day is for those who take it." In a shorter phrase, it is Carpe Diem, or "seize the day."

Many people live their lives within a framed context, a paradigm of personal experience. Like a box, this paradigm limits our perceptions and our ambitions to explore beyond the established system. While this paradigm can be applied to most of our experiences, it is sufficient in this specific case. Given our culture, we are encouraged to take a passive role in decision making. In fact, we often expect that someone else will make the big decisions, and likewise take responsibility for your actions. Within this enclosed way of thinking, excellent work and productivity can be accomplished, but only if someone is holding our hands. If you want to take a more active role, then you need to step beyond mindlessly following orders and think for yourself. While your participation in the greater picture is necessary, beat others to the punch when it comes to the little things. It is those little things that will separate leaders from the workers. It is those things that will make life a little easier for you and your colleagues.

At some point in our lives, we all pick up some sort of part-time job to supplement our lifestyles. Given that working on a register may not be your life, these jobs are taken less seriously. However, this is also your work experience, so what you do not do now can haunt you down the road. I've worked numerous jobs in my day, and I am still amazed at the lack of motivation. Unless you feed them directions, people either sit around looking like a fish out of water or just idly chat with friends. Not to discredit them at all, they are hard, efficient workers once you've steered them in the right direction. But the energy it takes for them to get anything done is enormous. If you want to make a great first impression, find little things to do, or at least look alert if tied down to a place. It makes you look good, it makes the place look good, and you will actually get out on time.

For all you incoming Freshpeople, I would like to welcome you to UMass. You may find things a bit overwhelming. That's perfectly understandable, given the size of this university. Beyond academics, UMass can provide additional experience in your major through RSO's and agencies. These organizations were made and are run by students who share your interest in getting the best education possible. The range of experiences is quite extensive, ranging from the media to business to social activism. Whether you are black, white, Asian, Hispanic, Native American, gay, bi-sexual, male or female, Jewish, or none of the above, RSO's provide experience to all creeds, ethnicity's, and lifestyles, while celebrating our differences. The key is to act as early in the game as possible, for experience takes time.

During my tenure as Vice-President of UVC TV19 (Student television) people would approach me about membership. That in itself is encouraged; but these students would say they were seniors, and they just realized that they might be interested in television production. Where did the time go? While changing interests and majors may result in late action, explore possibilities as early as possible. If you want to write for a newspaper, don't be intimidated and wait until you've taken those classes your junior year. Instead, come in as a freshman, and get as much experience as possible. Making mistakes when you are young is far more valuable than being trained mindlessly following orders and think for yourself. While your participation in the greater picture is necessary, beat others to the punch when it comes to the little things. It is those little things that will separate leaders from the workers. It is those things that will make life a little easier for you and your colleagues.

And would it matter? True ideologues have started to cave under pressure from parties desperate to win majorities and the presidency. The importance of ideological independence is being shitted to the importance of party loyalty. While that great benefits the Grand Old Party and those "sick."

Liberals, the American people end up losing, as it isn't about issues, it's about the party.

Parties that are owned by donors, parties owned by companies, parties that have lost sight of Americans in exchange for victories.

And that's where campaign finance reform might have helped, but one thing's for sure: McCain's speech couldn't have hurt worse.

Ben Downs is a Collegian columnist.

WE'RE HIRING FOR ED!

The inner workings of a monopoly

Welcome back, brave college survivors. How was your summer? To those of you who spent it working - I salute you! I felt it this summer on my own skin - studying all year and then working all summer takes guts. Thank you for making it.

I worked for Fleet this summer. Most of you probably have Fleet ATM cards. How do I know this? Because Fleet is a monopoly in the New England area.

The creation of a monopoly is the goal of any reasonable businessman because an owner of a monopoly can maximize profits and minimize costs, all without losing customers, since the customers have nowhere else to go. On the other hand, from the view of the public, the process of monopolization hurts consumers and employees.

My usual partner, bad luck, was with me. I was thrown in during the largest conversion in the banking history. In the midst of the mayhem my job was to migrate angry, troubled customers to the channels of the bank that would be able to assist their problems. I was thrown, with minimum training, into a storm, with a tsunami coming at me. It was quite an experience. I saw, face-to-face, all the problems that I previously read and heard about. And, since most satisfied customers didn't come into the branch, I was not able to see the positive aspects of the merger.

My experience with the bank was negative. It was like a summer-long nightmare. Every day I had to go to work. I dreaded getting up. When I crossed the threshold I was expecting somebody to jump at me with guns or insults. Some of those expectations were supported by reality. The branch environment is such that police often come in to restrain angry customers, people strip and relieve themselves in the Federal Street branches, note-passer robberies are frequent, and every tenth customer wants to sue the bank.

Fleet Bank's Massachusetts District Manager painted a completely different picture for us at a meeting with interns at the end of the summer. At the end of the internship he addressed us with his theory on competition. Before beginning his lecture, he said that he didn't give this information to us in the beginning of the internship because this was not information he wanted us to relay to the customers. As he explained this, I the room getting smaller. There was a feeling, in the air, that some secretive information was about to be passed down to us from some wise and all-knowing source.

He spoke in a steady voice, looking at the projector for guidance.

"We are not running a charity - we are running a business. BankBoston, by offering a free checking account, went under and became so vulnerable that it was sold."

As he said this, the room was quite, and dozens of young eyes were looking at him as the enlightened guru that would lead them to riches and corporate success if they followed his teachings.

"Our current business model shows that if we got rid of the last 30 percent of our customers we would be rid of the customers that are using our resources the most, but are contributing the least money. If we got rid of them we would be in about 130 percent profitability."

Evidently he was saying that if we could only get rid of the customers that are doing the least business with us then we would be so profitable that he would be even richer. His eyes were sparkling as he described the possibility of gaining a 130 percent profit. But the sparkle faded as he made comments that the bank needs to look like a bank that cares about all the little people and social welfare. And, in order to do so, the bank needs all people to feel prompted to keep their money invested. So the bank's fantasy of simply dumping the lowest 30 percent can't be enacted into reality, the District Manager sadly concluded. But, he continued, "fees are there to change customers' behavior." The fees, you see, make the customers get negative associations with certain banking practices and make them behave differently.

Anna Faktorovich

His ideas were supported by graphs of profitability and by his high, respectable post in the banking world. He made the masquerade seem natural, or acceptable. He gave his audience what it wanted to hear. After a summer of hearing hundreds of customers insult the bank in every possible way, all I wanted to hear from him was some excuse. An excuse that would make me feel less like a sadist that spent a summer supporting a monster, but more like an average capitalist, protecting the capitalistic principles of making the largest possible profit. Now I can give myself an excuse, but I can't excuse the outcome of the victory of profit over quality.

Employees were hurt by the conversion because they had to automatically adapt to the new technology, or to the new rules, that the acquiring business brought. The employees faced angry customers. They fought them off. Like any general, the owner of the corporation simply makes the moves. The employees are the ones who see the battle and charge upon the enemy. In a monopoly employees are also forced to accept lower pay - less than $11 for a customer service representative. Many employees quit or take a vacation during mergers, so the remaining employees encounter such enormous stress and difficulties that one customer service representative once told me: "Today I served 90 angry customers. If I keep on going at this pace I'll earn the credentials to be able to get a factory job. They'll probably pay more."

Overall, the employees are dumped on, while the managers theorize on the wonders of profit.

The business world is a state of survival of the fittest by the eating of the weaker. And the strongest are always meaner - otherwise they wouldn't eat their opponents. But, once you eat and become bigger and juicier, bigger fish yet start circling you, hungry for a new conquest. If two large institutions, with two different systems, merge into one something is bound to go wrong. A bank, like a vampire, must savagely feed to survive. Although the above might seem dramatic it is a simplified reality. The lesson from this experience is: if you run a business... merge! If you work for a business and it merges... quit!

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian columnist.

What's my name, fool?

Hello everyone and welcome back, or to UMass for the first time. For those of you who have been around for a few years, you have probably read (or briefly glanced) at one of my plethora of columns in the Collegian. Others of you have probably reviled in horror at the sight of my horrendous picture that usually runs with them. Either way, I figured I would give everyone, whether they want it or not, an update on some old columns from last year. Freshmen, read carefully, there will be a quiz at the end.

Brian Lohnes

Brian, you wrote a column about investing on-line last year, what happened to your stocks?

Good question, Brian. As usual with most things I get involved in, the investing thing turned into a disaster. I bought my little stock at 90 cents a share and now it is worth (I am not making this up) three tenths of a cent per share. Thirty percent of a penny per share. Thankfully I am not a math major and I have no actual interest in figuring out how much money I am down. For the sake of argument, we will round it off to a lot.

Brian, remember when you wrote the column about a feminist speaking on campus and you looked like a big chauvinist jerk?

Actually, Brian, I do remember that. Then I remember the stack of hate mail that was directed towards me and the length of time my girlfriend wouldn't talk to me. That was a pretty crappy experience all around. I try not to be a dumb jerk, but once and a while I have brain failure and I write something totally ridiculous. That's no excuse, so I will apologize in advance for anyone who is offended my lack of ability as a writer. For more info on this topic talk to Rob Schulze who wrote a column about the marching band... a big no-no.

Brian, your parody song "Elian's Island" a take off on Gilligan's Island was great, any more songs to come?

(Whinsical laughter) Well, Brian, I don't want to get anyone's hopes up, but probably. The unfortunate thing is that it takes thought and effort to write a song like that - so don't expect it every week. The Elian column was very late last year and I didn't have the appropriate time to receive hate mail so I will have to pick a new topic to make a song about and see how many people tell me it is crap.

Is your head really that big or is that just a camera trick?

Sadly, my head is that big. When I was a wee lad, I am not making this up, I had to go to the doctor's office periodically to get my head measured because it was too big for my body. Seriously, my head was freakish. Thankfully, after my freshman year, the rest of my body swelled to bring it somewhat into proportion.

Brian, you write a lot of columns about weird news stories. Why do you read so much, are you a dork?

Ouch. Easy there, Brian, that one stung a little bit. I do write a lot of columns on "weird news" simply because I think it is funny and damn it, you should too! There is some seriously wacky stuff buried deep in the pages of the newspapers and most people don't get to see it. Plus, it makes for a good topic during a week when there isn't a real news event to make fun of.

Grand Master B, is it true that your pickup truck caught on fire on campus last year?

True indeed. Anyone that had ever seen, ridden in, or nearly been struck by "Big Red" told me that it looked like the type of vehicle that would catch fire. Luckily the UMass police/fire/rescue people were on the scene in mere minutes to direct traffic around my smoldering vehicle and then put out the fire. Incidentally, two hours later with nothing but a pocket-knife and a screwdriver (orange juice and vodka) I fired her up and drove home to Orchard Hill.

One last question, Brian. What do you want to tell the incoming freshmen?

Ah, young grasshoppers, write for the Collegian! As I have proved above, no talent is necessary and it is one hell of a good way to see how this campus works on a day-to-day basis. Scandal, sex, intrigue, and a grey suit, white sneaker-wearing Chancellor, who could ask for more? It's like a bad 1980's teen comedy! Oh yeah, one last thing, read my column every week or risk being what the kids call a "square."

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

LIFE IN HELL
©1995 MATT GROENING
STREET SMARTS FOR REPUBLICANS
BE CAREFUL OUT THERE.
DON'T BOTHER EXPLAINING HOW GREATNESS AND OPPORTUNITY ARE BASED ON EQUALITY AND FREEDOM FOR ALL
IF YOU SEE ANY SMALL STREET CHILDREN WHO LOOK LIKE THEY DON'T HAVE WEAPONS, YOU MIGHT CONSIDER OVERPOWERING THEM UP WITH THE GOOD WILL OF REPUBLICAN BEARING.
HEY, POOR KID! THERE'S NO NEED TO BE NO MORE HOMELESS! HERE'S $5, NOW GO BUY YOURSELF SOMETHING TO EAT!
IT MAY SEEM LIKE A REPUBLICAN WORLD, BUT THERE ARE STILL MANY PEOPLE WHO DON'T REALIZE THEY AREN'T NORMAL.
DO NOT SAY THIS.
DON'T SHOOT! I'M JUST TRYING TO PERFORM A TRUE SERVICE FOR DOCS!!
AVOID AREAS OF TOWN UNDER THE BUREAUCRATIC CONTROL OF THE LIBERAL GPA MAFIOSO. THEY HAVE BEEN LITTED, THE LOCALS JUST AREN'T AWARE OF IT, YET.
THEY AIN'T SO LITTLE AND BESET AND AVOID ALLIANCE REMEMBER TO BE A CARING REPUBLICAN.
BELONGS OF HOMELESS AND THE LOCAL GPA MAFIOSO. DON'T BE FOOLED BY THEIR PROPAGANDA, THEY DON'T SEEK THE BEST COUNTRY FOR THE MOST PEOPLE, THEY SEEK SEX AND ABORTIONS FOR THE RICH. IT'S ALL ABOUT THE MONEY.
STEP OVER THE HOMELESS, NOT ON THEM.

Use your UMASS ACUS Service from the convenience of your room on campus and save even more with new lower rates.

- You pay only 5 cents a minute when calling locations within the 413 area code.
- You pay only 12 cents a minute when calling other locations within the state.
- You pay only 15 cents a minute on all state-to-state calls.
- Make International calls? Get the one low rate international plan and pay one flat per minute rate to countries you can direct dial for a $3.00 monthly fee. Flat rate varies by country.
- Along with quality AT&T service, you get customer care at your fingertips 24/7 at www.acus.com. Access your account balance, current calls, rate and service information and much more. You can also view and pay your bills on-line with a credit card or you can pay using your UCard by visiting the UCard office located in the Franklin Dining Commons. Check it out today.

If you need a code to make calls from campus, call 1 800 445-6063.

UMASS AT&T

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

1000's of Choices

Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Sept. 4 thru Fri. Sept. 8
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM

Incredible Selection

CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!

MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

Welcome Back to the Town of Amherst

We always enjoy the slower pace of a summer in Amherst. But university and college students are what make Amherst a great place to live, work and play, and we welcome you back to our town - our town and your town.

Relations between the Town and the University are still at an all-time high, and University students continue to play a big part in that accomplishment. Students have always provided many volunteer services, both on an individual and a group basis. Student firefighters and EMTs have provided vital services to the town for many years, and an expanded student force is helping us meet increasing demands for service. The annual, spring "into Amherst" day has been the most visible way for large numbers of students to provide services to the town you live in, and there are others too numerous to mention. Thank you for your services to the town.

The Community Partnership on alcohol-related issues (including representatives of students, landlords, administrators of the Town and educational institutions, and other citizens) continues to monitor these issues although the incidence of alcohol-related problems in town continue be considerably lower last year than in the past. Educational efforts the University's on-campus alcohol policy certainly had an imp that may have spilled over o

However, in the final analysis it is the students who reductions in alcohol-related problems, and we th you for that. Whether it was a new University policy, awareness alcohol-related tragedies at UMass and other campuses, or any combination of factors, appears that students enjoyed college life again last year without fre quent or serious alcohol-related incidents, and we hope that will be true this year.

We again want to give you a "heads up" about parking in and downtown Amherst. We continue to take steps to make more available to meet the needs of downtown customers. At the same enforcement of all parking regulations has been increased. Please abide by parking regulations, or use the buses that your student fees pay for, or use the bicycle lanes and racks downtown.

Thanks again for being part of the Town of Amherst, and have a good year.

Select Board
Town of Amherst

Barry Del Castilho
Amherst Town Manager

Campus police earn pay raise

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

After a three year battle with the Massachusetts State government, the University of Massachusetts police officers will finally see a three percent retroactive pay raise from January of 1998.

The raise follows several months of negotiations, including a demonstration in front of the Whitmore Administration Building at which personnel carried signs asking for payment and reading, "the buck stopped here three years ago."

The officers finally got their pay raise; however the option of education incentive pay was not included in their new contract.

Both the officers and the University concluded renegotiation of the contract in May of this year, and agreed upon the pay raise and an additional education incentive pay for officers earning associate, bachelor's or master's degrees in law enforcement. This benefit is provided to many officers in similar police departments under what is called the Quinn Bill.

However, when the new contract was sent to the Legislature state government, it was held up due to the incentive pay clause.

According to a statement made to the press by Kim Renzendes, aide to House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Paul Haley, the bill itself was held up due to Haley's concerns about the Quinn Bill language.

She explained that departments that choose to fund the incentive pay would cover half the cost of the education bill with the state picking up the rest of the cost of the education. She went on to say that in the case of the UMass Police Department that the state would be left to fund the entire education of the officers.

The education incentive option is currently already offered to both Harvard University police officers and to Hampden County Correctional officers. The addition of this option for the UMass Police officers caused the increased length in negotiations due to a fear for financial strain on the state with its inclusion.

The raises, which were included on a bill that remained in legislation in the House Ways and Means Committee, were finally agreed upon in early August. The Legislature passed a bill that would allow for only $599,000 worth of funding, coming up $250,000 short of the anticipated amount. The new bill still needs to be signed by Governor Paul Cellucci.

State Senator Stanley Rosenburg expressed his displeasure in a statement made to the press when he explained that Chairman Haley did not want the UMass police officers to get the Incentive.

"Rather than not get any of this done, they decided to leave that (contract provision) in place but not fund it," he explained. "UMass police have been fighting for years to get equal benefits and treatment equivalent to municipal police in the statutes. I've been able to get the bill out of the branch I've been

Turn to CONTRACT, page A8

e-Mass in the future?

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

A distance learning proposal at the University of Massachusetts that would replace the classroom with the "cyber-room" is being met with skepticism.

The proposal, initiated through the Massachusetts Information Turnpike Initiative, is a high-speed optic fiber network that runs through the Massachusetts Turnpike. Using internet-based learning, the goal is to communicate with students around the nation through teleconferencing and video in a distance learning setting.

John Hoey, director of communications at the president's office, said the quantity of distance learning has grown dramatically. With the growing number of students who have begun a UMass education but left for one reason or another, many faculty members are taking advantage of the opportunity.

"It's an opportunity to reach thousands of people who are interested in receiving a higher degree and aren't able to travel to a campus on a regular basis, and this will enable us to reach them," Hoey said.

Students and professors skeptical of the proposal believe that online courses do not act as effective tools for learning as substitutes for one-on-one interaction. In addition, extensive distance learning might draw resources away from academic departments and, in the future, professors might become a tool of the past.

In a report put forth by the independent consulting firm Pricewaterhouse Coopers, UMass would earn approximately $93.5 million in annual gross revenues by the fourth year of the program.

"We expect this to generate 100 million dollars, which could be used to meet the core mission of the University," Hoey said. "If we do the job right, it will pay great dividends to the University and Commonwealth."

However, with an initial loss of $20 million in the first two years and the past announcement of the 1 percent academic budget cuts, the proposal is "a concern for us, because we're already looking at cuts in our academic program," Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) President Jane Giacobbe-Miller said in a Union News article.

She said MSP has concerns about where the funding would come from and believes that the report was not amended to address these ambiguities. While not opposed to distance learning, she said they are concerned about the quality of education.

English Department Chairman Stephen Clingman said distance learning could be effective if used as a tool inside the classroom.

"If (the Internet) is integrated within classroom teaching or used for some aspects of distance learning, I can understand that," Clingman said in a statement. "But if it's seen as a replacement for classroom teaching, then in my view that would be a real loss."

Hoey said it is the goal of the University to provide excellent and accessible education to the people of the Commonwealth and under no means does that include replacing classroom teaching with the Internet distance learning.

"We are going to take advantage of all the knowledge and experience that already exists in faculty members to make UMass distance learning initiative stronger and more competitive than ones out there now," Hoey said.

DAN CAVALLARI/COLLEGIAN STAFF

The straight and narrow

Two students travel through Boltwood Alley toward the light of downtown Amherst.

■ world

continued from page A18

Many Russians were outraged with the Russian military and government response to the emergency. President Putin had been on vacation and had not taken any steps to try and save the downed sub until his return, almost 5 days after the mayday had been reported.

Relatives of the crewmembers held vigils and balked at Putin's apparent apathy toward his own navy. Other world leaders were also shocked at the way he handled the emergency, claiming he had been too stubborn to ask for help, harping back to the days of the Cold War era.

Since attempts to save the sailors failed, and all are assumed dead, the next project will be the recovery of the sub from the bottom of the Barents Sea and the removal of the bodies from inside the hull. An in-depth investigation into the causes of the explosions and the sinking is also expected.

The status of Jerusalem a hot topic in Mideast peace talks

Palestinian Leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak met in Camp David, Maryland with President Clinton this summer to discuss the future of Palestinian and Jewish relations, especially in the holy city of Jerusalem.

Though the talks lasted two weeks and ended without a specific agreement being reached, Clinton did call the talks "productive" and said that progress was made on sensitive issues that divide their two peoples.

Jerusalem, the religious home to Christians, Jews and Muslims is divided almost to the point of segregation, with Eastern Jerusalem being home to Palestinians and Western Jerusalem being predominantly Jewish.

Both sides want more control over the city and disapprove of the other's governing of their people. The issue of territory also extends outside of the city into the Ghaza strip and the Westbank. Palestinians want more of the land that the Isrealis do not want to give up. There were discussions on the possible shared sovereignty of Jerusalem with Palestinians. If there were such an agreement, it would be limited, but at least it is being considered.

President Clinton looked tired after the talks ended, but not defeated. He said that the talks would resume in late August to try and reach a compromise in the city before September 13th, which is the date picked for a final Israeli-Palestinian peace agreement.

It is not clear what will happen if a peace agreement is not reached before September, but both sides fear possible militant outbreaks or even war. The U.S. fears terrorist activity in the west as well. Public opinion in Jerusalem varies, as some believe that Barak should compromise, and others think he should flush all the Muslims out of the city. Only future talks will yield a decision.

New Mexican President makes waves in Mexico City

Earlier this summer, Vicente Fox was elected the new President of Mexico, throwing out an old regime and bringing new life into the troubled country. Since his election, Fox has begun to take steps to change the political system in Mexico, and has also become involved in North American issues, including NAFTA and immigration.

Fox met with Vice President Al Gore in August to discuss Mexican-American relations and also has called for new immigration standards and an economic partnership that would boost trade in both countries. Fox also discussed anti-drug trafficking laws with both Gore and President Clinton.

Clinton Visits Nigeria

President Clinton went on a tour of Africa in late August with the intention of strengthening relations with Sub-Saharan countries, especially Nigeria. He will be meeting with President Obasanjo to discuss foreign investment opportunities and ways that the United States can help Nigeria grow through their partnership in democracy.

Multiple choice made easy.

Q: What is the best tool to get you through college and your career?

a. iMac

The iMac features an award-winning design and simple internet connectivity. The iMac DV brings students a complete desktop video solution at an affordable price.

b. PowerMac G4

The Power Macintosh G4 combines supercomputing power with student computing pricing. The G4 provides unparalleled power for its price.

c. iBook

The iBook incorporates the best-selling features of the iMac into a sleek, portable design. iBook is ideal for the student on the go.

d. PowerBook

The PowerBook offers the mobile student a power-computing option. The Powerbook's lightweight design and maximum performance make it an elite among laptops.

A: E. Any Mac Above.

www.applecomputer.com/education
1-800-795-5077

PRINTSHACK & APPAREL UNLIMITED

ROUTE 9
322 RUSSELL STREET
HADLEY, MASS
FAX. 413-586-7166

500 BUSINESS CARDS

$18.00

WHITE WOVE STOCK BLACK INK ONLY. NO LIMIT. 7 LINES MAX EXPIRES 1/1/2001

PRINTSHACK WISHES YOU A Happy Fall Season
20% OFF ANY ORDER
WITH THIS COUPON
PRINTSHACK • 322 RUSSELL ST., HADLEY • 586-7133 FX: 586-7166

Call Today
586-7133

Young voters focus of CSU campaign

By Julia Thornton
Rocky Mountain Collegian (Colorado State U.)

(U-WIRE) FORT COLLINS, Colo. – Election 2000 is drawing nearer and if some campus organizations have their way, it won't fly past Colorado State University students.

Members of the CSU Colorado Public Interest Research Group, Associated Students of CSU, CSU Young Democrats, CSU College Republicans and National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League gathered Thursday afternoon to coordinate a campus wide, region wide voter registration and education campaign. Representatives of the campus groups are organizing under the name Youth Vote 2000.

Jennifer Hazelton, a junior political science major and ASCSU Assistant Director of Student Empowerment, said the collaborative effort was the brainchild of ASCSU once members realized a number of campus groups were asking ASCSU to help with registration. Hazelton knew of even more groups who were planning a voter registration/education campaign on campus and figured it was time for all to come together.

"We're trying to split the work up, rather than have four different groups on campus tabling for the same thing," Hazelton said. She hopes the multi-organizational effort will increase outreach.

For Hazelton, the primary motive in her campaign involvement is to increase voter registration. Lesley Rinner, a chemical engineering/liberal arts senior, shares the same concern but also feels the need to protect reproductive freedom. As the campus organizer for NARAL and vice president of public relations for the Young Democrats, Rinner also wants to educate Colorado voters about "anti-choice" ballot initiatives and wants to a ensure victories for local and national pro-choice candidates, including the Democrats presidential candidate, Vice President Al Gore.

"It's such an important election year," Rinner said.

Rinner said the U.S.'s next president may be appointing two to four Supreme Court justices during the 2001-2004 term.

"Roe vs. Wade," she said. "Stephanie Gausch, a wildlife biology senior and chair of CoPIRG's State Board of Directors, said CSU CoPIRG's goal for the election is to register 2,500 voters on campus.

"That's a totally reachable goal," Gausch said, pointing out CoPIRG reached such a goal for the 1998 elections.

Cord Brundage, a sophomore in zoology and president of the Residence Hall Association, suggested delivering voter registration forms to dorm residents' mailboxes, though Hazelton questioned if the county clerk would consider the form legal.

All registration forms must be submitted by Oct. 10, Hazelton said. Hazelton informed the group of the possibility of distributing absentee ballots for voters who may be unable to reach the polls.

Gausch brought up several other ideas to the group, including campus forums, which would bring politicians to campus, encouraging students to attend off-campus forums and registering and educating eligible area high school students. Closer to the Nov. 7 elections, Gausch also suggested reminding voters of Election Day by making house calls and announcing to classes.

Youth Vote 2000 agreed to meet again at 4 p.m. Wednesday, Aug. 30, in the ASCSU offices in the Lory Student Center. Hazelton encouraged interested community members to join.

Reform party split by dual candidates

By Anne Benjaminson
Daily Californian (U. California-Berkeley)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. – The hoopla and pageantry of this month's major national conventions may have been fun to watch, but it masked the pervasive feeling that the Democratic and Republican parties lack the conflict and drama that once sparked public obsession with politics.

Just a few weeks earlier, however, a minor party made up for that lack of drama with all the staples of good old-fashioned politics - screaming delegates, late-night meetings, mutiny, and in the end, a fight for millions of dollars that only the courts can resolve. In the middle of it all, a Berkeley resident closely affiliated with the university clings to his dreams of the vice presidency.

You may not have heard of him — yet — but Nat Goldhaber is in fact running for vice president — yes, of the United States. A University of California-Berkeley alumnus, Goldhaber has a house in the Berkeley Hills and serves on the executive board of the College of Letters and Science. He has headed the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission and developed Local Area Networks, making his money in classic Silicon Valley style by creating products and selling them to larger companies such as Sun Microsystems.

In his free time, he is the running mate of John Hagelin, a Harvard-educated nuclear physicist in the midst of his third bid for the presidency. But controversy has enveloped Goldhaber's Reform Party. At this summer's party convention, Hagelin and Goldhaber supporters walked out of the convention hall in protest of another potential nominee, Pat Buchanan. Now both Hagelin and Buchanan herald themselves as the party's true nominees – a dispute that may take months to resolve.

"Buchanan is a piece of work," Goldhaber says by cellular phone from Lake Tahoe. "His tactics are reminiscent of the National Socialist Party. He thought he could take it over with brute force. He sent his goons in to intimidate the state organizations and created an alternative party, then declared it was the Reform Party. Man, it felt like the '60s."

What is left, then, are two rather large-scale campaigns. Each waves the banner of the Reform Party, founded by Ross Perot. As both parties make their way across the country on the campaign trail, officials in every state choose which one will carry the Reform Party title by pulling one name, at random, out of a hat.

Goldhaber's ticket also represents the Natural Law Party, whose platform includes an appeal for holistic medicine and meditation. His Reform Party platform, he says, is based on several fundamental tenets such as campaign finance reform.

"The principal platform is that the country has been deprived of a government that is able to make sensible, logical actions to overcome longstanding problems because they are so indebted to their special interest groups," he says. His ties to UC Berkeley become clear when he speaks of the party's educational goals.

"I have always believed that there is such spectacular intellectual capital within the university environment that it's possible to use them for profit making," he says. "Let's turn ideas into companies. One of the really fascinating issues is the power of American higher education to draw the finest minds from around the world."

He also calls for a foreign policy approach that emphasizes non-intervention.

"People around the world never hate us because we hold democracy and freedom high — they hate us because we're interfering in their internal affairs," he says. "We have to be very, very careful in how we deploy our might and how we foster the notions of freedom in the other nations."

Despite the rocky road that may very well lie ahead of Goldhaber, he is upbeat about his chances. When asked if he would enjoy debating other candidates, including U.S. Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn., and Dick Cheney — the two major parties' vice presidential nominees, he relishes the thought and says he would be "honored and pleased."

The chances of such a debate occurring, however, are slim. New rules ban all candidates from debate unless they garner at least 15 percent of the public vote in reputable opinion polls — a daunting task for most minor parties.

"Fifteen is a carefully calculated percentage which makes it impossible," he says. "It's a self-fulfilling prophecy. It's a preposterous demand and the third parties don't have an opportunity to share their ideas with the people. In countries around the world where we demand fair elections, we demand that third parties be heard in the debate — we are preposterously hypocritical."

Keep your notes to yourself: Iowa educators crack down on services

By Robin Larson
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa – Students who sell their class notes this year to Internet sites could face disciplinary action. To protect intellectual property rights, Iowa State University officials are taking a stand against Web sites that hire students to post class notes.

A new policy prohibiting the unauthorized sale of others' intellectual works took effect this fall. Students caught selling their notes can face disciplinary measures ranging from a reprimand to expulsion, according to the ISU conduct code.

Director of Legal Services Paul Tanaka said such a policy has been in the faculty handbook for about four years, but officials from Legal Services and the Office of Student Affairs decided to implement the policy in the student conduct code this year.

"Originally, it was to make sure students were aware of this rule, but the fact that there are Internet note services is a reason why we thought it was a right time to do it," he said.

Several businesses have dedicated their Web sites to providing class notes. Last year, recruiters from the Varsity.com stationed themselves near central campus and offered free doughnuts to ISU students willing to "Earn While You Learn."

Reportedly, note-takers were paid as much as $300 per class for up to two classes each semester. Lecture notes were posted on the site by note-takers for the benefit of classmates.

The selling of professors' intellectual property is definitely a concern, Tanaka said.

"It's an issue of having respect for intellectual work, which we think is an important principle in campus. We just don't think it's appropriate to profit on another's labor without permission," he said.

Some professors became upset and expressed concern about others profiting from their work.

Michael Kenealy, professor of animal science, said the sharing of notes becomes a problem "when someone is taking my notes and making a profit without a contract with me. That's my intellectual property."

In defense of their businesses, designers of the sites argued that college students were sharing notes before they became accessible on the Internet.

Barbara Mack, associate professor of journalism, had a similar take. She said that a student who posts notes on the Web is "no different from a student who shares notes in class. What's changed is that they are making money."

"I tend not to lose sleep over it, but I understand why people do," Mack said.

Matt Lischer, sophomore in journalism and mass communication, is one ISU student who has experimented with using notes on the Internet to replace going to class, although he said it wasn't worth it.

"Even if the person taking notes is excellent, it's no replacement for going to class and hearing what the professor says," he said.

Mack had the same attitude toward students who never attend class. "I think the quality of learning suffers," she said. "Students only learn what I feel."

■ contract

continued from page A7

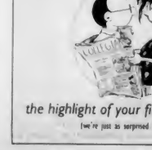
in probably seven times, but it hasn't passed in the other house, it is a real problem."

UMass Police officers, however, remained optimistic about the whole situation. Although they must wait until Governor Cellucci signs the bill before they decide on their next course of action, they are enthusiastic about the pay raise.

In a statement to the press, Sgt. Thomas O'Donnell, president of Local 4328 of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers at UMass said, "At least we're going to get our pay raises."

The UMass Police and the University are beginning negotiations for the new contract to replace the currently existing contract that expired in July.

Collegian News...



the highlight of your first day of classes.

(we're just as surprised as you are)

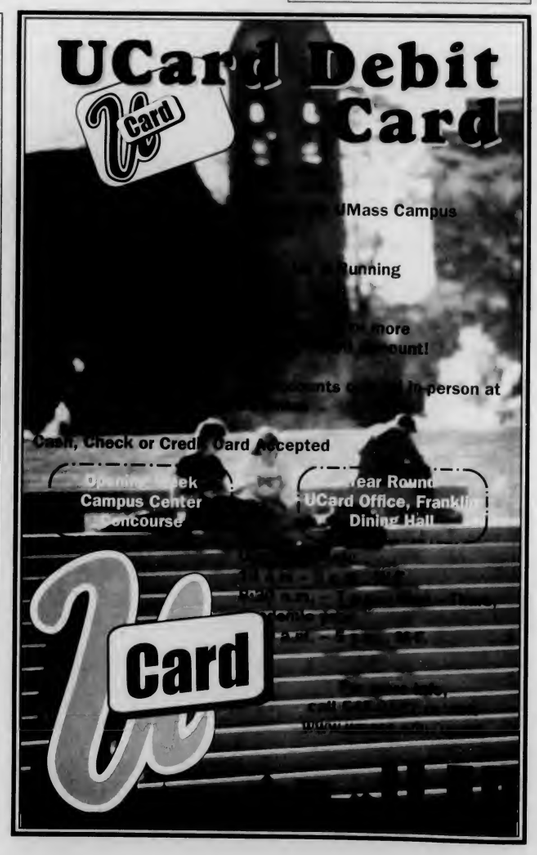
SAVE $ ON TEXTBOOKS

We Have These U. MASS Courses At Discounted Prices

UM-ACCTG-221-1	UM-CMPSCI-287-1	UM-FOREST-332-1	UM-MATH-421-1	UM-PSYCH-100-2
UM-ACCTG-222-1	UM-COMDIS-211-1	UM-FRENCH-110-1	UM-MATH-425-1	UM-PSYCH-100-3
UM-ACCTG-311-1	UM-COMDIS-313-1	UM-FRENCH-230-1	UM-MATH-431-1	UM-PSYCH-240-C
UM-ACCTG-331-1	UM-COMM-218-1	UM-FRENCH-240-1	UM-MATH-431-2	UM-PSYCH-240-1
UM-ACCTG-371-1	UM-COMM-226-1	UM-GEO-103-1	UM-MATH-431-5	UM-PSYCH-240-2
UM-AN SCI-101-1	UM-COMM-250-1	UM-GER-110-1	UM-MATH-461-1	UM-PSYCH-305-1
UM-AN SCI-311-1	UM-COMM-250-2	UM-GER-230-1	UM-MATH-471-1	UM-PSYCH-350-1
UM-AN SCI-332-1	UM-COMM-340-1	UM-GER-240-1	UM-MATH-511-H	UM-PSYCH-380-1
UM-ART-120-1	UM-CS-161-1	UM-HIS-100-1	UM-MATH-523-1	UM-RES EC-102-1
UM-ART HI-100-1	UM-CS-315-1	UM-HIS-101-1	UM-MATH-523-2	UM-RES EC-211-1
UM-ART HI-115-1	UM-ECON-103-H	UM-HIS-140-1	UM-MATH-532-1	UM-SOC-103-1
UM-ASTRO-100-H	UM-ECON-103-2	UM-HIS-369-1	UM-MATH-551-1	UM-SOC-105-1
UM-ASTRO-101-2	UM-ECON-103-4	UM-HRTA-100-1	UM-MATH-611-1	UM-SOC-201-2
UM-ASTRO-114-1	UM-ECON-104-1	UM-HRTA-130-1	UM-MATH-623-1	UM-SOC-241-1
UM-BIO-100-1	UM-ECON-203-1	UM-HRTA-150-1	UM-MATH-645-1	UM-SOC-242-1
UM-BIO-105-1	UM-ECON-203-3	UM-JAPAN-126-1	UM-MATH-651-1	UM-SOC-281-1
UM-BIO-106-1	UM-ECON-311-1	UM-MATH-412-1	UM-MATH-671-1	UM-SOM-210-1
UM-BIO-283-1	UM-ED-325-1	UM-MATH-011-1	UM-MATH-697-4	UM-SOM-301-1
UM-BIO-339-1	UM-ENG WP-111-1	UM-MATH-100-1	UM-MATH-703-1	UM-SOM-210-1
UM-BIOCHEM-420-1	UM-ENG WP-112-1	UM-MATH-101-1	UM-MATH-731-1	UM-SPAN-110-1
UM-BIOEPI-741-1	UM-ENGIN-111-1	UM-MATH-113-1	UM-MGT-260-1	UM-SPAN-120-1
UM-CEE-240-1	UM-ENGIN-113-1	UM-MATH-121-1	UM-MICBIO-160-1	UM-SPAN-230-1
UM-CEE-241-1	UM-ENGIN-113-4	UM-MATH-127-H	UM-MICBIO-310-1	UM-SPAN-240-1
UM-CHEM-110-1	UM-ENV-335-1	UM-MATH-127-1	UM-MKTG-301-1	UM-SPAN-301-1
UM-CHEM-250-1	UM-ENVSCI-101-1	UM-MATH-128-1	UM-MKTG-491-D	UM-SPAN-311-1
UM-CHEM-261-1	UM-ENVSCI-112-1	UM-MATH-131-1	UM-MUSIC-100-1	UM-STAT-111-1
UM-CHEM-262-1	UM-EXCSCI-130-1	UM-MATH-135-1	UM-MUSIC-180-1	UM-STAT-140-1
UM-CHEM-265-1	UM-EXCSCI-210-1	UM-MATH-233-1	UM-NURS-100-1	UM-STAT-141-1
UM-CHIN-138-1	UM-FOMGT-250-1	UM-MATH-235-H	UM-PHYS-100-2	UM-STAT-497-M
UM-CLASS-105-1	UM-FOMGT-250-2	UM-MATH-235-1	UM-PHYS-131-1	UM-STAT-501-1
UM-CLASS-224-1	UM-FOMGT-300-1	UM-MATH-235-3	UM-PHYS-139-1	UM-STAT-505-1
UM-CMPSCI-102-1	UM-FOMGT-301-1	UM-MATH-235-4	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-515-1
UM-CMPSCI-105-1	UM-FOGMT-304-1	UM-MATH-245-1	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-597-B
UM-CMPSCI-120-1	UM-FOGMT-320-1	UM-MATH-300-1	UM-PHYS-190-B	UM-STAT-607-1
UM-CMPSCI-201-1	UM-FOGMT-347-1	UM-MATH-411-1	UM-POL SC-255-1	UM-STAT-705-1
UM-CMPSCI-230-1	UM-FOGMT-413-1		UM-PSYCH-100-1

SELL US YOUR USED BOOKS AND GET CASH FOR YOUR NEW ONES.

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA
(413) 253-3870 253-7816



Cyber-tryst ends up in N.C. court

By Tessa Lyons
The Chronicle (Duke U.)

(U-WIRE) HILLSBOROUGH, N.C. – In a court hearing Monday, junior Thomas Jones was convicted of a class-one misdemeanor of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The ruling was a result of an April 26 sexual encounter with a 14-year-old Orange county female.

Jones was initially charged with statutory offense, a felony under North Carolina law. After consultation with the victim's family and the defense, the state agreed to a lower charge.

Under the plea, Jones will serve two years of supervised probation. If he violates the terms of his probation, he could be held under a 45-day jail sentence.

In her recommendation to the judge, District Attorney Kayley Taber recounted the events leading to the criminal activity:

After communicating with the victim online for several days, Jones arranged to meet the girl shortly after midnight on April 26. Jones met the girl outside her house at the designated time and drove her a short distance from her house, where they sat in the car and talked. At some point during their time together, the girl performed oral sex on Jones.

The conditions of Jones' probation require that he:
* have no contact with the victim whatsoever;
* perform 100 hours of community service;
* pay for the victim's therapy costs that are not covered under her health insurance;
* enroll in therapy if it is deemed necessary under his psychological profile; and
* have no unsupervised contact with juvenile females in person, by phone, e-mail, chat room.

As part of the last term of probation, Jones will be required to supply his probation officer with his computer log-ins, passwords and screen names so all his correspondence can be monitored.

Judge Patricia DeVine also said that within Jones' two years of probation, he must complete a 10-page research paper on the rising occurrence of similar offenses and the particular circumstances that distinguish his case from others.

In his attempt to convince to judge to accept the bargain, defense attorney Wood Van mentioned Jones' clean record of good grades and community involvement. Van also said that Jones' behavior could be attributed to the extremely stressful time around finals.

Van emphasized that Jones was not "roving" the Internet to meet young women, but that the victim had presented herself in a chat room designated for university students and only told Jones she was 14 after they had been chatting for several minutes. Van also made several claims that the affair was consensual, although he did not infer that this relieved his client of guilt. Van said that his client regrets the incident deeply.

The University judicial system could still charge Jones for violations of the judicial code. Kacie Wallace, assistant dean for judicial affairs, said that although she could not comment on the Jones case specifically, judicial policies and procedures permit the university to exercise jurisdiction in certain off-campus cases. Because Jones' criminal case has been resolved, judicial affairs may now commence internal procedures.

Shrinking enrollment spells doom for small schools

By Linda Perlstein
The Washington Post

OLDTOWN, Md. – The people of the isolated, rural patches of mountainous Allegany County are physically separated by miles of winding roads. But for most of the century there has been an immensely durable glue binding them emotionally.

The glue was the little brick schoolhouses, aside from the fire halls the only public buildings in what cannot convincingly be called towns.

Class portraits of the students' parents and grandparents hung on the walls. Children arrived the first day of kindergarten, learned everyone's name and walked out 13 years later with diplomas. Several grades of students were invited to each birthday party, and whole communities showed up to the basketball games - there were not enough students for football - whether or not they had relatives on the court.

Each year, though, the students at the county's three kindergarten-through-12th-grade schools - the only public ones left in Maryland - filled them only halfway. The economics of running half-empty schools were too much for the bleeding county, which loses people every year and is desperate to save money.

So at a time when suburban counties can't build schools fast enough, the Board of Education voted to close one of the schools, turn another into a K-8 school and the last into an elementary. Students will be bused elsewhere - in most cases at least an hour away.

Proponents of the school consolidations tell the students they'll be far better off, what with German class and drill team and so many other opportunities. But the people here can only think of the way of life they say is being killed.

"They ride the bus together; the big kids take care of the little ones," said Dale Lease, a parent of twin high-school students and a graduate of Mount Savage School, where classes will now end with the eighth grade.

"Everyone knows each other. Give it five years and I won't know my neighbors." Added Michael Shaffer, who's reluctantly heading into Cumberland for 11th grade: "School's pretty much all we got."

A sign above the front door of Oldtown School reads: "No frills, no hassles, no kidding."

There were three kids in last year's junior class, or four, or five, depending on whom you ask. Freshmen learned algebra from a teacher across the county in their distance-learning lab. All the elementary students were taught in one big room, separated by wall dividers. Teachers, many of whom were alumni, taught subjects they knew and subjects they didn't. If a book fell apart in a student's hands, it was glued back together.

This year, the school, which drew just 260 students from Allegany's southeast quarter last year, won't open at all.

On a sunny morning in mid-August, 40 children and parents assembled outside the school, on an hour's notice, to talk about Oldtown. A custodian was boxing up cleaning supplies in the cafeteria and men were loading sports team portraits into the bed of a truck to take to the VFW for storage.

The Oldtowners spoke nostalgically about the way everyone helps everyone else out, about how fitting in is so much easier than at bigger schools. If David Smith's 11-year-old son cuts class, his father gets a phone call: "I just seen Junior walking up the road with his buddies." If his 6-year-old cries on the bus, the older kids calm him down. Ask David Ir which of the 20 kids in his fifth-grade class portrait were his friends, and he'll study each row and say, "All of them."

COURTESY ROBERT BEECHER ALLEGANY COUNTY

Paul Mencer loads the last of Oldtown's team pictures into a truck to be taken to the VFW for storage. Oldtown was closed for consolidation; its students will now have to be bused to other schools.

Admissions issues abound

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Projecting the number of admitted students that will enroll into the University of Massachusetts is no easy task, but Dean of Enrollment Services Joseph Marshall said in a statement that UMass is expected to have 400 fewer freshmen compared to a year ago.

Each year, the Admissions Office projects a target for the number of freshmen to accept into the University with the expectation that less than a third will enroll.

"If all 14,000 of the students we admitted showed up, there would be total chaos," Marshall said.

This phenomenon is what Marshall refers to as the "summer melt," a decrease in the number of entering first-year students from the moment an enrollment deposit is paid to the day they show up on campus.

"We will lose about seven percent of the total number who pay their deposit," Marshall said. "It may not seem like a lot, but it is."

According to Marshall, this year there were 20,000 applications for the entering freshmen class and only 13,000 were admitted. However, only 3,700 ended up enrolling.

Last year's figures indicate that of the students admitted, 4,050 freshmen enrolled into the university, an increase of 200 from the year before, the most in more than a decade.

The increase caused a housing shortage on campus, forcing many students to be housed in swing spaces such as converted lounge spaces in the dormitories and hotel accommodations.

"We had an increase, and we knew it; we didn't discover it after the fact," Marshall said in a Union News article. "We projected that all the way through."

While UMass has managed to keep their numbers down, other colleges such as Northeastern University are scrambling to find available housing for more than 600 unaccounted freshmen.

Northeastern apparently blamed a new computer program used by the admissions office, PeopleSoft, which has been criticized for being expensive and ineffective, was also being used by UMass Admissions for the first time. While it has taken time to become familiar with the software, Marshall said he doesn't believe it is the source of the problem.

"Given all the steps we have to go through to admit each student, it's kind of hard to misplace several hundred of them," Marshall said.

According to Marshall, the attempt to maximize the number of students to meet the demands of secondary education is responsible for the fluctuation in the number of students enrolling each year.

"There's a lot of competition between universities," Marshall said. "It's a very tough business."

■ dorm

continued from page A1

Amanda Cronin, a junior resident assistant at Orchard Hill, all RA's for this upcoming fall semester received letters in the mail regarding housing a displaced underclassman.

"The first thing that caught my attention was that they were offering us three hundred dollars to do it," she explained.

She went on to say that she called housing to be sure of the duration of the stay of the student and was told that they would first clear out the campus hotel and then move the students in with resident assistants.

"I called them to make sure of the duration," she said, "I heard that sometimes they were in (the room) for a semester and a half."

She was told that although they could not guarantee that the students will would be in the room for three weeks that they would certainly not be in there for three months.

"They said that if they were in your room for three days or three weeks you would get paid," she explained.

She went on to say that she felt that housing a student would be both a beneficial and positive opportunity to help students out, especially incoming freshman.

"It is an award position for students to be in," she said. "I think that it is a good opportunity to help out. If I were a freshman I would be upset."

She went on to say that she felt that her responsibilities as a resident assistant and her abilities to enforce policy on her floor would not be affected by living with another student.

She explained that she felt that resident assistants that found themselves living with students should sit down with them and discuss the situation.

"It won't be that bad," she said. "It's just like having a regular roommate, only they have to abide by more rules."

According to David Vaillancourt, Assistant Director for Housing Assignments, students living in hotel spaces will be provided residential assignments by Friday.

Students housed in the temporary spaces would be re-assigned last, Vaillancourt said, with the possibility of some students remaining in lounge spaces for the semester.

Last year's figures indicate that of the students admitted, 4,050 freshmen enrolled into the university, an increase of 200 from the year before, the most in more than a decade.

The increase caused a housing shortage on campus, forcing many students to be housed in swing spaces such as converted lounge spaces in the dormitories and hotel accommodations.

"We had an increase, and we knew it; we didn't discover it after the fact," Marshall said in a Union News article. "We projected that all the way through."

According to Marshall, this year there were 20,000 applications for the entering freshmen class and only 13,000 were admitted. However, only 3,700 ended up enrolling.

While aiming to reduce the amount of time students will have to spend waiting in front of the Whitmore Administration Building for an assignment, Housing Assignments Office is finding it difficult to find vacancies throughout most of Western Massachusetts.

"The vacancy rate in Amherst is less than one percent," Vaillancourt said. "Some 287 people who aren't required to live in [on-campus] housing have applied."

In some cases students will reserve an assignment on campus until they find off-campus housing and when they don't, they pursue housing through us, Vaillancourt stated.

The resulting effect is that Housing Assignment sometimes doesn't know a student's housing intent until after classes start, thus affecting a student in a temporary space awaiting availability of residential housing.

"We're still having late contacts from students whose apartment assignments have fallen through," Vaillancourt said.

With the occupancy rate changing on a daily basis as more undecided students make housing arrangements, it is difficult for Housing Assignments to be able to keep up with the demand.

Over the next few weeks, as Housing Assignments tallies the number of "no-shows," staff will assign students to availability.

Vaillancourt said he believes the problem lies in being too flexible. According to him, UMass is the only University that does not require a non-refundable deposit fee from students prior to being ensured housing.

Because students are not required to secure a space in advance, Housing Services is having difficulty projecting how many students will actually arrive when the residence halls open.

"So how come the system hasn't been changed," Vaillancourt asked.

Vaillancourt said he inherited the system in its current form and up-to-date they haven't experienced such problems but with the convenience and appeal of on-campus housing these days, the system has to be changed.

■ election

continued from page A18

out an opinion on Al Gore at this point has probably been living in a box.

With Gore nursing a slight lead in the polls, the next big chance for either candidate to shine will be in debate. Hannahan said it would be a chance for each candidate to show his stuff and be read about in newspapers the next day.

However, there has been some controversy surrounding the debates, with Gore accepting a plan to debate three times while Bush has floundered on acceptance of the proposal. He has said that he has too many other proposals in front of him, but Gore has charged that he is intentionally attempting to dodge the debates, as he will fare poorly in a debate about actual policy.

Earlier in the year, one of Bush's advisors said that the campaign's plan in debate was simply to "survive."

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?

The TIAA-CREF Advantage.

Call us for a free information package

Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:

- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.

Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1.800.842.2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

DETAILS

young htp clothes, cool shoes accessories and handbags

visit us downtown or on or website. www.25central.com

19 North Pleasant St. Amherst, Ma (413) 253-0300

Free Gift! Look for us on campus Sept. 25th

Attention UMASS

Log on to MassLive.com for:

Forums
Live Web Cam @ Antonio's
Dining guide
Resume Posting
Offcampus Online
Pro Sports
Live Music calendar Chat
UMASS sports
Yellow pages
Automobiles
Movies
Weather
Jobs
Events calendar

mass LIVE

MassLive: Your online resource for the BEST local and national coverage of news, sports, entertainment and more. Win great prizes too!

www.masslive.com

GET ON IT!

For area employers to find you appealing, they first have to find you.

www.masslive.com/careers

MassLive is ready to take your job search to the next level. Grab the cutting-edge tool that uses the power of the Internet and manage your career. At Advance Careers on MassLive, simply post your personal profile and you'll be on your way to exploring thousands of new opportunities. You will even have your own Personal Message Center. It directs you to the positions of employers who have matched their opportunities to your profile and want you to apply for that job online. So take the first step in really managing your career and let MassLive start working for you.

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com

IN AFFILIATION WITH THE UNION NEWS-SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

Housing shortages nationwide problem

By Jason Michael White
Indiana Statesman (Indiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) TERRE HAUTE, Ind. - Due to the massive increase of incoming freshman and renovations that closed Jones Hall, Residential Life housed groups of three Indiana State University students in double-occupancy rooms beginning this semester.

There are 250 students living triple in Cromwell, Blumberg, Burford, Mills and Sandison halls.

These rooms meant for two are given one extra bed and an extra desk. No additional closet space, bookshelves or drawers are provided.

However, students living in triples will receive a $10 per week, per person, credit to their residential fees.

Brandon Ubelhor, a resident of Mills Hall, said that he was a little disappointed when he first saw his overcrowded triple room.

"I guess I was expecting a much bigger room," he said.

Although he described his room as small and jam packed, Ubelhor said he didn't mind having a triple.

Although Ubelhor and many other students knew before school began that they would be living in a triple room, freshman Melissa Faith Van Wormer of Cromwell Hall received no such forewarning.

"When I got my housing papers they said that my roommate was going to be Kim Gomez and that's it," Van Wormer said.

Despite what the papers said, she was given a second roommate. She said that if she had known ahead of time about her triple room, she would have not lived on campus.

Van Wormer said that her experience at ISU so far has been less enjoyable because she doesn't have a lot of space for her possessions.

Freshman John Cuch, a pre-law major living in Sandison, said his dorm room was no where near what he expected.

"I thought that there would at least be room to walk," he said. "If I had known ahead of time what my room was going to be like, I would have went to Ball State instead."

Mostly freshmen are living in triple-occupancy rooms, but a few upperclassman have been forced to live in them as well, including Sonny Lee, a fourth-year math major living in Sandisun.

"I was very upset," Lee said. "I'm a fourth year student with 79 credit hours, and I was told that I would not be put in a triple room."

When Lee confronted Residential Life, they told him that no one with over 25 credit hours had been placed in a triple room. Lee said that Residential Life had told him they were unaware of his living condition and that there was nothing they could do about it.

"In the future they (Residential Life) should look more closely at who they assign to rooms," Lee said.

Freshman Lauren Erickson, a music major living in a triple room in Burford Hall, said that she and her roommates are "kind of enjoying it."

"We wish we had more space, but we don't mind it much because we all get along so well," Erickson said. Erickson also said that communication was the key to the good relationships she has forged between her roommates.

Aaron Marks, a computer science major living in a triple room in Mills Hall, is another student that doesn't mind living in a triple.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chinese water torture
One corner of the fountain outside of the Campus Center Coffee Shop provides a serene image to contemplate.

Sweatshop debates get sticky at Notre Dame

By Jason McFarley
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. - It can't hurt, but by itself, it likely won't benefit the University of Notre Dame either.

That's the lukewarm response from most parties at Notre Dame involved in anti-sweatshop initiatives following the enactment of a new measure by some 140 colleges belonging to the Fair Labor Association (FLA).

The measure, approved unanimously by the FLA's university advisory committee in June, will require manufacturers to disclose the locations of the factories where they make school-logo merchandise. The policy will affect 141 member colleges and universities, including Notre Dame.

The adoption of the provision by the advisors panel stipulates that any FLA-affiliated college or university with a licensing program will require public disclosure of factory locations by its licensees.

But the shift may not signal the types of changes here that many other campuses will potentially experience.

"To be honest, this is not a very significant step for us" said Notre Dame business professor Ollie Williams.

While Williams called the recent action an "important collective breakthrough" it is seemingly familiar territory for the University, which since last fall has recommended that all licensees manufacturing apparel bearing Notre Dame insignia disclose their factory locations.

Prior to this summer's measure by the coalition of colleges, about three-quarters of Notre Dame's more than 200 licensees voluntarily disclosed factory addresses. Effective immediately, addresses from companies such as Adidas and Champion, two of the University's largest licensees, will be demanded.

"Now we're not just calling for that information; with this policy, we're requiring it" said Bill Hoye, chairman of Notre Dame's Task Force on Anti-Sweatshop Initiatives.

FLA policy already mandates that licensees with $10 million or more in annual revenue be FLA members or participate in the organization's primary monitoring system.

The FLA was created with the backing of President Bill Clinton's administration to address alleged abuses in the apparel industry, including sweatshop labor. In addition to participating colleges and universities, manufacturers and human rights groups have membership in the FLA.

Maureen Murtha, the FLA's university liaison, said members' involvement in the organization translates into a united and visible stand on labor issues.

"On their own, schools like Notre Dame and [the University of] Michigan have clout, but not so much when you consider the overall size of the overall footwear and apparel markets," Murtha said. "This new measure brings a lot of schools together and makes them much more effective."

Murtha said Notre Dame is one of about 40 schools associated with the FLA that already requires their licensees to publicly disclose factory locations. She said the decision by the 100 or so other schools in the FLA to follow suit was prompted in large part by growing student protests concerning unfair labor practices.

At Notre Dame, the Progressive Student Alliance (PSA) has been outspoken on the labor practices issues. PSA president Aaron Kreider said demanding public disclosure is a positive step, but he expressed some qualms about what the measure will mean for his organization and the University.

For one thing, Kreider noted that while Notre Dame's anti-sweatshop task force receives input from the student body president, no PSA members serve on the committee. That is a fact the sociology graduate student finds troubling.

"They've excluded our group and any other activist group even though we're the ones that put the issue on the agenda," Kreider said. Another problem, according to Kreider, is that factory addresses should be public records, not restricted to access by University officials. Although disclosure procedures vary from school to school, it is currently Notre Dame's policy to not publicize this information.

Kreider also said that the addresses are only one bit of information with which University officials should be concerned. "The issue is so much bigger. It's also important to obtain information like wages and working conditions in the factories," said Kreider, who also advocates the University's joining the Workers Rights Consortium, a group with a stricter code of conduct and watchdog efforts than the FLA. Saint Mary's College is a member of the WRC.

But Williams, who is also an expert in sweatshop legislation, said that making the addresses a matter of public record is not necessarily important. Instead, he said that information should be used to support a University mechanism for monitoring factories and ensuring sound labor standards. "If [factories] know they might be inspected, it might serve as a deterrent for instituting sweatshop conditions," Williams said.

Department of Germanic Languages & Literatures
510 Herter Hall 545-2350
www.umass.edu/germanic

OPEN CLASSES
•All German Language Courses, Elementary to Advanced
•All German Literature and Culture Courses Taught in German
•Dutch 230 Intermediate Dutch

The Following General-Interest Courses (Taught in English)
•German 297A Crusades and The Image of Islam
•German 304 From Berlin to Hollywood
•German 365 Scandinavian Myth

BE ADVISED!
PRE-MAJOR ADVISING SERVICES
615 GOODELL BUILDING
Serving University Undeclared and Pre-Major Students
Advisors available
M-F 9:00-4:30

Now Open! Come visit us!!!
americanatextbooks.com
"Where you don't stand in line for BIG DISCOUNTS!!!"

Welcome Back UMASS!
United Personnel Services
Offering employment in the following areas...
• Administrative • Manufacturing • Medical
Many CASH Bonuses are also available ...
UNITED PERSONNEL SERVICES
413-527-7445

WIR SPRECHEN VOLKWAGON
The Valley's largest VW inventory!
Whether it's a simple tune-up or a blown restoration project, from engine valves and pistons to door handles or gas caps, we have the parts for just about any model VW ever made! Plus a full inventory for Japanese and Korean cars and trucks.
WE SPEAK VOLKSWAGON!
It All Starts With Parts...
PELHAM AUTO PARTS
Route 9
Amherst/Belchertown Line
256-0457
Hrs: M-F 8-5:30 & Sat: 9-2:00

EVANGELICAL COVENANT CHURCH
915 PLUMTREE ROAD
SPRINGFIELD, MA 01119
(413) 782-5212
www.ecc-spfld-ma.org

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0000
Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Welcome Back Students!

The collective voice of the Alumni Association speaks to you in many ways:

Funding of the supermileage vehicle for the engineering students
Purchase of four trauma jumpkits for student EMT's Resurrection of the annual student run semi-formal Commencement Ball like every drop of water, like every grain of sand

Membership Matters

UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

800 456 UMASS zMinutemen.com

STARS
STudent Alumni Relations Society
STARS
STudent Alumni Relations Society
To learn more about STARS come to our
New Member Orientation Meeting on Monday, September 18 at 5:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall or call us at 577-1390.

SGA pres gets benched

Second straight UNC figure goes astray

By Jimmy Ryals
The Technician (North Carolina State U.)

(U-WIRE) RALEIGH, N.C. - The president of the University of North Carolina system student body will go to court Nov. 3 to face charges of felony and misdemeanor larceny.

A Pitt County judge granted a continuance in the larceny trial of Association of Student Governments President Clifford Wayne Webster, 24, a junior at East Carolina University, and fellow ECU student Joshua Culp.

Authorities arrested Webster and Culp June 30 in connection with the theft of a pair of benches from the ECU campus. The two benches are valued at $900 and $1,400, according to ECU Assistant Police Chief Thomas Younce.

Culp, too, was charged with felony and misdemeanor larceny. He also faces one charge of possession of stolen property.

One of the stolen benches was originally located between Whichard and Ragsdale halls, while the other had been at the Messick Theatre Arts Building.

Webster was processed and released on $2,500 unsecured bail. Culp was released on $7,500 unsecured bail.

Younce said that ECU police had originally had few leads on the bench thefts, but information discovered during another investigation connected Webster and Culp to the crime. Younce could offer no details on the information that led police to Webster and Culp.

The East Carolinian, ECU's student newspaper, reported Thursday that authorities found the $1,400 bench at Webster's residence at 1403 Biltmore Ave. in Greenville. Police recovered the $900 bench at Culp's former Greenville residence at 405 E. 5th St., Apt. #2C.

According to officials in the Pitt County District Attorney's office, felony larceny is a class H felony and carries with it a maximum penalty of 30 months in jail. Misdemeanor larceny carries a maximum sentence of 120 days in jail.

The assistant district attorney said that the penalty Webster will face if convicted depends largely on his prior criminal record.

Officials in the Pitt County Clerk of Courts office said they had no record of any criminal activity prior to the current larceny charges for Webster. Their records, however, only cover the time during which Webster has lived in Greenville.

Webster could not be reached for comment Thursday on the charges.

As ASG president, Webster holds an ex-officio position on the UNC Board of Governors. His one-year term as president began July 1. ASG delegates elected Webster at an April meeting. Running against him and current ASG Vice President Liz Gardner were North Carolina State University seniors Andrew Payne and Seth Whitaker.

Previously, Webster had served as ECU's student body president.

"I'm disappointed to hear [about the charges]," said Payne, a former ASG delegate. "This is the second straight year that allegations against the president of the association set back the public's opinion about the association."

Last September, previous President Nick Mirisis, then a student at UNC-Charlotte, resigned his positions as UNCC student body and ASG president after the UNCC University Times published an article claiming that he had bought a term paper off the Internet.

UNCC officials later suspended Mirisis for two years after determining that he had been responsible for threatening and harassing then-University Times Editor Jillian McCartney after the publication of the story on Mirisis' cheating.

NCSU Student Body President Harold Pettigrew, a member of the ASG, said that he is uncertain about what steps the association will take next on the Webster situation. He does, however, anticipate a resolution coming before Webster's Nov. 3 court date.

"I would think that, within the next couple of weeks, we will have this situation dealt with and behind us," said Pettigrew. "We have plenty of other issues to worry about right now."

ASG rules mandate that a president may maintain his position as long as he is in good standing with his university. According to the story in The East Carolinian, both Culp and Webster have been sent to the Office of the Dean regarding their misconduct. University officials could not comment on what disciplinary action they would take, citing the federal Family Education Right to Privacy Act.

U.S. News college rankings come under fire

By Jay Mathews
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Here is the early September must-do list for middle-class America: Store the charcoal briquettes. Buy school supplies. And check out the new U.S. News & World Report college rankings.

Since 1983, the newsmagazine's annual college guide has proved irresistible to ambitious parents and their children, pushing sales up 40 percent and drawing 8 million visitors to the magazine's Web site (at www.usnews.com), as it is expected to do again beginning at 7 a.m. Sept. 1.

It has also been a source of gastrointestinal distress for college presidents, alumni fundraisers and professional statisticians. They have decried what they see as the list's narrow and uneven treatment of a complex subject (while tweaking their own numbers to try to beat Crosstown U.).

Now, in an internal report acquired by Washington Monthly, there is evidence that U.S. News' own consultants have been telling the magazine pretty much the same thing.

"The principal weakness of the current approach is that the weights used to combine the various measures into an overall rating lack any defensible empirical or theoretical basis," said the 1997 report by the Chicago-based National Opinion Research Center. Not only do frequent changes in how factors are weighted affect the rankings, the report said, but some factors such as graduation rates are counted more than once and vital college characteristics such as academic rigor and student experiences are not measured at all.

U.S. News executives said they haven't changed the weighing system in five years. They said they followed most of the consultants' recommendations and continue to welcome suggestions from universities and interested experts.

"There is one standing body of admissions deans that we meet with regularly, and we have 50 to 100 meetings a year with people from colleges," said Peter Cary, the magazine's special-projects editor.

Washington Monthly writer Nicholas Thompson, who graduated in 1997 from Stanford (ranked sixth in last year's issue), provided The Washington Post with a copy of the research center's report, which he obtained while researching his article on the rankings. Thompson's article, which appears in Washington Monthly's September issue, says the ratings and accompanying articles are helpful to high school students who lack good counselors. He compliments the magazine for its willingness to respond to complaints.

But he bemoans the failure to address the quality of the academic experience at each school: "Do the big-shot professors actually teach? How many hours? Are they good teachers?" And he suggests that U.S. News has tailored its methodology to favor the biggest brand-name colleges - Harvard, Princeton, Yale, etc. - because of editors' preferences and their fear that unconventional winners would hurt confidence in the list.

Caltech's unexpected appearance at the top of the national university list last year, Thompson said, was the result of a newly hired statistical expert standardizing the scores for per-student spending. Suddenly Caltech, which spends $192,000 per student compared with No. 2 Harvard's $81,000, jumped to the top. Thompson, citing "sources close to the magazine," said this produced a "bitter internal struggle" over whether to let that result stand.

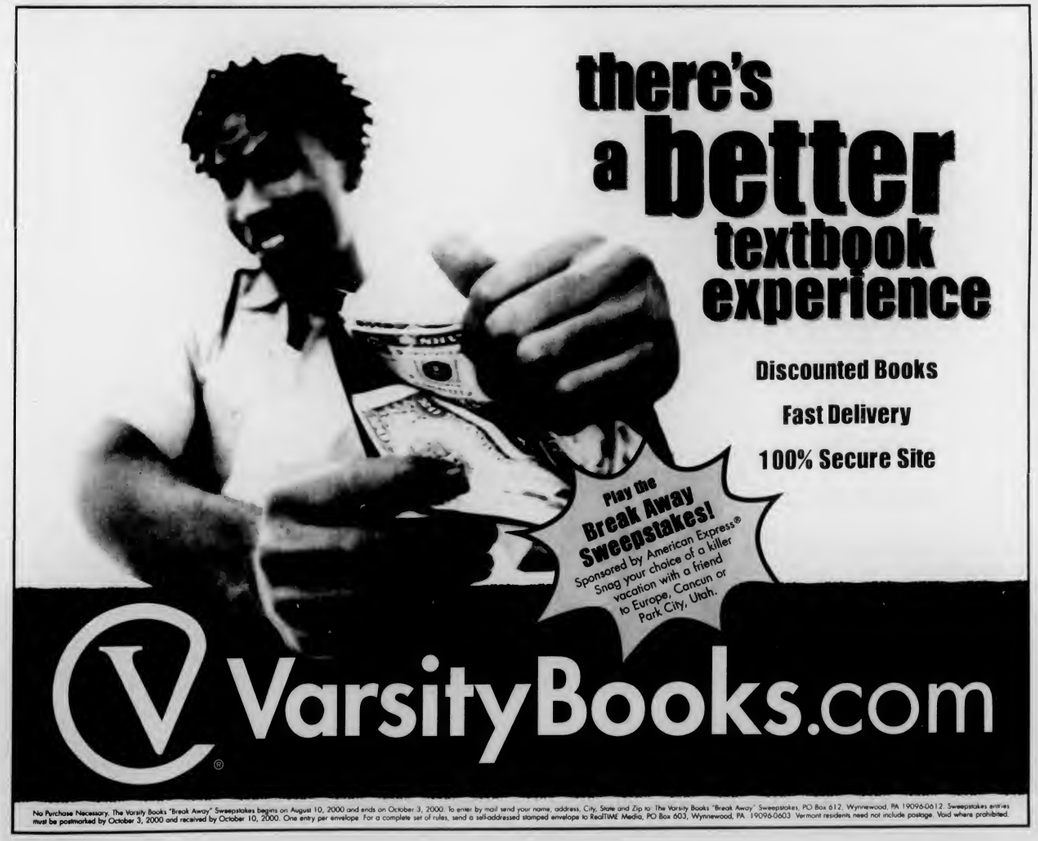
Cary vehemently denied that there was any such struggle or that magazine editors adjusted the methodology for any reason other than to produce the best list possible. Although editors were surprised to see Caltech ranked so high, Cary said, they instantly agreed "to stand behind the list and our methodology." Since then, he said, they have adjusted the methodology to ensure that schools with unusually high research budgets do not have an unfair advantage.

As the consultants' report notes, the U.S. News rankings use 16 measures, including graduation rate, class size, faculty salaries, student test scores, high school class standing, educational expenditures and alumni giving rate. The greatest weight - 25 percent of the total - is given to academic reputation as measured by a survey of university presidents and deans.

The consultants' report joined other experts in complimenting the magazine for forcing universities to calculate these factors in the same way, reducing confusion for students and their families who try to make comparisons. Robert Morse, U.S. News' director of data research, said he joined the magazine's editors in rejecting the recommendation to stop adjusting the methodology except for a review by experts every five to seven years. "That just wouldn't be the way to run an analytical exercise," he said.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Swan Song
The REAL residents of UMass - the various waterfowl that inhabit the campus - "ponder" this year's incoming crop of freshman "chicks."



there's a better textbook experience
Discounted Books
Fast Delivery
100% Secure Site
Play the Break Away Sweepstakes!
Sponsored by American Express®
Snag your choice of a killer vacation with a friend to Europe, Cancun or Park City, Utah.
VarsityBooks.com
No Purchase Necessary. The Varsity Books "Break Away" Sweepstakes begins on August 10, 2000 and ends on October 3, 2000. To enter by mail send your name, address, City, State and Zip to: The Varsity Books "Break Away" Sweepstakes, PO Box 612, Wynnewood, PA 19096-0612. Sweepstakes entries must be postmarked by October 3, 2000 and received by October 10, 2000. One entry per envelope. For a complete set of rules, send a self-addressed stamped envelope to RealTIME Media, PO Box 603, Wynnewood, PA 19096-0603. Vermont residents need not include postage. Void where prohibited.

BARA STORY'S COLLEGIAN STAFF

The fifth food group

How did the Minuteman get so big? By eating dogs, of course.

MIT freshmen find new ways to tackle requirements

By Laura McGrath Moulton
The Tech (Massachusetts Institute of Technology)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - Calculus, physics, chemistry, and humanities: by now, all members of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Class of 2004 know this standard freshman lineup by heart. Yesterday afternoon, however, they got a chance to explore alternate ways of fulfilling their freshman requirements at the open houses for Concourse, Experimental Studies Group (ESG), and Integrated Studies Program (ISP).

Students in Concourse attend all their core courses in small groups taught by Concourse faculty. Classes are typically scheduled in three-hour blocks each morning, leaving members of Concourse free for the afternoon.

In addition to the freshman science and mathematics core, Concourse offers Introduction to Psychology (9.00) and Humanistic Perspectives on Medicine (21W.746) in the fall, and two special hands-on courses, Materials in Human Experience (3.981) and Essentials of Engineering (ESD02), in the spring. Students can also fulfill Phase One of the writing requirement through an intensive eight day seminar during Independent Activities Period.

Concourse calls itself "neither elite nor remedial," offering extensive tutoring and support for students but also teaching Physics I (8.01) at a deeper level. Students have the option of taking either the 8.01 or the more advanced Physics I (8.012) final at the end of fall semester.

Concourse hosted a three-hour open house yesterday at its headquarters in Building 16 where students mingled with Concourse faculty and alumni.

Danny Y. Kwon '04 said he was attracted to Concourse by the smaller class sizes. "If you're struggling you can get help," Kwon said. "You get to bond more with the other students, and you get to know professors better than in a class with two hundred people."

Freshmen wishing to apply to the program must attend the Orientation meeting on Aug. 30 in order to apply. Sixty students will be chosen by lottery.

ESG is geared toward students interested in an individualized, independent approach to learning. Students take courses (at least two per semester) with ESG faculty in small group or even independent tutorials. All freshman subjects are offered as well as a wide variety of humanities subjects and some higher level mathematics and science courses, depending on faculty availability and student interest.

"It's not for anybody," Associate Director Holly Sweet told a lounge full of freshmen at the ESG open house. "You need to be self-motivated and creative."

However, Sweet also assured students that ESG could work for students at any level. Students can work at a faster pace than the usual curriculum in their courses, but they can also slow down to get extra help when they have difficulties. She noted that ESG is offering a special tutorial for students who placed out of Calculus I (18.01) and want to go on to Calculus II (18.02) but may need brushing up on certain topics.

Zachary U. Malchano '04 said that ESG appealed to him because of the "self-pacing and small learning groups." He said he is also considering Concourse, but may not enroll in any alternative programs if he passes all his advanced standing exams.

ESG is hosting Orientation groups (required for applicants) throughout Orientation. In addition, seminars on topics including Fibonacci sequences and change ringing will be offered for freshmen looking for a taste of the ESG experience. Admission is by lottery.

ISP is structured around two HASS-D courses unique to the program: Technologies and Cultures (SP.353) in the fall and Technologies in Historical Perspectives (SP.354) in the spring. Students take these courses in addition to the freshman core. They attend special ISP recitations for their large science and math lectures and are encouraged to take a version of Physics I with take-home experiments (8.01X). ISP focuses on "learning by doing." The program enjoys its own classroom, Athena cluster, lounge, and kitchen. Weekly luncheons feature guest speakers.

Study refutes conventional wisdom surrounding tongue and human taste

By Usha Lee McFarling
Los Angeles Times

PHILADELPHIA - Armed with jellybeans, Q-tips dipped in bitter liquid and an assortment of rare truffles, Marcie Pelchat is facing one of the great scientific mysteries of the 21st century: the human tongue.

Pelchat is one of a small army of scientists at the Monell Chemical Senses Center here - the only place in the world devoted solely to studying what was, until recently, a research backwater: the senses of taste and smell.

Today, the study of the chemical senses is suddenly in vogue - fueled by rapid advances in genetics and neuroscience, the growing public health crisis of obesity and that old standby - America's obsession with food.

New research in the field is overturning a host of myths about how taste and smell work and proving that many food desires are hard-wired: Some of us carry a gene that leads to a sweet tooth, and one-quarter of us are "supertasters" with tongues so loaded with taste buds that they're hypersensitive to bitter, sweet, salty and sour tastes.

Among scientists' goals: to sort out just how these differences in taste and odor perception - along with genetics and culture - weave together to form food cravings and preferences that can lead to obesity, alcoholism or malnutrition.

Research on the tongue has contradicted just about everything you probably learned about taste in high school.

There is no such thing as a strict "tongue map," with the tip of the tongue for salty and sweet tastes, the sides for sour and the back for bitter. "It's just not true at all," said Linda Bartoshuk, a professor in the Yale University School of Medicine who has studied taste for 25 years.

All things can be tasted on all parts of the tongue, she said.

There's also a fifth taste, named "umami" by its Japanese discoverers. It's the taste for things meaty and savory, or in some translations, things "wonderfully tasty."

And taste buds don't exist only on the tongue, says Joseph Brand, a biochemist and associate director at Monell. Taste buds go all the way to the stomach - though we perceive tastes only in the mouth and top of the throat. Buds in the deep recesses of the mouth are considered evolutionarily most crucial because they could warn of a bitter poison just as it's about to be swallowed.

"That's important," said Brand, "because eating is a potentially dangerous behavior."

Brand can reel off fact after fact about the tongue - all startling to the uninitiated. The taste cells you use for breakfast, for example, aren't the same ones you'll use for dinner. Taste cells at the tip of a taste bud last only about eight hours before they die.

The little bumps all over your tongue aren't taste buds. Most of them don't even contain taste buds. There are a smattering of taste buds - one to seven - in the small round bumps, or papillae, on the front of your tongue. Most taste buds are in the back of the mouth; the large bumps on the back of the tongue can carry as many as 400 taste buds each.

A colleague of Brand's, John Teeter, is studying the even subtler workings within the taste bud. Each bud contains 100 to 200 cells of different types that are densely packed and occasionally coupled via temporary openings between cells called gap junctions.

"Who knows what they all do," said Teeter, an accomplished cellular physiologist who seems genuinely perplexed by the complexity and myriad connections between the cells.

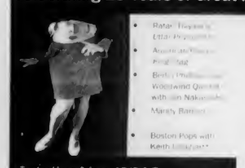
In the quest to understand the tongue and its taste buds, the two scientists have turned to an unlikely ally: the catfish. The basement of Monell is filled with tanks of various species, from the channel catfish of the Delaware River to four-lined catfish from South America.

Catfish have a remarkable ability to detect food across long distances and across murky water. They can do this because their bodies are studded with about 150,000 taste buds. Dribble a few amino acids (components of protein) into water and a catfish will find them instantly.

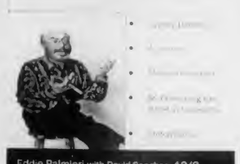
"You can think of them as swimming tongues," said Brand.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER'S SILVER ANNIVERSARY SEASON

Celebrating 25 Years of Great Performances and Great Student Audiences !

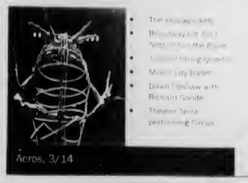


Teatro Hugo & Ines, 10/5 & 7



Eddie Palmieri with David Sanchez, 12/2

Penn & Teller, 2/6



Acros, 3/14

It's an Encore season of great programming at the Fine Arts Center. From the insane humor of Penn and Teller to the awesome gravity-defying dance of Aeros to the hot Latin rhythms of Eddie Palmieri and Band and so much more! And YOU as Five College Students can attend events at the Fine Arts Center for only $5, $7 & $10 (*special events not included)

Don't delay. Tickets are going fast for the Silver Anniversary Season. Celebrate with us and call 545-2511 for tickets or stop by the box office located in the Concert Hall lobby – open M-F, 10-6pm.

Check us out (and our artists) online at: www.fineartscenter.com.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

Let the Ovations continue!

THE HOLOCAUST CONTROVERSY

Ignore the thought Police. Read the evidence. Judge for yourself. With one half million hits per month and rising, we must be doing something right.

www.codoh.com

Find the LOWEST price with one click!

Compare prices at dozens of stores including...

Amazon
buy.com
Barnes & Noble
eCampus
Powell's Borders

BESTBOOKBUYS
www.bestbookbuys.com

Daily Collegian: Bringing folks together... ...since 1890.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 Amherst 256-0080

DESIGN SUPPLY ART STUDIO SUPPLIES
AT THE TOWN COMMON
65 SO. PLEASANT ST
AMHERST MA 01002
FREE DISCOUNT CARD
EXPIRES 12/2000
413•253•5592

Fire season rages on

By Kim Murphy
Los Angeles Times

BOISE, Idaho - The war against 1.4 million acres of wildland fires starts here at the National Interagency Fire Center, where the United States' top fire commanders sit in air-conditioned briefing rooms and a bustling dispatch center, where the nearest fire is 60 miles away on the edge of the Sawtooth Wilderness, deep inside the Boise National Forest.

Here, it's easy to forget, to pretend it's happening somewhere else. But then they step outside. They get a blast of that dry, 90-degree air in their face, smell the smoke hanging like a bass note under the still air.

It's easy to get distracted, thinking about shipping chain saws to Montana and getting relief fire crews in Utah, and there it is - in the time it takes to draw a breath - the smell that inspires the same primordial notion of fear and flight in anything that walks.

Back inside, back at their desks, the phones ring. They forget the rolling death nearby. An e-mail from a fire management team in Wyoming begs for a "hotshot crew," the federal government's top firefighting team. But there aren't any more hotshot crews. They're all out in other mountains, hacking away at fire lines. They're tired. They've been working with sun and fire in their faces since May, some of them. Another e-mail pops up: Another crew is needed, this one in Darby, Mont.

"I wouldn't say we're at the wall, but we're kind of dancing around pretty close to where the wall is," Jim Stires, the command center's director, said last week.

With approximately 80 major wildfires burning in an arc that stretches from 10 Western states across Texas and into Florida, the national center that deploys people, aircraft and equipment is operating 24 hours a day from a 57-acre compound in central Idaho.

This fire season has been unprecedented in its furious intensity: heavy brush in the Western forests has combined with an early summer drought and waves of dry lightning to ignite fires earlier, hotter and faster than any time in the last two decades.

A day in the life of a fire begins with a weather forecast.

Last week, on Wednesday, the forecast for the weekend was unsettling: unstable air likely to spark thunderstorms across Northern California and the Pacific Northwest before moving into Idaho and Montana, where the worst fires already were burning. Then, the trailing edge of a cold front was expected to bring wind gusts of 30 to 40 mph in the Great Basin and the northern Rockies. It would be a firefighter's nightmare.

At Trail Creek fire camp in the Boise National Forest, the morning weather briefing this day is particularly ominous. Every engine, bulldozer, helicopter, plane and crew that could be scratched up already is out battling a blaze that has spread from a single lightning strike on Aug. 15 to more than 26,000 acres.

Incident commander Jim Shell at Trail Creek can only imagine what 40 mph gusts will do to the swift-moving dragon that almost consumed the small town of Atlanta, Idaho, and now is threatening a major ridgeline to the west - with more towns on the other side of it. He's got to get a bulldozer line in, and get it in fast, before that front moves through.

"If we don't contain this thing now, it's going to go over that ridge into James Creek and we'll probably be chasing it until the snow flies - and that could be October," Shell says.

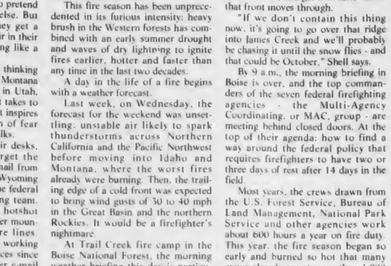
By 9 a.m., the morning briefing in Boise is over, and the top commanders of the seven federal firefighting agencies - the Multi-Agency Coordinating, or MAC, group - are meeting behind closed doors. At the top of their agenda: how to find a way around the federal policy that requires firefighters to have two or three days of rest after 14 days in the field.

Most years, the crews drawn from the U.S. Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, National Park Service and other agencies work about 600 hours a year on fire duty. This year, the fire season began so early and burned so hot that many crews already are at more than 1,000 hours - and there's still a month or more to go.

Burn, baby, burn

Michael Swain, campus fire prevention officer instructs Ricky Posner, sophomore, on the finer points of conflagration suffucation.

THE ENERGY FOR AN ALL-NIGHT RAVE WITHOUT THE EMBARRASSING JAIL TIME FOR POSSESSION.



Eat with your head.™

Gonna be a late one? Then reach for new BALANCE GOLD® with 23 vitamins and minerals. With a 40-30-30 ratio of carbs, protein and dietary fat, it helps give your body sustained energy. Plus, you can't go wrong with all those peanuts, caramel and that rich chocolate flavor. Want to know more? Log on to Balance.com.

National newspapers threaten PSU daily rag

By Daryl Lang
Daily Collegian (Pennsylvania State U.)

(U-WIRE) UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. - Management at The Daily Collegian, long accustomed to running the only free-of-charge daily newspaper on campus, said this week that Pennsylvania State University's Newspaper Readership Program hurts the student-run publication by forcing it to compete with professionals.

The publisher of the USA Today, Tom Curley, is scheduled to join Penn State President Graham Spanier this morning at the HUB-Robeson Center to promote a newly beefed-up version the program.

The two-year-old readership program officially broke out of the dorms for the first time this week. Penn State now provides national and local newspapers every day to thousands of students who live off campus in State College and at 19 other Penn State campuses.

Students at University Park can pick up copies of The New York Times, USA Today and the Centre Daily Times at 27 new vending machines simply by swiping their ID+ cards. Penn State buys the papers at a discounted rate using tuition money.

Penn State was a pioneer in 1997 when it began distributing national newspapers every day to residence halls.

The program has met wide acclaim and at least 60 other colleges have copied it.

But some Collegian officials worry about Penn State buying copies of other newspapers and giving them to students.

"I do believe the readership program is a good thing in theory," said Patricia Tisak (senior - English), the Collegian's editor in chief, a student. "I do, however, think that it hurts student journalism, in particular the Collegian...When you're faced with competing with the USA Today, The New York Times, as well as the local paper, I think it's kind of daunting for a college newspaper to face that."

The impact has been felt in the business division, also.

"We've had to come up with creative ways to combat these competitors we've never had to deal with before," said Francine Sadiky (senior - marketing and speech communications), the Collegian's business manager. "These competitors have large financial resources."

Collegian General Manager Gerry Lynn Hamilton said the student newspaper has not lost circulation or advertising as a result of the program, but has been working hard to keep things that way.

"It is my judgment that the Collegian must absolutely improve the quality of its operation and editorial programs," said Hamilton, a paid professional staff member. "We must absolutely remain the top circulation newspaper on campus by a wide margin."

Although Collegian Inc. is independent of the university, Penn State has a contract to buy a subscription to both The Daily Collegian and The Weekly Collegian.

Money from the contract accounts for about 30 percent of Collegian Inc.'s operating budget, Hamilton said, with the remaining 60 percent coming from advertising.

Penn State students have supported the program warmly.

Jason Weiss (senior - English) said he's started picking up The New York Times every day to read at lunch in the HUB-Robeson Center.

Weiss said he used to subscribe to The New York Times at a student rate for a class, but it was too expensive to continue.

"This would have saved me 50 bucks when I was a freshman," he said.

A Penn State Pulse Survey taken in April showed students who participated in a trial version of the off-campus reader-ship programs were much more likely to read a newspaper.

The survey also showed students who used the readership program were still more than twice as likely to read the Collegian as they were to read the other newspapers.

"The goal is not to have anybody read less papers," said Penn State spokesperson Bill Mahon.

"We want very, very much to be in partnership with the Collegian," Mahon added. "The Collegian will cover Penn State like no other publication, and that will never change."

Bob Unger, executive editor of the Centre Daily Times, said the readership program has helped add circulation to his paper and build a relationship with student readers.

"It helps our circulation numbers, and more importantly than that, it builds a relationship between newspapers and the next generation of readers," Unger said.

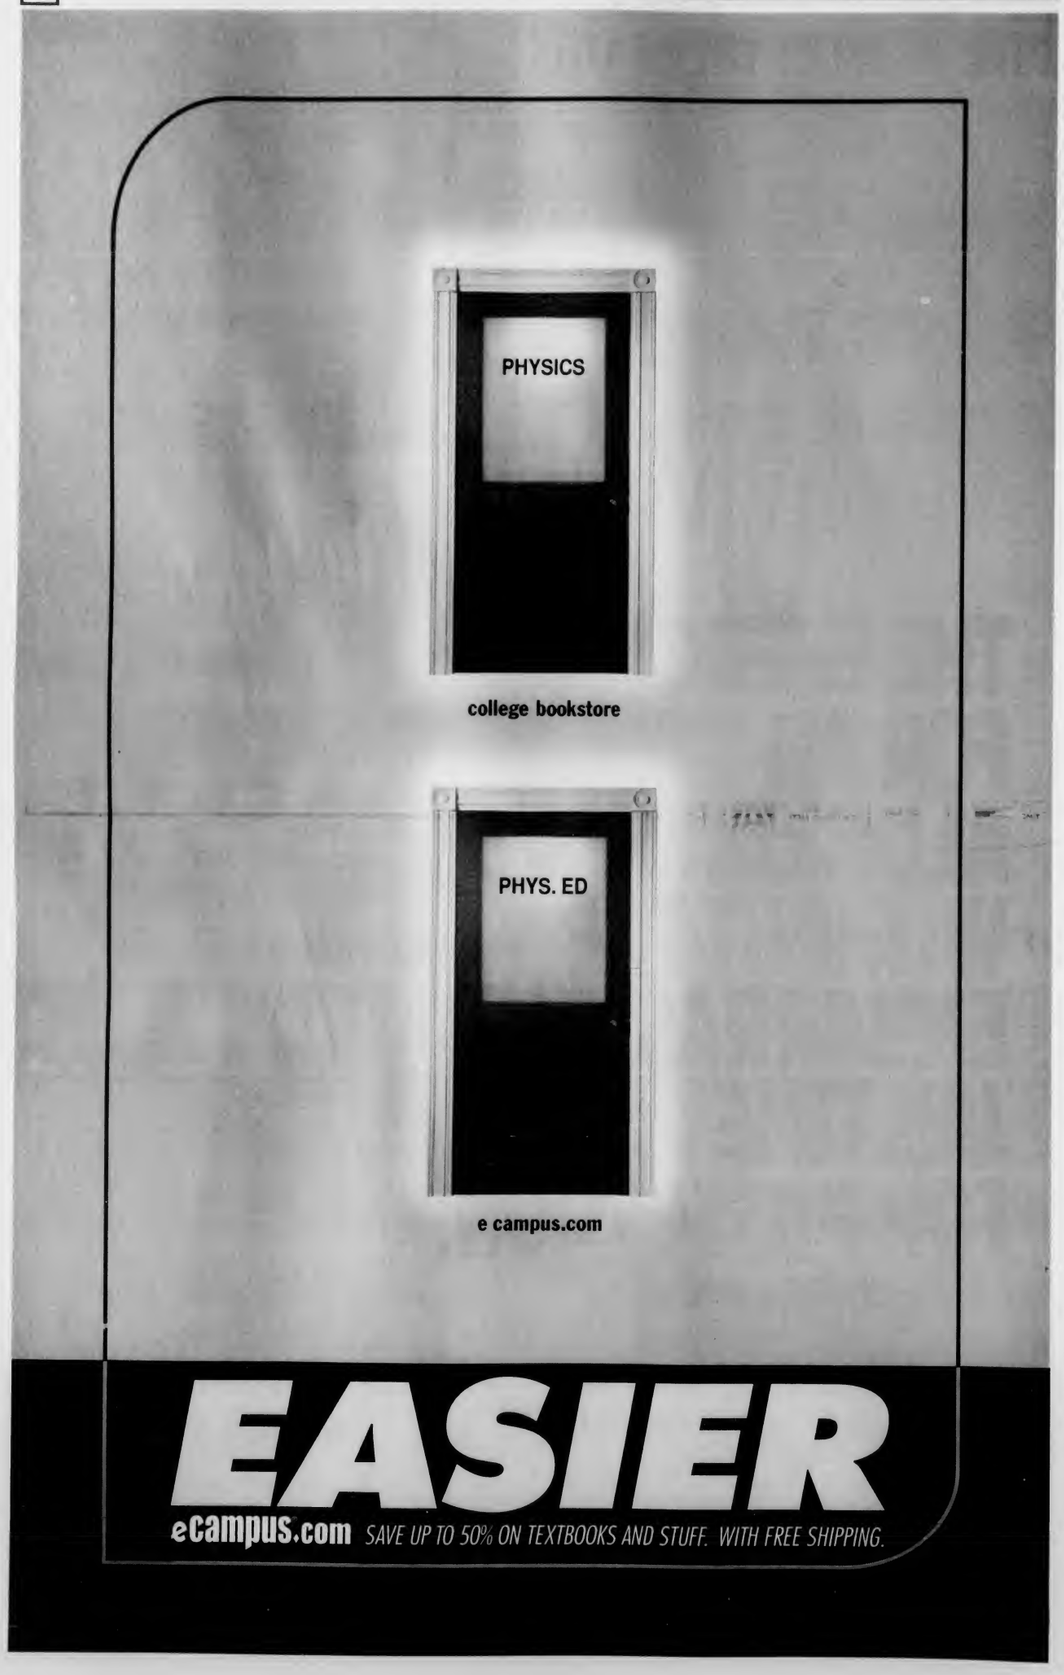
He also said the Collegian and the Centre Daily Times play different roles.

"For us, coverage of the university is maybe less about what's happening inside the university than the university's relationship to the larger community," Unger said.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 Amherst 256-0080

Come work for the Collegian - we shouldn't be the only ones having fun.

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Mon. @ 4.15
Thurs @ 5.30
Fri @ 4.15
Sat @ 2.00
www.amherstathletic.com



Dibbert By Scott Adams

YOUR NEW CEO IS THE MOST POWERFUL WOMAN IN THE HI-TECH INDUSTRY.
I RECOMMEND EXPLOITING HER FAME IN YOUR ADVERTISEMENTS.
WHY DO I HAVE TO BE THE ONE TO SUGGEST IT?
CEOs LOVE THIS SORT OF THING.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THIS WHOLE "BROODING PERSONA" THING WORKS LIKE A CHARM.
SO, WHAT DID YOU DO TODAY?
A LOT OF INTENSE, TURBULENT SIT-WATCHING. THING'S THAT I... I JUST CAN'T TALK ABOUT.
YOU CAN'T TALK ABOUT ANY OF IT?
WELL, MAYBE LATER, AFTER I'VE HAD A DRINK. I'LL TELL YOU ABOUT THE INCIDENT AT 3GARS.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

GOVERNOR BUSH, ALL THAT TIME MOMS WERE DRAWING AND TRIPLE REGISTRATION AND LOOKING IS THAT UNREASONABLE?
WELL, YES IT IS, AND LET ME TELL YOU WHY! ONLY LAW-ABIDING GUN OWNERS WOULD END UP REGISTERING.
WHICH WOULD LEAVE THEM DEFENSELESS IF OUR GOVERNMENT EVER SENT JACKBOOTED AGENTS TO KICK DOWN THEIR DOORS AND TAKE THEIR GUNS!
70 MILLION GUNS?
WELL, NOT ALL AT ONCE. IT'D BE LIKE A TEN-YEAR PROJECT.

Adam & Eric By Ross Burach

So, you know what they say about guys with big comics

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

JASON SAYS HE NEEDS HOMEWORK HELP FROM HIS OLD MAN.
HE SAID THAT? REALLY?
THOSE WERE HIS EXACT WORDS.
HE CALLED ME HIS 'OLD MAN'! HE CALLED ME HIS 'OLD MAN'! DO YOU KNOW WHAT THIS MEANS?!
IT MEANS WE'RE FINALLY BONDING IN THAT SPECIAL GUY-GUY WAY!
I HEAR YOU HAVE NEED FOR YOUR OLD MAN.
YEAH. SEE, I'M DOING THIS REPORT ON ALZHEIMERS, AND, WELL...

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

RELAX, ROD. IT'S REALLY NOT THAT BAD. I USED TO GET MY HEAD SHAVED ALL THE TIME.
YOUR HEAD IS THE SAME TONE AS YOUR BODY, MAN. I'M SO WHITE MY SCALP IS BLUSH!
WELL, YEAH. NOW AT LEAST WE CAN SEE THERE ARE NO NUMBERS TATTOOED ON YOUR HEAD.
OH, YOU'RE SO FUNNY.
HAHA! YEAH! LIKE FOUR!

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

Horoscopes

Gemini (may 21-June 20) - Don't bring frustrations at work home with you today. Keeping your career and personal life separate ensures greater tranquility.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) - Reward yourself today for your recent hard work on an important project. You deserve to treat yourself to something nice and out of the ordinary, like a peanut butter and Cap'n Crunch sandwich.

Leo (July 23-August 22) - Someone you love may not be feeling up to par. It will be up to you to find the time to extend a helping hand and demonstrate your concern.

Virgo (August 23-Sept.22) - This is a good day for socializing - at work and at home! Don't make the mistake, however, of forcing your opinions on others too soon, wait 'til tomorrow.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - You don't want to attract the wrong kind of attention today, so you'd best keep your more controversial opinions to yourself for now, Steve.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - You may be ruled by the more basic instincts today. Get down to basics - and insist that others interact with you on just that very level, damn it!

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec.2) - You must neither refuse someone's offer of help, nor take advantage of it without acknowledgment. Don't be ungrateful today!

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Call on all your sense of humor to see you through dramatic mood shifts today. You can help alleviate stress by laughing at yourself, everybody else is laughing at you.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Expect the unexpected today. Be prepared to address those topics that you never thought would arise openly - at least not this soon.

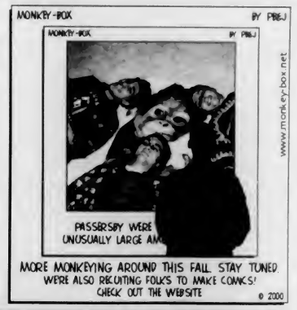
Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - The more you risk today, the more your potential rewards - but it is absolutely essential that your preparations are thorough and complete.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Though you may be able to bend the rules once ina while, you must not get used to it. Abuse of his privilege can only bring trouble ad frustration, buddy.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - You may be dissappointed by an experiment. Never fear, however; lessons learned as a result of will keep you from making the same mistake again and again and again.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 53 LOW: 30	HIGH: 52 LOW: 36	HIGH: 56 LOW: 38



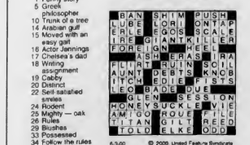
Quote of the Day

"Reality is being canceled due to lack of interest."

–Bill Schmitt

ACROSS
1 Funny story
5 Greek philosopher
10 Trunk of a tree
14 Arabian gulf
15 Moved with an easy gait
16 Actor Jennings
17 Chelsea's dad
18 Writing assignment
19 Cabby
20 Distinct
22 Self-satisfied smiles
24 Rodent
25 Mighty — oak
26 Rules
29 Blushes
33 Possessed
34 Follow the rules
36 Dozen, to Caesar
37 Sportscaster Allen
38 Drizzles
39 Quiche ingredient
40 Before, to a poet
41 Still-active volcano
42 Seraglio
44 Big bird
47 Nicaragua lighter
48 Nights before
49 Trouser part
50 Entertains
53 Holding gently
58 "Persistence of Memory" painter
59 Animal's track
61 Neck-and-neck
62 Taverns
63 Ghostly
64 — dixit

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



65 Like a pen?
66 Lived
67 Winter forecast

DOWN
1 Pokes sharply
2 "Garfield" pooch
3 Seaweed
4 Make bigger
5 Skirt features
6 Missing
7 Cathedral part
8 Hot beverage
9 Long journeys
10 — the eight ball
11 Actor Sharif
12 Eat a lollipop
13 Large deer
21 Prefixia coin
23 Angry
25 Stadium
26 Julia's beloved
27 Pitchers
28 Small harbor
30 Put forth effort
31 African river
32 Greek letter
34 Promises
35 Storage container
38 Took a break
42 Did some gardening
43 Fishermen
45 Withstand 46 "— been had!"
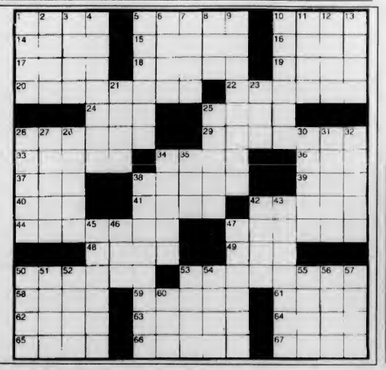
47 Red wine
50 Tennis score
51 Lion's pride
52 Arm bone
53 Middle
54 Muddy the waters
55 Novelist Turgenev
56 Orchid-loving detective Wolfe
57 Bite
60 Church seat



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin
LUNCH
Beef Surprise
Potatoes
Lettuce
Scrod Jell-O
DINNER
Pork
Smurfs w/Vegan gravy
Onions
Scrod Pudding

Worcester
LUNCH
Beef Surprise
Potatoes
Lettuce
Scrod Jell-O
DINNER
Pork
Smurfs w/Vegan gravy
Onions
Scrod Pudding

Hampshire
LUNCH
Beef Surprise
Potatoes
Lettuce
Scrod Jell-O
DINNER
Pork
Smurfs w/Vegan gravy
Onions
Scrod Pudding

Berkshire
LUNCH
Beef Surprise
Potatoes
Lettuce
Scrod Jell-O
DINNER
Pork
Smurfs w/Vegan gravy
Onions
Scrod Pudding
(please send us the menu)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Jarett Barr
Copy Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor — Sage Brousseau
Production Staff — Alan Basque, Kara Stokes

Presidential race turns corner

By Sam Wilkinson and Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

With the election for the Presidency only two months from tomorrow, both major Presidential campaigns are kicking into high gear.

After leading by as many as 19 poll points, Republican candidate George W. Bush finds himself trailing Democratic candidate and current Vice President Al Gore in recently released polls. Because the distance between the two candidates in current polls is so slight, margins of error bring the two to a practical deadlock.

Bush, who initially outpaced Gore, has presented himself as a candidate who plans to clean up the tone of Washington D.C. politics. He has offered massive tax cuts, educational reform, and the more traditional anti-abortion pro-military staples of the Grand Old Party. After the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia, Bush pulled to what was considered an insurmountable lead by some.

Bush, the Governor of Texas, and his staff were guarded about such numbers and saw his lead shrink to a deficit after the Democratic Convention in Los Angeles.

For his part, Gore has campaigned on health care reform, including a proposal for universal health care by 2004, as well as smaller tax cuts. He has said that the military is in better shape than Bush has described, and feels that proposed tax cuts shouldn't be aimed at the richest part of the nation.

Both campaigns are attempting to find ways to appeal to voters by using the expected budget surpluses of the next ten years, as well as getting needed votes from the elderly with health care, Social Security and Medicaid proposals.

As for their seconds, Bush chose Dick Cheney of Wyoming who endured almost immediate criticism in regards to his voting record in Congress, including a vote he cast against freeing Nelson Mandela from prison, as well as votes against pre-school programs and a ban on plastic guns that could make it through metal detectors.

COURTESY GEORGEWBUSH.COM/PERRELL.COM

Al Gore and George W. Bush both have their eyes on the prize as the presidential race enters the stretch run.

Gore's pick of Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, a vocal critic of both President Clinton's extra-marital affairs and Hollywood, drew praise from politicians on both sides of the fence. Lieberman, the first Jew to run for Vice-President, is centrist, and some feel that, in his attempt to reach out to centrist voters, Gore will lose the support of key traditionally liberal voters.

It is currently believed that the four most important electoral states in the nation - California, New York, Florida and Texas -are already decided, with Bush and Gore splitting two apiece. Political analysts see the Vice-President getting California and New York while the Texas governor should win get his own state as well as Florida, the state in which his brother Jeb is governor.

Gore, it is thought, still believes he can win Florida, and has promised to campaign there aggressively in an attempt to convince voters to support his proposals for Social Security and Medicaid. The other three states, however, are considered decided; while Bush may try to attack in California in an attempt to woo a Hispanic vote, the second-tier of states are now being considered the most important.

States like Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio especially.

University of Massachusetts journalism professor Ralph Whitehead described a horseshoe of states surrounding Illinois, which he considers to be strongly in favor of Gore, including the aforementioned states and Iowa, Missouri and Wisconsin, as being key states for either campaign to win.

"Those could tilt towards Bush," said Whitehead, who met President Clinton in Arkansas in 1991 prior to his successful run for President.

Political Science professor Jeffrey Sedgwick added New Jersey to the list of important states. Political Science professor Michael Hannahan and graduate student Paul Adams all agreed that the "rust-belt" states would be the most important after the big four.

However, their agreement ended at that point, as all four had different ideas of what it would take to win November's election.

For his part, Whitehead felt that he agreed with the general consensus of what states were important, but felt it necessary to emphasize that Gore's lead in the national polls was not a lead in the electoral polls. He said that on a "state-by-state" basis, the election was going to be very tight.

He felt that Bush's strategy had, quite possibly, misjudged key aspects of the campaign.

"I think they [the Republicans] underestimated Gore and assumed that the public animpathy for Clinton would automatically rub off on Gore and cripple him. Gore's decision to lay out a bread and butter agenda aimed at middle-income house might prove to be more compelling that Bush's softer and more atmospheric pledges to improve the tone and atmosphere of life in Washington," Whitehead said.

He further explained that he imagined it being a very real possibility that the election would come down to a public referendum on health care.

"It's an issue that the elderly have to worry about right now and one that baby-boomers certainly have to start thinking about," Whitehead said. He added that the nation is, as pundit Mark Shields tof the News Hour with Jim Lehrer) likes to emphasize, not considering issues of war and peace and profound economic uncertainly as in past election years.

"It frees the voters to use the election to decide other matters."

Adams feels that the race will be a close one, giving Gore a slightly better chance of winning the presidency than Bush.

A self-described moderate, Adams said that the closeness of the race would probably interest people.

"Otherwise, these aren't two particularly exciting or sexy candidates," Adams said, adding that, "Normally a lot of people who wouldn't vote might really get interested."

He said that he felt that Gore's pick of Lieberman was a much smarter political move than Bush's pick of Cheney.

He said that Bush, who has tried to appeal to independents, created a conservative ticket by picking the conservative Cheney, while Gore's pick of Lieberman offered voters the chance to vote for a centrist, albeit a somewhat left-leaning one.

Professor Sedgwick felt, as did the others, that the race would be a close one, but added that Bush's early lead could be attributed to more than just his positions.

"Bush came out to an incredibly fast lead for no particular reason," Sedgwick said, guessing that name recognition might have helped or America's "Clinton fatigue" after eight years.

As far as he could tell, the Democrats were going to have a real problem in the fall election solidifying their base voters.

"The Democratic 'New-Wing', led by Clinton and Gore, is having some problems patching up problems with the old liberal labor vote," Sedgwick said. "They're going to need to do this if they have a chance of winning."

He recalled the election being described as a campaign between "a candidate that nobody respects (Bush) and a candidate that nobody likes (Gore)."

Sedgwick said that, if he had to, he'd bet on Bush to win as the Democrats will have a far trickier task solidifying their base as opposed to Republicans. Sedgwick felt that to win, Gore would have to force the election onto issues that won't frighten off suburban independents, a group that Sedgwick guessed would be a huge swing vote in the election.

For their parts, Whitehead guessed that workers without college educations might play a huge roll in the election, while Adams felt that women would again be a major swing vote.

Hannahan said that the closeness of the polls indicated that support for both candidates is soft, but said he'd have no idea who was going to win until the day after the election.

He characterized Al Gore as the least mysterious man in America, a man that's been running for president since 1988. He felt that anybody with

Turn to ELECTION, page A9

A summer's worth of world news

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Concorde Crash in France

The end of July marked the end of an era: the supersonic flight era. Problem's with the British Airways super jet, the Concorde, escalated to utter calamity as the fated plane went out in a blaze, but not necessarily of glory.

On July 25, a flight taking off from Paris en route to New York City, crashed only 4 miles from takeoff, smashing into the side of a French hotel in the town of Gonesse on the way down. Witnesses claimed that the plane burst into flames upon takeoff from the Charles de Gaulle airport, but seemed to have been steered away from a more populated part of town. The crash killed all 109 people on board, as well as 4 people in the hotel, totaling 113 dead in all.

The doomed jet had an engine check the day before the crash, but inspectors deduced that the plane was fine for flight. Officials from the airline said that they had been giving all the planes thorough inspections this summer, but downed the fleet after the catastrophe.

Soon after the crash, the cockpit voice recorders and the flight data recorders were recovered from the debris, giving some insight into what happened prior to the crash. Officials found tire debris on the runway and speculated that landing gear failure may have caused some problems upon takeoff.

Later that theory was dismissed as more information was uncovered. The flight data recorders indicated that there was engine failure in the number one engine on the left wing, which was obvious from the trail of thick smoke that streamed from the wing as it veered into oblivion. Air France mechanics had repaired a part of that engine before the plane took off.

The Concorde was originally introduced into commercial service in 1975 and had a life expectancy of 15 years. But the UK's Civil Aviation Authority gave the fleet a twenty-year extension in 1997, stating that British Airways could keep the planes in the air until 2007.

Though the Airline had a good safety record, as the fleet aged, it began having instances of engine problems and twice planes had to make emergency landings after a light came on in the cockpit indicating a fire. Some planes were found to have cracks on their wings and others have had fuel tank problems.

The passengers on flight 4590 that crashed in France this summer were on their way to a cruise in the Bahamas that left from New York City. Most on board were German tourists. Days after the crash, memorials were held in Germany as well as France.

The supersonic jet flies three times faster than a DC-10 and costs an average of $8,000 per person for a round trip flight.

Air France is still considering banning all Concorde flights, but planes have still been in use since the day after the crash. Aviation officials are continuing their investigation into the crash and expect a full report by the end of August, and hopefully will have answers to the many questions that still remain about the disaster.

Russian Submarine Sinks

The Russian Sub, the Kursk, remains at the bottom of the Barents Sea after two explosions apparently sank the sub earlier in August. Russian officials "believe that a collision could have caused the sub to sink.

U.S. submarines in the area claimed to have heard 2 distinct explosions in the water, which could have been torpedoing his rabbinical training from the Reconstructionist Rahbinical College, and having a Masters of Social Work degree from Yeshiva University (Orthodox), Rabbi Perlmutter feels very comfortable about working with all kinds of approaches to Judaism – from secular to orthodox, and everything in between.

"Sometimes there are still students who may not feel comfortable with what's going on," he says. "Then the most fun thing is to sit down and talk with them about what they want to do to make them a part of Hillel. I love doing this."

Hillel director returns from sabbatical

By Sasha Senderovich
Collegian Staff

Meeting the new Kosher Dining Hall chef, new Jewish Residential Area programmers and putting the final touches to the new calendar, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter returns to his 27th year of tenure as a Director of UMass Hillel after a year-long sabbatical.

"I was trying to take a Jewish approach to my sabbatical, which was to really try to slow down, to try to get myself into living life differently, to be more in touch with myself and people around me," indicated Rabbi Perlmutter, referring to Judaism's tradition to regard the seventh day, seventh month and seventh year as a time for leaving the regular pressures of life. Yet his time off could be called no less than prolifically rewarding.

Reading for fun, learning to play guitar and a fair amount of jogging were no less important than serving meals at shelters in Northampton and working on a Habitat for Humanity project. Hiking in Crete for eight days, and a two-week travel to Israel went alongside a three-day silent meditation retreat that Rabbi Perlmutter confessed to having never done before.

"It was for rabbis, too," he said. "Can you imagine rabbis being together for three days without talking?"

One of the things that Rabbi Perlmutter did during his sabbatical was visiting other Hillels across the country. "I usually go to the annual conference of Hillel directors, but there you only see the directors," he said. "I wanted to see the whole operation." This interest resulted in visiting Hillels at University of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana and Florida. In some areas, suggests Rabbi Perlmutter, other Hillels have a wider student involvement than UMass Hillel, while in others UMass does a better job. Referring to the University's IRAP program (Jewish Residential Area Programmer), in which Jewish student peers organize events for students in the residential areas, Rabbi Perlmutter underlined the uniqueness of this program.

"One of the campuses started to do something similar based on our program" he remarked proudly.

On the other hand, comparing UMass Hillel to other Hillels, he cited the shortcoming of not having a variety of Sabbath services. "One of the things I am committed to doing – and we are going to start this during the first week of the semester – is to implement a Reform, creative service in addition to the Conservative services that usually happen here," noted Rabbi Perlmutter. "And I would be delighted to see us add more kinds of services, more spiritual approaches to Sabbath."

Among other innovations this year is the fact that UMass Hillel was selected to be a part of Tzedek Hillel ("Righteousness") – a program that would add a whole component of social action and social justice activities happening at Hillel. This, believes Rabbi Perlmutter, will also allow Hillel to work alongside other groups on campus on such issues as homelessness, environment etc. "Although Judaism has a lot to say about these issues," he notes, "these are not uniquely Jewish issues. These are societal issues."

Reflecting on almost three decades of his tenure, Rabbi Perlmutter recalled how Hillel office used to be in one room in the Student Union. "Staff when I came here consisted of myself and a part-time secretary. That was it. There was no kosher meal line. There was no Office of Jewish Affairs. There was no Jewish Grad group. We really worked hard on instituting a lot of things, and grew out of that room in the Student Union to having this facility now. We even have a whole Jewish living community!"

Rabbi Perlmutter is proud of the fact that UMass Hillel is the only Hillel in the country to have won the Haber Award five times since it was instituted in 1979. The Haber Award is the highest acknowledgement from the International Hillel for programs of outstanding quality for the Jewish campus community. "This is one of the things I like to brag about," he adds.

Along with the contribution and hard work of the UMass Hillel itself, Rabbi Perlmutter attributes successes to several other factors. First, he believes that the Jewish community itself started to wake up to the fact that what happens on college campuses is extremely important. Thus, there is more support coming to Hillels from the Jewish community. Second, recalling the time when "it was not all that comfortable to be a Jewish student," Rabbi Perlmutter acknowledges the University leadership's strong stance against anti-Semitism, as well as its involvement in building of the positive understanding of Jewish life. One thing that Rabbi Perlmutter believes hasn't changed is that "college years is the time to try something new, to be away from mom and dad, to explore new ideas and careers. There are many students who get involved with the Jewish life for the first time, just as there are students who have been involved all along, and need a break from it once they get to college."

Judging from his long experiences of working with the Jewish youth, Rabbi Perlmutter believes that issue of personal meaning is one of the most important questions that the modern young generation of Jews faces. "Here is this tradition that is thousands of years old. A question that many ask is 'How can it help me to understand my life, my place in the universe, what collective wisdom does it offer me?'" Then, he suggests there is an issue of being a part of a supportive community. "This is not something that we can take for granted any more. Here's this era of individuals sitting by individual computer screens, or individuals trying to make their own fortune.

Turn to WORLD, page A7

Inside: reviews of Perfect Storm, X-Men, Eminem's new album, and a Guster performance in Boston.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Your lifestyle survival guide

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

"Welcome new students," they'll say, as they offer you a barrage of knowledge and insight into the place that you will call home over the next four, five or maybe even 10 years.

UMass has a plethora of excitement just waiting for the average student to dive into. Besides "who's my roommate," and "where can I buy my books," one of the most popular inquiries goes something like this, "what's fun to do here?"

It's fairly observable that almost every new student comes to college in search of the ultimate party. However, there is plenty more to do besides drinking yourself into a blind stupor. You've probably heard a million times that there is something for everyone here, but what does that truly mean? Well, it means a lot of things.

Music, movies, theater and more are all within walking distance of your room. If you're into concerts, there are plenty of those. If you're into movies, grab a bag of popcorn. If you're into theater, then get your playbill ready. Instead of making claims about being the top university in the country to fulfill your entertainment needs and not backing them up, we will help you familiarize yourself with the places that contain all of the non-partying leisure.

There are plenty of inexpensive films to see all over the area. In Hadley, there is a first run movie theater that offers discounts to students. The closest multiplexes to UMass are in Springfield and West Springfield.

Smaller art houses are located in Northampton that will show some independent films, as well as first run films. The Academy of Music next to Smith College constantly has a feature film running.

Perhaps the biggest cinematic gift to students that the University offers is the "Something Every Friday Night" program. This program presents a free film each Friday night in the campus center. The film is usually a very recent movie that is in the transition phase between first run and video. There will usually be additional entertainment with the movie, and it makes for a very casual evening.

There are several video stores in town as well if you would like to rent a movie. Some campus stores also offer video and DVD rentals.

There seems to be a concert every night of the week. The premier place to see a large event in the valley is at the William D. Mullins Center located across the street from the parking garage. The Mullins Center is home to the UMass basketball and hockey teams, and also brings special events to campus. Some very high profile acts have passed through the Mullins Center. In the past year, it has been [illegible] Peppers [illegible] Man & [illegible] and [illegible]. In the past two years, University Productions and Concerts (UPC) has put on the Spring Concert there. This was a free show to all UMass students.

Already the Mullins Center has two very electrifying shows lined up. On Friday September 22, Matchbox Twenty will perform. On Saturday October 28, Ani Difranco plans to make her third appearance at the arena. Tickets for all non-athletic events for the Mullins Center can be purchased from Ticketmaster.

During the year there will be many other places to see concerts without ever having to leave the campus. At the top of the campus center, Skybox will host several events. The Student Union Ballroom will often hold concerts. You may even be lucky enough to have a local band playing in the basement of your own dorm.

Beyond the University there are other places to hear great live music. Amherst and Northampton present some of the most interesting places to see some of your favorite artists.

It seems that all of the entertainment that is not film and is not music is clumped into one other category, "the fine arts." There are plenty of fine art exhibitions around.

The University Fine Arts Center houses student plays as well as off Broadway plays for very affordable costs. The Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) will often bring exceptionally conversant speakers to converse with the local college students. Previous speakers have included Dr. Ruth and Kevin Smith. The Fine Arts Center also features musical performances as well as a place where students can be in the middle of the routine action.

Besides the Fine Arts Center, there are always presentations on local stages on and off campus.

There are so many things to do around campus that you could never be trapped inside one small circle. The previously mentioned items are just a very small amount of what is out there.

Getting to these places is very easy. Some of them, such as the Campus Center, the Mullins Center and the Fine Arts Center are simply in walking distance. Otherwise, there is free bus shuttle on the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) to places all over the area. If you need to take a bus to get a little bit further away to places such as Boston, Hartford or New York, the Peter Pan bus is available for a fee.

For information on how to get into area events, and specific prices, Tix Unlimited, located in the Student Union is the best source. For in depth information, previews and reviews of all of the areas events, consult the Collegian Arts section everyday!

Napster fuels ultimate debate regarding future of free music

By Kristi Ceccorossi
Collegian Staff

A couple of years ago our computer savvy friends told us about MP3's. They were these neat files that took up a lot of space on hard drives, but had CD quality sound—exponentially better than that RealAudio business that we'd been playing with, which first gave the suggestion of getting music off the internet.

The concept was brilliant: own a great song independent of a not so great album or even a great album in its entirety. Retail price: $17.99. Yours from the Internet: free.

Except it was a pain for most to find FTP servers, and even harder to find reliable ones with any decent music. MP3 search engines catered exclusively to extreme tastes, rarely to the in-between. They were hardly accessible unless you really knew what you were doing and were lucky enough to live in a dorm with a superfast Internet connection. A swell idea that often took more time to find and then fully download than it was worth.

That is, until Shawn Fanning. In January 1999, while he was still a student at Northeastern University, Fanning built a web-based file sharing empire that, in a year, collected more than 20 million active users. He called Napster. It stuck instantly, with imminent success. Fanning adroitly left school for L.A., where he set up Napster, Inc. with real business people.

And so it goes. Napster spread like wildfire, particularly on college campuses. Suddenly downloading MP3's was the most accessible and talked about use of the Internet. It became so widespread and so easy that even my mom—who fails to comprehend the entire Internet to the extent that she believes it's all called AOL—can do it.

It didn't take long for the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA)—who represents basically all major record labels—to realize that the free exchange of music was probably breaking some of those bothersome copyright laws they work so hard to uphold. And by December of 1999 they filed suit against Napster for illegal copying and distributing copyrighted music.

Well, anyone that has used Napster and has thought for a few moments about how it works can tell the RIAA that Napster doesn't actually do any copying or distributing of copyrighted music. But, oops. Napster does know that many of their users are doing just that, they have on occasion encouraged it, and they financially maintain a program that technically supports it. According to copyright law, someone who has knowledge of or materially contributes to infringing activity is liable to be charged as if they actually did the illegal stuff him or herself.

But Napster denies these charges for a few reasons. For one, on its copyright protection page, which every member must read and agree to, it clearly states that Napster will not be available to users who violate copyright law. Unfortunately, anyone who has downloaded a song from Napster knows that isn't true. But it does serve as a legal disclaimer for the company. Not to mention the fact that Napster doesn't make any money. It survives wholly on venture capital funding.

Additionally, Napster proudly and desperately tries to reassure everyone that the crux of their service is to get new music discovered—to play bands that don't have a record deal yet. And in that action, they are actually responsible for increasing record sales, not hurting them.

And this is precisely where it becomes a bunch of legal jargon with an end result that ultimately rests on the decision Judge Marilyn Patel will make God knows when. The case has already stretched over months now with the most recent and significant movement allowing Napster to keep running while the federal appeals court has stayed Judge Patel's injunction order to shut it down. As of now, Napster is in the process of delivering a brief that presents real issues for legal review. Tedious work that has essentially bought Napster time.

In the interim the media has done a fine job portraying Napster as the poor, music loving college student's savior, and simultaneously, the music industry's armageddon. Lots of fancy statistics have been thrown in the mix both for and against Napster. Like some that suggest the sale of CD's in college towns have gone down. Or others that prove record sales in 1999, the same year that MP3's were widely traded, were up 8 percent overall. That's close to $1 billion growth in revenue for the record industry.

And let's not forget the beautiful display of irony when Metallica and Dr. Dre stepped up to sue Napster and came down with lists of 200,000 and 300,000 user names that had down/uploaded their music illegally. Napster was taking the food off of Dre's table, and Metallica, who years ago claimed they didn't give a fuck when told their music was being pirated on the internet, was suddenly livid that their creative talents were being exploited.

It's undeniable that there is something fishy about Napster. Here's a program that brings together a lot of people who have copied, maybe, songs from their favorite CD's—which they may or may not have obtained legally—and lets them trade their loot. We can get what we used to pay for without paying. There is no commercial gain, which makes us think we aren't breaking any copyright laws. But using Napster is clearly a bit more serious than making a mix tape for your girlfriend.

Still, it's not the first time this has happened. The RIAA has been fighting piracy forever. This also isn't the first time the industry has claimed that technology will be responsible for their ruination. In the 70's cassettes were supposed to kill the business. Just as, similarly, VCR's in the 80's inspired fear in the motion picture industry. The industry is huge. It would take years and many, many more MP3 downloaders to even shake the solid ground it sits on.

But, it could happen. The RIAA v. Napster is a very small part of what most people fail to recognize as a much larger issue. In the event that Judge Patel orders Napster to shut itself down, a clone program is inevitable. Oh, wait. There are already dozens of clone programs available that work exactly the same or almost as good as Napster does. They just don't have the publicity yet. Scour.com, for example, might not have the big numbers Napster does in users, but it's platform is essentially the same, except it can search its members' hard drives for a variety of media types.

RIAA knows this, however. In a statement from Hilary Rosen, President and CEO of the RIAA, the RIAA explains that it is fully aware that if Napster is successfully obliterated from the picture, others will come forward. But the RIAA hopes that "once the service offered by Napster is confirmed to be against the law, that there will be little interest by most people in continuing to test their fate."

Here's where the RIAA and everyone else that has gotten in a tizzy over this matter is stupid. They cannot turn back time. Though it's still early in the game, MP3's have been here for a while now. People have been exchanging them over the internet for a while now. All Napster did was make it easier for a lot more people to exchange a lot more MP3's over the last year, setting a new precedent for trading. One little lawsuit isn't going to halt the technology and the demand of 20 million plus users. Consumers have tasted the fruits of digital openness and nothing the RIAA can do with Napster in court is going to reverse their appetite.

Since the real onset of the web in the latter half of the 90's there's been a gradual and persistent buzz about the internet taking over the world, changing the way we buy and sell, eat and sleep, think, receive information, obtain music, read the news, get married, and so on ad infinity, ad absurdum. I argue, this fear is futile. It's impossible to get a solid number for these figures because it's a transient term. But in the U.S. about 45% of households have computers. A bit less than that percentage have internet access. And much less than that use the internet for anything more than emailing their cousins in Wisconsin. But in the not so distant future, the capabilities of platforms like Napster might finally create some substantial statistics to support this terror.

Napster embodies precisely what people love and worship about the web: it's instant, personalized, free, convenient gratification. As long as there is a program that allows us to get what is in the real world a monetary investment, for free, as easily as Napster does, people will use it. The nature of the internet assures that if there is a Napster now, there can always be a Napster, even if it doesn't have the same name or corporate set up.

So what happens?

Beneath the rubble of legal matters, injunctions, and appeals, the RIAA and Napster both claim to have the same goal in mind: to protect and promote the artists who work so

Turn to NAPSTER, page B7

COURTESY OF

The Sole "Survivor"

51 Million people watched Richard Hatch win one million dollars during one of the largest fiascos in the history of entertainment.

Eminem triumphs as Mathers

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

EMINEM
The Marshall Mathers LP
Interscope

Along with Napster and reality TV, Eminem was certainly the entertainment story of the summer of 2000. The always-successful pre-release MTV hype (see Significant Other), controversy-brewing lyrical content, and family turmoil made it impossible for the media to show anything but the goldilocked rapper for the majority of the warmer months. Of course, after the magazines had been sold and the TV ratings increased, everyone took a big step back in the wake of accusations of homophobia in the lyrics of tracks in his sophomore effort The Marshall Mathers LP. And as offensive as the lyrics can be, they're not that offensive, comparatively. Song titles alone by Boston act A.C. (look them up for their unabbreviated name) would have people in twice the frenzy, but only when acts with "questionable" content start selling in real numbers do we all feel the need to overanalyze and, of course, save the children. And real numbers the Shady one did post, breaking records that made him the inevitable scapegoat for the world's problems, with such ridiculous requests being made as a sit-down for Eminem with homosexual teens. Not only should Eminem not be required to justify his art, the fact is the album would be much less enjoyable if he did. The "did he mean that?!" lyrics, multiple personalities and overall venom are all what make The Marshall Mathers LP the most important record of the year.

It won't be the best record of the year, nor even the best hip-hop (ooh woah oh Ghostface, Ghostface), but the first musical history footnote of the new millennium has definitely been reached. Many different aspects of pop culture simply seem to have convened over Eminem and allowed him to make a supremely interesting record. Everyone loves gossip, and everyone loves to see what everyone else is doing, as evidenced by the amazing popularity of reality TV. So Eminem makes his new album the biggest gossip piece of the summer. Not only does he address old beefs, he's happy to create new ones, like saying Christina Aguilera has a venereal disease, or that New Kids on the Block performed certain oral favors. All the while he calls out all of his enemies in his lyrics, bashing ICP, his wife, his mother and even a thinly veiled attack towards DMX, among many others. He also tackles the latest trend in music, boy bands, and gives them the treatment many people have been waiting to hear.

All the while, Eminem is constantly switching back and forth, supposedly, between his true self and his made-up persona Slim Shady. This may seem like a convenient device to dodge questions of homophobia, since it could be said that Slim Shady, not Eminem, uses the word "faggot." But it doesn't really matter. The prevailing message from the album certainly is not aggressive hate towards gays, and he uses the word "fag" no more than countless other rap acts. Not sensing any hatred of gays on record, there seems to be little sense in sniffing out if Eminem is a homophobe, because no one can figure out if he is or not, since his music really doesn't convey that sentiment, rather using words such as "fag" to denote someone who he is trying to make fun of or embarrass. Of course, this is not at all progressive in terms of hate speech, and is something that should be pointed out as negative, but finding Eminem to be a raging homophobe on the album is something that just can't be done. Furthermore, all of this controversy just adds to Eminem's desire to offend anyone and everyone possible. Pushing the buttons of gay activists must give Eminem as much pleasure as angering affiliates of other groups he offends on the album, such as the mentally retarded, and the families of Christopher Reeve and Sonny Bono. As morally repulsive as one may find all of this, there has always been and always will be someone out there pushing the boundaries of good taste, and in the end, they are usually revered for it.

Eminem also proves again that rap doesn't have to be just about "big screen TVs, blunts, and bitches." Many rap acts have obviously been doing this for years (De La Soul, Kool Keith, Jurassic 5), but none have achieved the kind of commercial success that Eminem has earned. And even dedicated hip-hop heads will find Eminem's content more than satisfying, since no matter how alternative your hip-hop collection is (paging Dr. Octagon), chances are Eminem will have some topics (raping one's mother, fantasies about wife killing) that may not have been touched upon.

The rapping skills of Eminem have been lauded quite loudly by critics as of late, and their praise seems a little over the top. Some critics place Eminem among the best living MCs, while others simply gush over his profound mastery of the English language. Eminem is a great rapper, brilliant even, but his rhyming skills aren't likely to blow away anyone who listens to a lot of rap, and I wouldn't place him in the league of the likes of Ghostface Killah or Method Man. The album is not perfect, either, since the throwaway "Under the Influence" and the plodding "Amityville" slow things down a bit.

In the end, however, the good far outweighs the bad. "Stan" is the album's beautiful and haunting centerpiece. "The Way I Am" is an amazingly honest look at celebrity life, and "Kim" is every bit as emotional as it is disturbing and repulsive. Dr. Dre's production is predictably inventive and polished throughout. Love it or hate it, The Marshall Mathers LP will certainly be one of the albums that defines this year in music, and is an important event in the history of rap music. A

COURTESY AFTERMATH RECORDS

Say what you want about him, Eminem tore up the charts with The Marshall Mathers LP.

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

Jim Carrey displays how he really spends his lonely nights without Lauren Holley on the set of the newest film from the Farrelly Brothers.

Farrelly Brothers & Carrey return: Irene delivers the comedic goods

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Me, Myself & Irene
Starring Jim Carrey & Renee Zellweger
Directed by Bobby Farrelly & Peter Farrelly
Written by Peter Farrelly, Mike Cerrone & Bobby Farrelly

After the enormous success of There's Something About Mary, Peter and Bobby Farrelly are certainly held in high regards. There is no question that the Farrelly brothers have been the champions of comedy over the past few years. Besides There's Something About Mary, the duo directed the hilarious Kingpin, as well as Dumb & Dumber, one of the first films to establish Jim Carrey as a household name.

The combination of Jim Carrey and the Farrelly brothers should no doubt be a financial explosion, but there were some very serious questions that surrounded the reunion of the comedy team. The most obvious hurdle that the Farrelly brothers had to conquer was the constant comparison of the film to their last masterpiece. It is very rare that filmmakers can avoid being looked at under a very close microscope after creating something that catches so many people's attention as There's Something About Mary did.

Another major issue that surfaces with Me, Myself and Irene, is Jim Carrey's return to the type of comedy that made him a superstar. Carrey has been basking in the glory of his past two critically acclaimed roles. In 1998, he played Truman Burbank in The Truman Show, and in 1999, he dazzled audiences as Andy Kaufman in Man On the Moon. Carrey won the Golden Globe Award for Best Actor for both of these roles.

As expected, the Farrelly brothers did not hold anything back when they made Me, Myself & Irene. The film tells the story of a Rhode Island state trooper who has to battle his repressed split-personality tendencies. The split personality comes as a result of his desertion from his wife for a black midget, whom she had three children with. After she takes off with him, she leaves the children behind. Carrey does an excellent job playing the role of the state trooper. As always, he is very versatile and extremely unpredictable. Renee Zellweger plays the girlfriend of a convict, who is mixed up in a situation she really knows nothing about. Carrey gets involved in her life when he has to drive her back to New York where she is wanted for police questioning.

There is no avoiding the fact that the plot is extremely weak. For half of the film, you are very bored by the worthless good guy/bad guy cliche. For the other half of the film, you simply don't care. Unlike There's Something About Mary, which had an elaborate plot with some interesting twists, the story of Me, Myself & Irene fails to catch your attention. However, the Farrelly brothers are not known for their excellence in writing detailed plots. Whether it was Woody Harrelson "milking" a bull in Kingpin, Jeff Daniels experiencing explosive diarrhea in Dumb & Dumber, or the classic Something About Mary hair gel gag, Peter and Bobby Farrelly are most famous for grossing you out!

As expected, Me, Myself & Irene simply does not fail at delivering the gross-out jokes. The film comes fully equipped with jokes about masturbation, a dead cow, and a very creative and disgusting place to stick a live chicken. If you let your imagination travel on all of these circumstances, among others, they prove to be remarkably hilarious. The constant infamile and revolting humor almost makes up for the very poor plot of the film.

The true stars of the film are the trio of African-American actors who play Jim Carrey's sons. The characters are typically stereotyped as generic black comedy film stars of the past ten years, but there is a very unique twist on the stereotype. The three sons are all geniuses, and they have conversations that include one brother saying to another, "You better watch out or you're gonna get another A on your test again you stupid." The three actors will no doubt return in some form. The Farrelly brothers would be insane to not revisit these characters somehow.

As for Jim Carrey, he seems to do an excellent job making the transition back to crazy comedy. There is no doubt that he has the talent to do so. It was just obvious that everyone would wonder what he would look like after taking almost three years off from zany comedy. The last time we saw him in a role that fit his wacky personality was in 1997's Liar Liar. He will obviously not be winning any Golden Globes for this performance, but sometimes that's not what the audience is looking for in him anyway.

As for the question about the Farrelly brothers keeping constant with There's Something About Mary, it's sad to say that they do not even come close. Though it will probably be impossible for them to every make a film that can compare to There's Something About Mary, Me, Myself & Irene cannot even be placed in the same league. They tried extremely hard to continue to be the gross-out kings, and completely forgot to write a plausible plot that anyone could possibly care about. The plot of Me, Myself & Irene is weak at best. Renee Zellweger seems almost useless throughout the entire film. She is supposed to be the most influencial character on Carrey's life, and we spend most of the time disregarding the fact that she is even present. The film is saved by excellent characters, and even better actors (with the exception of Zellweger). Though the plot is weak, the laughs are plentiful. It may not be fun for the whole family, but Me, Myself & Irene provides an opportunity to turn your brain off and sit back and laugh. B-

Like to work with computers? Need an evening job this semester?
Alan says:
RELAX
Come down and work for Collegian Night Graphics! Get exciting hands-on experience with state-of-the-art computers and software, and play a HUGE part in the production of New England's largest college daily newspaper. Whether you have prior experience in graphic design or not, we will train you to become a pro in no time. So instead of working some lame security job where you get harassed by obnoxious drunks until the wee hours, come down to 113 Campus Center Basement and look into a job with Night Graphics.
The drunks here are rather likeable, actually...

RENOVATOR'S
Now Hiring
Catalog Request / Sales Representatives
Part-Time Evening and Weekend positions available. Basic computer skills and a pleasant telephone manner required. Please apply in person between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at:
THE RENOVATOR'S SUPPLY, INC.
RENOVATOR'S OLD MILL
MILLERS FALLS, MA 01349
413-669-3773 tel.
413-669-3796 fax
Located on Rte. 63 off Rte. 2, right at the bridge over the Millers River

YUCK!
collegian arts:
we hate everything and you're no exception

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB

DESIGN SUPPLY
ART STUDIO SUPPLIES
AT THE TOWN COMMON
65 SO. PLEASANT ST.
AMHERST MA 01002
FREE
DISCOUNT CARD
EXPIRES 11/1/00
413•253•5592

Do You Need a Class?
Check out EDUC 395Z: Intergroup Dialogues
Fall 2000, 3 credits
Classs starts September 21, 2000
Take an exciting class where you can talk about your experiences and issues in society today!!
Men & Women Dialogue
Thursdays 4-6:30pm & Sat. 10/14
Race & Ethnicity Dialogue For People of ALL Backgrounds
Thursday 2:30 -5pm & Sat 10/14
Is there racism on campus?
What makes a REAL man?
What makes a REAL woman?
Affirmative action vs reverse discrimination
Interracial relationships
How safe is our campus for women?
Ask those questions you've always wanted to ask....
Application forms available
159 Hills South (Joanne Provost, 545-3610)
"Open to everyone"
For more information contact the Project Mosaik office
(Adena Cytron, 545-4192, 351 Hills South)

CVS/pharmacy®
AMHERST
76 North Pleasant St. 256-8620
165 University Dr. 256-0423
For all your back to School needs 1Hour Photo®
single set just 6.99

Perfect Storm nearly perfect

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

The Perfect Storm
directed by Wolfgang Petersen with George Cloony, Mark Wahlberg

The inevitable big-screen adaptation of Sebastian Junger's best-selling novel has a lot to recommend it: an excellent cast, monstrous special effects and the promise of sincere human drama that comes with material based on actual events. While the book was quite excellently, very information-heavy in detailing military rescue efforts and the ins and outs of working on a swordfish-boat, the movie jumps enthusiastically into the human, emotional side of the story — perhaps too enthusiastically, for the results walk the line between captivating and manipulative.

George Clooney, still feeling the warm of the glowing critical treatment of Three Kings, starts as Billy Tyne, captain of the swordboat Andrea Gale, who can't seem to pull himself out of a slump of ever-decreasing catches. Rival captain and marginal love interest Linda Greenlaw is played by Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, whose recent absence from the silver screen is regrettable, to put it mildly. Also returning from Three Kings is Mark Wahlberg, who brings considerable conviction and maturity to his role as a rookie fisherman.

Tyne decides to squeeze in one final outing into the fishing season, heading for the distant, dangerous, and fish-rich Flemish Cap. The crew of the Andrea Gale become ensnared in an explosive and unprecedented confluence of weather systems, and find themselves struggling to survive against the ocean's mounting fury.

In order to lend The Perfect Storm the sort of emotional hook that allows audiences to invest themselves in a story, the movie sets up a series of saccharine story arcs, one for each crew member — there's the young couple starting a new life together, the divorced man fearing estrangement from his sad-eyed son, the promise of romance between two lonely broken-b-life forty-somethings, etc. The inevitable tragedy of the story means that none of these connections is ever revisited, except in only the most strategically depressing manner.

As if worrying about the Andrea Gale's crew wasn't enough, The Perfect Storm also takes the time to depict the heroic rescue operation undertaken by Coast Guard rescue jumpers for a stranded family out for a pleasure cruise down the east coast, and the ensuing struggle of those same jumpers, separated from their downed helicopter, to reach safety in the nightmarish ocean. Although the specifics of the rescue operation are interesting for a while, these characters are only a step away from nameslessness, and their inclusion in the movie adaptation makes for a too-scattered narrative. The Andrea Gale crew provides more than enough human drama to keep an audience interested; everything else eventually becomes a distraction from that central conflict.

Despite the film's emotional heavy-handedness, however, the action and acting are all solidly engrossing, and the computer-generated effects, although not seamless, provide some stunning visual backdrops to the action of the film's second half. The Perfect Storm is very Hollywood, lacking in subtly and any sense of emotional sophistication, but nonetheless an entertaining two hours of tragedy, heroism, and glorification of the human spirit. B+

Mission: FAILURE

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Mission: Impossible 2 directed by John Woo
with Tom Cruise, Thandie Newton

Ah, the summer action flick. Equal parts gasoline, testosterone and sweat, all mixed together with motorcycles and helicopters, and topped with a sprinkling of casual sex. Leading this summer's action lineup is Mission: Impossible 2, featuring a hunkier-than-ever Tom Cruise and the direction of action film guru John Woo. For all of the promising talent involved, however, M:I2 is a surprisingly brainless exercise in explosions, and not much else. It abandons the confusing intrigue and bothersome character development of 1996's Mission: Impossible, and settles for a formless collection of action sequences and useless plot twists, resulting in one of the most forgettable movies to fool audiences out of their money in a long time.

Tom Cruise reprises his non-role as Ethan Hunt, IMF agent and smooth operator sent to prevent a deadly new virus from falling into the wrong hands. To do this, he enlists the help of expert thief Nyah (Thandie Newton). A ridiculous car chase and a night of sweet, sweet love passes for actual romantic involvement between the two, complicating Ethan's interest in the mission and attempting to humanize the cliched plot. Guns are shot, punches are thrown, gadgets are used, vehicles are abused and the movie arrives at the ending no one doubted would come.

I don't mean to hold M:I2 to an artificial standard; these movies are glorified comic books, but when done well they can be thoroughly entertaining. What sinks this one, however, is the mind-numbing shallowness of every aspect of the movie - the sense that such considerations as plot were treated merely as vehicles for Woo's directing. And even there, the effort appears tired and incomplete, as if Woo felt it sufficient simply to rehash his own established style, without injecting any sort of spontaneity.

This is not to say that M:I2 doesn't have its moments. The opening rock climbing sequence, although completely disconnected from the story, is nicely shot and sequenced, and the motorcycle duel leading up to the final confrontation exemplifies Woo's talent for constructing phenomenal chase scenes. Without a sturdy plot and worthwhile characters as anchors, however, these action sequences evaporate almost as quickly as they occur.

Also returning from the Mission: Impossible is Ving Rhames as computer ace Luther Stickell, and the waste of such a talented, charismatic actor as Rhames in such a flat, useless role ought to be criminal. Anthony Hopkins makes an uncredited appearance as Hunt's commander, delivering a couple of clever lines but otherwise contributing nothing to the movie; one can only wonder why he took the job. As Nyah, Thandie Newton doesn't have to act so much as stand around looking thin and sexy and vulnerable.

Everything about M:I2 is brightly painted but paper-thin, and 20 minutes after walking out of the movie theater, you'll have a difficult time remembering anything about what you just saw. C-

CARDIO KICK BOXING
STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0018
Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat @ 7:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 Bay Road, Amherst
256-0018

If you worked Night Graphics last year and are interested in working this year, come down to the Basement and sign up for a time.

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions beginning late August/early September.
CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.
MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum three shifts (approx. 3 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week. Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train.
DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours. Previous kitchen experience preferred.
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at:
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply

Looking For Something To Do?
Atkins Is A Destination For All Seasons.
ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
Rte. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9528 • (800) 594-9537
A unique country market nestled in one of the oldest apple orchards in New England. Just a five minute drive from UMass on Rt 116 will give you a chance to sample some of New England's favorite foods, a fresh picked apple or peach, or pick up a country gift as a keepsake.
Country Bakery
Farm Fresh Produce
Homemade Fudge
120 Varieties Cheese
Meat Market
Deli & Lunches
Specialty Foods
Full Service Florist
Fruit & Gift Baskets
Ice Cream & Juice Bar
Gift Department
Prepared & Take Out Food
We've Got Something For Everyone!

THE FINE ARTS CENTER'S SILVER ANNIVERSARY SEASON
Celebrating 25 Years of Great Performances and Great Student Audiences!
Teatro Hugo & Ines, 10/5 & 7
• Ratan Thiyam's Uttar Priyadarshi
• American Rep in King Stag
• Berlin Philharmonic Woodwind Quintet with Jon Nakamatsu
• Mandy Barnett
• Boston Pops with Keith Lockhart*
Eddie Palmieri with David Sanchez, 12/2
• Sydney Dance Co.
• Accentus
• Michael Feinstein*
• St. Petersburg Ice Ballet in Cinderella
• Stefon Harris
Penn & Teller, 2/6
• London City Opera in Carmen
• Garth Fagan Dance
• The Grieg Trio
• The National Orchestra of Spain with Pepe Romero
• Michael Moschen
Aeros, 3/14
• The Yellowjackets
• Broadway's It Ain't Nothin' but the Blues
• Juilliard String Quartet
• Miami City Ballet
• Dawn Upshaw with Richard Goode
• Theater Terra performing Circus
It's an Encore season of great programming at the Fine Arts Center. From the insane humor of Penn and Teller to the awesome gravity-defying dance of Aeros to the hot Latin rhythms of Eddie Palmieri and Band and so much more! And YOU as Five College Students can attend events at the Fine Arts Center for only $5, $7 & $10 (*special events not included)
Don't delay. Tickets are going fast for the Silver Anniversary Season. Celebrate with us and call 545-2511 for tickets or stop by the box office located in the Concert Hall lobby – open M-F, 10-6pm.
Check us out (and our artists) online at:
www.fineartscenter.com.
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
Let the Ovations continue!

Stonebrook Saddlery
•584-0312•
Monday-Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-8
Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-5
Sunday 12-5
Welcome Students
We have all your equipment needs for lessons and intercollegiate riding
Dansko Ariat Millers Devon Aire
Located in the Hadley Village Barn
Shops on Route 9
Before the bridge heading into NoHo

Thinking About Teaching
Five College Science and Math Pre-Ed Program
Explore teaching as a career while you study science, math,engineering or education
• Reformed science and math courses
• Introduction to theories of teaching and learning
• Experience in K-12 classrooms
• Information about scholarships
For more information contact:
STEMTEC Director of Student Services
436 Lederle GRT
st-ss@k12s.phast.umass.edu
(413)545-0734
http://k12s.Phast.umass.edu~stemtec
STEMTEC

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET
175 University Drive
Monday-Saturday 7am-11pm
Sunday 7am-10pm
WELCOME BACK UMass!
Prices Effective Sept. 6th To Sept. 10th
Bath Sheet
26"x52", White, Blue, Hunter Green or Rose..... $3.98 ea.
18"x30" Hand Towel.....$1.68 ea.
14"x14" Wash Cloth..... 68¢ ea.
Bic Round Stick Pen
or NEW Crystal Grip Pen, Blue or Black 98¢
Back To Basics
Bean Bag Chair $14.99
Dreamland Fluffy Bed Pillow
Polyester Filled STANDARD SIZE
Standard
Bed Pillow
20"x24"..... 2 For $6
Gooseneck
Desk Lamp..... 2 For $10
Top Crest
3 Subject
Theme Book
120 Sheets
Theme Books
70 Sheets
2 For $1
88¢ Ceramic
Table Lamp
Assorted Colors, Round or Square
2 For $10
Riviera
Glass Set
18 Piece
$3.98
FOOD From the Food Court!
World Class
Homestyle
Fried Chicken
12 Piece
$7.99
World Class
Party Pizza
40 Pieces
2 For $25
World Class
Fried Chicken
Dinner (White Meat)
2 Sides Of Your Choice, and One Biscuit
$4.50
14" Large
Albacore
Tuna Grinder
$5.95
World Class
BBQ Ribs
$4.99
Official Supermarket of UMass Athletics
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

Disney creates Dinocrapasauraus

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Dinosaur
Directed by Eric Leighton and Ralph Zondag with the voices of D.B. Sweeney, Julianna Margulies and Samuel Wright

Bigger, faster, sleeker. While these may be qualities desired by most athletes, they are all also attributes that can describe Disney's mammoth summer blockbuster Dinosaur.

Billed as Jurassic Park meets The Lion King, Dinosaur was expected to be about as big as movies come. And, you know what they say, the bigger they are, the harder they fall.

To dispute that the film's annihilation was anything less than groundbreaking would be futile. It was downright stunning. I can honestly say that I was hooked by the very first trailer I saw with the graceful pterodactyl swooping down over the steep cliff into the expansive landscape of these breathtaking, majestic, awesome – whichever adjective one chooses, it is perfectly apt.

And after about two and a half minutes of the trailer, one crashing realization shattered any built-up anticipation: they made the dinosaurs talk!? At that point, it became painfully obvious that this was a Disney movie, and as such, would entail all the setbacks attached to that stigma.

In a fairly unclever blending of Romeo and Juliet and the Exodus story, the movie's hero Aladar (voiced by D.B. Sweeney) must help a tribe of surviving dinosaurs find paradise after a pseudo-Armageddon. In his way: a couple of nasty Carnivores (almost definitely a made-up dinosaur) and Scar, the veteran leader of the tribe who is reluctant to relinquish his power.

Disney provides a typical bunch of characters and storylines to occupy Aladar during his journey. There's the family of monkeys that raised him (including Ossie Davis, Alfre Woodard and Max Casella). Then there's Scar's sister and the film's love interest (Julianna Margulies). All this material eventually frenzies into some feel-good scenes extrapolating the virtues of love, friendship and working together.

I didn't have a problem with Dinosaur's obligatory musical number for the kids. I didn't have a problem with the obligatory happy ending, which completely ignores the fact that another comet comes and blows the pretty dinosaurs to kingdom come. I didn't even have a problem with the ever so subtle communist undertones in the movie. (Who's Charles Darwin anyway?) I was, however, annoyed by the complete lack of thought given to the story.

After a while, the effect of the animation wears off and what remains is an utterly listless, uninaginative fairy tale. Indeed, the movie may be too pretty for its own good. The dinosaurs are so good-looking that they seem almost fake. And even if this were not true, then the story is at best a poor excuse to experiment with computer-animated graphics. This is evident, if nowhere else, in the film's extremely short length. The movie is barely 90 minutes long. I couldn't help but feel somewhat cheated by Dinosaur. Even not expecting much from the story, I didn't expect it to intrude on the animation, which it did. Overall, a big letdown. C

COURTESY DISNEY

Though the dinosaurs may have been huge, Dinosaur proved to be one of Disney's less memorable summer films.

Mad Season wonderful and tantalizing; Matchbox Twenty tops marvelous debut

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Matchbox Twenty
Mad Season
Atlantic Recording Corporation and Melisma and Lava Records

In the tradition of Hootie and the Blowfish, Third Eye Blind and No Doubt, the Rob Thomas-fronted band Matchbox Twenty has been placed in a very elite category. all of these bands encountered the same type of success with their debut releases. Each band had a very long run on the pop, rock and adult contemporary charts, because it was extremely difficult to figure out where they belong. Regardless of what type of music these bands were considered, they all had something else in common. They all made a ton of money.

Matchbox Twenty is trying to be the first act to do something that none of the other bands were able to accomplish. They are attempting to find the same success with further projects that they found on their first release. 1996's Yourself or Someone Like You can certainly rank among the best albums of the 1990's. After winning six Grammys, including Record of the Year and Album of the Year, Yourself or Someone Like You sold over 10 million copies, which the record industry calls a "Diamond Award." Powered by the release of four No.1 songs, Yourself or Someone Like You established Matchbox Twenty as an untouchable entity. Of course that was in 1996, and we all know what their mission is, should they choose to accept it.

Here in 2000, Matchbox Twenty is trying to capture all of that recognition once again with Mad Season by Matchbox Twenty. Unlike all of the previously mentioned bands, they are able to get this done admirably, and in many ways are able to improve upon the benefits of Yourself or Someone Like You.

Matchbox Twenty has the perfect sound and look for radio stardom. As much as any band hates to be placed in the same context as Hanson and Britney Spears, it is very difficult to ignore the fact that these are going to be the accompanying acts that one would find if they wanted to listen to Matchbox Twenty. As long as Matchbox Twenty can make semi-decent music, people will listen to it. Unless they create something that is utterly wretched, they will sell albums. This was apparent because the band was huge even before they had a chance to proclaim themselves as a band. "This is the first one (record) where we can really say, 'this is our sound.' When we made our first record, we hadn't really been a band for very long. We hadn't had any really good fights, we hadn't had any really good laughs and we hadn't done much of anything together. But now, so much has happened to us that we've formed a character within ourselves. This is the first time we're saying, 'this is Matchbox Twenty making a record.'" Thomas says.

Mad Season goes well beyond this. Rob Thomas' heartfelt lyrics are sold perfectly through his remarkable voice. The rest of the band may simply be added back-up noise for Thomas, but wasn't that what Carlos Santana's role was in the hideously overplayed "Smooth" as well? The lyrics are very powerful, and much like the band's first single from 1996, "Push," every song says something deep down that every man can relate to at some point.

"I'm not saying there was nothing wrong, I just didn't think you'd ever get tired of me. And I'm not saying we ever had the right to hold on, I just didn't wanna let you get away from me," Thomas exclaims in the song "Leave." Words like these can tear at you as you begin to wonder how Thomas entered your life and matched it to his music. This is a feeling that true poets and songwriters live their lives to produce. If nothing else, this feeling is one element that separates Matchbox Twenty far away from studio created pop crap. The passionate lyrics fuel the rest of the band to produce well beyond their individual talents may allow them. Thomas is a true artist in a world of musicians trying to spice up an ordinarily bland atmosphere.

As for the technical aspects of the album, it has all the makings of the success that Yourself or Someone Like You experienced. "Bent," the album's first single became a huge summer hit, and before you've heard the last of the record, expect "Rest Stop," "The Burn," "Angry" and "Black and White People" to get some serious airplay. The amount of airplay that the singles from Yourself of Someone Like You saw cleared any expectations that anyone had for Orlando based band. There is very little on Mad Season that is not better than any of the songs on the radio today.

Compared to Yourself or Someone Like You, Mad Season stacks up extremely well, and in the long run may be considered even better. The band shows very strong signs of continuing to be one of the most popular entertainers in the country. Unlike anything that Backstreet Boys, N'Sync or Britney Spears will ever produce, every single song on the album is worth the purchase price of the compact disc. A+

Be a part of the Fun:
Work for The Collegian!

Pioneer Valley Ballet established in 1965
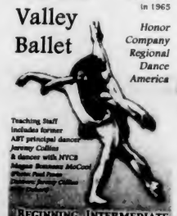
Honor Company Regional Dance America



Teaching Staff includes former ABT principal dancer Jeremy Collins & dancer with NYCB
BEGINNING, INTERMEDIATE & ADVANCED CLASSES MON-FRI
586-4142 or PIONEERVALLEYBAL@AOL.COM for BROCHURE & REGISTRATIONS free registration w/ college ID

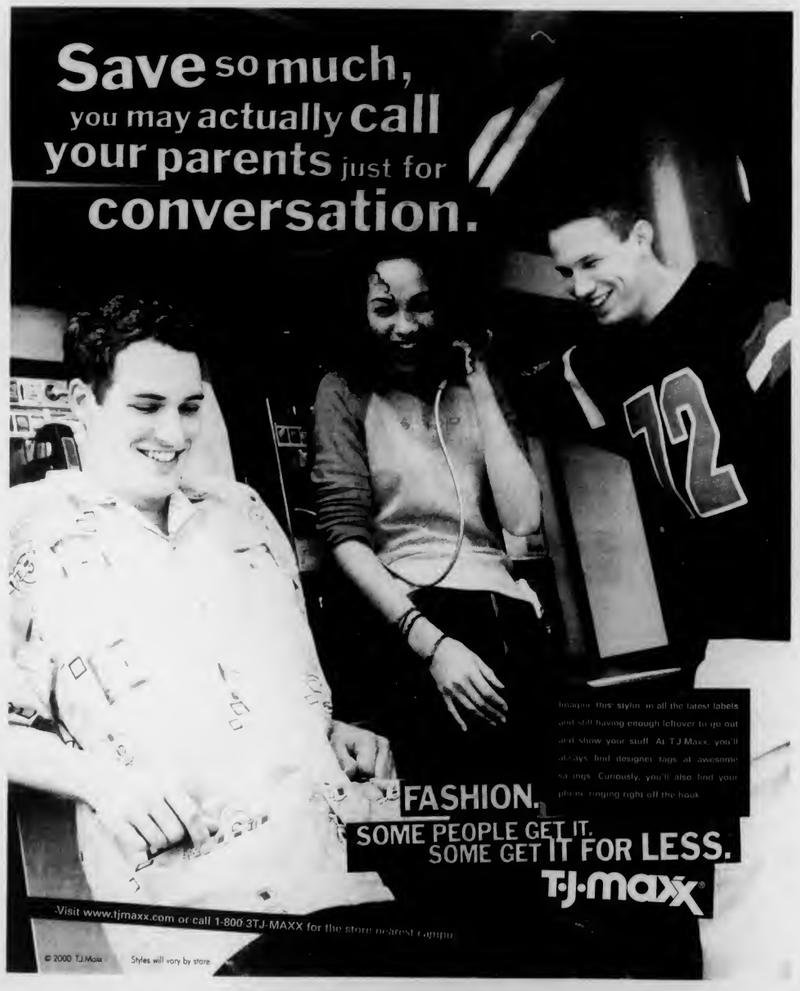
STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITION
CARDIO KICK BOX
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0040
Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precor Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0040

Save so much, you may actually call your parents just for conversation.



FASHION. SOME PEOPLE GET IT. SOME GET IT FOR LESS.
T.J.maxx
Visit www.tjmaxx.com or call 1-800-3TJ-MAXX for the store nearest Campus
© 2000 T.J.Maxx Styles will vary by store

STORE NEAREST CAMPUS: In Hadley at Campus Plaza, Route 116 and Route 9

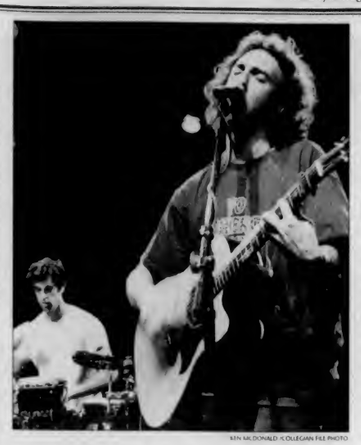
napster

continued from page B1

hard to give us the music we just adore. The artists will probably never be at a loss for compensation, as long as they're signed with a decent label. And for the millions of artists who aren't that lucky, Napster and its cohorts are building a secure and extensive fan base that, without the internet, the artists could not achieve.

Getting music discovered and appreciated is what both organizations do best. It's just that one blatantly adheres to the Constitution, and sometimes pays out the middleman more than necessary. And the other is a consumer's dream: a free for all, except for the people who spend the money to make the music we longer have to pay for. With so much in common and with the potential battle between making money and spending less money on those who make it, eventually something will move until compromise comes into view.

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITION
CARDIO KICK BOX
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0040
Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com



KEN MCDONALD /COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Ever creative, Guster accentuated their recent Boston show by arriving in a dinghy and handing out kazoos apparently left over from Mike Dukakis' failed presidential campaign.

Guster blasts a bigger venue

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

Guster
Fleet Boston Pavilion
Friday August 4, 2000

Guster fans are not normal fans. They go that extra step that walks the tightrope between devoted and insane. They know every lyric to every song, have been to almost every concert and probably know what lead singer Ryan Miller had for dinner last night (chicken). This is a band whose middle 90's success rested mostly on word-of-mouth, not on commercial marketing, dance moves, good looks or silicon implants. The big questions are: how do they keep the Gusterites so fanatic? How do they keep surprising everyone? And how do they grow their fan base and still keep the true ones loyal?

All three of these questions were answered August 4– Guster's biggest show ever, to date. Not counting the billions they served at Woodstock 99', this crowd of 7000-plus at the Fleet Center Pavilion in South Boston witnessed the band's grandest effort yet: Guster put on a show with more energy than 7000 cups of coffee.

After a funky, laid-back opening set by Karl Denson's Tiny Universe, Guster gave us the first surprise of the night very early. With darkness setting in and the wait between sets taking forever, the big video screens finally perked to life, and showed Guster making their grand entrance this way: in a three-man life raft. They were actually dropped off in the South Boston Harbor and rowed their way to the dock, and then on to the stage. Any band that braves the smell of the harbor automatically deserves a rave review, and the crowd, already pumped, absolutely loved it.

But the music itself got off to a less auspicious start. They opened with the mediocre "I Spy" off their latest album Lost and Gone Forever, sounding somewhat lost themselves. Maybe it was the huge crowd already singing along, but the first numbers sounded a little unfocused and distant, easy to listen to but hard to love. But they were just warm ups for the surprises to come.

The second one came about 40 minutes in. Before the concert, every audience member was handed a kazoo. Not just regular kazoos either, but kazoos with the label "Dukakis in 88" crossed out and "Guster" printed below it. (There was, of course, never any explanation for this). But the kazoos came of use in the middle of the show, when Miller led a mini-concert with coordinated audience kazoo playing. He split the crowd up into three sections and had each play a different note, and the crowd responded beautifully, creating an interactive atmosphere that lasted throughout the night (later, Guster also demanded their usual request of having everyone in the audience hug the person next to them).

That's when the show really took off, with a funky, entirely new version of "Scars & Stitches" off their first album, Parachute. The reworked song was almost unrecognizable in its new clothes, and led to the brilliant "X-Ray Eyes" and Goldfly's biggest hit, "Airport Song." "Two Points for Honesty" off Lost and Gone Forever, was hauntingly done. Guster's sad but happy lyrics are never more eat-opening than live in concert, and "if that's all you will be/you'll be a waste of time/you've dreamed a thousand dreams/none seems to stick in your mind" is as haunting as it comes.

After a decent rendition of their first ever hit "Parachute," Guster turned to their latest single "Barrel of a Gun"—a sing-along song with a disturbing twist. The "4-3-2-1" chorus is so catchy that you almost forget the song is about a person in love with a poster on his wall. "Ha-Ha," another hit off Lost, was the highlight of the evening. In the middle of the already near-perfect number opening bandleader Karl Denson of Karl Denson's Tiny Universe walked on stage, picked up a flute and joined in the jam. It was a rousing, heart-pumping number and Guster would have a hard time topping it.

TEXTBOOKS. FREE SHIPPING*
*WHEN YOU BUY BOOKS AND ANY GEAR ITEM THROUGH 10/15/00

PROFICUOUS
USE BIG WORDS.
bigwords.com™
TEXTBOOKS GEAR MUSIC & MORE
© 2000 BIGWORDS, Inc.

Everywoman's Center
Resource / Referral Program is currently hiring!
We offer volunteer, intern and work-study positions. Gain skills while you serve campus and community women.
Call 545-0883 or stop in to the bottom floor of Wilder Hall, located behind Morrill

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
23 n. pleasant st., amherst 256-0733
145 main st., northampton 586-0155

Cousins MARKET
Friendly & Convenient
Open Every Day 7am to 11pm.
11 E. Pleasant St.
549-3500
Next door to "The Pub"
Beer + Wine
Grocery and Deli
Grinders • Sandwiches
Fresh Fruit • Vegetables
Dairy • Natural Foods
Specialty Tobacco
Telephone Cards
Great Rates Worldwide!

HUNGRY?

Subway of Amherst offers fresh 6" and footlong subs, delicious salads and, for smaller appetites, 4" round sandwiches.
SUBWAY®
4 Main Street, Amherst • 256-1919
Sunday - Thursday 10 am - Midnight
Friday & Saturday 10 am - 2 am mad season tour

matchbox TWENTY

special guest

The Jayhawks

Fri • Sept 22

MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE, ALL ticketmaster OUTLETS & CHARGE-BY-PHONE: (413) 733-2500 • (617) 931-2000 • (508) 931-2000.
PURCHASE TICKETS ONLINE at ticketmaster.com.

PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP
AN OGDEN ENTERTAINMENT COMPANY

EVENT DATE & TIME SUBJECT TO CHANGE.

www.matchboxtwenty.com

OUTLET, INTERNET & PHONE CHARGE ORDERS SUBJECT TO CONVENIENCE CHARGES.

Road Trip low on gas and laughs

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Road Trip
Directed by Todd Phillips with Breckin Meyer, Sean William Scott and Amy Smart

In the continuing race to produce the absolute crudest comedy possible, Dreamworks gives us Road Trip - "a tribute to the greatest college tradition of all time." However, the real tradition here was started by There's Something About Mary two years ago and continued by American Pie last summer. Road Trip is more gross-out comedy for the pubescent male teenager just aching to sneak into a rated 'R' movie.

This time the scene shifts to college and more specifically to the University of Ithaca. Poor sweet innocent Josh (Breckin Meyer) is tearing himself apart because he is thousands of miles from his lifelong girlfriend, Tiffany (Rachel Blanchard). He copes by making video-tapes and pouring his heart out every week.

One night in a moment of weakness, Josh has a wild sex romp with his strikingly gorgeous friend Beth (Amy Smart). And of course, he let's her make a tape of the night (because that's the natural thing to do). The tape accidentally gets sent to Austin, Texas where Tiffany goes to school. Despite his mixed feelings for both girls, he must drive to Austin, Texas to retrieve the tape before Tiffany sees it.

Road Trip collects the usual group of misfits for the journey and soon enough the usual sexual indiscretions follow. There's Kyle (DJ Qualls), the nerdy weakling who overcomes an overbearing father through sexual exploit. There's Rubin (Paul Costanzo), the drug-induced intellectual who can kick neither his habit nor his obsession with fate. There's E.L. (Sean William Scott...cough Stiffler), the wacky, do anything, sex-crazed party animal. And, MTV comedian Tom Greene, who plays native Ithacan and eight-year senior Barry Manilow, ties the story together.

Barry relates the tale during a freshmen orientation tour and stays in Ithaca for the infamous trip, thereby allowing Beth (who obviously doesn't know Josh has a girlfriend) to chase after the quartet.

There seems to a checklist for these types of movie and Road Trip adheres to it closely. Hot girls: check. Gratuitous nudity: check. Bizarre sexual situations: check. Nerdy wimp who comes of age: check. Potty humor: check. Happy, "it all works out," ending: double check.

And imagine, the movie fits all that into an hour and a half. Indeed, Road Trip is strikingly short; in fact, it's the only striking part about the movie. William Scott returns essentially to play Stiffler again (his American Pie character). Breckin Meyer (Can't Hardly Wait, Go) has an earnest quality about him, but Road Trip is not concerned with sincerity. No, this is mindless comedy, and as that it's fairly tame.

Even a non-fan could tell that Tom Greene was woefully underused. Plus, the cuts from story to narration and back again made the film structurally awkward. To its credit though, Road Trip never languishes for any period of time. The movie is fast, and at times, genuinely funny. There's just not enough substance to make it work.

For a film called Road Trip, very little screen time is actually devoted to the group on the road. It seems, to me at least, that the potential for comedy arising from four college guys living on a bus for three days would be much greater than the over-the-top antics of the movie. Unfortunately, Road Trip succumbs to the latter. The plot rushes through any potential hazards just to reunite its motley collection of whackos. Basically, it's in, it's out and it's done. C+

Singer's fantasy X-traordinary

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

X-Men
directed by Bryan Singer with Patrick Stewart, Ian McKellen, Hugh Jackman, and Anna Paquin

There are certain unavoidable problems involved in translating a comic book into a movie. First and foremost is the matter of reducing a long-running series with a fully developed history and mythology into a 90-minute feature film that must be enjoyable for both hard-core fans of the book, but also the casual movie-goers who haven't read a single issue.

Batman (the first movie, certainly not the last three) demonstrates how the translation from newsprint to big screen can be done effectively and enjoyably, and remains true to the original creation. While Batman has a single protagonist and a reasonably-sized collection of villains, however, the X-Men books have a cast of dozens and an intricately formed universe; boiling such a comic book down to a manageable movie is certain to do some injustice to the original.

What we find in X-Men, then, is an attempt to balance fidelity against simplicity, and generally speaking, the results work well. As silly summer entertainment goes, this movie is easily worth the price of a matinee ticket.

Patrick Stewart stars as the wheelchair-bound Charles Xavier, a telepathic mutant better know to his pupils as Professor X. In the comic book world of X-Men, mutants are genetically gifted humans whose unique makeup has granted them incredible powers, and as society at large becomes more aware of the growing number of mutants living among them, fear and hostility are brewing between humans the mutant minority. Certain mutants, led by the super-powerful Magneto (Ian McKellen), are preparing for this coming war, while others, lead by Professor X, are working at fostering peace and understanding while simultaneously foiling Magneto's intentions.

The story, often rushed and over-contrived because of the amount of time that must be devoted to character introduction and general exposition, has Magneto preparing to unleash on the world a machine which changes regular humans into mutants, thus ensuring mutantkind's domination of the planet.

The potential social commentary of the mutant/human arrangement was not lost on the filmmakers and X-Men spends a lot of time playing up the idea of tolerance and empathy (the opening sequence of Magneto as a young Jewish boy in Nazi Germany was a bit too blatant). Thankfully, however, it also keeps in mind the fact that it is, after all, a comic book movie, and tempers the lesson-teaching with nifty special effects, pinch choreographed action sequences, and a few surprisingly funny lines.

The cast of mutant heroes selected for inclusion in the movie includes two of the original five comic book X-Men, Cyclops (James Marsden) and Jean Grey (Famke Janssen), as well as Storm (Halle Berry), Wolverine (Hugh Jackman), and Rogue (Anna Paquin). Most of the characters receive little or no real development, but the matter of Wolverine's mysterious past is hinted at in one of the movie's more shameless gestures towards a sequel, and Rogue's troubled emotional state over the nature of her powers, which prevent her from any skin-to-skin contact with others, is treated nicely. Villains include Sabertooth and Toad (played by Ray Park of Darth Maul fame).

X-Men would never be mistaken for mature filmmaking, but taken as the comic book adventure it is, I'm not ashamed to say that I enjoyed it. B

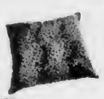
Newbury Comics®

WICKED COOL
BACK TO SCHOOL!

Pick up your Back to School needs and decorate your dorm room with Bean Bag Chairs, Posters, Beaded Curtains, Blacklites, Incense & more...

i-Zone Cameras

Lunch Boxes



Funky Pillows

Lava Lamps

Plus Daily Planners & Notebooks

$ 2.00 OFF!
Take $2.00 OFF ANY* Compact Disc
(with coupon) at Newbury Comics.
*Regularly priced $12.99 or more. Limit 3 discs per coupon, valid on single discs only. No double discounts. Excludes previous purchases & sale items.
Expires 9/20/00. #317539

Newbury Comics®
New & Used Compact Discs
Pop Culture stuff and More!
50 MAIN STREET
(413)256-8840

25 Central

young hip clothes cool shoes

downstairs
Thorne's Marketplace
Northampton, Ma

(413) 586-8017
visit us at:
www.25central.com

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT AND MORE!!!

GENTLEMEN, ALWAYS 18+
150 ENTERTAINERS WEEKLY,
MONTHLY FEATURE ACTS &
MONTHLY DRINK SPECIALS

ANTHONY'S
500 NEW LUDLOW RD.
SOUTH HADLEY, MA

CLUB-LINE
413/539-3621
HOT-LINE 413/539-6969
WWW.ANTHONYS.NET

LADIES, WELCOME BACK!
"THE CENTERFOLDS"
ALL-MALE REVIEW
SUNDAY SEPT. 17TH

BUY YOUR TICKETS NOW AND SAVE $2

18+ SHOW

ALWAYS TAKING APPLICATIONS FOR ENTERTAINERS - NO EXPERIENCE NECCESSARY!

For Fast Early Delivery Call 256-4110

La Cucina di
PINOCCHIO of Amherst 30 Boltwood

#1 Delivery in Town

MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL SPECIALS!!
(MONDAY – THURSDAY SPECIAL)
Get 10 Free wings with the purchase of a large cheese pizza only $8.50

Delivery only

Must Mention Ad When Ordering
Offer Expires 05/31/01

Monday - Thursday 11:00 - 2:00 am
Friday + Saturday 11:00 - 3:00 am
Sunday 11:00 - 1:00 am

Classes.....Covered ☑ Tuition.....Covered ☑

Health Insurance....?
GET COVERED!

The Chickering Group in partnership with UMASS Amherst is pleased to announce the availability of the 2000-2001 Student Health Insurance Plan (formerly Supplemental Health Benefits Plan) which is underwritten by Aetna U.S. Healthcare.

Plan Highlights include:

- Access to local and national Preferred Provider Networks through Aetna U.S. Healthcare.
- Low out-of-pocket expenses.
- $250,000 maximum per policy year.
- Elimination of out-of-pocket expenses for many UHS services.
- Expanded Mental Health / Substance Abuse Coverage.
- Access to the Aetna U.S. Healthcare Prescription Drug Network.

The Chickering Group
Aetna U.S. Healthcare

To receive information call The Chickering Group directly at (877) 480-4167.

Ozzfest fails to deliver the ultimate metal experience

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

OZZFEST 2000
Tweeter Center
July 30

Ozzfest came and went this year without much of a bang, probably due to a weaker lineup of bands than previous years, with second-stage all-female act Kittie making the biggest mainstream splash. This year's tour wasn't without incident however, as Ministry was replaced by Soulfly as second-stage headliners and around the same time the scheduled drummer for Ozzy, Rob Maiorga, who was recently fired by Soulfly, was mysteriously replaced. Hmm. Also, rap/metal outfit Crazy Town dropped off the tour when one of their singers was arrested. I'm pretty sure no one asked for a refund when they heard the news.

Canada - Slaves on Dope had the unfortunate pleasure of waking the fairly substantial crowd up at 10:50am on the second stage, and while they didn't appear to be anything special, the crowd was responsive. I used most of their set time to check out the various booths and T-shirts. The prices are always ridiculously high, and the quality is usually questionable, save some hilariously over the top Pantera shirts and Pitchshifter's obvious but still funny "F-k All 80s Bands" print. The rest of the Ozzfest booths were the usual fare: jewelry, Trojans, carnival games, $8 pitas, along with some new additions like a Sega Dreamcast walk-in game area and some specialty beer vendors for the discerning Ozzfest guzzler.

The biggest disappointment of the day happened early, when looking at a set list for the day I learned that the awesome Pitchshifter, whose most recent offering Deviant was graced with an A+ by the Collegian, would be opening up the first stage at 12:30. For those unfamiliar with Ozzfest, that is the slot equivalent to playing at a cemetery during the Superbowl: no one is there and no one cares. All the headbanging exalted Ed Op editor Rob Schulze and I could muster wasn't enough to overshadow the fact that 80% of the seated audience wasn't there, and those who were there were mostly seated or were too cool to even face or acknowledge the band. Nonetheless, the Nottingham crew blazed through an abbreviated set of their 35 minute Hartford stop, opening with the percussion-heavy "Wafer Thin," hitting on old favorites like "Microwaved" and "Triad," leaving the brilliant Infotainment out in the cold, and closing with the anti boy-band anthem "Keep It Clean." Be sure to catch Pitchshifter under more favorable conditions.

For all the recent hype surrounding Taproot and their mediocre debut Gift, they didn't make much of a dent on the second stage audience. As members of Disturbed looked on from the side of the stage, vocalist Stephen Richards, who had received an unfriendly MA welcome in the mosh pit the previous day, kept things moving, the highlight being the sincere chorus of "Again and Again."

Queens of the Stone Age proved to be much more than the still-empty first stage audience could handle, their textured and engrossing sound demanding more attention than the audience was willing to give. They tried their best to please the mush-hungry metalheads early on with the excellent "Tension Head" and drug chants of "Feel Good Hit of the Summer," but had clearly given up by the time of the extended jam that ended their unappreciated set.

After a short time I was ready to abandon the energetic but unoriginal shred on the second stage, until they brought out former Snot/present Soulfly guitarist Mikey Doling for a cover of the not-forgotten Snot classic "I Lie." It was a great cover complete with stage diving that would have made Lynn Strait proud.

COURTESY OZZFEST.COM
The god of the Ozzfest proudly displays his insanity.

P.O.D. was unexceptional, rolling out weathered selections like "Southtown" and "Rock the Party," with the most interesting aspect of their set being the dark-skinned and dreadlocked depiction of Jesus Christ that hung on a banner behind the stage. Following them on the main stage was Tommy Lee's new rap/metal act Methods of Mayhem, and wanting to catch a glimpse of former Kilgore bassist Marty on stage as a touring member wasn't nearly enough incentive to make me sit through a half-hour of their crap. I heard they didn't take themselves too seriously, however, which is certainly a step in the right direction.

The MOM time I spent waiting for Disturbed on the second stage was filled by some guy hammering a nail through his nose and pulling a large weight by his nipples, which made me wonder if I had made the correct decision. All was well, however, when Disturbed played to a very full and excited second stage crowd, and an enthusiasm that nearly guarantees big things in their future. Their solid set hit on many of the strong points of their debut The Sickness, like "Voices," "Conflict," and the pounding closer "Stupify."

The first stage audience was very receptive to Incubus, massive bongo drums, love songs and all. New material from Make Yourself was well represented, such as "Pardon Me" and "The Warmth," while more aggressive oldies like "New Skin" provided a nice balance. Their stage banner was also of note, as it featured a man and woman making love on a beach while various octopi watched and participated in the act. Commenting on the banner was the hilarious British guy whom must be mentioned as he came out, seeming completely out of it, in between each set with some forced "so bad they're good" jokes and an eagerness to point you in the direction of some "live music."

Static-X has toured their debut album firmly into the ground by now, not that it seemed to bother anyone. I still enjoy classics like "Love Dump," but it's definitely time for some new material, and their blah cover of Ministry's "Burning Inside" just made you long for the real thing. Following the X set I tried in vein to catch a glimpse of Kittie on the second stage, but it was so ridiculously overcrowded I just didn't have the patience to fight my way up front again. "Charlotte" sounded good from afar, however.

Godsmack was skipped without a second thought to insure a spot up front for second stage headliners Soulfly, who put on a typically lively set, although one that is still plagued by roughly the same exact set list that has been making the rounds for roughly 30 months. "Back to the Primitive" was the only new song on display, and it was a rousing sing-a-long, while "No Hope=No Fear" and "The Song Remains Insane" still take care of business nicely.

With only marginal competition from Pitchshifter and Soulfly, Pantera was easily the best act of the day. "Yesterday Don't Mean Shit" was exactly the metal kick in the teeth that the recently godsmacked audience needed, and the lords of the south continued to pummel for over an hour. New songs like "Revolution is my Name" and "Goddamn Electric" fell in nicely alongside "Becoming" and "A New Level," although their focus on their first two albums and complete dismissal of the massive The Great Southern Trendkill as of late is a little disappointing. However, "Cowboys from Hell" is still among the greatest heavy metal songs ever made, and would prove to be the last truly rocking moment of the night.

I love Ozzy. I love almost all of the music he has ever recorded over many years. And his changing line-up always kicks ass. But his stage show now is just depressing. Ozzy clutching the microphone for dear life and glaring at a teleprompter, and spraying the audience with a high-powered squirt gun in what must have added up to one third of his 80 minute set is just too much like KISS for a man with this much talent. Of course, the love in the Tweeter Center was overflowing for the man, and every song, from the eerie "Believer" to "Crazy Train," seems like a celebration to the fact that he's still alive. And Ozzy is still very much alive, it's just now the legend has overshadowed the man, and it may be time for him to let his legacy speak rather than these limp live offerings.

Wayans shell out worthless garbage

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Scary Movie
Directed by Keenen Ivory Wayans with Anna Faris, Chen Oteri, Shannon Elizabeth

If the Wayans brothers had spent half as much time on their movie as they did on its trailer, then Scary Movie might have at least been enjoyable. However, while Scary Movie became one of the summer's biggest surprises at the box office, the horror movie spoof was completely mindless.

The regression of horror movies since Scream first graced screens in 1997 has been both quick and consistent. First came the knock-offs like I Know What You Did Last Summer and (worse) Urban Legend, then the sequels and finally the absolute bottom of the barrel, Scary Movie. Who ever thought a spoof of a spoof would be a good idea?

While Scary Movie packed clever pokes at The Blair Witch Project, The Matrix (I'll point out, not a scary movie) and most notably The Sixth Sense into its trailer, the movie is mostly a take off of the Scream/I Know prototype. And, it's a shoddy, feeble take off at that.

Scream pointed out, on more than one occasion during the trilogy, that the heroine tends to opt for illogical choices when confronting the killer. Did we need Carmen Electra choosing a "Death" sign over "This way to safety" to hammer this point home? Probably not. Did we need her running through a sprinkler in her underwear before being slaughtered? I let the box office numbers speak for themselves.

COURTESY DIMENSION PICTURES
Carmen Electra dances through sprinklers while being chased by a masked killer in Scary Movie.

Anna Faris does a good job taking up the heroine role (Cindy opposed to Sidney), bringing a Katie Holmes quality to the role of which Scary Movie makes decent use. James Van Der Beek's cameo isn't the wrong set, of course) is somewhat amusing, if not completely random. The subtle Dawson's cafeteria parody was ingenious though largely unnoticed, which at least suggests to me why Scary Movie was blatantly overt. The audience is simply to dumb to understand anything else. Therefore, Scary Movie went for the big kill (a pun as funny as the film itself).

The film turns Courtney Cox's Gail Weathers into a racially insensitive tramp, David Arquette's Dewey becomes a mentally challenged, undersexed "Dufus." The mild sexual innuendo becomes a forum for gratuitous oral sex displays. Toss in some great pot smoking scenes and you have American Pie on crack.

Scary Movie's too sloppy and too obvious to be even remotely funny. Nothing is more evident of this than the way those admittedly funny pokes from the trailer were eventually worked into the film. Haphazardly, that is. Every one of them appeared to be edited in at the most random time possible with absolute disregard to any logical continuity or logic for that matter. D

Binural gets 1 out of 10

By Ryan Bernharris
Collegian Staff

Pearl Jam
Binural
Epic Records

Oh where, oh where can my Pearl Jam be?
The Lord took 'em away from me.
No more "Jeremy" or "Even Flow."
The days of Ten are over, and Binural really does blow!

I suppose the deterioration had to happen sometime. Perhaps the turning point in Pearl Jam's recent history was Christmas, 1998. The band decided to cover Frank Lloyd Wright's "Last Kiss," and send it to all of the members of their fan club for free. As the loyal army of the "Ten Club" was overjoyed to get their paws on some free tunes from their favorite band, someone leaked the song to pop stations all over the country. What began as a well-coming gesture from a band that constantly rewards their dedicated fans became an over-played mass of sickening repetition. As "Last Kiss," cranked out of radios, smack in the middle of "Mambo Number 5" and "As Long as You Love Me" last summer, the fans who were the target of the cover song's greatness hung their heads in shame. "Stick around for N'Sync, Cher and Hanson within the hour. Pearl Jam's up next." the DJ from Mix 98.5 would say. Every time I heard him attempt to give the band respect, a piece of my soul was torn away.

Nine years ago Pearl Jam seemed like the greatest thing to happen to rock music since, well, Nirvana. Coming on the scene with all of the dirty grunge bands of the early nineties, Pearl Jam established something that has not yet been matched.

It is difficult to find someone who will argue that Pearl Jam is not the very best alternative rock act from the past ten years. Their debut album, Ten, has established the recognition as one of the most influential sounds in music history. With nothing but raw emotion exuding from every chord, Ten remains a piece of musical awe.

Pearl Jam followed up the debut masterpiece with another classic. On Vs, they did not only prove to the world that they were not "one hit wonders," however, they did something that many musicians could only dream of. The band changed their sound almost entirely. Of course it was very easy to recognize the music as Pearl Jam, but at the same time, it was difficult to comprehend that it was the same band that released Ten. Vs also became Pearl Jam's first experience with a step into the mainstream. "Daughter" became the group's fastest selling single in its short history.

Some music critics will argue that the release of Pearl Jam's third album, Vitalogy is the beginning of their demise. With the tempo much slower, and some very strong hidden message buried into the music, Vitalogy brought Pearl Jam some criticism. However, with track such as "Betterman," "Nothingman," and "Corduroy" the band clearly hung onto its Seattle roots, but brought along some doubts about its ability to continue as a rock giant.

There's no way to ignore the fact that the next release, No Code had something missing. Lead singer Eddie Vedder's voice was unrecognizable to what it had been in the past. Though the changing sound had seemed like a good idea with the previous two albums, people began to get sick of it. Critics began to hypothesize that Vedder's voice was vanishing. The lyrics had become absurd and meaningless. "Are you woman enough to be my man?" Eddie asked on "Hail, Hail." Lines such as these left listeners wondering where the band was coming from, and what direction they were headed.

With Yield, Pearl Jam showed signs of life. After a two-year hiatus, they were able to regroup. The album proved to be better than its predecessor, and with their first video since the award winning "Jeremy" from Ten, they seemed to be on the right track. Accompanying Yield was a full tour of the United States that included three New England stops.

With this summer's release, Binural, all signs of moving forward are as stopped as a mini-van at a yield sign. Even after several listens, it is extravagantly difficult to find even one positive thing to say about the album (actually I lied, the packaging is really cool with an extra booklet included). All of the hardcore energy that once fueled the band has evaporated. Even after parting with drummer Jack Irons, who some say was the cause of many problems with No Code and Yield, and acquiring legendary former Soundgarden skin stickes man Matt Cameron, the band is nothing but sluggish.

Right from the first track, the band sounds weak. "Breakerfall," the heaviest of the thirteen songs sounds like nothing better than Van Halen in the worst of the Sammy Hagar days. The light sounds of the rest of the album have an eerie Pink Floyd feel to them. Something that is very unnecessary from a band that is supposed to be filled with vigor and emotion.

The best example of this is the first single from the album, "Nothing as it seems." Radio stations were quick to stop playing it. It bored listeners, and had no chance to become the energetic poppy song that they released last year. Therefore, reverting back to the original claim that "Last Kiss" ruined Pearl Jam, this album is a clear example of that. The general public does not want to hear any of Binural because it's not half as good as the awful song they released last summer. Sorry gentleman, but that's a very bad sign. Perhaps there are reasons for this. Pearl Jam publicly expressed discontent for the popularity of "Last Kiss" by saying, "Next time we send out a Christmas gift, we'll make sure it sucks." It could be possible that they wanted to avoid any comparison to "Last Kiss" at all by creating something that sounds like it's from a different band. Or perhaps they're just losing the excessive edge that they created a decade ago.

No matter how you try to explain it, Binural is not good. It's difficult to place it among anything that Pearl Jam has done in the past, let alone to watch it sit on the shelf aside classics such as Ten and Vs.

During the summer, a night disc jockey for WHJY in Providence, RI said, "The Pearl Jam that released Ten and Vs. should sue the Pearl Jam that is releasing the crap today for using their name." That's probably the best way to sum up the quality of Binural.

Oh, and by the way, don't think that just because Pearl Jam is my favorite band, I'm going to trash on their new album for an entire article and then let them get away with an "A-". No, Binural deserves nothing better than a D. A barely passing grade.

COURTESY EPIC RECORDS
Apparently, Eddie Vedder's poor judgement isn't limited to just hairstyles; Pearl Jam's latest release is about as lame as this perm.

Autumn in New York tries hard but still falls

By Jennifer Chasen
Collegian Correspondent

Autumn In New York
Starring Richard Gere & Winona Ryder

If the general female public is anything like myself, the promise of a new summer romance movie featuring Richard Gere against the Manhattan skyline is just too much to take. Autumn in New York, director Joan Chen's sophomore debut, does possess the delicious UMass graduate Richard Gere and irrelutably breathtaking autumnal views of the city, but deserves no such excitement from the female gender or otherwise.

The successful 48-year-old restaurateur/playboy, Will (Gere) first lays eyes on the waif-like Charlotte (Winona Ryder) across his crowded New York restaurant while making the rounds to every beautiful woman in the room. The two strike up a romance, yet early on it is divulged that Charlotte is terminally ill with a heart tumor, which prompts the audience to wait for her to keel over in every scene knowing that it's only a matter of time. For about an hour the supposed romance between these two people blossoms as they stroll blissfully through the changing foliage of Central Park, and those watching wonder if the pairing will ever work. Among all this relationship euphoria the audience is introduced to Will's best friend and bartender (Anthony LaPaglia) and Charlotte's once glamorous grandmother (Elaine Stritch). Despite the movie's trite and predictable script, Stritch and LaPaglia emerge as lovable, amusing and even believable.

Something happens, finally, when Gere finally has a tryst with an ex-girlfriend (Jill Hennessy) atop a roof because he is afraid of committing to a dying woman. It also comes to light that he fathered an illegitimate daughter (Vera Farmiga) while he was cheating on Charlotte's mother some 20 years prior. Just when it seems he is cheap dirt bag who isn't worth the time of a woman with only months left, they salvage their unbelievable romance and there is yet more park walking.

The film contains some beautiful direction and cinematography (probably to mask the cheesy dialogue) and many of the shots look like they've been snatched directly from the Casablanca days of the classic romance. The movie has all the elements of a quintessential tearjerker: the terminally ill 22-year-old woman, the past-his-prime bachelor-of-the-month type and New York in the fall. All that's missing are the wayward children. While the plot was drull, slow, and very cliche, the May-December romance between Ryder and Gere wasn't as totally ludicrous as one might think. Gere, who plays a man roughly 26 years her senior, didn't look that latherly next to Ryder and only now, in later reflection of the massive age gap, might the liaison be found bizarre.

Winona's character was supposed to be light-hearted and spirited but instead turned out to be little more than likable. Richard Gere, despite the fact he plays pretty much the same character in every movie with various degrees of womanizing tendencies, is enjoyable if only for the fact that he is Richard Gere.

Sufficient warning is offered to men and anyone else allergic to the sappy (and it is sappy) romance. While the film's hour and 15 minutes can induce the sniffles, it doesn't quite have the tissue potential of, for example, An Affair to Remember. On a scale of 1-5, MGM's Autumn in New York is a lukewarm 2. It will leave the romance lover wanting and the hater half asleep.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Wednesday, September 6, 2000 C1
Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith and Michael Kobylanski
sports@dailycollegian.com

All signs point to gridiron greatness for UMass

Returning studs and rising stars spell success for 2000 squad

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It's more than likely the very first thing you see upon exiting Route 91 and heading toward Amherst. Your official welcome to this corner of the Pioneer Valley comes in the form of one relatively short and simple phrase, boldly displayed on a roadside sign. A simple phrase that at one time stood for true glory but has since been weathered by disappointment.

The sign reads: University of Massachusetts— 1998 Division I AA National Champions.

A full season removed from their run to the roses, the members of this year's Maroon and White gridiron squad are surely feeling the weight of expectation more heavily than ever on their shoulder pads. Last year saw Coach Mark Whipple's crew stumble out of the gates to a 1-3 start, only to right the ship with an 8-game win streak en route to the Atlantic 10 crown.

The road to glory brought UMass to a rematch with '98 National runner-up Georgia Southern in the NCAA quarterfinals, this time on the Eagles' home field in Statesboro. The Minutemen shrugged off a hostile GSU crowd and seemed poised for another victory after hanging within two of the Eagles for a half, but it was simply not to be. GSU tallback Adrian Pederson ran all over the Maroon and White in the second half, powering the Eagles to a 38-21 win. The fact that GSU eventually captured the national title did little to lessen the impact of the season-ending loss for Whipple and company.

"I think we ended up having a better team last season than the [Minutemen] this year," Whipple said. "But the ball just didn't bounce our way and we didn't make enough plays."

This year, however, UMass takes the field with a newfound hunger courtesy of a wealth of new personnel in many key spots, not only on the roster but on the sidelines as well. Whereas the faithful followers of the Maroon and White can expect the tradition of UMass football greatness to continue this season, they should also expect to hear several new names being called when the big plays are made.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Tri-captains (from left) Brian Smith, Marcel Shipp and Kole Ayi provide the foundation for the defending Atlantic 10 Champion UMass football team.

The Offense

Any collegiate sports team can expect to take a yearly hit from graduation and the transfer of Lucero finally getting the starting nod from Whipple.

"I think that all three of our quarterbacks are going to turn out to be excellent players, but Lucero played the best in scrimmages and he is going to be our number one guy," Whipple said shortly after deciding on the junior from Arizona. "He is a great athlete who can throw the ball well, and he has a lot of fight in him. In the limited time he has been here, he has really grasped our offensive system.

"I think he definitely has the ability to be the best quarterback in the Atlantic 10 Conference."

That would indeed seem likely judging from Lucero's output last year at Phoenix College. The 6-foot-1 South Mountain High grad put up monster numbers (2,984 yards, 24 touchdowns) on his way to being named the Arizona Community College Athletic Conference (ACCAC) Player of the Year.

Backing up Lucero will be sophomore New York native Seibert, who completed 12 of 18 passes for 122 yards and one touchdown as Bankhead's understudy last year. Guice, a freshman who hails from Florida, occupies the team's third signal-caller slot.

While the guys shacking the pigskin for UMass will have to learn on the fly, the ones catching it should already be in tune with the complexities of the Minuteman offense. All eight wideouts with at least one reception last year are returning, with All-Atlantic 10 selection Adrian Zullo leading the charge. The junior two-sport star came up with a team-high 81 grabs last year totaling 1,253 yards and nine touchdowns.

"The biggest positive is that all of the wide receivers are back," Whipple said. "I think we will be strong as the year goes along, but we might not be as explosive early while the quarterback gets his feet wet. As the season progresses, we will become more wide open and let some things happen."

With his track-star speed and magnificent hands, Zullo should make UMass' transition to a new quarterback a smoother one. Add senior Steve Ley, junior Eric Boss and sophomore Jimmie Howard to the mix, and the Minutemen boast one of the deepest and most dangerous collections of targets in college football.

"Adrian Zullo is our all-time leading receiver, and he could be among the best in the nation," Whipple said. "[He] has the kind of game-breaking speed that really stretches out defenses. Steve Ley and Eric Boss also have a good deal of experience in our system, and they work well to complement Zullo as possession receivers with good hands. And Jimmie Howard should see a lot more playing time this year, as another deep threat with excellent speed."

The UMass backfield will be anchored once again by tri-captain Marcel Shipp, an All-American the last two seasons who has undoubtedly established himself as the heart

Turn to FOOTBALL page C12

Minutemen are no different. Gone is field general Todd Bankhead, whose 3,089 passing yards and 17 scoring strikes were a huge reason for the team's success over the past two seasons. Also moving on is tight end Sean Higgins, who ranked second on the '99 squad in receiving yards with 615 yards on 51 catches. Another big loss comes from the departure of unsung offensive linemen Mike Wynne and Cliff Bolden.

But even as these key players handed in their helmets, replacements were being brought in from other programs or groomed from further down the Maroon and White depth chart. The quarterback slot quickly turned into a three-horse race between Richard Lucero, Kelly Seibert and Matt Guice, with Lucero

Mix of old and new sparks women's soccer

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

On paper, the 2000 season would look like a rebuilding campaign for the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

After all, the Minutewomen lost eight key players from a club that went 11-5-1 in 1999. Included in that departing group are two All-Atlantic 10 first-team picks, one of who was the conference's player of the year a season ago.

But in the world of women's college soccer, UMass is one of the few programs that rarely rebuilds. Rather, the Minutewomen have reloaded their arsenal with a host of talented newcomers for the upcoming year.

As a result, the Maroon and White will look to blend together some old faces with some fresh ones with the hope of qualifying for the NCAA tournament for the first time in three seasons.

"This group has worked hard [in the preseason]," said UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy following the team's first exhibition match against Boston College. "We've got some depth and our goalkeepers are more than solid. We're going to do well as we go along, but the question is when [the success will happen]."

The forwards

Despite the fact that UMass lost Emma Kurowski, the all-time leading scorer in the history of Massachusetts soccer, to graduation, finding the back of the net shouldn't be a problem for the Minutewomen this year.

Seniors Kara Green, Brooke Bartlett, Anna Morozuk and Kara Ciocca will all see time up front for the Maroon and White. The addition of freshman Erin Lilly should also pay dividends for the UMass offensive attack in 2000.

"If we can ever get healthy up front, then we're going to have some depth there," Rudy said. "We moved Anna and Brooke there, and we have Cio returning. But right now, our proven goal scorers, Green and Lilly, have been out for most of the preseason."

Green enters the 2000 season with 95 career points, putting her within striking distance of Kurowski's career mark. However, the Poughkeepsie, NY native has been hampered by a leg injury during the preseason. When she is healthy, Green is one of the best strikers in the Atlantic 10 conference.

Bartlett finished tied for fourth on the team in scoring a year ago, and is looking to build on a junior campaign that saw her make the All-Atlantic 10 Tournament team.

Morozuk has seen time both in the back and in the midfield for UMass during the past two seasons, but has now made the transition up front for the 2000 season.

Ciocca, a diminutive forward, is one of the fastest players on the team and will look to burn opposing defenses with her breakaway speed.

Lilly comes to UMass from Shenendahowa High in Clifton Park, NY, the same school that produced current Minutewomen teammates Bartlett and Katelyn Jones.

The midfield

In the midfield, the Minutewomen lost three starters, but still remain strong at the position. Senior Kat Machamer along with juniors Martha Conover and Katelyn Jones and sophomore Andrea Trujillo will all see time for the Minutewomen. Freshmen Janelle Khouri, Amy Mink and Michelle Luttati will also be looking to step into the mix.

"We've got depth there too in the midfield," Rudy said. "There's a variety of people who can play in the center, and Conover and Machamer are recovered from their knee injuries."

A fine tactical player, Machamer scored the lone UMass goal in the exhibition match against Boston College. She is showing no ill effects from a torn anterior cruciate ligament that she suffered prior to her freshman season.

Conover and Jones were both integral parts of the 1999 club. Conover, who also missed her entire freshman year with a torn ACL, tallied seven points last season, while Jones was tied for third on the squad in points.

Trujillo saw limited action as a freshman a year ago, but has come back to camp this season ready to make a solid contribution to the club.

Turn to SOCCER page C4

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Senior forward Kara Green will be a huge factor in how far the 2000 women's soccer team can go.

Young Minutewomen charge into fall slate

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Coach Judy Dixon will look to Texas native Annie Hamilton to provide a force on the courts for the Minutewomen.

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Lack of experience. That is what head coach Judy Dixon has on the table for the Massachusetts women's tennis team for the fall season. Even with all of the inexperience that Dixon has on her roster it does not seem as though it will be a problem for the Minutewomen. It is not a rebuilding year for the Maroon and White, it is a time for the young guns to show what they are made of from the get go.

Although Dixon returns three mainstays from last year's squad that finished with an overall record 9-15she will have to deal with the loss of Ola Gerisamova.

Gerisamova was the team's No. 1 rackateer for all of last season finishing the season at 3-10. Battling for the position vacated by Gerasimova will be Helena Horak and Annie Hamilton.

Horak played all of the spring season at the No. 2 spot and finished with a record of 4-9 while Hamilton went 8-5 in the No. 3 slot.

The other returning player from last year's squad is Katie Stammen who finished her freshman year at 4-8 as the No. 4 seed.

The three returning members will have to play more than the role of winner on the court. They must also anoint five newcomers to the program. Of the five newcomers four are freshman in Jafra Depontes, Susan Hyams, Caroline Harson and Francesca Mancicini. The other new face will be Lindsey Gilloolly who is a transfer from Providence College.

To bring in this Dixon accumulated a lot of frequent flyer miles grabbing Depontes from Kailua-Kona, Hi and Hyams from Cincinnati, OH but the most impressive is Mancini who hales from Milan, Italy.

Both Harson and Gilloolly are local products coming from Arlington and Stoughton, MA respectively.

"Jafra is an excellent all-around athlete," Dixon said in an interview with the school's media relations department. "She has good hands and is very quick. She will make an immediate impact right away in the middle to the top of the singles lineup and in doubles. She has national experience as one of the top players in Hawaii, and I look for her to be one of the keys to next year's success."

Gilloolly should help the three returning members having played collegiate tennis before and having performed well in her previous two season at PC. This year's schedule looks to be just as tough if not tougher than last season's for the Minutewomen as they begin their campaign at the Eastern Tennis Championships in West point, NY on Sept. 15.

Also on the slate are cross-town rivals Amherst College, Boston University, Dartmouth, St. John's, Columbia and UConn as well as the ITA Regional Championships that will be held in Williamsburg, VA from Nov. 4-7.

National championship or bust for UMass field hockey

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The penalty corner shot is one of the most critical parts of the game of field hockey. A team moves the ball effectively downfield, sets up an offense and basically makes all the right moves in front of its opponent's net. That team is then rewarded with a shot on goal and, quite possibly a shot at supreme glory.

The penalty corner is a perfect microcosm for the Massachusetts field hockey team's upcoming season. The Minutewomen have built up a solid core of players, moved into position and are doing everything right in hopes of earning a shot at winning it all.

"Our goal is to win a national championship," said Coach Patty Shea. "It's just not enough to be in the tournament anymore; we have to take that next step. We have the ability to compete with anyone in the country."

That put-up-or-shut-up attitude stems largely from UMass' success over the last three years, during which Shea has seen her team advance to three consecutive NCAA tournaments while also capturing three straight Atlantic 10 championships. This year, the Maroon and White returns nine of 11 starters from a team that advanced to last season's NCAA quarterfinals and finished the season with an impressive 13-8 mark. That puts the Minutewomen and their coach in a position where any excuse for falling short of a National title will be just that...an excuse.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Lucy Koch supplies a blend of aggressive defense and precision penalty corner execution to the Maroon and White field hockey squad.

Not that ultimate success is an entirely new concept to the Minutewomen. Shea is quick to point out that the team has made a long-standing tradition of excellence that she hopes will culminate in the golden ring of the sport.

"A lot of people don't realize that UMass is one of the winningest programs in Division I history," said the 1999 A-10 Coach of the Year. "We have been to 17 out of 19 National Tournaments and have been to the Final Four four different times. It is the winningest program in New England; we have had six Olympians from this program including the national coach, two National Player of the Year recipients and over 30 All-Americans. It is not enough anymore to just go to the tournament; we have to make a statement. The most important thing is that the athletes have to feel that we can win a national title."

There seems to be little reason to doubt that the Minutewomen are indeed capable of going all the way in 2000. Among the returning stars on Shea's roster are some of the biggest names in collegiate field hockey, players capable of turning the tide of a game almost single-handedly.

At the forefront of those stars is goalkeeper Zowie Tucker, who has been an All-Atlantic 10 selection in each of the past two seasons. In 20 appearances last year, the Wales native piled up 111 saves and a half-dozen shutouts along with a staggering .782 save percentage.

"I think Zowie is one of the best all-around players in the country," Shea said of last season's Atlantic 10 Tournament MVP. "When the pressure becomes the greatest, you need someone in the net with poise and confidence, who understands the game extremely well. Zowie is usually thinking two or three plays ahead of everyone else."

Tucker is helped out immensely by the defense in front of her, a rock-solid group of team players each of whom knows exactly what she must get done in order for the team defense to click. Seniors Patty Robinson and Lucy Koch not only bring a wealth of experience but also provide two-thirds of the deadliest penalty corner crew in the conference, with Koch rifling out super-accurate pushes and Robinson supplying dead-on stops. The two combined for 27 assists over the course of last year's campaign.

Add the devastating shooting of All-American Anke Bruemmer (16 goals in '99) to the mix, and it's no wonder Shea has implored her troops this year to focus on earning more corners and then capitalizing on them.

"It's one of the strongest parts of our game," said Shea of penalty corners. "We have to take advantage of that."

The final piece to UMass' defensive puzzle comes in the form of junior Kerry Ann Jaggassar, a naturally gifted athlete from Trinidad and Tobago who spent much of last season leveling opposing attackers.

Stretched out beyond the defense is UMass' hard-nosed midfield group, comprised of fiery competitors whose biggest contributions don't always end up on the stat sheet. Juniors Jill Fantasia and Kaitlyn Byron excel at tackling and thwarting transitions, and with their seemingly unflappable work ethic provide a perfect example of the type of player attracted to UMass, according to Shea.

"I think the typical UMass athlete is a blue collar worker; that is the tradition and the history of UMass," the former Olympian said. "We get great athletes that are very good all-around players that are not always the most spectacular. But, they are willing to work hard for you and want to learn."

The Maroon and White's high-octane scoring attack will once again come from the team's forwards, in particular the dynamic duo of Lindsay Abbott and Kristen Schmidt. Northampton native Abbott tallied seven goals and an assist for the Minutewomen last season, but contributed in a much larger scale with her instinctive play and knack for positioning.

"One of Lindsay's best attributes is her understanding of the game," Shea said. "She's always in the right place at the right time, and she's very good in front of the net."

Summing up the biggest strength of senior tri-captain Kristen Schmidt is easy; the Greenfield original can flat-out fly down the field. Several of her half-dozen scores last season were game breakers or just plain game winners, and having cracked the starting lineup in her freshman season, Schmidt has logged enough prime-time play to hone her hockey skills to a razor sharp edge.

"She's a complete player," said Shea of Schmidt. "She can play any position on the field. She is real dangerous when she has the ball and uses her speed to go to the goal."

The Minutewomen boast two more world-class forwards in Bay State natives Tamra Geryk and Jayna Napolitano.

With such big-name talent at her disposal, Shea would seem to have ample weaponry to blast holes in UMass' A-10 foes. But with the relentless pace and often brute physical style of field hockey on Astroturf, it becomes critical to have enough depth on your roster to substitute freely and not have to worry about lapses in intensity. Shea can do just that, thanks to a slew of dedicated underclassmen who have worked doubly hard in practice in hopes of stepping onto the field and making a difference come crunchtime.

"I feel we have a lot of good athletes that we can utilize in any number of ways," said Shea of her team's depth. "We have a roster of 21, and I can honestly say we have 21 solid players. We don't lose anything when we substitute."

Shea also views the team's difficult non-conference schedule as a factor that should aid in the Maroon and White's title push. UMass must contend with a number of regional powers, including New Hampshire, Northeastern, Boston College and Boston University, as well as defending national champion Maryland and NCAA semifinalist Connecticut.

"I believe you have to play the best to be the best," said Shea in reference to the powerhouse-laden slate. "It puts us in a lot of pressure situations that will help us come the postseason."

With so many factors in their favor, the Minutewomen do indeed seem capable of beating the nation's best and bringing the field hockey national championship home to UMass. All the components are in place; now it's just a matter of executing.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Try as they might, opposing defenses haven't found a way to stop UMass scoring machine Anke Bruemmer.

Life's Necessities... Food Water Shelter
Council Travel
It's Travel...the STUDENT way!
Exclusive Student / Youth Airfare
ISIC, Go25 & ITIC Eurailpasses
Hostel cards & Hotels
Work, Volunteer, & Foreign Language Abroad Programs
Travel Insurance
Specialty tours for 18-35 year olds
Passport Photos
44 Main Street Amherst
413 256-1261
www.counciltravel.com

Treadmills
Bikes
Crosstrainers
Stairsteppers
Personal Trainers
Aerobics Cycle Reebok
Kinetics ADULT FITNESS
"Where members come in all ages, shapes & sizes! Come see the difference!"
Located at:
WDS Sports
586-0633
317 Russell St. (Rt. 9)
Hadley, MA
Circuit & Free Weights
Chiropractic & Physical Therapy

PCCO
Personal Computing Classroom Operations
Office of Information Technologies
University of Massachusetts Amherst
PCCO is Hiring!!!
Computer Consultants
• Non work-study & work-study
• No experience necessary
• Over 100 positions available
Applications and Interviews:
(Given on a first come, first served basis)
Come to the 7th Floor
W.E.B. Du Bois Library
Any Questions
call us at 545-1611

Sept. 5, 6, 7
10 am - 4 pm

Welcome Back Students
Top 10 Reasons to Visit
Spirit Haus
10. Conveniently located on Route 9, east of Amherst Center
9. Open 6 Days a Week, 9 a.m. - 11 p.m.
8. Friendly Staff
7. Party Supplies, Glassware, Ice, etc. (Wiffle Balls & Bats)
6. WEEKLY SPECIALS
5. Wines from Around the World (Weekly wine tastings)
4. Rum, Vodka, Gin, Scotch, Bourbon, Whiskey, Cordials, and Bartender's Black Books
3. Beer - Microbrewed: Imports and Domestics
2. KEGS - 1/2's and 1/4's - cold plates available. (60 varieties in stock)
1. Never a dry moment
338 College St.
Amherst MA 01002
253-5384
All major credit cards accepted
Budweiser BUD LIGHT

Veteran volleyball team seeks solid finish in 2000

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

There is a sense of optimism in camp for the Massachusetts volleyball team this season.

Despite the fact that the Minutewomen lost Jill Meyers and Kari Hogancamp, two of the best players in the history of the program, to graduation, UMass has a good shot at making some noise in the Atlantic 10 this season. The Maroon and White return 10 players from last year's club, along with four newcomers to the roster.

"You don't replace people who have played in every match since they were freshman and who have broken several school records," said UMass volleyball coach Bonnie Kenny in an interview with the school's media relations department. "Both Kari and Jill were great volleyball players, who also performed exceptionally well in the classroom. They've left an imprint on this program, and if every student-athlete could do what they've done here, our program will only keep getting better."

But as the saying goes, the Minutewomen will look to go out with the old and in with the new. With a veteran club that is extremely deep and versatile, UMass has a shot at winning the A-10 crown.

"We have 13 good, athletic volleyball players on our team this year, and most of them can play more than one position," Kenny said. "So the versatility that that will provide, along with depth, is something we have never had here before. I believe it is going to be a challenge everyday in the gym for people to get comfortable with whatever role they can perform at."

Leading the way for UMass this season will be seniors Rebecca Hasson and Jennifer Drennan. Hasson, a middle blocker and A-10 Player of the Year candidate, is among the Top 10 in practically every career category for UMass, while Drennan will be one of the team's defensive specialists.

"Rebecca is someone who has trained hard to become a good volleyball player," Kenny said. "I don't know if I know anybody who has the physical tools to play the game at the level Rebecca is. She is a dominant blocker and is very capable of carrying our team on the offensive end."

The Minutewomen will have four juniors on the squad this year. Outside hitters Lymarie Llovet and Janeen DeMarte, middle blockers Celia Witte and right-sider Lauren VanderVeen should all see plenty of action for UMass.

Llovet averaged 1.67 kills and 2.38 digs per game last season, and provided a solid showing at the net as well, swatting 0.83 blocks per game to rank second on the team.

"Lymarie is the best natural-tinning blocking athlete I have ever had," Kenny said. "She is getting much more explosive and she hits a lot of different sets."

DeMarte, one of the team's primary defenders, is also looking to step up for the Minutewomen this season.

"Janeen is one of the smaller outside hitters we have," Kenny said. "And because of that, she has to be able to escape blocks. She doesn't play very high, but she plays very quick. And her arm swing is just as fast, if not faster than anyone on our team."

Witte was a seldom-used player in 1999, but showed great strides in the spring and in the off-season. As a result, her role expects to be increased this year.

"Nobody works harder than Celia," Kenny said. "So now she needs to play. She needs to develop a sense of arrogance about herself and a confidence within herself, and she will be a contributor for us in the front row. She is a rosebud, and any day now, she is going to blossom for us."

VanderVeen was out all of last season with a knee injury, but is now back at full strength and looking to contribute this year.

"In the beginning of the spring, Lauren was a little passive and tentative coming back from her knee injury," Kenny said. "But she has worked hard and overcame those barriers. She got over the fear that her knee would not be able to hold her up, and she's stronger than she has ever been. She's going to be a contributor, but she needs to get the experience back on the court and maintain her focus throughout the season."

The sophomore class includes Jennifer Davis and Claire Baxter. Second-year player Nitia Small redshirted last year and will be considered a redshirt freshman for the 2000 season.

"Jen was one of the best players all-around by the end of last season," Kenny said. "She has no limitations in her game. She is a natural passer and has a lot of shots to mix up her game. There is no reason why she shouldn't be a dominant player for us this year in our conference."

Baxter, a middle blocker, will also see increased playing time for UMass.

"Clare is our best slide-attacker, which adds a different dimension in our offense," Kenny said. "I thought this spring she enjoyed training more than she has since high school. And she knows she needs to train hard to be able to do the things she needs to do to get her on the court."

Small, a crafty left-hander, will also be a key part of the Minutewomen attack this season.

"Nitia is a tremendous athlete," Kenny said. "We redshirted her last season because we thought she needed to train and get stronger, and she's done everything we've asked of her. She will add a whole different dimension to our offense this year."

Newcomers to the club include Lindsey Bailey, Kuulei Kumanao, Crystal Kirk and Kelly Lewis.

"All the freshmen coming in are 'freshmen,'" Kenny said. "I know they have the potential to be good, otherwise I wouldn't have brought them here. If they decide they want to train hard, all of them can be major contributors at this level and have an impact on UMass volleyball."

Bailey, an outside hitter and former member of the Canadian Junior National Team, will provide depth for UMass in that position.

"Lindsay has a lot of good international playing experience," Kenny said. "She is an excellent athlete, who has good ball control and great leaping ability."

Kumanao will assist Drennan as the setter after an outstanding career at Kamehemeha High in Hawaii.

"Kuulei has good club and high school setting experience," Kenny said. "She just doesn't have the experience of training and playing at this level. She's teamed with really good setters, but now she needs to understand that in order for her to become a good setter at the collegiate level she's going to have to train just as hard if not harder than she ever has before."

Kirk, the tallest player on the team at 6-foot-2, will also be an asset from the middle blocker spot.

"Crystal will be the tallest person on our team," Kenny says. "She will have no idea as to how fast this game is played at this level. But if she makes up her mind that she wants to be a great volleyball player, she will certainly have the tools and the potential to break a lot of records."

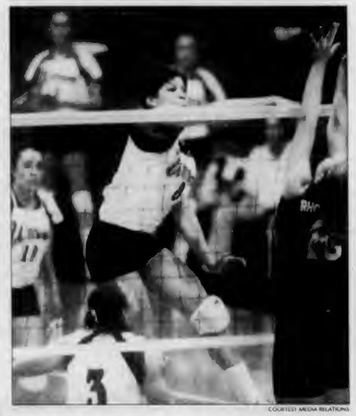
Lewis, a California native, will also help out the Minutewomen as an outside hitter.

"Kelly is versatile," Kenny said. "She played on a very good club team and has trained very well. She has good vision, timing and blocking, and is a good side-hitter."

As far as the schedule goes, the Minutewomen will be road warriors to say the least. UMass will not have a home match until Sept. 27 against Rhode Island, and that will be the only contest at Curry Hicks Cage until Oct. 7.

From there, the Maroon and White will play host to nine of their next 11 matches before closing out the regular season in Philadelphia against Drexel and Temple on Nov. 10-11.

"I look at our conference as being strong from top to bottom," Kenny said. "It's going to be a toss up, but we want to win our conference and make sure we are playing in our conference tournament. And just as it has been in the past, it is going to be a challenge. Our players are going to have to step up to the plate and make sure that night in and night out, they are ready to play."



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

A true natural athlete with great blocking skills, Rebecca Hasson brings a unique competitive fire to the UMass lineup.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 9 Hadley/Amherst
586-0680

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Jennifer Drennan provides the glue that holds the Maroon and White's incredible defense together on the volleyball court.

ATTENTION COLLEGE JUNIORS:
It's not too late for you to get a scholarship...
Air Force ROTC has scholarships available immediately in the following majors...

Chemistry
Computer Info Systems
Computer Science
Mathematics
Meteorology
Physics
Aeronautical Engineering
Aerospace Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Civil Engineering
Computer Engineering
Foreign Area Studies
Foreign Languages
Electrical engineering
Industrial Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Nuclear Engineering
You can also still join AFROTC and compete for a two year scholarship no matter what your major. Register before add/drop ends.
Call Captain Chris Lane (413) 545-2437 or afrotc@acad.umass.edu for more information

■ soccer

continued from page C3

Khouri comes to UMass after a stellar high school and club career in Canada. She is a native of Calgary, Alberta. Mink, a West Chester, OH product hails from the same area as teammate Holly Wildenhaus. Luttati is a Bay State native from Westford who has been impressive in the preseason.

It is expected that all three rookies will see action for the Minutewomen this year.

"The key for the freshmen is going to be how quickly they integrate into our system and if they can absorb the culture shock of Division I soccer," said Rudy after each inked their letters of intent in the spring. "College soccer is a lot different from playing on high school teams. I think that this class as a whole can be a good one."

The defense

Sophomores Wildenhaus, Maggie LaBrode and Alexi Rudd will help save up a solid defensive unit, along with junior captain Sarah Cook. The latter of the four had been a two-year starter in the midfield before shifting back, while all three sophomores saw plenty of action as starters in their rookie season.

Now with a year of experience under their belts, the UMass final third has the potential to be one of the best in the conference.

"We've got depth for once defensively," Rudy said. "Those four plus Michelle Luttati, who can play midfield and defense, gives us depth back there."

Rudd was a first-team A-10 pick as a freshman for the Minutewomen and is expected to continue her solid play in her second year.

Wildenhaus and LaBrode each stepped into starting roles as rookies and performed admirably. Now that they have made the adjustment to college soccer, their play should be even better this season.

The goalies

With the graduation of Angie Napoli and the loss of Cori Stevens to Tennessee, UMass was left with a serious question mark in the goaltending department. However, the Minutewomen were able to add freshman Kelly Nigh and junior Julie Podhrasky, a transfer from Clemson.

Nigh was a standout at Nathan Hale High in Seattle, WA, while Podhrasky brings impressive credentials from Clemson. The two keepers split time in the first exhibition game, but it is unsure as to whether or not Rudy will employ the same rotation during the regular season.

Nevertheless, the Maroon and White are fortunate enough to have two front-line netminders, a luxury that every college team wishes that it had.

"Our goalkeeping situation looks solid," Rudy said. "We have the maturity and experience of Julie, and Kelly is a nice complement to her."

The schedule

As always, UMass will take on one of the toughest schedules in college soccer this season.

Non-conference home matches will see the Minutewomen take on Texas-El Paso, Albany, Georgia and Long Island University. The latter two contests will take place at the UMass Classic on the weekend of September 8.

UMass will hit the road for games at Syracuse and at Arizona State for a pair against ASU and San Diego State. Also on the slate is a Sept. 13 match at Connecticut, the first night game ever in the history of Joseph Morrone Stadium.

"Our non-conference schedule is going to be tough because we have nine new players from last year's team," Rudy said. "There's only four people in the same position as they were in last year. It's a pretty brutal September schedule."

The A-10 Conference should continue its improvement. Although it is expected that UMass will contend for the league title, Dayton, Xavier and St. Bonaventure have all given the Minutewomen a run for their money in recent years.

UMass will play road matches at St. Bonaventure, Duquesne, Dayton, Xavier and Rhode Island. Home games are against Fordham, La Salle, St. Joe's, Temple and George Washington.

"The conference looks good," Rudy said. "All of the teams have improved, and almost all of them had good recruiting years."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Speed, explosiveness and a cannon of a left leg - junior Sarah Cook brings a full arsenal of weapons to the UMass lineup.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

After overcoming a serious knee injury in her sophomore year, senior Kate Webb hopes to finish up her UMass soccer career on the right foot.

Collegian Sports still needs writers - come on down!!!!!!!!

安城中國餐店
AMHERST
CHINESE FOOD
we do not use "MSG"
253-7835 ~ 253-2813
62 Main Street, Amherst

STRENGTH · FLEXIBILITY · CONDITIONING
CARDIO KICKBOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0000
Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0000

If you are seeking
Full or Part-time Employment

Check out the opportunities at Abt Associates Inc.:

- Flexible schedule to meet your needs
- Professional and supportive work environment
- Competitive wages with regular increases starting at $7.00 with paid training
- Benefits package including health and dental

If you have good communication skills with some computer experience, a minimum of 20 hours available per week, evenings and weekends, Abt Associates can offer you a position as a Research interviewer.

Abt Associates is an International Research firm located in nearby Hadley. We are easily accessible by bus and provide free shuttle service from Hampshire Mall.

For more information, or to arrange a personal interview
Call Paul Bebo, Recruiting Coordinator
413-567-1605 or 1-800-792-4514

Abt
Abt Associates Inc.
Equal Opportunity Employer

5 Barbers
Unisex Hair Styling
Amherst Barbers
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
$10 and up
Appointments Not Necessary
Hours:
Mon-Fri. 8-5:15 Sat 8-3:45
Proprietors Jim Reed and Terri Loncrini

Welcome Back Students!!
Please, PARK SMART
The University Community appreciates your parking cooperation.
Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7 am and 5 pm (unless otherwise designated as a 24-hour enforced lot). Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.
Campus Parking Garage
A small number of reserved lower level spaces are currently available in the Campus Parking Garage. Please contact Parking Services at 545-0065 for more information.
Please visit Parking Services' website at www-parking.admin.umass.edu for further parking information.

Minutemen aim for lofty goals in 2000

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Following a successful 1999 season in which the Massachusetts men's soccer team went 13-7 and qualified for the Atlantic 10 tournament for the first time in four years, there is reason to believe that its winning ways will continue this season.

The Minutemen will return six starters from last year's club, including the entire defensive unit. Factor in a host of returning backups and some newcomers, and UMass appears ready to make a run at the A-10 crown.

"We have a number of new players, so we have to gel together," said UMass men's soccer coach Sam Koch in an interview with the school's media relations department. "How quickly we work together is the key. We will use the first part of the season to come together as a team, so we will be ready when we open up Atlantic 10 play against St. Bonaventure. Our goal is to get back to the Atlantic 10 Tournament and win the final."

The forwards

Although on paper it seems like the UMass defense will be the team's top strength, the fact of the matter is that the Minutemen must score goals in order to win games. That is where the mix of veterans and newcomers must mesh in order to aid the offensive attack.

Junior Fred Kinateder was one of the top threats for UMass a year ago, tallying 23 points on the season. However, with the graduation of Adam Black, Kinateder will now become the main man up front for the Minutemen.

Sophomores Jeff Deren (eight points) and Yuri Morales (three points) gained experience last year as freshmen, and will likely see an increased role this year. First-year players Obie Gravely and Ptah Meyers, along with Fordham transfer Max Woll are also expected to contribute on the score sheet. Woll had a goal and an assist for the Rams last season in 18 matches.

Gravely comes to UMass from Monacan High in Richmond, Va. Meyers hails from Columbus, OH and attended Westerville North.

The midfield

One of the biggest concerns heading into the season is whether or not the team will receive offensive production from its midfielders. However, with a pair of proven scorers in seniors Matt Christy and Seth Lilburn, there might not be too much need to worry.

Christy recorded nine points last season on three goals and three assists. He is also known as having one of the hardest shots on the team.

Lilburn has been hampered by injuries the past two seasons, but showed signs of promise during a freshman season in which he was healthy. Should the senior be able to stay out of harm's way in his final year, it seems likely that he will be one of the club's top scorers.

"We need more goals from the midfield this year, and I believe we will get it," said Koch.

Also returning in the midfield is another senior, Beans Hoffman.

Complementing the three seniors will be sophomore Derek Rhodes, who started 18 games last season. Junior Shawn Green also appears to be fully recovered from a broken foot that he suffered last fall.

Sophomore Andrew Eicher and freshmen Devlin Barnes, Dan Colwell and Jarod Weimyr will provide depth for the Minutemen.

The defense

With sweeper J.R. Pouncey and fellow defenders Patrick Beattie and John Lyttle teamed together once again, the UMass backline might be the best in the A-10.

Pouncey, a junior, and Beattie, a senior, are the co-captains of this year's team.

"Pouncey is the vocal leader on defense and he needs to continue to be a strong influence on the field," said Koch. "We worked all spring on our defense and we have shown a continuous improvement."

Koch also has the benefit of both returning players and newcomers who should help bolster the defensive unit. Senior Dan Brinkman is back after missing last year with a knee injury. Sophomore Bo Cassidy and freshman Matt Laughlin should also help out the Minutemen.

The goalies

The graduation of Todd Fowler created a void for the starting goalkeeper spot. However, it is likely that junior Bryan O'Quinn will step up and assume the vacancy that was left by Fowler.

As a sophomore, O'Quinn posted a 3-1 record in goal for the Minutemen.

"O'Quinn has the experience and confidence to keep the net clean," said Koch. "One of his strengths is his tremendous ability to distribute the ball from the goal. He is very athletic, reads the game well and is our best with the ball at his feet."

Fellow classmate Enzo Alconare will also challenge for playing time, with freshmen Colin Burns and Dave Doucette also in the mix.

The schedule

Before the Minutemen open up their A-10 schedule on Sept. 29 against St. Bonaventure, UMass will venture outside the league to face opponents such as South Carolina, Hartford, New Hampshire, Siena, Maine, Boston University, Binghamton and Fresno State.

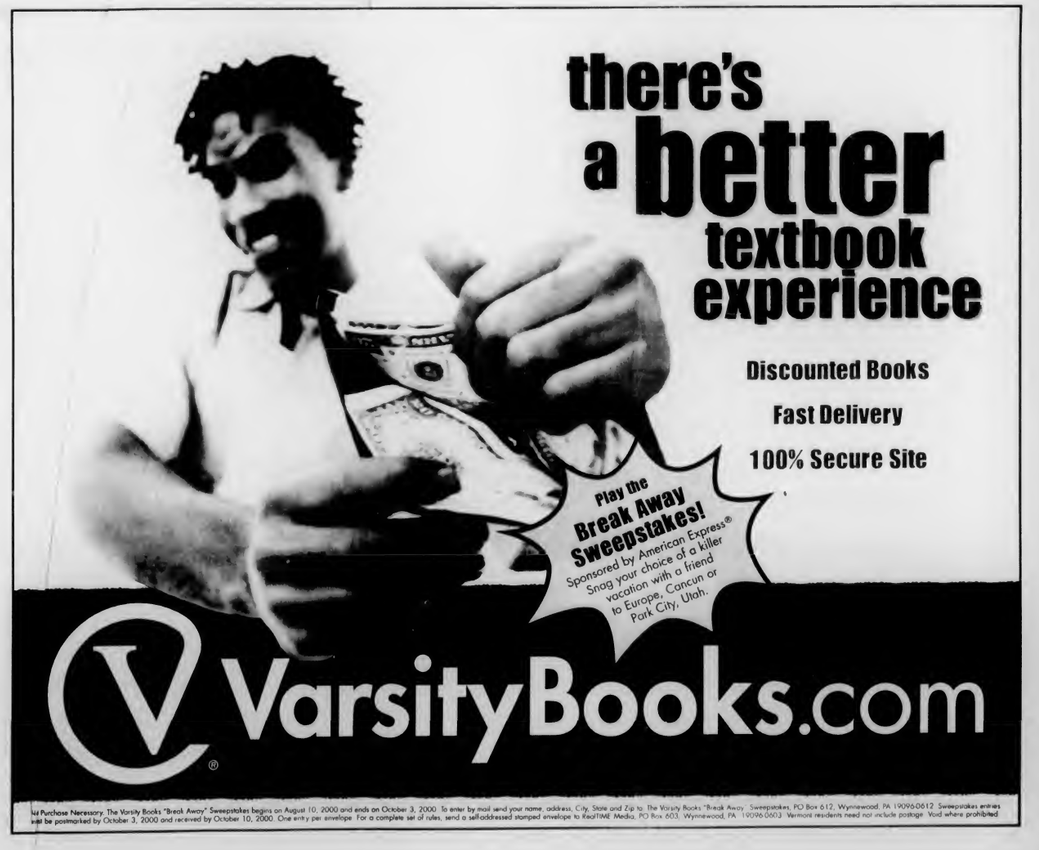
Mixed in with a 10-game league schedule will be a non-conference game with Harvard in mid-October.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

When healthy, senior Seth Lilburn is as dangerous a player as you'll find in collegiate soccer.

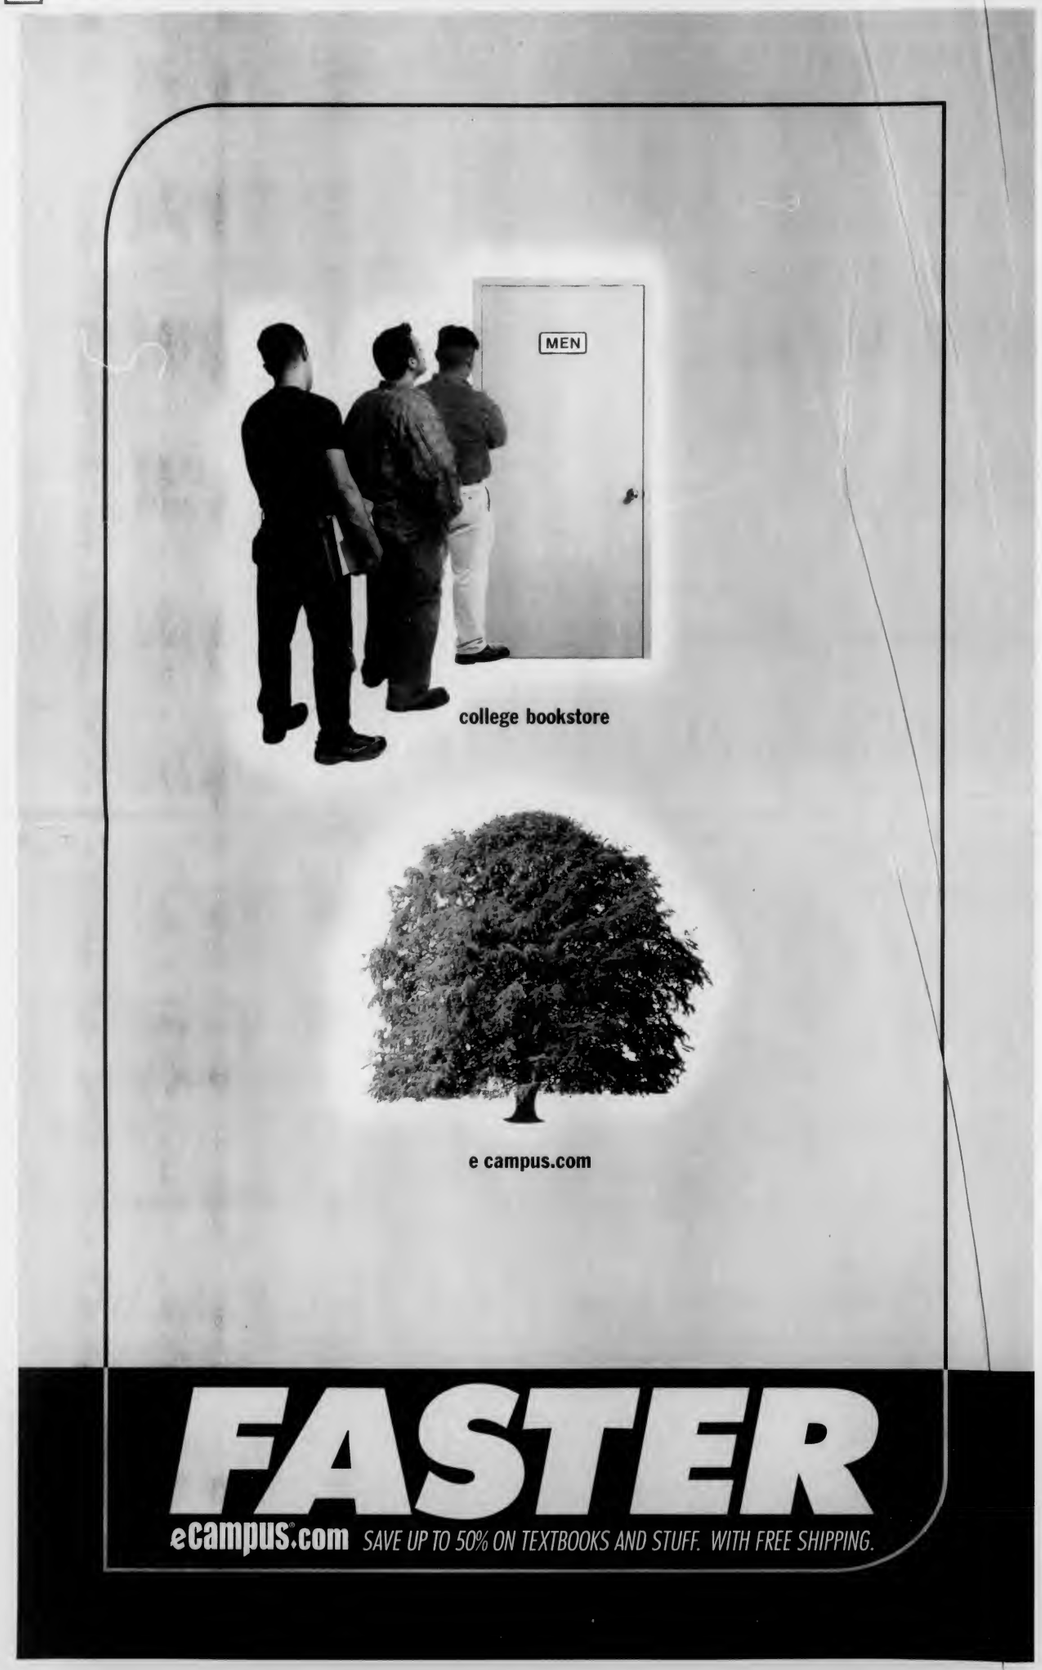
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bay State native Matt Christy is the consumate complete player - a solid defender who also possesses a rocket of a shot.



there's a better textbook experience
Discounted Books
Fast Delivery
100% Secure Site
Play the Break Away Sweepstakes!
Sponsored by American Express®
Snag your choice of a killer vacation with a friend to Europe, Cancun or Park City, Utah.
VarsityBooks.com

No Purchase Necessary. The Varsity Books "Break Away" Sweepstakes begins on August 10, 2000 and ends on October 3, 2000. To enter by mail send your name, address, City, State and Zip to: The Varsity Books "Break Away" Sweepstakes, PO Box 612, Wynnewood, PA 19096-0612. Sweepstakes entries must be postmarked by October 3, 2000 and received by October 10, 2000. One entry per envelope. For a complete set of rules, send a self-addressed stamped envelope to RealTIME Media, PO Box 603, Wynnewood, PA 19096-0603. Vermont residents need not include postage. Void where prohibited.



Men's water polo sky-high for '00 campaign after strongest finish ever

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

After a season that saw the Massachusetts men's water polo team grab a third place finish at the NCAA Championships in La Jolla, CA on the campus of UC-San Diego to end the season with a NO. 8 ranking the Minutemen are poised to sink the competition once again this year. The third place finish at the NCAAs was the highest that a Maroon and White team has taken in its six previous trips to the championships.

At the NCAAs UMass knocked off No. 3 seed and host San Diego before falling to eventual national champion UCLA.

Head coach Russ Yarworth has to deal with the loss of six players due to graduation. The most integral of these losses being All-American and co-captain Richard Huntley who leaves Amherst with school records for saves with 820 and quarters played in goal with 567.

Yarworth also has to deal with the departure of fellow co-captain Cory Koenemann who finished his career as a Minuteman with 52 goals and61 assists for a point total of 114 points.

Others that have left the pool in search of bluer waters are Rich Slingluff who left UMass as the career leader in blocks with 27 and the single-season record of 10 in 1997. Slingluff also finished his UMass career 112 goals and 47 assists for 165 points. One of the most potent offensive players in Marron and White history is Timmy Troupis. Troupis leaves Amherst with 159 goals and 95 assists for 262 points. His performances rank him fourth on the career list in assists and seventh in goals. Pat Kain, who transferred from Villanova, scored 84 goals and contributed 22 assist for 107 points in his lone year at UMass. Emotional leader Ryan Gray steps out of the pool having netted 24 goals and 13 assists for 37 career points.

The 14-year veteran of the clipboard and whistle Yarworth does not seem the least bit nervous about the loss of some his most key contributors.

"The strength of our program is that we have the ability to reload and not rebuild," Yarworth said in an interview with the school's media relations department. "I certainly feel that we have a returning core of players that can help us continue our success.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

1978 UMass grad Russ Yarworth has stood at the helm of the University's aquatics program for over 22 years.

"Even though on paper we have a lot of underclassmen, we are a very experienced and mature team," Yarworth said. "The core of our players are in the junior class, so they are the group that will step up."

The team's strength this year will be in the two-meters. The Minutemen will look to the trio of Mike Foley, Adam Moore and Greg Trayer to carry the offensive load.

Foley finished third on the team in scoring last season tallying 51 goals and eight assists for 59 points. Foley is as experienced a player as any in the country having played his high school water polo in Tustin, CA and his freshman year at UC-Irvine.

Moore, who finished fourth on the team in points last season with 49 (26 goals including three two-point goals and 20 assists), brings an almost immovable force to the middle. His 6-foot-5, 220 pound frame should reek havoc to opposing defenders.

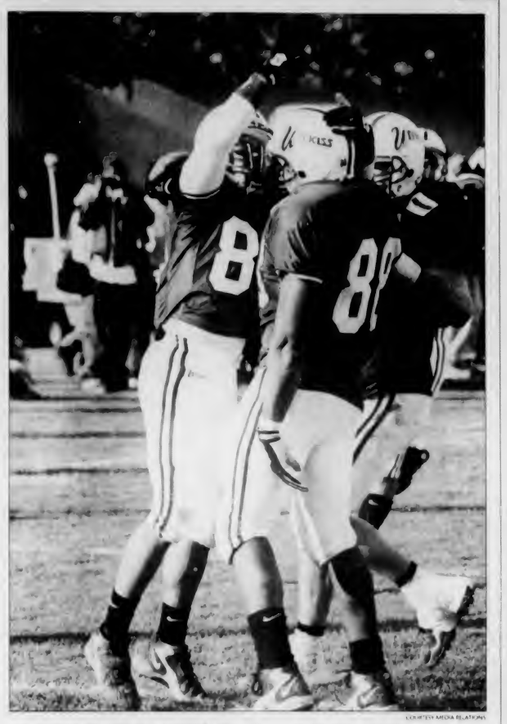
Trayer scored 51 goals last season and handed out 8 seven assists for 59 points last season.

Another strong position for UMass is its depth in goal. Replacing All-America Huntley will be a difficult task, but Yarworth has his core of netminders ready for the task.

Junior captain J.R. VanderWall will assume the starting position. VanderWall redshirted last season. He currently holds the UMass record for save percentage at .723 and goals against average at 3.73.

"VanderWall really worked hard as a redshirt which is tough because it is hard to keep your motivation," Yarworth said. "He has all the tools, including a big frame and arms-span to be a solid goalie."

Backing him up is last years No. 2 goalie Rafael Santana. As a backup Santana made 47 saves in just 23 quarters of action.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Let's Get Ready to Rumble

There should be plenty of reasons to celebrate when UMass football takes the field this year. The team returns a strong core of veterans and hopes to challenge for its second national championship in three years.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB

Free HFC T-Shirt

The Areas's Most Complete Club • 256-6446

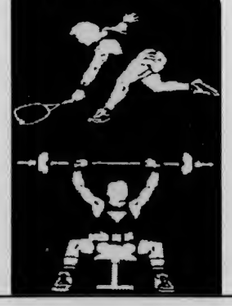
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

• PVTA bus route to Rolling Green •
• Pool •
• Aerobics •
• Aqua-aerobics •
• Steps •
• Nautilus Circuit •
• Racquetball •
• Free Weights •
• Jacuzzi •
• Yoga •
• Kickboxing •
• Saunas •
• Massage •
• Bikes •
• Indoor tennis & Basketball •
• Rowers •
• Treadmills •

MasterCard VISA

90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt.9 2 miles East of Town Center

Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($169) & get a free HFC T-shirt



WHERE TO EAT BETWEEN COURSES

d'angelo sandwich shops
The Sandwich Specialists™

48 North Pleasant Street • Amherst • 256-4131

Next time you get hungry in between classes, come to D'Angelo for delicious subs, salads, wraps and pokkets. For over 30 years people have come to D'Angelo to get the freshest, tastiest sandwiches and salads around because they know that we use only the finest quality ingredients, and plenty of them. All served for a reasonable price and served quickly! That's why they call us The Sandwich Specialists!™

DELIVERY • CARRY OUT • DINE IN

SAVE $1.50 on the purchase of one large sub or two small subs/pokkets.
Not valid with any other offers. Valid at participating locations only. Please mention coupon when ordering. Call for delivery availability and area. Taxes payable by bearer. Expires 10/15/99 #PL7617

SAVE $5.00 on the purchase of three large subs. Great for study groups or instant parties!
Not valid with any other offers. Valid at participating locations only. Please mention coupon when ordering. Call for delivery availability and area. Taxes payable by bearer. Expires 10/15/99 #PL7627

SAVE $1.00 on the purchase of one medium sub.
Not valid with any other offers. Valid at participating locations only. Please mention coupon when ordering. Call for delivery availability and area. Taxes payable by bearer. Expires 10/15/99 #PL7621

SUBS • POKKETS • WRAPS • SALADS

Going the distance no problem for resilient men's cross-country squad

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Many Massachusetts students spent the summer slaving away at deadend jobs. Others furthered their academic careers by taking summer classes. Still more sat around their families' homes, creating a chopchuff's welcome mat and bird feeder out of their parents'.

But not Turbocuff, group of students who spent their summer going cross-country. No, not piling into minivan with friends and snack foods and reading across the countryside. This type of cross-country involved wooded trails, running shoes and lots of perspiration. The group of students in question is, of course, the UMass men's cross-country team.

After a successful 1999 campaign in which the squad turned in strong performances at a number of prime time meets, the Minutemen will now focus on a grueling 2000 slate consisting of eight meets and culminating with the NCAA Championship in Ames, Iowa on November 20.

Only the fourth head coach in the 102-year history of UMass men's track and field, Ken O'Brien brings a wealth of knowledge to the cross-country program.

Last year saw a number of individuals on Coach Ken O'Brien's roster step up and turn in breathtaking performances to help power the Maroon and White effort. It all began at the New England Championships in Boston on Oct. 15, when sophomore Ryan Corbett (Highland, NY) turned in a 58th place run in 25:40 to pace UMass and help propel the team to a 13th place finish overall.

Next up were the Atlantic 10 Championships in Philadelphia on Nov. 1, when another second year standout paced the Minutemen and lifted the squad to an unprecedented fourth place team finish. Chelmsford native Kevin Curtin turned in his best run ever for the Maroon and White, grabbing 17th place kudos with a run of 26:03.7.

The '99 campaign climax came at the NCAA East Regionals in Boston on Nov. 15, when Corbett again flexed his cross-country muscle by pacing the team with a 66th place finish in 31:49. The Empire State native may have gotten a little push from teammate Matt Eh (Andover, Mass.), who cruised into 67th place a mere second behind Corbett.

This year's schedule has the Minutemen opening the season at New Hampshire on Sept. 8, with Boston College and Connecticut also slated to compete. Next up is a Sept. 16 meet at home against Boston University, Maine, Central Connecticut and Vermont. Two weeks later the team travels to the Bronx to compete in the Meet of Champions, after which it will begin preparation for the New England Championship at Boston on Oct. 15. The conference championship is set to unfold in Pittsburgh three days before Halloween, setting the stage for the NCAA Regional in the Bronx on Nov. 11. The final two scheduled competitions of the year are the ICAA Championship on Nov. 18 in the Bronx and the NCAAs two days later in Ames.

Chelmsford product Kevin Curtin returns to pace the Minutemen through the 2000 campaign.

TEXTBOOKS.
FREE SHIPPING*
*WHEN YOU BUY BOOKS AND ANY GEAR ITEM THROUGH 10/15/00

USE BIG WORDS.
bigwords.com™
TEXTBOOKS GEAR MUSIC & MORE
© 2000 BIGWORDS, Inc

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST athletic CLUB • 256-0600
Mon @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Daily Collegian:
We're an important part of your nutritious breakfast.

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Flag Football (M/W/C) 9/13
Soccer (M/W) 9/13
Co-ed Softball 9/14
Field Hockey 9/14
Cross Country (M/W) 9/21
Field Events (M/W) 9/21
On the web: www.umass.edu/umim
Don't Miss the Action
For entry Forms and info
545-2693
545-0022
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

Grand Opening Royal Buffet
Original Chinese Buffet
Grand Opening All You Can Eat Buffet!!!
• Walnut Shrimp • Crab Legs • Mussels • Clams
• Shrimp Cocktail • BBQ Ribs • Much More
All You Can Eat-120 Items Daily
• Lunch $5.95 (Mon.-Sat.) 11:00 am-3:30 pm
• Dinner $8.95 (Mon.-Thurs.) 3:30 pm-9:30 pm
(Fri.& Sat.) 3:30 pm-10:00 pm
• Sunday $8.45 (All day 11:30 am -9 pm)
• Children 5 1/2 price • 2 and under FREE
Reg. Menu Takeout Available
All Major Credit Cards VISA
1503 Memorial Dr. (Rte.33) Chicopee 533-5888 Fax 533-8078
Senior Citizen Discount (Over 65) 10% off
Gift Certificates Available

Inter Varsity Christian Fellowship
An International Student Christian Fellowship
• A Umass RSO for over 40 years
• Bible Study
• Worship
• Community Service
• Fellowship
Office: 423B Campus Center
Office Phone: 545-2789 or call Aaron @ 546-4138
Meetings Friday nights @ 8pm in the Campus Center, room # listed by elevators.

Bring Your Buddies to
BUB'S BAR B-Q
AMHERST RD..SUNDERLAND - 548-9630
Mon-Fri 4pm Sat. Sun and Holiday 11:30
"We found the food to be excellent, atmosphere relaxed, and the manager and staff friendly. For a real thrill from the grill don't pass up a visit to Bub's - You'll be pleased !" The Backyard Barbecuer
And PIG OUT IN STYLE!"

Men's tennis swings into action in 2000 with hope for improvement

By Adam Martignetti and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

After a disappointing 5-10 campaign last season, the University of Massachusetts Men's Tennis team is hoping to bounce back with a successful 2000 season.

Opening at the Northeast Intercollegiate Championship on September 22, the team is hoping to ace its first few matches on the road to an improved season. Led by Coach Judy Dixon, the team's yearlong schedule features road trips to Blacksburg, Virginia, for the ITA Regional Championships, St. Thomas, Florida, Atlantic and Duquesne.

Providing senior leadership for the squad will be Bill Greener, whose 13-6 singles record was second best among the Minutemen last year. Greener will likely need to improve on his solid '99 effort in order to bolster the young and somewhat inexperienced team.

Carrying six freshmen and three sophomores, the racqueteers, only other returning senior is Fabien Rabanal. Rabanal went 10-14 in singles play last year with a 4-4 doubles performance. Dixon is likely to call on Rabanal to fill the team's third singles role. If the Minutemen are to succeed, then they will need big performances from both of their seniors.

Along with Greener, filling one of the squad's first two singles positions will be Todd Champeau. As a freshman, Champeau posted an impressive 16-9 singles record, which led the team. Also called upon to play doubles last year, Champeau posted 18 wins against only 11 losses.

Sophomore Norwell native Will Shaw is one of many Minutemen looking to turn in a monster season for the Maroon and White.

Todd Champeau brings his racket skills all the way from Waukesha Wisconsin to the courts of UMass.

Steve Prisco, the team's lone senior, is looking to have a breakout season. After posting almost identical 5-9 singles and doubles records last year (12-14 singles, 11-10 doubles), Prisco hopes to use last year's ups and downs as a stepping point to a successful 2000 season.

The doubles picture is even busier for the Minutemen. Having had their top doubles team of Parsa Samii and Will Shaw broken up, the netmen will rely on sophomore Shaw (13-6 doubles record last season) to solidify the doubles teams.

This is likely where the team's six freshmen will see significant playing time. Brent Davis, Josh Feldman, Aron Gottman, Michael Goldberg, Phillip Rodrigues and Roy Thien as well as sophomore Eli Robbo will all be called upon to make contributions to the this team very early in their tennis careers.

With Rodrigues, who hails from Estoril Portugal, the team brings an international flavor to the courts. Other freshmen are traveling from as far away as San Diego, Beverly Hills, San Antonio and Bloomington, Minnesota to help this super squad serve up a great 2000 campaign.

RELIEF resources
We've got you covered
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Open Daily 11:30 A.M.-1 A.M.
Late Night Menu 10 P.M.-Midnight
Fully Stocked Bar
WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!!
Good Beer-Good Food-Good Service
Handcrafted Ales and Lagers
Live Entertainment Thursday-Sunday
24-36 N. Pleasant Street Amherst (413)253-4400 www.amherstbrewing.com

AUDITIONS:
for the best theater troupe... EVER!
SAFER SEX ...LIVE NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
Wednesday nights at UMass, Amherst
Sponsored by Health Education Division at University Health Services
577-5181
Wednesday September 13, 2000
Campus Center 174-17
Time 7 p.m.
For Info: Call Phil @ 577-5181

GOODBYE BORING EXCERCISE
HELLO CARDIO KICKBOXING
Combining the most effective work out principles with 2,000 years of Martial Arts techniques, makes Cardio Kickboxing the perfect workout for the new Millenium.
Call Now!!!
Amherst Martial Arts 48 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, Ma. 01002 (413) 256-0300

The Daily Collegian: If we knew what we were doing, this space wouldn't be here...

THE MOST USED BOOKS
IN-STOCK and
AVAILABLE NOW
Save your book receipts and get a 5% REBATE! See store for details!
NO NIGHTMARES
follett.com
Pick up your Web Decoder for a chance to win free tuition or millions of other prizes & discounts!
Look for the Guaranteed Buyback sticker: a textbook payback you can depend on.
guaranteed BUYBACK
This Book is Worth 50% of the Purchase Price at Buyback, Guaranteed!
The largest selection of new and used textbooks, for pick up or delivery...
UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST
an partner of follett.com
NEW & USED COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS

Major League Baseball's Wild Card race keeps September exciting

By David Benson Rose
Collegian Staff

David Rose
On Major League Baseball

Back in 1994, Major League Baseball implemented the Wild Card format to the playoffs. When it first came out, "baseball purists" scoffed at the notion.

They thought that it wouldn't bring any excitement to the game ... mainly because the feeling was that there would be just one team every year that would dominate. The team would not have enough to win the division, but would be head and shoulders above the rest of the teams to snag the Wild Card slot.

So, baseball purists, what now?

Major League Baseball heads into its final month of the season and, thanks to the Wild Card in particular, the American League has turned into a free-for-all.

The Cleveland Indians have won the AL Central every year since 1995. However, those regular season results led to nothing but disappointment in the postseason.

This year, the Indians have been hit by a runaway train known as the Chicago White Sox, but are still in contention for the playoffs. The return of Manny Ramirez has sparked a second-half revival that sees the Indians returning to the days where they outbombed teams instead of outpitching them. If they get any semblance of pitching in the final month, they are the team to beat for the fourth spot.

Chasing them are the Boston Red Sox. This is the only team that I have seen that has scored less than A.C. Green, yet they still find themselves in the thick of the playoff hunt.

All of that is because of two very simple words ... Pedro Martinez. Though he has problems with injuries this year, the fact remains that he is still the best pitcher in baseball. The one thing that is killing this team is its inconsistency both in the field and at the plate.

The Red Sox have left more people stranded than "Survivor." They come up with a ton of hits, but haven't brought the runners home, with the exception of maybe Brian Daubach.

In the field the Red Sox are a mess. Jose Offerman is back to his usual no range, no defense self. The only way to solve the problem is to release Offerman, put a trash can at second base and tell the opposing teams that if you hit it in that trash can, then you are out.

The trades for Rico Brogna and Mike Lansing haven't exactly paid dividends as of yet, but if they can help the Red Sox out, then it would be a major help.

Nomar Garciaparra is the key. If he can turn it around, the Red Sox can stay in the hunt. But that is all they will do. The lack of pitching will kill the Sox and kill their chances of the playoffs.

The most frustrating team to watch is the Oakland A's. At the beginning of August, they were up by five games in the wild card chase.

However, they then decided to wants to choke like Jean Van De Velde. The story of the A's in August goes something like this. Play a game, lose. Play a game the next day, lose. Play the next night and have your catcher still waiting to receive a pitch from your closer.

The A's offense has kept them in the race. First Baseman Jason Giambi is a candidate for the American League's Most Valuable Player as he is having the best season of his major league career. Rookie Terrance Long has come up with key base knocks in big situations and is a leading candidate for AL Rookie of the Year, and the rest of the lineup, which includes consistent players in Ben Grieve, Randy Velarde, Adam Piatt and Eric Chavez.

I can't say the same thing for the pitching staff. Over the last month, they have been about as consistent as Adam White's football picks last year. [Editor's note: Adam White came in second place in the Collegian football pool last season.] All-Star Jason Isringhausen has gone from an automatic out from of the bullpen to automatically giving A's fans a heart attack. His two-pitch debacle against the Yankees was the low point of what has been a miserable second half for Oakland.

Starters Kevin Appier and Tim Hudson have been too inconsistent for the A's to stay in the race. Unless the pitching staff turns around, the A's will be on the first tee when the regular season ends instead in the playoffs.

Somehow the Toronto Blue Jays have been able to stay in the Wild Card chase thanks to the pitching of 37-year old David Wells and the hitting of Carlos Delgado.

There has not been a Triple Crown winner in the Major Leagues since Carl Yastrzemski did it for the Sox in 1967. Delgado has a realistic chance to end that string. Right now, Delgado is in the top three in batting average, home runs, and runs batted in.

However, Delgado could win the Triple Crown and still not win the MVP. Remember last season, Martinez had one of the best years by a pitcher in the last 25 years and still did not get it.

Wells has the most wins in baseball and has done it with usual craftiness that worked in the Bronx while with the Yankees. Though his earned run average is still over four, he has pitched well enough to win as many games as he has.

Although Sports Illustrated has billed him as "fat," Wells phat stat line this season makes him the only other serious contender for the AL Cy Young. However, like Martinez up in Beantown, one starting pitcher can't win a Wild Card, and while Wells and closer Billy Koch have carried the load, the pressure of September will do in the Blue Jays and their chances of bringing the playoffs back north of the border in October.

The Anaheim Angels have stayed in the race due primarily to their hitting. The Halos have four players that have reached the 30 home run plateau - Troy Glaus, Mo Vaughn, Garrett Anderson and Tim Salmon, and could become the first team in major league history with five players over 30 "Boo-yahs" if Darin Erstad can get on a hot streak at the end of the campaign.

Although he is no longer on a pace to break the all-time single season hits record, Erstad's season in the leadoff spot has been spectacular. He has 25 more hits than anybody else in baseball and is on pace to become the first player ever to drive in 100 runs from the leadoff spot.

Alas, though with all the firepower that the Angels provide, the only fire coming from the pitching staff could be from their backsides. The trade of Jim Edmonds for Kent Bottenfield blew up in the Angels' face and Bottenfield is now in Philadelphia. Ken Hill was let go and picked up by Chicago and the bullpen has blown 17 saves this season. Thus any chance of going to playoffs is flying as far away the dingers the Angels give up.

The Detroit Tigers are a ..... wait a minute, Detroit? They were 5-17 at the beginning of the season! The only hits that Detroit was taking during that stretch was Juan Gonzalez whacking the ownership with complaints about the dimensions of Comerica Park and his own selfishness.

Now, the Tigers have played inspired baseball, and have the third-best record in the American League the second half of the season. Bobby Higginson has gotten off the mat since his disastrous start and has put up his usual solid numbers across the board. Third baseman Dean Palmer has provided power in the heart of the lineup where Gonzalez has failed, and has given them some stability.

The pitching staff is turning around as Hideo Nomo, Jeff Weaver and Brian Moehler have led the way for a unit that was on the brink of extinction. The now solid staff is rounded out by the AL leader in saves, closer Todd Jones.

The Tigers have proven that they have the talent to stay in the race. The only two questions that need to be answered are - will the Tigers run out of gas? They have been chasing all year and will they get fatigued after struggling with a 5-17 start to get all the way to the playoffs. Second, will they rue the day that they started the season 5-17? The answers to both questions is: YES! The horrific start will keep Detroit out of the postseason.

If the Wild Card was not in play, and Major League Baseball still had two divisions, only the Red Sox would be in any playoff contention at this moment. The Wild Card has essentially kept five other teams from just playing out the string, and has made September a much more exciting month for the Major Leagues.

Now that's the beauty of baseball.

David Benson Rose is a Collegian columnist

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club

UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER

Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"

- Certified Personal Trainers
- Fitness Testing & Programming
- Nutritonal Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Full Aerobics Programs including:
  -Cardio Kickboxing
  -Sports Step
  -and many more

We've expanded our dumbbell area!

Semester Special $150

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Located in the Campus Plaza next to Liquors 44.
For more information call 253-7684

HEy DAy GRAphiCS StaFF!
HEy DAy GRAphiCS StaFF

Get your collective butts down here and work, we need (and love) you!!

You! (yes, you) If you want to be a graphic designer for the Collegian come down and see us too, we want to love you too, really we do.

Castaway Lounge

Routes 5 & 10, Whately, MA • (413) 665-8733
(North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & 10 North 2 miles, South of 91 Exit 24 take route 5 & 10 South 2 miles)

Proudly will allow all students over 21 years old

We are now hiring beautiful girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business

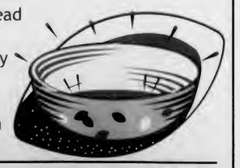
We are now open for Monday Night Football • Every Monday open at 4pm • 6 Dancers • Food • Prizes

VIP room always open for private parties

SOUPer BOWL

Grand Opening

- 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
- Bread bowls
- Fresh bread
- All made fresh daily
- also a limited selection of salads



96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

HEALTH EDUCATION
IS LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEERS!

We are looking for dedicated people who are interested in women's health for Making Choices workshop facilitators - a contraceptive and STI workshop! and The Women's Health Project - who put on the 5-College Clothesline Project every year!

Come Find Out More On Wednesday, September 13th at 7 p.m. in room 302 University Health Services

or call Aly at 577-5181 for more information

Women's XC makes run at sixth A-10 title

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bringing home a sixth-straight conference championship will be "Lizness as usual" for UMass' Liz Mitchell (left) and Liz Sheptyck.

They're the best. The cream of the crop. The top dogs. The big enchilada. Numero uno.

Whatever cliché you use to describe the Massachusetts women's cross-country team, it had better reflect domination. The Minutewomen have rattled off five straight Atlantic 10 Championships, and with the look of the returning squad that trend will probably continue this season.

Last season saw the Maroon and White ride a wave of momentum through the season, gathering speed both literally and figuratively as they raced toward the season-ending NCAA East Regional in Boston. The Minutewomen's first shot of glory came courtesy of the New England Championships in Beantown on Oct. 15, when senior Nicole Way began her farewell tear through collegiate cross-country by blazing to a 28th place finish in 18:19. The Bay State native's solid run helped rocket the Maroon and White to an eighth place team finish.

The team then set its sights on the conference championships in Philadelphia on Oct. 30. It was fitting that the A-10s were held the day before Halloween; it seemed that every other team in the conference showed up dressed as pretenders to the throne. The Minutewomen made it five conference crowns in a row behind another blistering run from Way, who this time cruised to a third place finish in 18:40.7. Right behind Way came teammate Kristin Cirowski, with a fourth place run of 18:42.3.

The '99 slate culminated in the East Regionals on Nov. 13, where Way once again took point and flew through the 5k course in 18:20, good for 53rd place. The Maroon and White finished the day with a 12th place finish.

This year's schedule has the Minutewomen going up against several regional powers such as Connecticut, Northeastern and Boston College. Highlights include a home meet on Sept. 16 against Boston University, Maine, Central Connecticut and Vermont.

The 2000 Atlantic 10 Championship is slated for Oct. 28 in Pittsburgh. The conference's best will then compete in the NCAA Regionals in the Bronx on Nov. 11.

AMHERST
VALLEY BICYCLES LTD
TRAILSIDE: 8 RAILROAD ST. • HADLEY • 584-4466
AMHERST • 319 MAIN ST. • 256-0880 1-800-331-5437
ON THE RAIL TRAIL

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER
Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service
END OF THE MILLENIUM BLOWOUT

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Mon @ 4:15
Thurs @ 5:30
Fri @ 4:15
Sat @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Lifecrower • Cardio Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte 116 So. Amherst
256-0080

KEEP THAT SUMMER BODY LOOKING GOOD!!

BODY SHOP
DISCOUNT MEMBERSHIP SPECIAL

COME JOIN ONE OF THE "BEST PLACES TO WORKOUT" AT UMASS!!

SIGN UP AT TOTMAN 8 BEFORE SEPTEMBER 15th FOR A FULL DISCOUNT:
$60 for Unlimited Fall Semester Membership OR*
*$120 for Fall & Spring Membership

WORKOUT EVERY MUSCLE IN YOUR BODY WITH

POWERLINE® WEIGHT TRAINING MACHINES	MACHINES
LIFEFITNESS® STATIONARY BICYCLES	NORDIC TRACK® SKI MACHINES
LIFEFITNESS®STAIR CLIMBERS	LANDICE® TREADMILLS
CONCEPT II® ROWING	PRECOR® EFX ELLIPTICAL TRAINERS
	FREE WEIGHTS

CALL 413-545-0324 for more information

THE BODY SHOP WILL BE OPEN FOR REGISTRATION AND VIEWING ONLY FROM SEPTEMBER 8TH THROUGH SEPTEMBER 14TH
FULL WORKOUTS BEGIN ON SEPTEMBER 15TH

The Body Shop Fitness Center
DISCOUNT MEMBERSHIP OFFER Expires 9/14/99
*14 Day Refund Policy In Effect with Original Receipt And University I.D. Card Only

Amherst Deli

Fast, Free Delivery

Now Open late Night
Thursday - Saturday
10pm - 2am

549-6314
233 N. Pleasant St.
Eat-In • Take-Out • Delivery
Catering

Hours

Mon-Fri	9am - 9pm
Saturday	11am - 6pm
Sunday	12pm - 6pm

OCMP
Off Campus Meal Plan

football

continued from page C1

and soul of the Maroon and White attack. The 6-foot, 216 pound Shipp blasted holes in opposing defenses last season to the tune of 1,846 yards rushing and a school single-season record 24 touchdowns on the ground, while ranking second on the team in receptions with 54 for another 336 yards.

"Marcel Shipp is one of the best players in the country," Whipple said. "He is a very elusive runner who has deceptive speed, and we are going to get him the ball in as many different ways as we can. He is going to be the focus of our offense, and he has a chance to establish himself as one of the top backs in Division I-AA history."

Shipp will get some help along the way from junior Kevin Quinlan, a Somerville original who has shown flashes of brilliance backing up Shipp in each of the last two seasons. Quinlan racked up 413 yards and found the endzone three times for the Maroon and White last season, and Whipple views the Malden Catholic product as integral in keeping the UMass ground attack churning over the course of the 2000 slate.

"We need to have Kevin Quinlan more involved in the offense this season, and definitely earlier than we did last year," Whipple said. "Health becomes a concern over the course of a full season, and if Quinlan can share time with Shipp throughout the year, they should both be in prime shape down the stretch."

Rounding out the Maroon and White's corps of tailbacks are Troy Lockman, Tre Brady and Cabral Lilley.

Fullback looks like another position where Whipple won't need to reload, as last year's top two blocking backs return for UMass in juniors Pete Cariello and Brian Kozikowski. A year after making the switch from defense to offense, both players will be called upon to help the UMass rushing attack fully gel.

The loss of the versatile Higgins at tight end leaves things wide open for sophomores Greg Ward and Darrell Shabazz and senior Rich Palmese, who will duke it out for playing time along with freshmen Eugene Sigmund and Sean Young. Ward appears to have a slight edge among the five, having started twice last season as the No. 2 guy behind Higgins.

But even with all of these weapons, Whipple knows that success moving the football begins and ends with the push up front: the play of the offensive line. Even with the exit of Bolden and All-American Wynne, the coach sees his current trench crew as more than capable of shunning opposing defenses and opening up big-time holes for Shipp and company to chug through. With an average weight of 294 pounds, the starting line of Corey Mitchell, Carmen Collins, Tyler Lauback, Joe Frawley and Maikel Miret has instilled Whipple with the utmost confidence that no one in the A-10 will likely be able to push UMass around.

"This unit should be at least as good as the ones which have helped us lead the conference in offense the last two seasons," Whipple said. "We will be better experience wise, and they are all good workers."

Senior Ryan Woods is at the forefront of an excellent group of reserve linemen, including juniors Bryah Gifford and Jeremiah Williams and freshman Matt Kier.

The Defense

On the other side of the ball, the Minutemen will have a new look right from the coach's clipboard. Last year's defensive coordinator, Don Brown, left the team in June to take the head coaching job at cross-state rival Northeastern. That prompted Whipple to bring in Neil McGrath to head up the Maroon and White defense.

As the defensive coordinator at Maine during the last five seasons, McGrath helped the Black Bears improve from 11th in the league in total defense in 1995 to fourth in McGrath's second season. He also played a huge part in developing some phenomenal defensive players, including 1999 Buck Buchanan Award finalist and first team All-American Jojo Oliphant. And a Bay State original, McGrath brings a familiarity with local talent that should aid UMass immensely in attracting key area prospects.

"[McGrath] understands the kind of commitment it takes and where we want to go with our program," Whipple said. "Plus, he is a native of Danvers, Mass. and has recruited in both Massachusetts and New England. I really think he is a perfect fit, and he knows the personnel of the league."

McGrath's biggest chore in bolstering the Maroon and White D will be replacing last year's starting cornerback tandem. With Jerard White and Willie Hemmar having traded in their pads for caps and gowns, the Minutemen will look to sophomore Shawn Murray and transfer Rob Green as the primary ball hawks at the corners. Both stepped up their levels of play during spring practice, and with the help of junior Nelson Ovalles and freshmen Corey Edwards and Rob Williams should fill in nicely for the departed seniors.

Behind the corners lurks what could very well be the most sensational safety tandem in the country in junior All-American Jeremy Robinson and senior tri-captain Brian Smith. Robinson morphed into a world-class defender in '99 with 103 tackles (good for second on the team) and six interceptions, which ranked him at 11th in the nation in that category. Smith's stellar season saw him falling just short of Robinson's tally with 102 tackles, bringing his career total to a whopping 247 sticks.

Long yardage situations will call for the insertion of nickel back Lance Overby, who racked up 39 tackles and tied for the team lead in QB hurries with seven in only two starts last season. Whipple views his trio of deep men, in particular Smith, as being able to hang and hang with anyone in the country.

"Even though he has not received a lot of recognition, Brian Smith is one of the top players on this team," Whipple said. "He is the glue of the secondary, and has the flexibility to move from safety to corner if we need him to. There is probably not a better pair of safeties in the nation than Smith and Robinson and we also have Lance Overby, who started eight games for the 1998 national championship team."

Depth at the safety position comes courtesy of senior Bryan King, junior Dammon McLaren and sophomore Anton McKenzie.

The middle of the Maroon and White D is ruled with an iron fist by linebacker Kole Ayi, whose 147-tackle whirlwind of a '99 season earned him runner-up honors in the voting for the Buck Buchanan Award. The tri-captain currently stands at fifth on the school's all-time tackles list with 355 career takedowns, and his job should get even easier with the addition of Notre Dame transfer Joe Ferrer. As a starter over six games for the Fighting Irish, Ferrer registered 27 tackles.

"Kole Ayi is just an awesome player, and our whole defense starts with him," Whipple said. "Then we add Joe Ferrer, who should be a real impact player and provide us with great leadership due to his experience."

The other outside LB slot appears to have Corey Potter's name written all over it. The Keystone State native made the most of his half-dozen starts last year with 46 tackles, four sacks and a pair of interceptions. Redshirt freshman Jeremy Cain is also expected to play an ample role in the team's LB corps, while underclassmen Anthony Louis, Ian Dyche and Leron Ancle will find themselves scrapping for what's left of the PT.

All that depth at linebacker allows Whipple to move senior Compton Webster to the defensive line, where the Brooklyn Tech product will step in at tackle opposite fellow veteran Paul Bolden. The end positions will see a nice balance of experience and enthusiasm in senior Dan Schneider and freshman Valdamar Brower, both of whom call Massachusetts home. Fitchburg's own Schneider bullied opposing offenses last year with 51 tackles (17 for a loss) and five sacks, while massive Florence native Brower (6-foot-5, 235 pounds) used the spring practice slate to turn heads across Whipple's staff.

"We are a more athletic group up front [this year], but we are losing a little experience," Whipple said. "I think this group is faster, and I expect them to rush the passer better."

Rounding out the D-line reserves for the Maroon and White are senior Mike Ciriullo, juniors Joel Sarapin and Pierre Alfred, sophomore Khalil Blakey and redshirt freshman Doran Davis.

The Special Teams

The UMass kicking crew from last season returns in its entirety, led by punting sensation David Sanger. Already the keeper of the school's career punting average record, the 6-foot-2 sophomore from Cocoa Beach, Florida netted a whopping 40.5 yards per punt in his first season for the Minutemen. He also displayed awesome skill at pinning opposing return men deep in their own territory.

"David Sanger had a great year for us as a freshman, and is probably the best coffin corner kicker I have ever coached," Whipple said. "I expect him to be one of the top punters in the conference this year."

Whipple will once again split the placekicking duties between junior Jason Cherry and sophomore Doug White, who teamed to convert 10 of 14 field goal attempts and 51 of 54 extra points in '99.

This year's return men are as diverse and talented a group as UMass has ever seen grace the grass. Zullo, Quinlan, Lockman and Howard could all see action in kick return situations, and junior Hobdy original Raphael Santos is a legitimate threat to go all the way any time he touches the football.

Punt returns will be the primary responsibility of junior DeShon Hardy, though Lockman has also shown the ability to make big plays running back rainbows.

The Schedule

Last Thursday's season opener against William and Mary marked UMass' first ever night game at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The team now turns its focus to next Saturday's A-10 showdown at Richmond. Last year, the Minutemen stalked into Richmond and squashed the Spiders, 33-6, on November 6.

The team will spend the following Saturday hosting the Chargers of tiny New Haven (enrollment 1,500), where Whipple spent six seasons as head coach from 1988-93 and compiled a 48-17 record. That matchup will be followed by a Sept. 30 home clash with Hofstra, which mangled the Minutemen 27-14 in week four of last season.

The Maroon and White will then hit the road for a Beantown battle with Northeastern, which will reunite the team with former defensive coordinator Brown. The Huskies were the unfortunate recipients of a 77-0 thrashing at the hands of UMass in week five of '99, which will undoubtedly fuel Brown's pregame pep talk to the NU troops this year.

Week seven brings a Family Day war with Maine to McGuirk, followed by a Band Day date with visiting American International College (AIC) on the following Saturday. Week nine consists of a trek to Durham, New Hampshire to face A-10 foe UNH, followed by home dates against Villanova on Homecoming Weekend (Nov. 4) and Delaware the following Saturday. The Minutemen will then wrap up the regular season at Rhode Island on Nov. 18 at noon.

"It should be a real benefit for us to be playing seven home games this season," Whipple said. "We have great fans, our stadium is a great place and our kids take a lot of pride in defending our home turf. Our away schedule may not look as tough as it has been the last few years, but we are not afraid of playing anyone on the road. No one in the nation has played a road schedule like we have the last two years, and we have already proven that we can win those games."

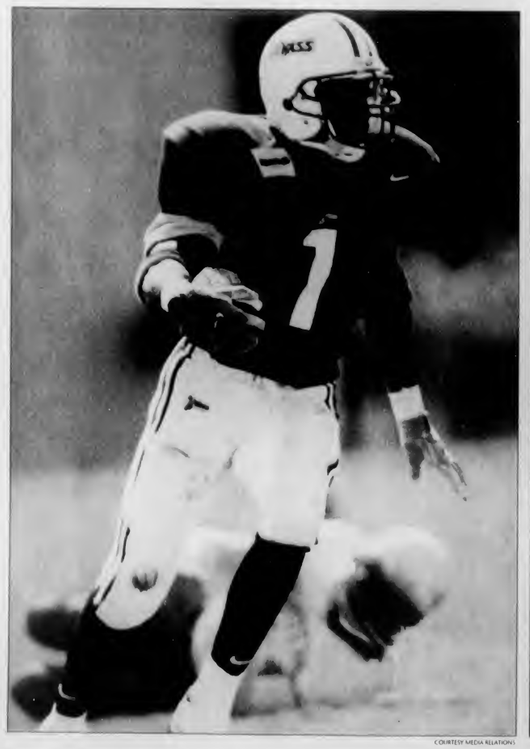
The Outlook

With the team's outstanding success over the first two seasons of the Whipple era, the outlook for the 2000 campaign is certainly solid. Eight Minutemen (Ayi, Robinson, Shipp, Smith, Zullo, Sanger, Schneider and Lauback) were named to the preseason All-Atlantic 10 team while Ayi, Robinson and Shipp also received preseason All-American honors. The Sports Network ranked UMass fourth in its Preseason Top 25 Division I-AA College Football Poll, and ESPN/USA Today rated the Minutemen No. 2 in the country behind only GSU.

"We have a chance to be a really good team this year," Whipple said. "We have some great leaders on our squad, and all of our guys know what it takes to be successful. This team will be mentally focused to play 15 games, one week at a time."

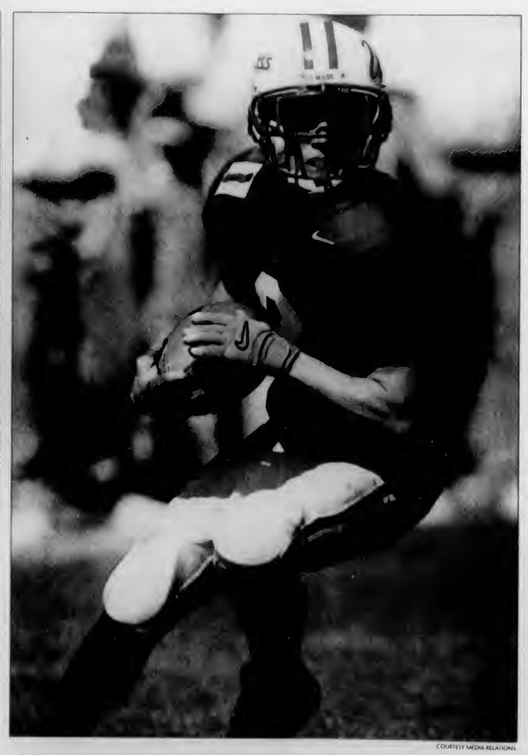
Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

All-American Jeremy Robinson is among the premier defensive backs in the entire country.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior two-sport star Adrian Zullo brings all the right moves to the wide receiver position - jaw-dropping speed, great hands and a knack for finding space in opposing defenses.

Green day is one of hundreds of bands to play New England this summer. Check out our reviews of summer concerts.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Jimmie Howard had a touchdown catch in UMass' 36-16 win over William& Mary.

SPORTS, p. 20

Volume CVII Issue 2 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, September 7, 2000

Big Brother is watching

"What's important here is not that people know the exact location of the camera," she commented. "What's important is that they understand there's a camera on them and it's viewing that particular area and taping what is occurring in the courtyard."

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Despite heated controversy, the University of Massachusetts has gone ahead with its plan to install video surveillance equipment in the Southwest living area.

According to Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, in a statement made to the press, a surveillance camera was installed on campus on Sunday, September 3.

He explained that the exact location of the camera would not be disclosed, but that the camera would be positioned to view the main courtyard in Southwest and the area known as "the pyramid[s]."

"We believe the camera will serve as a deterrent to those who might threaten the safety of students or University property," Cevallos said in a statement. "Should a problem occur, we hope the tape will help determine what happened, and identify whoever is responsible."

Jim Lyons, spokesperson for the Campus Police Department, could only comment that the camera had indeed been installed in the Southwest living area.

Barbara Plotnik, Associate News Director of the News Office, commented on the location of the camera.

"As I understand it, the camera is placed on [John Quincy Adams]," Plotnik said. She went on to explain that camera had been placed in the living area in an attempt to curb crime on campus.

"What's important here is not that people know the exact location of the camera," she commented. "What's important is that they understand there's a camera on them and it's viewing that particular area and taping what is occurring in the courtyard."

She explained that the footage would not consistently be monitored by the police but would instead be viewed in the event of a crime occurring in the Southwest living area.

"It is a tape and no one is sitting there watching it," she said. "It is not being constantly monitored, but the tape will be reviewed in the case of a serious incident that is reported."

COURTESY JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

A security camera on the side of John Quincy Adams dorm in Southwest (circled above) watches over students at the "Pyramids."

Student reaction to the new cameras has been mixed

Aaron Shelton, a resident assistant in John Adams dormitory, commented that he felt that security cameras could be a positive addition if they helped to curb crime on campus.

"I got the impression that most people are against it," he commented. "I think that I am in the minority."

He explained that many students did not take security measures on campus as seriously as they should and that cameras may be effective in helping to solve crime that occurs on campus. He commented that most students seemed to be against the idea because they felt that the cameras were an invasion of privacy.

"I don't think that it will be an invasion of privacy because the cameras are in public spaces," he said. "I am hopeful that something will work to improve campus security and if cameras are that thing, then great."

Brittany Nelson, a freshman resident of John Quincy Adams tower, also made similar comments.

"I think that safety-wise it is a good idea," she said. "I think that it is more good than bad."

However, not all reaction to the new security measures has been positive. The Student Government Association has been adamantly against the idea of the installation of the cameras from the planning stages of the new measure.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian explained, "I am deeply disappointed that the administration has decided to go against student opinion, especially considering the results of the referendum last year were overwhelmingly against security cameras."

He said that the SGA was against the measure and that they felt that it was a waste of funding.

"I think that it was a waste of money, considering that students have been requesting an additional safety van for years," he said. "I don't see any benefit from the installation of surveillance cameras that could outweigh their negative impact on the residential community."

He went on to say that the SGA continued to oppose the idea of the cameras and explained that the group would take action if the administration were to install cameras inside resident halls.

In addition, he also commented on the original reluctance on the part of the University to disclose the location of the surveillance equipment.

"I think that they are worried that the students will vandalize or destroy the camera," he said.

The new security equipment is only a portion of the new security measures on campus. In addition the University has also installed new lighting and call boxes between Memorial Hall and the Student Union, on the west side of the campus pond, the north end of the tunnel from Southwest, under the walkway at Morrill, east of Herter, and west of North Village. And, if the new equipment installed in Southwest proves to be a success, the University will also consider adding security cameras in other residential areas.

Stonewall Center celebrates 15

By Catherine Turner and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Tucked away among the high-rises and the cramped bicycle racks of the Southwest Residence Halls lies a quiet place dedicated to the safety and support of the University of Massachusetts gay, lesbian, bi-sexual and transgender community.

Since 1985, the Stonewall Center has been a resource for students, faculty, staff and local residents. This year it celebrates its 15th anniversary and continues to lead the UMass populous in a direction welcoming all sexual orientations.

The Stonewall Center plays a lot of roles on campus that many people may not realize. In fact, the students who attend UMass today do not understand how many changes have been made in the past fifteen years and how the creation of the Stonewall Center has contributed to the shift in attitude within the community.

"People are scared of what they don't know," said Felice Yeskel, the director of the center. "But I think that times have changed."

The Center was originally founded in the mid-eighties after a series of homophobic incidents occurred on campus and student activists demanded action from the administration. At that time, the school hired Felice Yeskel to write up a report and present ideas on how to make the campus more "queer-friendly."

After a semester of research, which involved surveying RAs (Resident Assistants), RDs (Resident Directors), faculty and students, Yeskel presented a report to the administration entitled The Consequences of Being Gay. The report concluded that most of the University's gay population was not only very closeted, but many also felt outright unsafe on campus and felt as though they could not approach a police person or a faculty member for risk of being re-victimized. Many had suffered intense harassment.

At the end of the report, she listed fifteen different approaches and/or suggestions of how to end the rampant homophobia. One of these suggestions was to create a safe place on campus that would provide information, security, support and resources for not only the homosexual members of the community, but also for the heterosexual population.

So the Stonewall Center was opened, and since its inauguration, the Center has indeed followed its charter and helped hundreds open their minds and welcome the gay, bi-sexual, lesbian and transgender people around them.

"I think this campus is a more accepting place for the gay, lesbian, bisexual and now transgender people," Yeskel said, "The advocacy in Stonewall systematically asked how we can go about making campus more welcoming and supportive for everybody."

The Stonewall Center provides many services for UMass. Students are welcome to venture in and share experiences with the staff, whether they are positive or negative.

"If someone were harassed or discriminated against, we would want them to come and talk to us so that we could send them to someone for help," Yeskel said.

One of the services Stonewall provides is referrals to people looking for doctors, lawyers, or psychiatrists. They also publish a monthly newsletter called "Blatant," that highlights different events going on with the center and within the five-college area. It includes a calendar for convenience.

The Center houses an extensive library and invites everyone to check out books, videos, resource materials and journals. It gives out library cards and welcomes anyone to use the library for extra-curricular reading or for research.

"Throughout the day there are always a few people who come in to check out books or return them," Yeskel said. "And there are always students who use our library for their papers. It's quite useful."

In addition to the resources in the office, Stonewall also sponsors many speakers, artists and performers. Two years ago, it was The Stonewall Center that brought Ellen Degeneres to campus and packed the Fine Arts Center. This fall it is sponsoring a tentative performance of the play Corpus Christi by a Connecticut theater group. The controversial play depicts Jesus as a gay man and has received positive reviews.

The Speakers Bureau is another service that the center provides. This is a group of individuals who travel from classroom to convention center, sharing their experiences, and what their lives are like being lesbian, gay, transgender, or a relative of such a person. The Bureau allows a personal and informal discussion of homosexuality, and attempts to dismiss myths, stereotypes and misinformation that lead to discrimination or harassment. Yeskel called the program "powerful and educational."

An even more convenient option, The Stonewall Center is available on the web. They send out a weekly email called "Queerl," which includes announcements, job and house listings, calendar and special events. The site includes links to online resources and can be accessed from the University of Massachusetts website under the "current students" link.

Not only does the center provide online and personal resources, it also publishes its own line of educational posters and pamphlets, which it distributes throughout campus. RAs are sent pamphlets to put up on their bulletin boards for Black History Month, Valentine's Day, Women's History month and for general information. Their line of posters is available for sale to other schools and businesses, while their annual publication of the LBGT Resources brochure is free. This brochure is a listing of organizations and services in the Pioneer Valley.

Students are offered a one-credit course by the center. The Women's Studies Department provides an independent study, which requires attendance to all of the lectures in a series of LGTB speakers Stonewall presents. The lectures take place on Thursdays at 12:30 p.m. in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center and are welcome to anyone, not just those signed up for credit.

Beyond the education, the advocacy and the resources, Stonewall works closely with sister organizations in the University, including ALANA (Asian, Latino, African, Native Americans, with whom it is hosting a bar be que on September 19th), Disabilities Services, the Pride Alliance and The Everywoman's Center.

"We [have also] work[ed] very closely with the identified gay and lesbian groups on campus," Yeskel said. "We always have a table at QueerFest and give a financial contribution. In fact, the Pride Alliance will be holding their first meeting in our space on Tuesday the 12th at 7:00 p.m. We also got a grant a couple of years ago for the Lesbian and Gay Youth to put on a Safe Campuses Conference."

It seems as though the Stonewall Center has all of the bases covered. It provides a positive environment for gay, bisexual, lesbian and transgender people, provides a network of information and advocacy, supports on-campus student groups and designs programs for concerts, speakers and even poetry readings. They also host a LBGT Graduate Student Reception.

In the last fifteen years, the University of Massachusetts has become a trailblazer in the campaign to bestow campuses with safe havens for the LGBT communities. When the Stonewall Center opened in 1985, it was housed in a small room in the John Quincy Adams dorm in Southwest. It has since moved to the low-rise Crampton House, and has shared its success

Turn to STONEWALL page 2

COURTESY JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Felice Yeskel, director of the Stonewall Center, stands next to brochures addressing gay issues.

HSCN adds cable

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Students were welcomed back to the residence halls recently with eighteen new television channels added to their Housing Service Cable Network (HSCN) line-up.

The new networks, highlighted by ESPN, MTV and E! bring an end to the long battle between students and the University regarding the quality of television in the halls. For several years now, many students have voiced discontent with the cable services offered by HSCN.

A lack of funds made the selection process for new channels extremely difficult. At one time, the concept of ESPN and MTV seemed to be a virtual impossibility. After a referendum question was added to last year's election ballot, the new channels were finally implemented. Students tended to be quite unhappy with last year's channels.

Steve Davis, a graduating Landscape Contracting major, said about the previous year's channel offerings, "They were kind of boring. There were too many info channels." He went on to say that the new line-up is much better than the previous year's, and he likes having more choices.

Sarah Batchelder, a sophomore undeclared major said, "I haven't really watched TV since I've been back, but last year's channels were not that good, and they needed more." She said she was happy with the added selection.

ESPN became notoriously expensive for cable companies to carry after they signed a deal to cover Sunday night NFL games. The deal cost ESPN and its parent company ABC/Disney $9 billion over eight years, and to compensate, the price of subscription to ESPN rose enormously. Subsequently, it became nearly impossible for students to get the network on campus.

In the past, students have been forced to go to the Campus Center, or off campus if they wanted to watch popular television shows that they could not get on campus. Every Monday night, the Bluewall has been packed with professional wrestling fans that could not see "WWF Raw" or "WCW Nitro" in the dorms. With the new line-up, students get USA and TNT, the two networks that carry the highly rated cable programs.

Overall, the reaction to the new channels has been extremely favorable. Vlad Derisler, a junior psychology major said he thinks the channels look promising. "There are a lot of cool channels," he said. "I'm bothered by Sundance being gone though."

To make way for the new channels, HSCN had to displace The History Channel and The Sundance Channel. Sundance is a network that exclusively shows independent films.

To make up for the loss of the channel, HSCN added a second movie channel. Historically, channel 7 has been a movie channel run by the University. Now channel 9 has more movies for the same purpose.

If there is any question about the difference between this year's line-up and the one offered last year, Landscape Contracting manager Matt Baker said, "It's like night and day watching now compared to last year. At least this year we get Howard Stern!"

Ex-pit bulls

AMHERST - After 90 minutes of debate and testimony Tuesday night, the Amherst Select Board voted unanimously in favor of banishing three pit bulls from the town.

Cherry Lane residents claim that Mecca, Sugar and Spice, belonging to Sean Eddy and Ann Bell of 615 E. Pleasant St., have reportedly broken loose from their yard on numerous occasions within the last two months. According to police, in July the dogs jumped over a four-foot fence and attempted to chase a pet rabbit. Police Chief Charles Scherpa placed a town ordinance asking her to keep the dogs leashed at all times.

On August 31, it is reported that the dogs got loose again and attempted to kill a group of chickens in an East Pleasant Street neighbor's yard.

While residents are concerned, the two owners of the "docile and well-behaved" dogs stated in a Union article that the dogs "are like our kids" and "it's instinct for them" to chase animals.

One possible solution towards containing the pit bulls was to install a nine-foot fence to replace the existing one. However, the Board was concerned that it would take a lot of time for Bell to obtain a special permit for fencing higher than six feet.

Residents raised concerns that if the dogs had a history of chasing small animals, they might attack a small child. Eddy said the Board wouldn't be raising this issue if they weren't talking about pit bulls.

According to a statement, Selectman Bryan Harvey said they would be discussing the issue regardless of the dogs' breed, considering the many complaints from town residents.

- Jason Tremble

■ stonewall

continued from page1

with as many as 60 other schools interested in opening their own resource centers.

"I got a call from Ithaca College just this morning," Yeskel smiled, "and Williams called last week. More and more our gay youth refuses to be ignored. That's a great step for a college to take."

All of this information and more will be available at the open house, which will be taking place today from 4:00 to 7:00 p.m. in their office.

Men and women different

By Hillary Bentman
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - Science has confirmed it — men and women are different, at least when it comes to handling stress. At the University of California at Los Angeles, a research team has identified a behavioral pattern that explains why women manage stress differently than men. According to the study, led by principal investigator Shelley Taylor, women favor a "tend-and-befriend" approach, while men choose to react in a "fight-or-flight" fashion.

When faced with a stressful situation, women are inclined to protect their young — the "tend" response — or to turn to others for help - the "befriend" reaction. Men, on the other hand, opt to either act aggressively or flee the situation. The report is based on hundreds of stress-response studies conducted on both human and animal subjects. The results appeared in the July issue of Psychological Review, published by the American Psychological Association. For years, it was believed that women, like men, chose fight-or-flight when dealing with stress. This fallacy was prolonged by the lack of female participation in stress-related research, according to Laura Klein, a member of the UCLA team.

"The inclusion of females has been difficult because you have to deal with menstrual cycles, so it was natural to include only males," said Klein, who is currently a professor of biobehavioral health at Pennsylvania State University. "Even in 1985, less than 17 percent of studies involved females. The National Institute of Health recognized this problem and that stress-related illnesses might be different in men and women."

The researchers believe the key to this gender difference lies in oxytocin, a hormone secreted when men and women experience stress. Women possess higher levels of the hormone, which is responsible for reducing feelings of depression and anxiety and for promoting calm, social behavior.

The calming effects of oxytocin may help explain why women, on average, live longer than men, and even why women are more willing to ask for directions when lost. The fight-or-flight response makes men more susceptible to stress-related disorders, such as aggressive tendencies, high blood pressure and alcoholism. "We already know that men and women in general display differences in aggression. Oxytocin is underlying this difference," said Regan A.R. Gurung, a research team member and professor of human development and psychology at the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay. "This is not the only hormone, but it's the one we know most about and for the longest time."

Although the study indicates that men and women handle stress differently, this is not always the case. "It's not to say that men don't tend-befriend or that women never get angry, but there are basic gender differences," Klein said. These basic differences are evident at Boston University, where female students have shown to be more likely to seek help from the university's counseling facilities.

"We tend to see more women than men, but that's typical as to who seeks counsel," said Karen Levin, associate director of BU's Counseling Center. "We do see guys, but they still have trouble expressing themselves, and are more likely to turn to alcohol to relieve their anxieties."

Although the term "tend-and-befriend" is relatively new, evidence of this stress-response can be traced back to the first humans. Early females, then faced with a stressful situation, turned to others for help, especially if their offspring were threatened.

"Women have said they've known all along that this difference between the sexes existed," Klein said. "Men and women are different and that's normal. We should look for some way to take advantage of that."

COURTESY JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

I've got my eye set on you

This is what the new UMass security camera can see of the Pyramids.

Fewer alcohol arrests makes LSU happy

By Kimberly Allen
The Reveille (Louisiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, LA. - Law enforcement officials counted 31 violations of Louisiana State University policies at Saturday night's opening football game in Tiger Stadium.

The infractions represented alcohol offenses, disorderly conduct and misuse of University documents, but were less than in previous years.

LSU Police and the East Baton Rouge Sheriff's Office issued summons for nine alcohol violations, three of which were for underage possession, said Capt. Ricky Adams, LSUPD.

Officers charged seventeen people with disorderly conduct, all of which concerned individuals throwing cups or ice during the football game, said Robert Wooten, associate dean of students.

LSUPD and EBR Sheriff's Office also issued five violations for misuse of University documents as a result of people attempting to use other students' identification cards to enter the game, Wooten said.

Adams said the number of people issued summons Saturday was low compared to last year. Officers at last year's first home football game found 43 total violations and 18 of those were alcohol related, Adams said.

"It was a better first game than what I have had to deal with in the past," Wooten said.

Wooten said this is the lowest number of violations LSU saw in recent years.

"It was down considerably," he said.

Chancellor Mark Emmert said lack of suspense in the Tigers versus Catamounts game along with the hot night air could have caused more violations, but did not.

"It's a dramatic reduction in alcoholic violations," Emmert said.

Students found in violation of University policies could face an array of charges against them in the dean of students office, Wooten said.

The dean of students office checks the ages of students found in violation of the stadium alcohol policy to determine what charges to bring against the violators. Students found guilty of the violations could be charged with a minimum of one semester probation.

LSU could charge the five students found using other students' identification cards with misuse of University documents, Wooten said.

The University can charge students with this violation because the ID cards belong to the University, not the individual.

Students are just using the cards and only pay for replacements, Wooten said. The ID violations may result in one or two semesters probation for the violators, he said.

The dean of students office creates a file on the violator when a student is placed on probation, Wooten said.

"We observe them and see that they do not get in trouble again," he said.

Wooten said it is a rare occasion for a student not to have committed the violation that the office summoned him for.

"We get all of the facts before we charge them," Wooten said.

He said a new policy not permitting outside cups into Tiger Stadium might have contributed to the decline in alcohol violations within the stadium.

"Not allowing certain containers limited the large amounts [of alcohol] from entering," Wooten said.

Emmert said the new policy of allowing no cups in Tiger Stadium left some unhappy people in the stadium, but they were not in the student section. He said some people from other sections attempting to bring sealed bottles of water and other drinks into the stadium caused some disruptions.

"We obviously had some unhappy people," Emmert said.

Emmert said LSU is reviewing the game-day stadium policies to see what is working and what is not.

"We will try to make sure the people working the gates have discretion and are well-trained," Emmert said.

In the future, gate operators may have more options in deciding what is allowed in and what is not, Emmert said.

Emmert said while the new policy caused some disruption, the overall result was positive.

This is a fill on page 2.

If you thought it was great that your Career Counselor and Field Experience Coordinator were on campus...

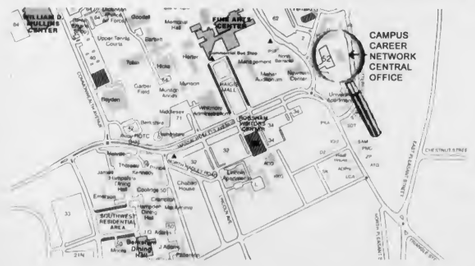
The Campus Career Network is happy to announce that Our central office and recruiting program have moved!

Now we're all more accessible than ever!

Now that the Career Network Central Office is located on Career Center Way, just across from the Newman Center, it's even easier to use our convenient On-Campus Recruiting program, Credentials, Alumni Career Counseling and Career Resource Area!

Have you registered for our resume referral and campus recruiting program yet?

Just go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu, click on "Register for Resume Referrals..." and follow the instructions!



The Campus Career Network
We're HERE for YOU!
545-2224

Campus Career Network
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Virginia State University accused of foriegn and white discrimination

By Craig Timberg
The Washington Post

ETTRICK, VA. - Most of the professors at what was once called Virginia State College for Negroes have ancestors who came to this country in a slave ship, Not Godwin Mbagwu. He came here as a young, Nigerian academic seeking opportunity, in an airliner.

The distinction was lost on Mbagwu for many years as he made Virginia State University (VSU) his professional home, first as a student, then as a top researcher and chemistry professor. But it was not lost, he says, on the leaders of this historically black campus, where he learned that to be an African in America is not necessarily to be an African-American.

The quest to keep VSU an academic haven for U.S.-born blacks, says Mbagwu, 54, led university officials to thwart his research efforts, block his promotions and hold down his annual evaluations and raises, even as he won state and national awards for excellence. Fed up, he borrowed a tool long used by African-Americans facing discrimination: Mbagwu sued and won.

A federal jury in Richmond awarded Mbagwu $231,000 in compensatory and punitive damages last year. U.S. District Judge Robert E. Payne followed up in May by awarding the lawyers for Mbagwu and a second foreign-born professor, Fathy Saleh of Egypt, $1.3 million in legal costs.

Among the evidence Payne cited was a comment that university President Eddie N. Moore Jr. allegedly made to Jean R. Cobbs, a fellow African-American and department chairwoman, shortly after Moore's arrival in 1993. Cobbs recalled Moore saying that "there were too many foreigners in (the) Life Sciences (department), and he planned to do something about that."

Moore forcefully denied that comment and the other allegations against him and the other university officials. But Payne issued an injunction against further discrimination and declared that "reprehensible national origin discrimination" existed "at the highest levels of VSU."

"The injunction secured by Mbagwu likewise will serve to notify those who run universities, public and private, that they will be branded as discriminators, a loathsome appellation, if, as did the defendants here, they discriminate against members of their faculty," Payne wrote.

Saleh won $117,000 on his claim that the university retaliated against him for publicly charging discrimination against white and foreign-born professors in 1995. Three other foreign-born professors who have sued VSU with similar discrimination claims have won lucrative settlements out of court. The university's tab for damages, legal fees and settlements from the suits by these five professors already tops $2.4 million.

University officials flatly deny the charges and vow to win the Mbagwu and Saleh case on appeal. "This case shows how diversity in the workplace can be used as a weapon against the boss," said university lawyer Bradley B. Cavedo. "That's all it shows."

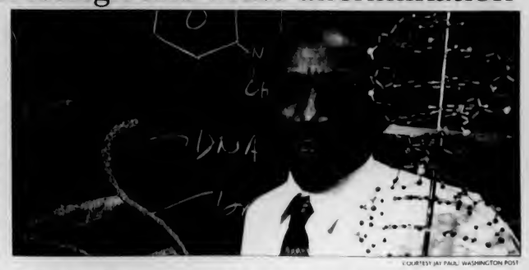
It also shows how the same laws that attacked discrimination at traditionally white colleges can be turned against officials at historically black ones. Discrimination suits by white professors have been won at Cheyney University outside Philadelphia, Albany State College in Georgia and, during the early 1980s, at Howard University in Washington. Meanwhile, the number of predominantly black colleges has fallen to about 100 as some historically black schools have become majority white.

Reginald Wilson, a senior scholar emeritus at the American Council on Education, said historically black colleges remain an enormous source of pride and academic opportunity for African-Americans, but university officials can violate civil rights laws if they try to keep their colleges black.

"Presidents of these universities, in trying to keep their students and faculty black and their universities black, are making some egregious choices," said Wilson, who has no direct knowledge of the cases at VSU. "They're making a decision that historically makes some sense, but they're making a decision that in the year 2000 may be illegal."

Virginia State was founded in 1882 across the Appomattox River from the central Virginia city of Petersburg. Since then, 20,000 students - the overwhelming majority African-American - have earned degrees there, making it vital to Virginia's black middle class. Today, nine out of 10 students at VSU are black.

The faculty is more mixed, with both foreign-born and white professors significant minorities. The university doesn't track the national origins of its faculty, but of the 172 professors last year, 43 were white and 107 black, the latter number includes Mbagwu and other black Africans.



COURTESY JAY PAUL/ WASHINGTON POST

Professor Godwin Mbagwu, a Nigerian, won $231,000 in damages from Virginia State University. He alleges that the quest to keep VSU a haven for native-born blacks led officials to discriminate against him, the university president denies such discrimination.

Students at VSU say the foreign-born professors, particularly the Africans, are an asset to the university, bringing enthusiasm and broad perspectives to their classes.

"Most of the foreigners (come from Africa," said Antonia Wongus, 19, who's studying to become an architect. "Being that I'm an African-American, that's like connecting me back to my past."

But students also say that some of the foreign-born professors are hard to understand - something that university officials pointed to in marking down Mbagwu's performance - and there is, students add, an inevitable culture clash on campus as well.

"You see it every day," said Cornell Turner, 19, of the attitudes toward foreign-born professors. " He's foreign. Why don't they go back over there?"

Similar tensions can be heard in the words of Florence S. Farley, an African-American department chairwoman, in July 1993. It was a week after Saleh and a second professor publicly alleged that university officials were discriminating against white and foreign-born professors.

"We ought to be the majority here, the descendants of the slaves in this country ought to be," Farley told the faculty council according to a transcript of the meeting. "Now it doesn't mean that anybody should dominate anybody just because they're descendants of slaves, but we shouldn't be absent. And when we start being absent here, I'm going to be concerned."

The allegations of discrimination at VSU focus on the arrival in 1993 of university President Moore, until then the state treasurer under the administration of then-Gov. L. Douglas Wilder. Tensions had long existed among the various factions at VSU, say the foreign-born professors, but with Moore's arrival, that became outright discrimination.

Want to write for News? Come down and sign up at the Collegian offices in the Campus Center Basement... (bring your soul)

Left wing Illini to campaign for Nader

By Jason Coker
Daily Egyptian (Southern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) CARBONDALE, IL. - Now that presidential candidate Ralph Nader is officially on the ballot in Illinois, the Green Party is focusing its efforts on improving his appeal to voters.

Goals of the Southern Illinois Nader Campaign include fundraising, newspaper and radio advertising, publications for Nader and outreach programs to environmental, ethnic and labor groups that identify with the Green Party.

E. G. Hughes, coordinator of the Southern Illinois Nader Campaign, said new plans must be formed if they are going to conduct a proper campaign.

"We spent so much time trying to get his name on the ballot, now we'll have to redirect our efforts," Hughes said. But by the November election, Nader could be taken off the ballot because the Democratic Party has filed an objection to the signatures collected by him.

Dan White, assistant executive director of the State Board of Elections, said when an objection is filed, the board must check each name to see if there is an error with the information provided with the signature, such as the address of the petitioner.

The previous objection period ended in June, but the Green Party asked that 16,000 more signatures be counted. The second objection period ends at 5 p.m. Wednesday.

"We had sought a remedy by moving the filing period up," White said. "Now, we just have to go through the process." White said it will take about two weeks to go through each signature. During this time, he said there will be someone from the objector's and the candidate's sides present as observers.

In addition to the Democrats, the state has filed an appeal in order to keep the current rules. State law allows for new parties to file petitions in June, but the established parties had to file by December 1999, because they had primaries in the spring. As many as 14,000 signatures have to be disqualified for Nader's name to be taken off the ballot.

"It has been clear that there's always a possibility that Nader might be bumped off the ballot," Hughes said.

White said the state deals with parties objecting to petitions every election year. He said if the Green Party had filed on time, with at least twice the required signatures, there probably would not have been any objections. Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan had more than 60,000 signatures, which is a "sufficient cushion" against lawsuits, according to White.

Blah Blah Blah Blah Blah blah blah. FREE blah. FREE blah. Blah blah blah blah blah blah.

Translation: The Major Motion Picture Show is coming. Free movie. Free stuff. Keep an eye out for us.

The Major Motion Picture Show

Drivers wanted

©2000 Volkswagen 1-800 DRIVE VW or VW.COM

MAKE $ BEFORE BREAKFAST!

As a delivery driver or distribution manager for the UMass Daily Collegian you'll have all your work done before classes.

If you are interested & available in the mornings, please contact:

Shawn Ilinitch at the UMass Daily Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center or by calling 545 -3500.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

All apologies and one sure promise

In yesterday's Daily Collegian, an issue considered by most standards to be quite successful, we ran an advertisement from a group with a website: www.codoh.com. The website, run by an odious man, Mr. Bradley Smith, attempts to explain why and how the Holocaust didn't happen.

As a newspaper, as a staff and as individuals, we in no way endorse Bradley Smith, his beliefs or his website. But our lack of endorsement does not change the fact that an advertisement for Smith's website was published within our pages.

When learning that the ad had been run, a decision that had nothing to do with the Collegian newsroom, we were stunned that such an egregious mistake had been made. Yet, at first thought, we were torn. We are a bastion of free speech, are we not? Who are we to decide what will and will not be published in our pages, especially by those with the ability to pay?

After all, we would publish extreme left-wing ideology, wouldn't we? But we aren't even that selective. We publish advertisements from strip clubs like Castaways and Anthony's.

And we will continue to do so. While the advertisements for strip clubs may be offensive to some, they are offensive only to a point. Naked women writhing around is one thing; denying that one of the worst human massacres ever actually took place is something else altogether.

Yet according to some, including the Bradley Smiths of this world, we should be obligated to print such an ad. And while we foolishly chose to give publicity to his website without investigating its background, in no way are we obligated to publicize his website, his beliefs, his writings or him as a person.

We made a mistake, an unfortunate one to be sure but one that, quite simply, cannot be rectified. The newspapers are out there, and by today, thrown out. But it is not the kind of mistake that is acceptable, and while we offer our apology for it ever being published, we offer our promise that no such thing will ever be published again.

While the Bradley's Smith's of this world would like to believe otherwise, America's free press isn't really free. Anyone can publish anything they want to, but publications are in no way required to do the same thing. In no way are we required to do the same thing.

We can selectively choose what we do and do not publish; we do so with your submissions frequently. Not every letter that arrives at our offices is published, nor is every story. And so it is with every advertisement. In no way does the freedom of the press guarantee that Bradley Smith and other's like him can use presses other than own freely.

One almost wishes that he couldn't use his own freely, but he has every right to do that. He has every right to own his website, to publish his own writings and to think his own thoughts.

But he doesn't reserve, he doesn't even have, the right to publish freely anywhere else and that includes in our publication. We offer our apology that such an advertisement was ever published and promise that such an advertisement will never be published again.

Faith and trust and beauty lost

This was the worst summer that I've had in a very long time. It's not that I didn't have fun. No, a couple of very close friends and three siblings ensured that I did have some fun this summer. And for that, I owe them an amount of gratitude that I may never be able to relate or repay. It's just that I lost myself this summer. Somewhere between the time I left Amherst in May and the time I arrived back in September, I lost love, hope and faith (in humanity, that is).

I also realized that the saddest (and logically following, the most depressing) point in a person's life is when they can no longer trust the people/person closest to them.

What's left if we can no longer take something for what it is at face value?

This is the thought process that began my crisis of faith. Thereafter, I spent most of the summer fighting the misery that this crushing realization brought. For the most part, it was a losing battle.

One of the worst days, during a beleaguered period of self-pity, I sat down to watch American Beauty. I did not choose American Beauty for any particular reason, nor did it strike me as a particularly appropriate or inappropriate choice in my emotional state. In fact, if somebody else had not rented it and left it lying on top of the TV, my pathetic and lonely day would probably have continued uninterrupted. As it were, though, I figured a two-hour break from disheartening reality would serve me well.

About an hour into the film, I realized why American Beauty was so good and why I had it enjoyed it so much. The movie struck a chord. I was particularly taken in by the scene during which Lester Burnham (Kevin Spacey's character) fondly reminisces being eighteen years old, working at a burger joint for his summer job, just trying to buy an 8-track player. He says, "It was great. I spent the whole summer just partying and trying to get laid."

Maybe it was the glitter in Spacey's eyes, or the way that the scene enriches the movie or just my personal yearning for simpler times, but it got me thinking about my summer job and about my faith crisis.

Had life always been so disappointing?

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

Have I been ignoring a painfully objective truth? And, if so, for how long?

Have I been building to this moment for some time without realizing it?

This summer, I worked at a card shop. I'm now a senior in college, and this past summer was supposed to be spent gaining valuable job experience through an internship or something of that sort. I was supposed to be out knocking on the door of The New York Times or the Boston Globe, so I could further my chances of actually getting a job as a journalist after graduation. Instead, due to either laziness or lack of luck, I worked at a baseball card shop selling sports cards and Beanie Babies all summer. More specifically, I spent my summer selling them on eBay. That's right, anyone with a computer can see what I did this summer by heading over to eBay (http://www.ebay.com) and searching by seller for 2j2c2'. I'm responsible for most of those positive feedbacks, though that doesn't make me feel any better.

It wasn't a bad job and it paid fairly well. Okay, so perhaps it wasn't the most interesting job ever. Perhaps I begrudgingly had to put into practice my half-a-year as a computer science major. And, perhaps, it was a bit frustrating at times. Have you ever tried to view thousands of Web pages and manage hundreds of images on a 33.2 modem? But nonetheless, this completely unexpected job reminded me of something completely unexpected. It reminded me of when I was young, when I used to collect baseball cards. Then it came to me. There was a time when life was not bleak, when it was not a fickle enchantress and I felt somewhat relieved by this thought.

I remember how listless summer days used to be spent walking to the card shop down the street. How, without a care in the world, weeks of saved money would be spent on a pack of worthless Topps cards. How the stale, pink bubblegum would still taste good even if it was a year old and rotting our teeth. How we'd bury those baseball cards in bullet-proof plastic cases while proclaiming how valuable they'd be in ten or 20 years. Those cards would pay for my college tuition some day.

I remember this now, because it was a time before the world polluted me with worries and insecurities. It was a time when emotion was pure and untainted, when joy could be joy. It was a time when a boy could just be a boy and have nothing else to care about except those 15 cards.

Yes, perhaps this was life in its simplest (and possibly most trivial) form, but it was certainly better than this. I paused to reflect on the comfort brought on by my memory.

Then I remembered something else. I remembered that I had just finished putting the last of my baseball card collection up for auction on eBay. I remembered that I have to wire money electronically into a bank account, pay my phone bill online and write five emails. I remembered that Lester Burnham is shot at the end of American Beauty. I remembered that I have to check my course schedule to make sure that I'll have enough credits to graduate on time next semester. I remembered that in one year, I'll be looking for a real job and this eBay thing will seem like a cake walk. Finally, I remembered that I'm just twenty years old and my faith in humanity has not yet been restored.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian staff member.

Write for Ed/Op!

We welcome letters to the editor! They can be emailed to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, delivered in person to the Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement, or mailed to Letters to the Editor, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center Basement, Amherst, MA, 01003. All letters not emailed MUST be typed or saved on a disk to be considered for publication. Voice your opinions and make yourself heard!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Adam White Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Don Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the Collegian Aggie in 1901, the Daily Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January, 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Becoming super-famous and being known as hairy

RYAN BENHARRIS

Instead, Moon Frye said, "People on the street would point and call me Punky Boobster!" Which by, the way, resulted in a huge outburst of laughter from me. How pathetic is it that a twenty year-old man can be thoroughly amused by a bawling woman saying "boobster?"

"When I look at the television I wanna see me, staring right back at me...when everybody loves me, that's just about as happy as I can be." Every year I begin my first editorial with a quote. This gem is from the Counting Crows' song "Mr. Jones."

Something that many of you who picked up yesterday's monster edition of our great Collegian may be wondering is why I spend my valuable television watching time writing for a newspaper. You may ponder this because you're a new student who wants to write for the paper. You might be a graduating senior who has seen my name here for four years and still can't, for the life of you, understand what I'm doing here. Regardless of who you are, I will bring to you a wealth of answers to this very complex question. Well, actually I've only got one answer. I need to be famous!

Buried deep inside of my 160lbs of fat from eating too many potato chips lives a person yearning to be heard by others. I love the idea of fame and adore the idea of fortune even more. Let's face it. Celebrities have it pretty good. Oh sure, there are still the Snoop Doggs and Eminems of the world who claim that they still live the hard life, but the truth is that most celebrities are leading a life that I'd give anything to be a part of. In July, Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston had a $1 Million wedding, and for some strange reason, the entire world cared. When I get married, it'll probably be to myself and no one will care.

While I was home this summer, I watched a lot of television. Okay, that's a lie. I spent more time watching television than I spent sleeping. I couldn't help it. My family purchased a satellite dish with over 200 channels. Have you ever been chillin' in your living room, watching Ernest Goes to School, when all of a sudden you realize, "Damn, I'm a real loser." Then of course Ernest throws the winning touchdown, to himself, that wins the high school football championship, and all of a sudden, I have are reason to live again. Yes, I'm that pathetic.

Anyway, before this summer, I had never seen E! before. Otherwise known as "the entertainment channel," E! packs a wallop of crap, to say the least. Filled with episodes of the Howard Stern radio show and "Talk Soup," E! gives viewers an up-close look at the lives of celebrities. Or, at least they like to think they do this.

One of the series that E! runs several times a day is called "The E True Hollywood Story." This is a show that exploits the turmoil-cursed lives of our favorite Hollywood stars. I was watching the episode on Soliel Moon Frye. For those of you who, unlike me, have a life, and don't know who she is, this person was better known as Punky Brewster. As they progressed through the good years of Punky's life, E! was quick to move into the tear wrenching scenes.

"But Soliel's life was about to take a devastating turn," the narrator proclaimed in agony. The same music that you hear on "Inside the NFL" every week when they're talking about how the Patriots lost their third straight, drowned the voices out in the background as the camera cut to Punky's weeping face. I was just waiting to hear that deep football loving voice say, "There's always next year for the heart filled Brewster. She still has a lot of improvement on her mobility and passing patters, but when she's in top form, the entire league better be on guard!"

Instead, Moon Frye said, "People on the street would point and call me Punky Boobster!" Which by, the way, resulted in a huge outburst of laughter from me. How pathetic is it that a twenty year-old man can be thoroughly amused by a bawling woman saying "boobster?" She was talking about her horrible battle with large breasts that actually required a reduction – a battle that still keeps her up late at night in fear that someday the evil breasts will return to claim the throne of Titania that is rightfully theirs. Of course, the show ended with psycho stalkers talking about how Punky saved their lives. I agree, though. Is there anyone out there who doesn't attribute all of his or her happiness to the superior being that is Punky Brewster?

I began to think, if this is what being a celebrity is all about, I can handle it. I can go on camera and cry while saying, "When I was twelve years old at summer camp, they called me Ryan 'Big Hairy Ass.'" And the world cries with me!

Being a celebrity would be great, but again, the question is, why did I pick the newspaper as my stepping-stone? Well there are several reasons for that. Most of them have to do with process of elimination.

I could never be a rock star. I don't hate enough people to be a rock star. Is it just me, or is every artist becoming just plain mean? Does anyone make a song anymore that doesn't have a line about telling the whole world to go to hell? We all know about Eminem's "The Real Slim Shady," and Limp Bizkit's "Break Stuff," but how about Uncle Kracker's "Yeah, Yeah, Yeah," where he says, "You can tell the whole world they can kiss my ass." I've never heard anything from this guy before, and that's my first impression. Apparently this is how people initiate themselves into the rock scene now. Whoever can tell the world to "go screw" first wins.

I could never start my own boy band because I'm simply way too ugly. Just look at my picture, and imagine me standing next to N'Sync, screaming "Bye Bye Bye," as a ten-year old girl yells from the crowd, "That's right, bye, bye, bye. Get off the stage you loser!"

I figure that the next best way for me to become famous is to win $1 million. Easy enough I suppose because everyone's doing it today. Wrong again! I could never survive on an island unless my skill of calling out for pizza all of a sudden comes in handy. They'd ask me, "Ryan, can you catch a fish?"

"No," I'd reply. "I do know the first and last name of every character Jim Carrey has ever played on 'In Living Color,' though. What's that you say? Oh, I've been unanimously kicked off the island? That's okay, I'm missing 'Who Wants to Be a Millionaire' anyway."

If I tried to use my vast intelligence to win the money, you'd get to hear a familiar voice say, "Idiot, it's a $200 question, and you want to use your last lifeline!"

No music, no contests, but what if they gave me my own TV show? I've got this great idea for an opening sequence of me peeing off the Empire State Building. I'll smile and the title of the show, "I Love New York," will flash above my head. That probably wouldn't work though. It'd just get canceled and I'd end up on the home shopping channel selling the Intergalactic Star-Fighter 2000 sword to children.

Radio would be fun. I'd be called DJ Ghetto Booty and play old school hip-hop all day long. Of course, there's no fame in radio unless you're willing to do something that truly extinguishes your self-esteem. I think I'll pass and keep the shot glass full of it that I have left.

Jobs that would make me a millionaire are narrowed down to some pretty slim choices. With all of these already eliminated, it only leaves two possibilities: newspaper and porno! However, I hate cheesy music from the 70's and have no desire to ever be called "Big Hairy Ass" again.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

© 2000 Nintendo ™. ® and the "N" logo are trademarks of Nintendo of America Inc.
© 2000 Nintendo of America Inc. Game, System and N64 Expansion Pak sold separately.
N64 Expansion Pak™ required.
E
Animated Violence
THE END IS COMING OCTOBER 26.
TO PREPARE, RESERVE YOUR COLLECTOR'S EDITION GOLD CARTRIDGE WITH 3D LABEL. WHILE SUPPLIES LAST.
TO SURVIVE, GO TO WWW.RADIOZELDA.COM
THE LEGEND OF ZELDA
MAJORA'S MASK

Summer's most popular videos prepare for "VMA"

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

In a summer dominated by Eminem and Now 4, the true was to display musical success remained on the television

As always, MTV ignored the desperate cries of fans for more videos and quality music, and filled the days with karaoke, N'Sync, The Real World/Road Rules Challenge, promotions for the Video Music Awards, Backstage with N'Sync, contests involving twelve year old girls winning dates with twenty year old men, N'Sync, dating twelve year old girls, Carson Daly's daily sell out (otherwise known as "TRL"), and of course, the world premiere film "Hey Yeah, N'Sync Saved Christmas."

Since MTV had to keep up the reputation of being absolutely awful, you would have to turn to Much Music to see real video. Many of this summer's videos displayed the sort of creativity that has propelled the visual music industry for the past two decades. And many of them were severely lacking in much music than just creativity.

The Best:

Red Hot Chili Peppers' "Californication" – Perhaps the best video to compare this one to is "Tonight Tonight" by the Smashing Pumpkins. "Tonight Tonight" deservingly won the award for Video of the Year on MTV in 1996. The concept was that the video was to act as the band album cover from Melon Collie and the Infinite Sadness come to life. Though such undeployed "Tonight Tonight" is certainly one of the best videos ever produced. "Californication" seems like the Red Hot Chili Peppers' attempt at bringing their biggest commercial success to life. The video progressed as a video game that stars the four members of the band. Through extremely detailed (and no doubt expensive) characteristics, the video makes the game world appear life like. The CGI is intermeshed with shots of the actual Chili Peppers to make it even more visually striking. "Californication" was also one of the most over-played, and thus ruined songs of the summer. If nothing else, the wonderfully created video made the song a little bit more enjoyable after it had already been killed by the radio.

Papa Roach "Last Resort" – MTV destroyed this video through censorship. For some reason they decided to edit out almost everything that made this song popular. Just in case you've never seen the video and have heard the song, this is what it sounds like on MTV: "Cut my life into pieces. This is my last resort. (Bleep) no (Bleep). Don't give a (Bleep) if I really long (bleep). That's ridiculous and unnecessary. If MTV did not want to air a song that tackled suicide, then they shouldn't have played it at all. Instead they showed it all the time in a completely butchered form. Although they forgot to edit one major part of the song. Hey MTV, you don't want to air anything about suicide? Well you forgot to edit the damn title! What do you think "last resort" means? Nonetheless, the video was very exciting. It captured the high energy of the song that made it a huge radio hit. Unlike ten-minute video epics, "Last Resort" was short and to the point. It had some strong images of teenage depression that represented the song. The featured crowed appeared authentic, which is something that is very lacking from many of today's videos.

N'Sync "It's Gonna be Me" – Say what you will, it's an interesting video. Though the "adult" world may be sick of the boy bands, the MTV adoring public can't get enough of them. "It's Gonna be Me" was the number one video all summer on "Total Request Live," and even though that doesn't make it a good video, it kept it alive and promising. The video turns N'Sync into plastic play dolls, and like in the atrocious film Small Soldiers, they break out of their box looking for trouble. The video is filled with images of real life N'Sync stars dancing, and the plastic N'Sync mingling with other plastic people. Much like their other hugely successful single, "Bye Bye Bye," this song became a summer soundtrack staple and annoyed music fans everywhere. The videos for both of these songs proved to be much less annoying than the group themselves.

Disturbed "Stupify" – I'm not a metal expert, but I like this song, and I love this video. The lead singer of the band appears out in front like he's leading some sort of a dark and sick aerobic class. The disgusting pictures flaring behind the crazy lights make the video extremely, well, disturbing.

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS RECORDS

The Red Hot Chili Peppers are up for the "Best Video of the Year" award at tonight's Video Music Awards on MTV.

The Worst:

Eminem "The Way I am" – Eminem, you are whatever we say you are... and you are annoying. Please shut up. Please shut up. This video does not pass any sort of enjoyment tests at all. Personally, I get really sick of people yelling at me, and that's all Mr. Shady does with this song. If you've got something to say, say it in a more inventive way than talking down at your fans and setting yourself on a throne higher than the rest of the world. In this video, Eminem falls down buildings like Superman in a very dull flight scene. He also grabs his head with a mean look in his eye like he's about to snap. That's far from brilliant. Perhaps the simplest thing that Eminem did wrong in this video was breaking the "no bathroom rule." Hey Slim! No one wants to see that side of your life. Eminem's fame is dropping, though. During an introduction of the video on MTV, some random person said of him, "Just get on a deserted island somewhere like they do on that show 'Survivor' and leave the fans alone." The crowd went wild.

Britney Spears "Lucky" – Spears actually uses this video as a platform to make the world feel bad for her. As she's singing, "She cries, cries, cries in her lonely heart," she is surrounded by hundreds of beautiful people wearing extravagant clothes. The video cost more money than I will ever see in my pathetic life, and that just angers me. So I guess it didn't work. I don't feel bad.

Creed "With Arms Wide Open" – Creed, I say this with all of the adoring love that a fan can have for one of their favorite bands. What the hell are you thinking? Creed has never made a video that was even remotely enjoyable. The debut video for "My Own Prison" was dull. The video for "Higher" was weird, and the video for "What If" had lead singer Scott Stapp running around in the Scream killer costume. Not exactly award winners. "With Arms Wide Open" is the band's worst attempt to date. The video comes fully equipped with expensive computer generated nature shots, and Stapp acting like he is God. For a band that's so incredibly religious, you would think that they would be totally against acting superhuman. Instead the rest of the band kneels beneath the God that is Scott Stapp as he literally walks on water. The song which is terrific but tremendously overplayed was originally written as a ballad for his son. If they had stuck to that concept the video would have been much better. Instead, they decide to have Stapp doing Kung-fu, and ripping off The Matrix. Listen to the album, but change the channel when the video comes on.

AUDITIONS:
for the best theater troupe... EVER!
SAFER SEX ...LIVE
NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
Wednesday nights at UMass, Amherst
Sponsored by Health Education Division at University Health Services
577-5181
Wednesday September 13, 2000
Campus Center 174-17
Time 7 p.m.
For Info: Call Phil @ 577-5181

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST
WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE
WEDNESDAY - Latin Night with DJ Creme
No cover — Spinning salsa, merengue, & Latin rhythms
THURSDAY - The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENTS
No cover Before 10:30 — Featuring DJ Ecoz spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
FRIDAY & SATURDAY - The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house
Spun by SYE production DJ's: Ecoz, Creme, Uneek, & Taj
Featuring weekly drink specials, outdoor patio, & upscale microbrews
This week's special is Mike's Hard Lemonade
LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 250-1000

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS
NOW HIRING
$8.75/HR TO START
No experience necessary.
Paid training program.
Flexible hours to fit your schedule.
Travel pay calculated from campus.
Must be 18 years of age or older and
Have dependable transportation and a phone.
RGIS is an equal opportunity employer.
Call to set up an interview.
(413) 731-6910
Tuesday-Friday
10am-3pm
NO MONDAY CALLS!

MERCYhouse
It's a church
Opening Morning
Sunday, September 10th at 11am
Jones Library Conference Room
43 Amity St, Downtown Amherst
Free Parking
Conference Room
Meeting Room
Amity St.
Main St
Map of downtown
www.knowmercy.org
374-7532

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

Though the special effects were tremendously crafted in Hollow Man, The film lacked all abilities to be scary.

Hollow Man just opaque

By Adam Martigneth
Collegian Staff

Hollow Man
Directed by Paul Verhoeven with Kevin Bacon, Elizabeth Shue
Josh Brolin

Millions of dollars of government funding, a team of highly trained scientists, futuristic technology not hitherto seen by mankind, iron-clad security, and all that they came up with breasts. Indeed, Hollow Man is perhaps the greatest tribute ever to voyeurism and date rape.

Kevin Bacon (whose roguish hair cut may have been the best part of the film) plays Sebastian Caine, a brilliant scientist assigned the impossible task of making a creature invisible and then bringing it back. The compulsive workaholic with a serious god-complex does not take long to solve the problem. However, he hesitates in reporting his findings for fear that the Pentagon will strip him of the project's control. Instead, he decides to hasten into human testing with himself as the primary subject, despite the reservations of his research team.

Caine gets used to being invisible as it affords him certain "opportunities" (he can feel up the sleeping female scientists) and soon he gets to stay that way, because his reversion process fails the human test.

Here, Hollow Man transforms from an ordinary sci-fi tale (which the original Invisible Man was) into a juvenile and quite sloppy freak show. Rather than robbing banks or stealing valuable government information, Caine is obsessed with copping a feel. He moves from the girl in the apartment across the street to ex-girlfriend and fellow scientist Linda (Elisabeth Shue).

In an effort to save the world from these atrocities and to save their own asses, Linda and new hubby-scientist Matthew (Josh Brolin) set out to stop Caine. Hollow Man goes from bad to simply ludicrous.

Somehow, being invisible has serious psychological repercussions on Sebastian as he violently tries to dispense of his friends. He also becomes superhuman. You can't burn him, you can't kill him and worst of all, you can no longer see Kevin Bacon's roguish haircut. The movie devolves into the worse parts of the last two Scream movies and for that matter, Scary Movie.

I expected Hollow Man to be scary, or at least to have some decent special effects, but instead it was just lame. Half of the movie is spent watching Kevin Bacon try to control his raging sex drive; the other half is spent watching how violent he gets when he doesn't get any. As for the special effects other than the two transformation scenes, the most distinct visual effects are in the opening credits. All in all, the movie's nothing more than hollow.

D

RELIEF resources
We've got you covered
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

Pearl Jam silences critics levels

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

When Pearl Jam dropped Binaural on its fans earlier this year, many of the ever faithful began writing the band's obituary. They decried the album's progressive pace and often obscure lyrics, all the while pining for the bygone days of the group when frontman Eddie Vedder poured his heart, his soul and his seemingly tortured past into every verse.

But even as its legions threatened to wane Pearl Jam continued to thrill. Staging a staggeringly successful tour across Europe with plans of marketing live material from that tour on its website, ten.lub.net. As the anticipation mounted with every Euro setlist posted on the site, the band set the stage for a whirlwind domestic tour aimed at silencing the naysayers and returning Pearl Jam to its place at the forefront of American rock.

With two shows at Mansfield's Tweeter Center on August 29 and 30, the Seattle quintet did more than enough to recement itself atop the rock genre. Despite having to contend with the awful acoustics of "the shed" at the venue formerly known as Great Woods, Pearl Jam put together two awe-inspiring evenings of music.

The opening night's setlist consisted of selections from throughout the band's decade-long career, highlighted by six songs from Binural and a number of gems not found on any of the group's half-dozen studio albums. Much of the newer material takes on greater significance when witnessed in its proper element – live. Being propelled through monstrous speakers by the polished showmen who crafted it. The raw guitar riff and machismo-laced lyrics of "Rival" proved perfectly suited for a raucous live performance, and even the album's ill-received first single, "Nothing as it Seems," took on a haunting, bluesy quality behind Vedder's moans and lead guitarist Mike McCready's wonderful minimal soloing. While the uneven backbeat of "Sleight of Hand" made it difficult for the crowd to get behind, the fiery churning "Grievance" went a long way toward swaying opponents of the latest disc.

The one track from Binural that seems most destined to become a Pearl Jam concert staple is "Insignificance," which the group tore through with a wonderful, barely-controlled desperation on both nights.

Vedder took a few moments out of the first evening's set to talk politics with the sellout crowd, telling of his visit to Northampton the night before and of a discussion he had there concerning the Green party and Ralph Nader – bid for the presidency. Kim Gordon and Thurston Moore of opening act Sonic Youth reside in Amherst. He then gave the rest of the group a break while he banged out a catchy Woody Guthrie esque acoustic number, "Patriot," which thankfully centered on American ideals and not the Mel Gibson picture.

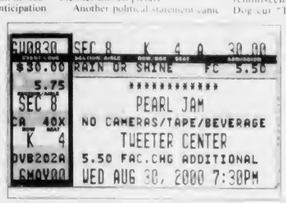
Another political statement came from rhythm guitarist Stone Gossard, in the form of an especially powerful performance of Mankind from 1996's No Code. Originally subdued through much of the show, Gossard angrily fanned his hair Paul through the punkish riff of the song while questioning "... what's yet the whole world takin'."

The hands-down high point of the show came with a down-tempo tune clad in Indian flair that inspired a rare rendition of the Victoria Williams song "Crazy Mary." The true fans in attendance recognized the opening guitar notes of the disturbing classic and exploded in some of the night's biggest applause and the lyrics were echoed perfectly by the swaying masses as they belted their lines.

The cow guy, who identified himself only as "Sweet Tea," later led a congregation of fans through the parking lot while preaching the merits of Pearl Jam and alcohol.

The second night's set opened with the stills rolling "Release," one of the tortured-soul numbers from the group's debut landmark, Ten. The audiences on both nights embraced the band's earnest material the most warmly and the second show's offerings didn't disappoint with the classics "Black," "Daughter," "Evenflow," and "Animal" all being belted out. The equally loved "Elderly Woman..." turned quickly into a rollicking sing-along, to the obvious delight of the band.

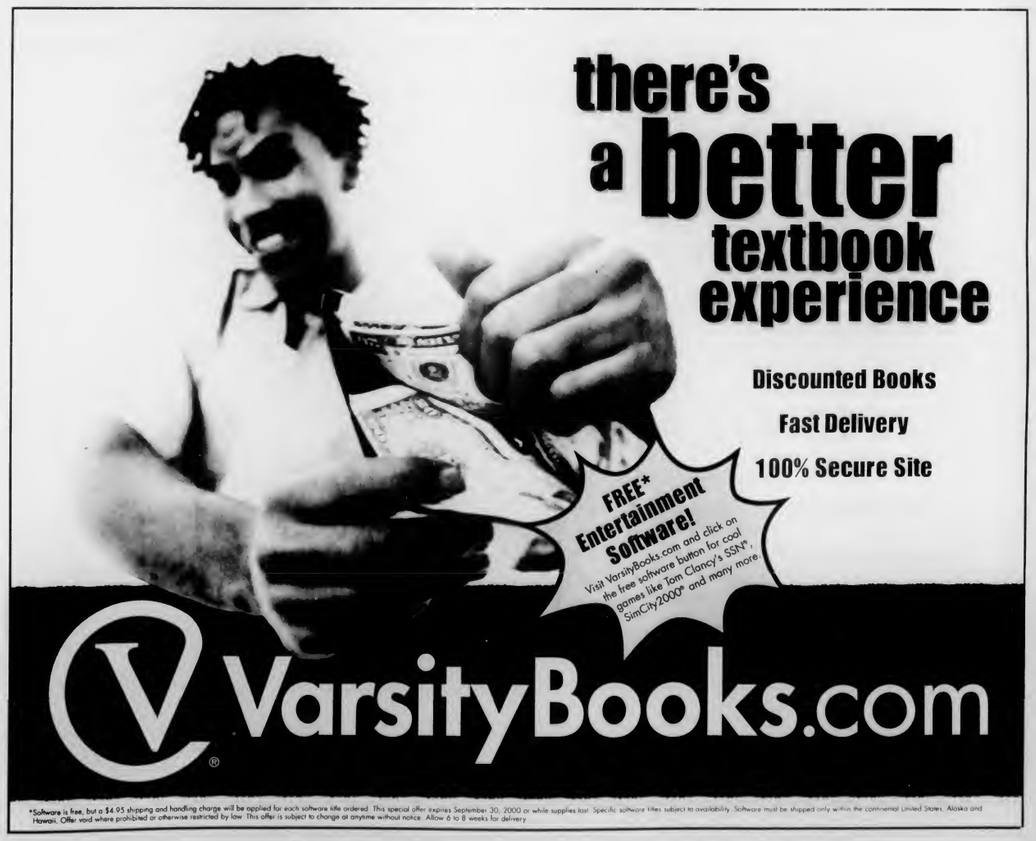
Pearl Jam purists were rewarded early on in the set with a moving performance of "Footsteps" a track found on the "Jeremy" single that, along with "Once" and "Alive" forms Vedder's original 7-girl-screwed-over-by-my dad montage. The beautiful, evocative song was particularly memorable at the Tweeter Center due to drummer Matt Cameron's somber shuffle and Vedder's soulful harmonica riffing, reminiscent of the Temple of the Dog cut "Times of Trouble" (the two songs feature the same music with different lyrics and vocal structure).



Vedder's prowess on guitar proved a pleasant surprise through much of the set, in particular when he picked his way flawlessly through the first verse of crowd favorite "Betterman" with no accompaniment from his bandmates. He also showed nifty dexterity and a definite sense of humor when the audience's all-beat clapping screwed up his solo ukulele rendition of Binaural's "Soon Forget."

But what Pearl Jam did best down the stretch of the second show was whip the crowd into a frenzy, with loud, uptempo fare. Despite the hordes of couples among the crowd pleading for sway favorites "Yellow Ledbetter" and "Wishlist" (both of which were played the night before), the band instead pummeled its way through rockers "Hail, Hail," "Brain of J," "Rukin" and "Do the Evolution" before closing out the night with the all-out sonic assault of Neil Young's "Rockin' in the Free World." The band never sounded so cohesive as when it hit maximum decibel levels on the classic political statement, a song that Pearl Jam has essentially made its own and turned into a rallying cry for the fading era of guitar driven, primal rock music.

While many of the band's fans probably walked into the Tweeter Center with some nagging questions about the future of the band, Pearl Jam laid any fears to rest with two remarkable nights of music. With such an arsenal of material and such an ability to energize a crowd, it looks like Seattle's favorite sons aren't ready to hang it up quite yet.



there's a better textbook experience
Discounted Books
Fast Delivery
100% Secure Site
FREE* Entertainment Software!
Visit VarsityBooks.com and click on the free software button for cool games like Tom Clancy's SSN®, SimCity2000® and many more.
VarsityBooks.com
*Software is free, but a $4.95 shipping and handling charge will be applied for each software title ordered. This special offer expires September 30, 2000 or while supplies last. Specific software titles subject to availability. Software must be shipped only within the continental United States, Alaska and Hawaii. Offer void where prohibited or otherwise restricted by law. This offer is subject to change at anytime without notice. Allow 6 to 8 weeks for delivery.

World renown traveling summer festivals attack New England
A round-up of Metallica, Green Day and hundreds of other bands

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

VANS WARPED TOUR '00
Suffolk Downs
July 20

SUMMER SANITARIUM TOUR
Foxboro Stadium
June 30

TATTOO THE EARTH '00
Suffolk Downs
July 22

Music fans found it hard to avoid a package tour of some sorts this summer, and the open-minded (and high-endurance) heavy music fan could allow Warped, Tattoo, and Ozzfest to pummel them all in the span of ten days. The Warped Tour was once again the most progressive-minded tour, mixing the usual punk acts with under-the-radar rap acts (Jurassic 5, the departed Dilated Peoples) and hardcore (Snapcase, Vision of Disorder). The inaugural Tattoo the Earth tour managed to be heavier, but not as fun, as its Ozzfest competition, while the massive Summer Sanitarium tour, helmed by Metallica, didn't quite add up to the sum of its parts.

The Warped Tour was as Suffolk Downs for the first time this year, if by at Suffolk Downs you mean way behind the track on some wide open field. The 75 minute wait in line/tour of the grounds ensured that I missed Vision of Disorder among other acts, some of which played nearly an hour before the starting time indicated on the ticket. Once inside, there was precious little shade from the sun, so if you didn't have sunscreen and wanted to catch more than a few bands, chances are you were leaving with a mark. Your wallet was definitely not leaving unscathed either, as ridiculous food prices were abound, although the selection was commendable compared with the offerings at Tweeter or Foxboro.

One of the best aspects of Warped were the large amount of booths set up dedicated to individual bands or businesses, nearly all of which had free stuff, band signings, and very affordable merchandise (Snapcase shirt: $12, base price of any shirt at Tattoo or Sanitarium: $30). It wasn't uncommon to see band members frequenting these booths either; just roaming I ran into Coby Dick from Papa Roach, Yap from One Minute Silence, and Cut Chemist from 15. The five stages spread out across the field guaranteed that you were never at a loss for live music, but also that you couldn't possibly catch every act for any meaningful amount of time.

Papa Roach filled their last set of the tour with the best from their massively successful Infest, like "Dead Cell" and "Last Resort," and singer Coby Dick told the crowd that the tour had been one of the most positive experiences of his life. NOFX had a typically hilarious set full of jokes and light-hearted punk. Jurassic 5 played a very energetic set to a responsive crowd, even thanking those on the adjacent stage for their patience in waiting for the upcoming act. Their set was highlighted by cuts from their first full-length Quality Control, like the title track and "The Influence," and the highlight of their set was an awe-inspiring battle between the two DJs, Nu-Mark and Cut Chemist. The Suicide Machines played a solid set, garnering the best response from old favorites like "New Girl" and the closer "Break the Glass."

Swedish act Millencolin had some humorously unintelligible between-song banter, and MxPx stormed through their tight, punk rock set. Snapcase was certainly the most mosh-friendly of the days performers, and they tore it up in grand fashion. "Energy Dome" set the tone, and the crushing "Harrison Bergeron" had the security in front of the stage nearly unable to control the chaos. Save Ferris had a refreshingly different, ska-punk-friendly mood, and the Irish group Flogging Molly had some great sing-a-longs to which many would have raised a pint to if there had been any alcohol served. The big draws were expectedly Green Day and hometown heroes and show-closers The Mighty Mighty Bosstones. Green Day played essentially a greatest hits set, livened by a fan becoming a guest guitarist for one song, and the drum kit being lit on fire. The Mighty ones played a lively set of mostly new material, which began with one member being shot out of a cannon, and ended with the venue pulling the plug on them after closing with "The Impression That I Get" and an explosive less-than-a-minute punk cover whose title my Bosstones-crazed friend would kill me for not knowing right now.

The Summer Sanitarium Tour seemed, when it was announced, too good to be true, like one of those festivals you hear about in Europe where a million cool bands play the same show. But while remarkably organized for the first date on the tour, somehow things just didn't come together to produce a memorable show. System of a Down opened things up to a reasonably large crowd at 4pm, and their set was solid, even including some good-sounding new material. But try as they might, this is a band that really thrives in a much more intimate setting, and only "Sugar," which has recently clogged the airwaves, got any kind of vibe going. Powerman 5000 were given a suitable local welcome, and their not-too-challenging set (I meets Rob Zombie riffs/sound translated well into a large venue and to the hordes of WAAF fans in attendance. A partial cover of Radiohead's "Creep" was an unexpected treat, however.

Kid Rock was the highlight of the show (that says a lot). Nothing was spared in his pursuit of trash-rock saintihood: large inflatable middle fingers, hot caged dancers, Joes "Don't call me midget" C. in the house, jumbo American flag, Sweetest all chick "Dark and Grey" was an uninspiring opener; not until "Bawitdaba" did all hell break loose. Rock ended the set with one of the rocking anthems of summer 2000 "American Bad Ass." But with no interaction between him and Metallica on stage, during either set, it seemed like a missed opportunity. Korn, whom at one point would have had the ammo to blow anyone on this tour (save pre-Load Metallica) off the stage, severely missed their opportunity. The entire band seemed entirely uninterested for the most part, even during a surprising instrumental cover of Slayer's "South of Heaven." The excellent new track "Trash" and inextinguishable closer "Blind" couldn't save their lackluster performance.

Punk Legends Green Day headlined the Vans Warped Tour this summer. The band has a new album due out next month. They're currently checking out our headline for this story

When Metallica finally took the stage after a long wait, their set opened with a bang. "Creeping Death," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Fade To Black," it seemed like a classic show was on its way. That wasn't to be, however as new material made its way into the set and dragged it down into the depths of crap that it couldn't be pulled out of even by the brilliant first set closer "Battery." "The Memory Remains," "No Leaf Clover," "Until It Sleeps," all were present to ruin a perfectly good set, aided by some ridiculous gigantic banners that hung behind the band, which were portraits of all four members appearing more pompous than they ever have in real life (which is no easy task).

The first Tattoo the Earth festival offered a more extreme and less mainstream antidote to the increasingly less impressive Ozzfest line-ups. Like the Warped Tour it took place at Suffolk Downs, but offered a much more manageable two-stage system that insured that you didn't have to miss anyone while offering a more intimate feel for the second stage performances. Highlights:

Although it was far too early for Cold's depression filled alt-metal, they do it much better than Staind, and their upcoming sophomore release was previewed extensively during their set, the only non-new song being "Go Away." Breast-pointing booth.

While the sound of all the main stage bands seemed horribly muffled before Slipknot, Hed (P.E.) managed to break through with their funky rap metal, bumping through oldies like "Serpent Boy," and soon-to-be favorite "Killing Time."

Amen was undoubtedly the highlight of the show for myself, and their set was easily the most explosive and energetic of the day. Opening with the heated aggression of "The Last Time," singer Casey Chaos proceeded to nearly dismantle the drum kit several times and prowl the stage like a man possessed. Prime selections from their debut like "Down Human," "Coma America," and "I Don't Sleep," were blasted through with insane precision, so don't be at all surprised if you hear a lot more about this band when they release their second album in October.

Sevendust had a pretty straightforward set, but dedicating a song to the late Snot lead singer Lynn Strait was a heartfelt tribute that many fans in the audience appreciated.

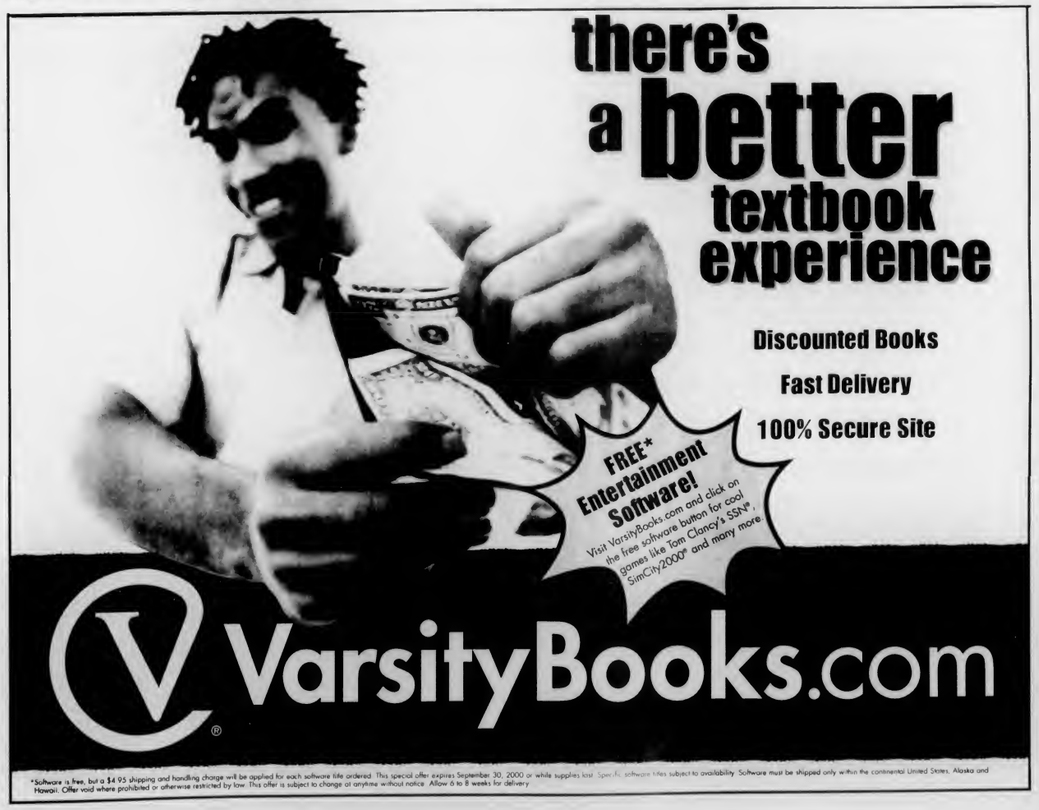
The Workhorse Movement graciously gave up one third of their half-hour set for their friend, rapper Ysham, whose fun-filled hardcore rap session was just fine, but way too much for the hardcore metalheads on hand to handle, so when the Movement actually made its way on stage there was but a fraction of the original audience. Another big portion of that audience was taken away when Sepultura started early on the main stage, but everyone missed out on a great set. The bouncy "Keep the Sabbath Dream Alive" and "Reefch" are incredibly crowd friendly songs, aided by the fact that vocalists Cornbread and M.C. Myron like to dive into the crowd as much as possible.

Slayer and Sepultura, the two oldest bands on the tour, gave basic, no-frills performances playing just about what you would expect if you had ever seen them before. Sepultura introduced a new song that fell victim to poor acoustics, while old tracks like "Propaganda" and "Chaos A.D." just aren't the same without Max Cavalera. Slayer was Slayer, playing the classics and closing with, you guessed it, "Angel of Death." A brilliant set, as usual, but only for those that haven't witnessed the spectacle before.

Nashville Pussy brought some great classic rock flavor to the nu-metal proceedings and the title track from their most recent release High as Hell seemed very appropriate for their set.

Slipknot was definitely the most anticipated act of the day, and they didn't disappoint. Once again, though, this is the kind of band that thrives in small settings, and watching them surrounded by a bunch of people standing 50 yards away doesn't do much for the experience. There were no surprises, no field-long mosh pit, no legendary Slipknot live staples like broken bones, puke, or feces, but playing nearly every track off their debut was handled very well in a smartly paced set list. Massachusetts was also deservingly yelled at for being the only stop on the Tattoo the Earth tour where there was no tattooing, by law. "Purity," "Eyeless," and "Me" were my personal favorites in the Slipknot set.

All in all, an excellent summer for concerts during an excellent year for music. Hopefully, more crossing over of musical genres will lead to increasingly diverse and interesting live line-ups.



there's a better textbook experience
Discounted Books
Fast Delivery
100% Secure Site
FREE* Entertainment Software!
Visit VarsityBooks.com and click on the free software button for cool games like Tom Clancy's SSN®, SimCity2000® and many more
VarsityBooks.com
*Software is free, but a $4.95 shipping and handling charge will be applied for each software title ordered. This special offer expires September 30, 2000 or while supplies last. Specific software titles subject to availability. Software must be shipped only within the continental United States, Alaska and Hawaii. Offer void where prohibited or otherwise restricted by law. This offer is subject to change at anytime without notice. Allow 6 to 8 weeks for delivery.

Freddie Prinze should lose his crown

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Boys and Girls
Directed by Robert Iscove with Freddie Prinze Jr., Claire Forlani

Boys and Girls is one of the few teen romances founded in enough sincerity treated with enough delicacy and expanded with enough eloquence — actually to work. Unfortunately, the movie comes frustratingly close to uncovering fundamental truths about the male/female dynamic without ever succeeding fully.

Perhaps more aptly called Boy and Girl, Boys and Girls follows the serendipitous haphazard meetings between Ryan (Freddie Prinze Jr.) and Jennifer (Claire Forlani) from their airplane encounter as small children through college. The adherence to arbitrary makes the film feel disjointed at times. However, Boys and Girls aims for a wider scope and succeeds somewhat by letting the audience see the individual protagonists outside of their romantic involvement.

Jennifer is quirky, spontaneous and outgoing. She's a dreamer who can't see beyond the next five minutes. Ryan is quite the opposite — nerdy, introverted and meticulous. They spend most of the movie fighting their obvious rightness for one another until one night when an unintentional sexual encounter sends both characters sprailing.

Boys and Girls does a good job capturing the nuiances of unrequited love. The movie even makes it convincing to see Freddie Prinze out of his usual macho character in the role of cautious thinker. However, Boys and Girls never logically progresses to a satisfying conclusion. Instead, the movie rushes to throw the leads into a sloppy and disgustingly happy relationship. And in the process of doing so, it drags them through the basest of college rituals.

Jason Biggs is completely wasted here as Ryan's roommate Hunter (really Stevet, a bumbling Casanova who can't get a girl because he's basically an idiot. Jennifer's roommate Amy (Amanda Detmer) is equally useless. She is neither pretty nor funny, rendering her just plain annoying. Perhaps appropriately, the pair find comfort in each other, but it does not excuse either's overall detraction from the film.

As I said, the movie was very close to something. The acting was right on. Forlani was magical playing younger and Prinze was pleasantly surprising playing mellower. Boys and Girls just grows stale. What originally seems insightful and profound grinds down to typical and frustrating. The movie simply does not do enough to separate itself from the slew of poorly constructed teen movies, though it's not for a lack of trying. C-

COURTESY SAMARAX FILMS

Boys and Girls proved to be just another horrendous attempt at explaining teenage life at the brink of a new millennium

WELCOME BACK TO THE LOWEST PRICES IN TOWN!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS — $41.99
1/2 KEGS — $39.99
1/2 KEGS — $34.99
1/2 KEGS — $82.99

LITE & LITE ICE $16.99
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT 12 PACK $12.99
KEYSTONE LIGHT $11.99
NATTY 12 PACK $10.49
MOLSON CASE $15.99
PABST BLUE RIBBON CASE $8.99
SUBLIME HARD LEMONADE 6 PACK $4.99

WINES OF THE MONTH
HARDY'S NOTTAGE HILL CHARDONNAY $5.99
CABERNET/SHIRAZ SHIRAZ, & MERLOT $6.99
LIVINGSTON CELLARS $6.99
MARCUS JAMES $5.99
FOXHORN WINES $6.99
GALLO TWIN VALLEY WHITE ZINFANDEL $4.99
Kryptik 4 PACK "DRINKS TO GO" $4.49

SMIRNOFF VODKA $17.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM $18.99
BACARDI LIMON RUM $12.99
BOMBAY SAPPHIRE GIN $15.99
CLUNY SCOTCH $12.99
FLEISCHMAN'S PREFERRED WHISKEY $11.99
POLAND SPRINGS VODKA $8.99

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 9 7:00 THRU WEDS. 9 13:00

confidence, pride,
[grit]
and plenty of time
to shower before calculus.

In Army ROTC, you'll get to do some pretty challenging stuff. Stuff that builds character and discipline. Not to mention muscles. You'll also learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. Talk to your Army ROTC advisor to find out more. And get ready to sweat a little.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

(413)545-2321

Duritz's Crows lose edge

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Counting Crows with Live
Tweeter Center for the Performing Arts
Wednesday August 16, 2000

One of the most anticipated collaborations of the year rolled into the Tweeter Center for the Performing Arts this summer. Counting Crows teamed with their good friends and rock big shots, Live, to bring one of the most exciting tours of the season to Massachusetts.

Fresh off of the fall release of their respective new albums, both bands appeared to be willing to entice a crowd of desperate fans, who in turn were willing to accept anything dished out.

Though the concert was very well organized, acceptably promoted, and highly anticipated, to say that it was a bit disappointing would be the best way to describe it. Neither band paid particular concern to song selection, leaving fans at a loss for some of their favorite songs. The bands would love to blame this on the arena curfew, and lack of time. However, in the short amount of time filled by each band, there was a substantial amount of questionable choices picked to fill space.

Live opened strong. The last paced band from California has had nothing but achievement since the release of their first album, Mentol Jewelry in 1991. Since then, they have released three more albums; Secret Samadi in 1997, The Distance to Here in 1999, and 1992's Throwing Copper, which truly initiated Live's career and has been called one of the best alternative rock albums from the past decade.

Though there were some die-hard Live fans in attendance, they tend to be a band that gains its following through radio hits. Therefore, people were not prepared to be dazzled by experimental tactics and new music. When they played hits such as "All Over You." "I Alone" and "Lightning Crashes," the crowd responded with overwhelming delight. When they played tracks that were virtually unheard of, the crowd responded with overpowering boredom.

The highlight of the evening was during Live's performance of "The Dolphins Cry," when Adam Duritz, lead singer of Counting Crows leapt from behind the stage into the spotlight to join in on lead vocals.

Live has also been rumored to be recording an album while on the road. New digital technology has allowed them to produce songs in studios across the country, and send them back home from their bus. They performed one selection from these recordings.

There were quite a few instances when they lost the crowd. They dug deep into the new album playing a lot of selections from it. The album has had only two singles, each with moderate success. They chose virtually to ignore Secret Samadi, which contains some of the band's absolute best material. "Rattlesnake," "Freaks," and the immensely popular, "Turn My Head," were all disregarded during the performance as well as "Pain Lies on the Riverside," their first single from their first album. Some of the best material from Throwing Copper such as "Waitress" and "Shit Town" was also sacrificed for new material from The Distance to Here.

Had Live been given a full two hours to play, they may have included all of their best substance. Instead, they were stuck surrendering quality for promotion of the new album. Adam Duritz and his Counting Crows also had some difficulty keeping the audience interested. At the beginning of the show, Duritz said, "We've got a beautiful set for you. We may rock the place a little less tonight, but you'll love it. We're going to play some songs that you might not hear everyday." This is a very scary announcement for a performer to make at the beginning of concert. This could mean several things.

When Duritz said, "We may rock the place a little less," he meant that they would be playing a barrage of slow ballads that they have compiled over the years. Indirectly, this could mean a low-energy, uninteresting bore fest. "We're going to play some songs that you might not hear everyday," could mean that the bore fest was going to be filled with unpopular tunes that may be unpopular for a reason.

Duritz's promise of admiration of his choice in songs, and the indirect meaning of atrocity are two far ends of a complicated spectrum. In reality, the show sat somewhere right in the middle. The songs that the band played were very slow, and unrecognizable. They covered much of their first album August and Everything After, except for the hits. Within the first half of the show, they played "Anna Begins" and "Perfect Blue Buildings." Finally, with about half an hour left, they played a mediocre at best version of their biggest hit to date, "Mr. Jones." Notably missing were "Round Here" and "Rain King."

The second half of their set was much better than the first. Kicked off with "A Long December" from their second album Recovering the Satellites, and continued with "Angels of the Silences" and "Murder of One," they were able to end strongly before the encore. Unfortunately, it seemed like this was a bit unplanned. Duritz realized that they had more time than they originally anticipated, and sparked the band to play "Angels of the Silences" spur of the moment. Without this song, the entire set would have been loaded with unfamiliar tracks besides "Mr. Jones" and "A Long December."

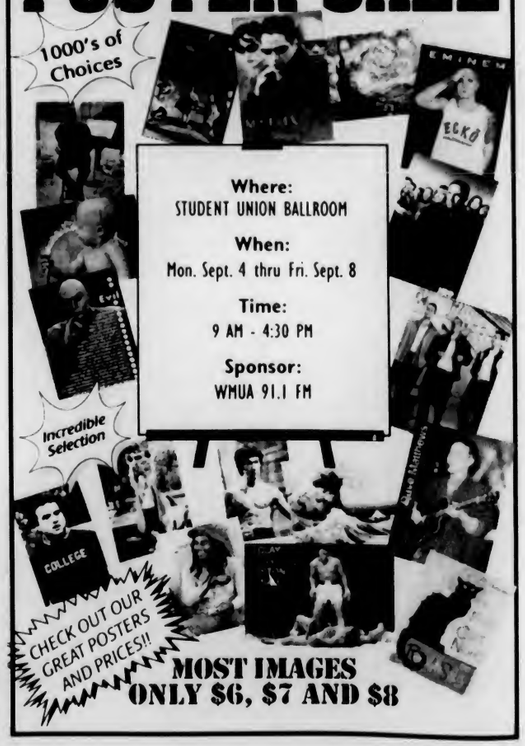
Counting Crows ended the show by bringing Live and opener Galactic back on stage for a remarkable rendition of Counting Crows sung "Hangin' Around" from their new album This Desert Life. It was easily the fastest-paced selection of the Counting Crows entire set, making it by far the best song played.

Both bands suffered dramatically from poor song selection. Whether this was due to serious time constraints or just bad planning, it affected the fan's response. Bands obviously become tired of playing the same songs over and over again each night, and this tour has been going on for a while. However, when they are charging upwards of thirty dollars per ticket they have no right to deny fans the quality that they have paid their hard earned money for.

Though the high profile bands did a good job selling their music, they did a lousy job considering the fan's desire to hear some of the songs that made them popular. Each band put on a good performance, but would have benefited much more from their own headlining tour that would allow them to expand the material into a bigger assortment of recognized selections.

Come down to the Collegian and write for ARTS!

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE



Where:
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM
When:
Mon. Sept. 4 thru Fri. Sept. 8
Time:
9 AM - 4:30 PM
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM

MOST IMAGES ONLY $6, $7 AND $8

Glimpse at elegant arts

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

It's hard to believe a year has passed and I'm here writing the same article all over again. It's September. You're back in school. You're meeting up with friends you haven't seen for three months. You're eating pizza for breakfast and drinking beer for the rest of the day. You're poor because you went backpacking across Europe all summer. Because every college student is exactly the same and exactly like that.

Anyway, you're looking for something new and cheap and though-provoking to do. Luckily you live in Amherst, a community that houses not just the one enormous university we all go to, but four other smaller colleges that are equally dedicated to providing cheap, if not free, stuff to do.Some examples.

The New World Theater, with their absolutely unique interpretations of works for the stage, brings hour left, they played a mediocre at best version of their biggest hit to date, "Mr. Jones." Notably missing were "Round Here" and "Rain King."

The second half of their set was much better than the first. Kicked off with "A Long December" from their second album Recovering the Satellites, and continued with "Angels of the Silences" and "Murder of One," they were able to end strongly before the encore. Unfortunately, it seemed like this was a bit unplanned. Duritz realized that they had more time than they originally anticipated, and sparked the band to play "Angels of the Silences" spur of the moment. Without this song, the entire set would have been loaded with unfamiliar tracks besides "Mr. Jones" and "A Long December."

Counting Crows ended the show by bringing Live and opener Galactic back on stage for a remarkable rendition of Counting Crows sung "Hangin' Around" from their new album This Desert Life. It was easily the fastest-paced selection of the Counting Crows entire set, making it by far the best song played.

Both bands suffered dramatically from poor song selection. Whether this was due to serious time constraints or just bad planning, it affected the fan's response. Bands obviously become tired of playing the same songs over and over again each night, and this tour has been going on for a while. However, when they are charging upwards of thirty dollars per ticket they have no right to deny fans the quality that they have paid their hard earned money for.

Though the high profile bands did a good job selling their music, they did a lousy job considering the fan's desire to hear some of the songs that made them popular. Each band put on a good performance, but would have benefited much more from their own headlining tour that would allow them to expand the material into a bigger assortment of recognized selections.

Collegian Arts, bringing it to ya' live...at 3:00a.m.

Welcome from University Liquors
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery
Cigarette, Phone Card
Rubinoff 1.75 $9.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack $9.99
Beck's , Heineken 12 Pack $9.99
Sam Adams 12 Packs $9.99
Magic Hat 9 Pack $9.99
Prices Good Until 9/13/00
WE CHECK IDs
REGISTER FOR PRIZE DRAWING

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER
GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale
Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!
Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements
Also check out our online store at...
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM
65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

HEALTH EDUCATION
IS LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEERS!
We are looking for dedicated people who are interested in women's health for Making Choices workshop facilitators - a contraceptive and STI workshop! and The Women's Health Project - who put on the 5-College Clothesline Project every year!
Come Find Out More On Wednesday, September 13th at 7 p.m. in room 302 University Health Services
or call Aly at 577-5181 for more information

COURTESY MIRAMAX CINEMA

Jennifer Lopez took time away from Puff Daddy to film her latest failure.

Locked on Lopez

The Cell
directed by Tarsem Singh with Jennifer Lopez, Vince Vaughn

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

If I may make a twinkie analogy, this movie has some of the tastiest golden sponge cake on the shelf but when you arrive at the cream filling it's only semi-sweet, has a stale, dry texture, and tastes just like everything else.

The Cell stars Jennifer Lopez as Catharine Deane, a talented psychotherapist making use of a wild new technology that allows her to enter the minds of other people in order to coax children out of comas and perform other such feats. When a serial killer slips into a deep coma, inventively unconscious, Catharine is called upon to probe his mind for the location of his final victim, a woman still alive and waning death in a torture/execution chamber set on auto pilot.

The plot, forced and predictable as it is, offers little to hold an audience's interest, instead acting as a banner upon which to display the bizarre visuals sprung from the mind of director Tarsem Singh (who first garned recognition for his video for R.E.M.'s [illegible] Religion).

The world of the [illegible] rendered by Singh as a [illegible] frightening journey into the [illegible] man starts look [illegible] ings by Salvador Dali and H.R. Giger with startling [illegible] compositions. Some [illegible] overtly symbolic, [illegible] of two-[illegible] pairs to dance [illegible] nightmarish [illegible] and [illegible] Progressive [illegible] gone by, becoming [illegible] self-indulgent [illegible] questions seem to [illegible] in a [illegible] of [illegible] arts-inspired [illegible] Eastern [illegible]

Jennifer Lopez [illegible] eyes have to [illegible] talented [illegible] and Vince [illegible] Bill Pullman [illegible] Paris [illegible] uninspired performances [illegible] developed [illegible] between the surrealistic images [illegible] Cell would [illegible] to [illegible] a decent [illegible] of [illegible] Zone. It [illegible] but extremely [illegible] matches much more [illegible] Singh's imagination [illegible] tial or compelling [illegible] than subscribing [illegible]

Come on down to the Collegian in the Campus Center basement and write for Arts.

Smart, intuitive Eve 6 turn youth into experience Horroscope proves they are no one-hit wonder

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Eve 6
Horroscope
RCA Records

Eve 6 is one of those bands that can slowly grow on you. If you listen to them enough. In 1998, the band released a debut album that sold over one million copies. The first single from that album, "Inside Out," supercharged the band's success. Since then, they have become rock workhorses with constant touring and self-promotion.

Eve 6's new album Horroscope shows all of the intelligence and raw emotion that they displayed two years ago. Though the members of the band may still be young, they seem to be starting to use experience to create more mature music. Horroscope appears to be a combination of everything that has worked for them in the past. The band denies that this is how they created the album, though. "Any time a band has a hit they think, 'Well we want to keep our career going. We have to write another hit.' But we didn't go into recording the album with that mindset at all." Drummer Tony Fagenson said. "We went in thinking, 'Let's pretend we're starting over, that this is our first chance to make an album.' In a lot of ways, Horroscope is a clean slate for us." Though they may not admit it, they seem know what the fans want from them, and Horroscope is proof that they can deliver.

Eve 6 contains only three devoted soldiers. All three members of the band sing. Max Collins plays the bass, Jon Siebels strums the guitar, and Tony Fagenson bangs the drums. Though there are only three of them, Collins proudly pronounces, "We're lucky to have each other."

The unity of talent and style the band possesses is unmediately evident. The first single from the album, "Promise" sounds a lot like "Inside Out." The fast paced words seem to jump all over the place mixed with precise drumming and guitars. The lyrics on the song are definitely what the band is most proud of, and though the words may appear to be jumbled they are actually very symmetrical. It may take a very close listen to the jargon, but it flows together perfectly. Even though they are back-up vocalists, you can still hear the words of Siebels and Fagenson clearly. The band's precision in constructing such outwardly accessible but inwardly intricate music is a commendable achievement.

"Sunset Strip Bitch," another vigorous tune with hard rock beats proves to be the best song on the album. It is a wonder why this was not the first single, but it will surely be the band's next pronounced promotional effort. Both of these songs have something very similar in common they are both classic examples of Eve 6's unique rock sound.

Horroscope was produced by Don Gilmore, who has previously worked with Lit and Pearl Jam. The band was very comfortable with Gilmore, who also produced their first album, placing great faith in his talents.

The album's cover art was created by Randy Green, who also designed the immensely popular video game character Lara Croft. Eve 6 has been known to use their obsession with video games in their music, and bringing in Green, they found the ultimate way to incorporate the world of gaming to the world of Eve 6.

The entire album represents the same devotion to music that Eve 6's career has displayed over the past few years. Besides their debut album, Eve 6 had a song on the soundtrack to the box office "spectacular" Teaching Mrs. Tingle. The song was relaxed with a video that included the film's star Katie Holmes, in which she ends up making out with the band members. If creating that video is not the definition of fun, then I don't know what is.

It becomes obvious that Eve 6 enjoys themselves when they create music. They insist that their fans take their

Members of Eve 6 brood.

Four Seasons
WINE & LIQUOR

HEINEKEN Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	PAPER CITY Case 24 btls $20.99+ dep	SUBLIME Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	D.N.A. Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	FREE ICE & CUPS WITH EVERY KEG!!!* Choose from Natural Light, Natural Ice, Bud, Bud Light, Michelob, Michelob Light, Miller Lite, Coors Light, Coors Original, Killians Red, Sam Adams & Many more. *Free 5 lb bag of ice and free sleeve of 50 - 12 oz cups. Sale ends 9-14-00
GENESEE 30pk cans $10.49+ dep	"THE BEAST" 30pk cans $10.49+ dep	COORS X-GOLD 30pk cans $11.49+ dep	BUSCH 30pk cans $12.99+ dep
BUSCH Case 24 btls $9.99+ dep	M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99+ dep	PABST Case 24 btls $9.49+ dep	MIKE'S 12pk btls $9.99+ dep
SIERRA NEVADA 12pk btls $11.99+ dep	BASS 12pk btls $11.99+ dep	SAM ADAMS 12pk btls $9.99+ dep	CORONA 12pk btls $9.99+ dep
P.S. VODKA 1.75 lt $9.99	SAMBUCA 750 ml $14.99	JOSE CUERVO 750 ml $12.99	CAPT. MORGAN 1.75 lt $19.99

333 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours Mon - Sat 9am - 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors ID's checked by Legal Age Software

Raw emotion mixes with action Gibson driven "Patriot" scores big

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

The Patriot
directed by Roland Emmerich with Mel Gibson, Heath Ledger

Penned by the screenwriter of Saving Private Ryan and starring Mel Gibson of Braveheart fame, The Patriot promises a look at the American Revolution full of big-budget action and emotional poignancy and that it does – with a reasonable historical accuracy and a level of emotional manipulation that borders on abusiveness – nothing as much of a surprise. Subtly in war movies is rarely applied strategy, especially hopeful ones. Final blanket war movies, and its absence from the list is occasionally regrettable.

With its much choreographed battle sequences and cinematography, excellent acting all around, and its plain, one borderline-laughable speeches [illegible]. Which brings us to another problem: [illegible] concerted efforts at suppressing the [illegible] thinking which presently colors such [illegible] Although not to see The Patriot as a piece of [illegible] movie, the sort of movie an American com[illegible] ot serious with making only because America [illegible] that. The one sidedness of its characterization [illegible] Heath [illegible] villains especially forces some eye-[illegible] a movie proves itself too swayed by [illegible] the whole of its content falls under [illegible]

Which can look beyond such ethical stickiness, however, The Patriot – certainly at least entertaining, full of bright visuals and heart-pounding action. Mel Gibson's [illegible] the character of Benjamin Martin – loosely based upon the vicious colonial warrior Francis Marion – with his usual blend of intensity and charm, and relative newcomer Heath Ledger (Ten Things I Hate About You) gives a solid performance as Benjamin's headstrong son Gabriel.

The movie's plot, often clunky and decidedly overlong, follows the men as they join the colonial war effort and organize a small militia force, employing guerrilla tactics to stall the British army on their slow push north, towards Washington. Meanwhile, the Martin family, motherless and now lacking their father and eldest son, joins with their aunt Charlotte (Joely Richardson) and struggles to evade the British, who hope to use them as bait to lure Benjamin out of the Carolina swamps from which he and his men operate.

Like any war movie, The Patriot spends a lot of time demonstrating that warfare is brutal, inhuman, and seldom or never worth the ends it seeks to accomplish. The movie slays characters with shocking nonchalance, which comes as both a blessing and a curse: while the film's readiness to sacrifice its characters in the pursuit of moral lesson-teaching is commendable, it also ruins some of the expected emotional payoff, leaving us with too little a sense of justice. Is the lesson, then, that the colonials shouldn't have rebelled against the crown? Hardly, of course, as the scene of Benjamin carrying the American flag ahead of his troops in the final battle clearly demonstrates. The movie's portrayal of war as despicable conflicts with its deep love of America's insistence of self-government, resulting in a muddy ethical atmosphere in which our only certainties are that Mel Gibson and the U.S.A are great, and the British evil and cowardly to the core.

Am I worrying too much about the specifics of what The Patriot says? Perhaps. As an action movie, it works well enough, and can be enjoyed on that level without too much distraction. As one of the most neglected of America's wars in Hollywood, however, it comes as a disappointment that The Patriot cannot paint a more historically credible, morally thoughtful, and simply less cheesy picture of our nation's birth. B-

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

Wouldn't it be cool if Mel Gibson painted half his face blue and yelled things like "Freedom!" to rile up the troops in the American Revolution?

All the notes on summer's tube

Welcome to the small section of the Daily Collegian called Tube Notes, a column which delves into the world of television not only to give you information about the small electronic box encased in black plastic sitting at the end of your room, but also to offer you opinions on recent shows and their stars. More often than not, you will find Tube Notes in this location in every Thursday's edition of the Daily Collegian. Usually I review the big events that happened before the writing of the article and do a preview of the upcoming show that might grab the interest of college students. However, since we are now coming off our summer hiatus, as are all our favorite TV shows this edition of Tube Notes is dedicated to those truly great summer moments in television.

The biggest problem with summer programming is the fact that all the shows on network television are in re-runs. Normally, with this being an Olympic year, I could discuss NBC's coverage of the 2000 summer games, but they have yet to be held. However, not everything is in re-runs. For instance, those of you who have HBO have noticed throughout the summer new episodes of "Sex and the City", "Arli$$" and "Oz". By doing this, HBO corners the market on customers that enjoy break-through television. Sandwiched in with these three smart and poignant shows is the Emmy award-winning "Sopranos". In the last few months, they have replayed the entire second season, getting people hooked for the anticipated third season of the very popular show. "Oz" itself may not be Emmy award winning, perhaps due to its violent and sometimes grotesque interpretation of the subject matter, but it has won more than one Cable Ace award and has received incredible reviews from across the country.

Oscar-nominated writer, director, producer Barry Levinson and Tom Fontana, creator of Emmy nominated "Homicide" and "Law and Order," created "Oz." Its raw and unique style of television is captivating and entrancing not only regular viewers but also Hollywood stars as well.

MTV also made huge strides regarding its type of program scheduling, not only giving us their annual summer beach house broadcasting (this year live from San Diego) but also premiering new episodes of the overly dramatic "Real World" and the obnoxious "Road Rules." Let's face it, when you have seen one show about seven people living in either a building or a Winnebago, you have seen them all. I am incredibly sick of listening to the same whining and moaning that goes along with both these shows. "Oh, Damian is such a –beep– because he doesn't respect my privacy." "Carol needs to shut her –beep–ing– mouth." Grow up. Show some common sense. But then again, if you had common sense you would not be on the show.

MTV also aired new episodes of the teenage sex based soap opera "Undressed" which is both annoying and poorly done. Also appearing more recently on the program list is the show "2gether" mocking the boy bands that have made Carson Daily and "TRL" so popular. They got us into this that they even created a fake "Making the Video" and a CD that is available at most record stores.

The show had a game show format which had one girl win a date with the boy band. Their spoof video, which includes "TRL"-like messages mock the very substance that has given MTV such a massive, if juvenile, fan base. If you ask me, this is a little too much hype for such a shallow and pointless concept. However, it is interesting to note how MTV is shying away from such music. Along with the premiere of "2gether," those of you who have seen "TRL" in the past three months have seen changes in the way Carson looks. Perhaps it started when Jennifer Love Hewitt dumped him, but he looks more rugged. Forgetting to paint his fingernails, or shave, he is also always wearing a hat now, going for the more rock and roll look. MTV, which earlier proclaimed that this year, was the "Return of Rock" have begun to heavily promote such formerly small acts like POD, Papa Roach, Godsmack and Incubus. They are shown on virtually every video show, so that those TRL-ites out there vote them in right next to N'sync and Hanson.

This summer also debuted "Monday Night Football" with a new body in the seat to the left, Dennis Miller. The ranting comedian made famous by his seven year stint as the "Saturday Night Live" anchor for the "Weekend Update" skit and by his Emmy and Cable Ace award winning and nominated show "Dennis Miller Live" (on HBO) has joined the booth trying to bring back lost ratings. Don Ohlemeyer, the man who put together NBC's basketball coverage team and the one responsible for Leno taking over the "Tonight Show", believes that this change will snag the younger demographic that would rather be out on a Monday night. And although Miller has committed small mistakes, it is said that he thoroughly researches before interviews and is beginning to learn how to segway from football to stand-up comedy jokes.

Now, I know that the biggest show this summer has been "Survivor," giving CBS (the grandmother network) a second wind to recruit younger viewers and sponsors, and it has become quite the rage. Every radio station in the country has at least one DJ who is mesmerized by it, and they all seem to be giving out some sort of big prize or trip. And while VH1 and other CBS shows have taken advantage of the popularity of the show, I am sorry to say that I am speechless on this and the new show "Big Brother." Not because it fills me with such rage to see CBS or any other station do a "Real World" meets "Road Rules" meets "Gilligan's Island" type of show. No, it is because I have only seen one episode of the infamous "Survivor". From that one episode I saw that everyone hated Rounata and saw when the 71-year-old ex-navy SEAL learned that one of his friends on the island was gay. It just seemed like I had seen it before, which I have. So if you're looking for my opinions on the summer phenomon, I'm sorry for once I'm speechless. But be on the look out for "Survivor II" taking place in Australia.

Tube Notes regularly runs every Thursday in the Arts & Living Section.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist.

Collegian night staff– we read more of the paper by 3 a.m. than you do all day.

ATTENTION COLLEGE JUNIORS:

It's not too late for you to get a scholarship...
Air Force ROTC has scholarships available immediately in the following majors...

Chemistry
Computer Info Systems
Computer Science
Mathematics
Meteorology
Physics

Aeronautical Engineering
Aerospace Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Civil Engineering
Computer Engineering
Foreign Area Studies

Foreign Languages
Electrical engineering
Industrial Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Nuclear Engineering

You can also still join AFROTC and compete for a two year scholarship no matter what your major. Register before add/drop ends.
Call Captain Chris Lane (413) 545-2437 or
afrotc@acad.umass.edu for more information

COURTESY PATRICK GIAMMICHELES

"Coyote Ugly" is about as good as it looks!

Cuteness can't save Coyotes

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Coyote Ugly
Directed by David McNally with Piper Perabo, Maria Bello, Adam Garcia

Piper Perabo is almost cute enough to make this generic cover-up for a teen romance work. Almost.

Perabo plays a small-town New Jersey girl (Violet Sanford) who leaves for the big city (where else but New York?) in order to realize her mother's dreams of becoming a professional songwriter. Her lonely, over-protective father (an endearing John Goodman) disapproves.

Things go poorly for young Violet, as they are wont to do; then, they get worse. Her apartment gets broken into, her sample tapes get returned and people are downright mean. Much like the earlier summer teen fare, Loser, New York City represents a bastion of apathy and disillusionment.

Enter dashingly good-looking and charming Australian Kevin O'Donnell (Adam Garcia) and owner of the titular bar Lil (the vastly underused Maria Bellow). Lil provides Violet with a job at her bar, Coyote Ugly, which in turn provides the appeal to the key 18-49 male movie-going audience. The recipe for Coyote Ugly: Hot girls, tight clothing, loud music, occasional random brawling, lots of alcohol – shaken not stirred. Again, Violet's father disapproves.

Meanwhile, Kevin and Violet strike up a romance (giving Ugly a Ten Things I Hate About You feeling) as he tries to help her overcome stage fright. Soon, he too disapproves of Coyote Ugly as a vague and unconscious attempt by Violet to avoid achieving her dreams.

Coyote Ugly is not great filmmaking, nor is it particularly engaging, but it can be fun and genuine at times. Garcia and Perabo share a glib onscreen relationship and the mismatched beauties seem suited for each other (even if forcibly so). Perabo is also good onscreen with John Goodman, making her initial but somewhat haphazard decision to return home seem much more believable.

In fact, Coyote Ugly centers almost entirely around the blonde newcomer and the story of her character Violet Sanford. And to an extent, the pairing is good. I just wish that Violet had larger ambitions. It is inherently frustrating to see Violet fight through a barrage of problems and overcome a million melodramas only to step out of the spotlight in the end. I can't even query her stage fright (proposed as the film's major turning point). Violet still recedes into the familiar space of solitude. After all, she only wants to be a songwriter, not a performer.

Like Violet herself, Coyote Ugly does not strive for lofty heights and thereby achieves only a minor victory. It's entirely mindless, but mildly entertaining. C-

Dido: Creepy true talent behind eerie sound on Eminem's Stan

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

DIDO
Avalon Ballroom
Aug 1

The first time I heard the track "Stan" off the new Eminem album, I didn't really notice that the lyrics were so disturbing. All I wanted to know was, who was the woman singing through it?

"I have no idea," said my friend, who had just bought the CD. He joked, "Maybe it's Eminem's mom."

Eminem's mom however, probably didn't have this woman's haunting, insistent voice.

It would be another month before I ever learned who it was, and even then I was a little confused. "Who the hell is Dido?" I said.

London-born Dido Armstrong – her real name – is one of those artists who's music you've heard everywhere, in little snippets from incredibly different sources. She provides that sample for Eminem, as well as the theme song to the WB's alien show "Roswell," was featured in the Gwenyth Paltrow movie Sliding Doors, and sang on Letterman, Leno, and Conan this summer. She also has a new video version of her hit "Here With Me" and is winning fans around the country on a 14-city tour.

The second of those stops was the Avalon Ballroom in Boston on August 1, and there was an early hint of just how popular she's becoming. By the time the doors were open before the concert went all the way down Lansdowne Street. For these fans, it was worth the wait. Dido is as good if not better than she is on her first cd "No Angel." She interacts with the audience with that trademark British humor, sings with passion, and puts on an intimate but powerful show. And unlike her most R 'n' B solo female contemporaries, Dido's has a great band in their own right to surround her.

The great band opened with a techno-funky instrumental, and then Dido – petite, very British looking – made her entrance singing "My Lover's Gone." The amazing thing about her performance, from the start, is her range. "My Lover's Gone" sounds very Irish, ethereal and melancholic, like something from your mom's Celtic Twins collection. But the next song, "All You Want" is much more contemporary, more out of the lowest collection.

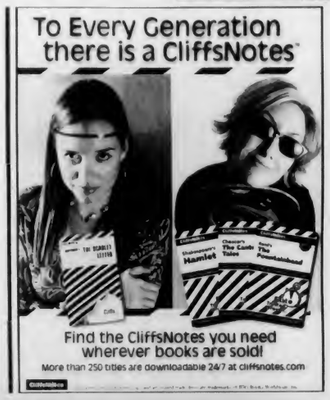
A definite theme starts to emerge in the concert. The first songs are about a distanced lover, asking him desperately to return home, and the effects of that distance. Merging in that theme perfectly is a newly written song – "Afraid to Sleep," a disturbingly effective melends on addiction and possessive love.

Most of the songs were from No Angel, though, including her biggest hit, "Here With Me." Although its been overplayed on the radio, Dido's live version is enchanting and immediate as the first time you hear it. Her range continued to dazzle as she moved right into "Isobel," a quiet, sad tribute to someone who committed suicide. Isobel also sounds better live than on the cd recorded, it reminds one a bit too much of a Sarah McLachlan ballad. But live it is more personal and unique because of Dido's wind-swept song.

After a great rendition of "Honestly OK" Dido sang the title track off the cd, and the concert smoothly changed its tone – from unpatiently waiting lover to powerful, dynamic woman. "Thank You" was the biggest hit with the audience because of the Eminem connection. To the song's credit though, the sample that Eminem took is not the only good part of the track. In fact, like the rest of Dido's music, it is a twisting, changing hymn: the ghostly lyrics "even if I could it'd all be grey, but your picture on my wall/It reminds me, that it's not so bad, it's not so bad" change into the celebration chorus, "I want to thank you, for the best day of my life."

To finish off, Dido changed gears again and sang "Hunter" with peaceful vigor. Now wanting to be single and free Dido is ready to take on the world, but not before she gets one last word in – an encore ironically titled "Don't Think of Me," about a scorned lover. How can we not think of Dido? Her music is everywhere these days, and should continue to be.

There's nothing quite like finishing Arts at 3:30 am.



To Every Generation
there is a CliffsNotes
Find the CliffsNotes you need wherever books are sold!
More than 250 titles are downloadable 24/7 at cliffsnotes.com

J.CREW

TEMPORARY HELP WANTED

for a large J.Crew Clothing Sale to be held at
The Mullins Center
in Amherst, Mass

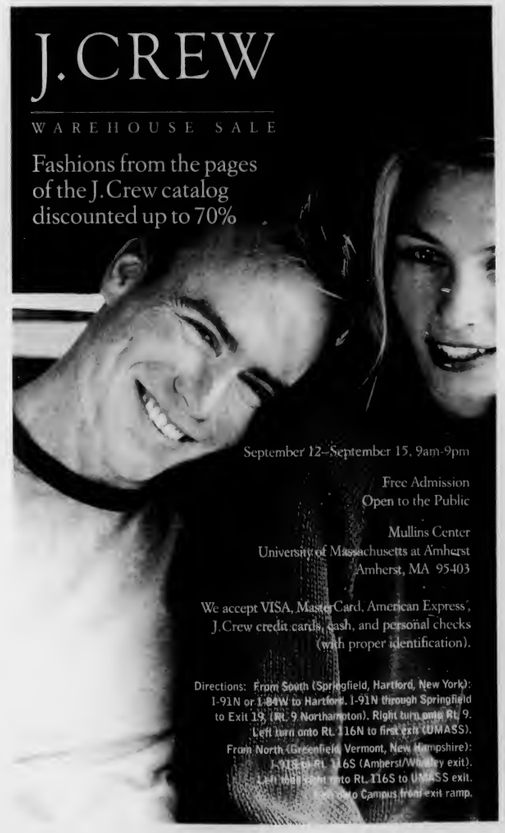
September 12-15,2000

Setup begins Sep. 11, 2000

Cashiers, Baggers, and Floor Help

Please call:

410-931-3501
Please leave full name and phone #.



J.CREW
WAREHOUSE SALE
Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%
September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm
Free Admission
Open to the Public
Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403
We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express®,
J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks
(with proper identification).
Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York):
I-91N or I-84W to Hartford, I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9.
Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS).
From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire):
I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whately exit).
Left [illegible] onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit.
[illegible] to Campus from exit ramp.

COURTESY CMC INTERNATIONAL

If you think this is scary, imagine how some of the people in the crowd looked at the Tweeter Center.

Ancient Maiden "Resurrected"

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

IRON MAIDEN with QUEENSRYCHE and HALFORD
Tweeter Center
Aug. 6

There's something discomforting to a metal fan to see Rob Halford, who will be remembered as one of the most talented and influential metal vocalists of all time, in such a position as he was this Sunday night. Not only is the former Judas Priest belter opening for a band that is by now considered ancient yet is still over five years Priests' junior, but his newest solo vehicle, Halford, is no way to end such a fruitful career. Of course, there's no reason to believe Halford is going to hang it up, it's just that he might as well if what we have to look forward to is the likes of which was weakly displayed off the band's debut disc Resurrection. I have no idea what "Cyberworld," one of the songs performed, was about, but chances are it's the same hackneyed Dehumanizer-esque crap that's the result of refusal to let a career go quietly. Enough with the negative though. Halford is still a great vocalist even when he's singing crap, and when he's not, like when they blazed through Priest classics like "Breaking the Law" and "Tyrant," it's easy to catch a glimpse of why this legend has been collecting fans for three decades.

Queensryche entertained the sparsely populated crowd with a solid but unexceptional set full of hits like "Take Hold of the Flame" and "Eyes of a Stranger," but criminally omitted the rousing "Jet City Woman."

All eyes were on Maiden, however, to prove their claim that they still have what it takes to be, once again, one of the biggest metal acts in the world. So after a reaffirming two hour set, do they have what it takes? Of course they do. The songs, the stage presence, everything seems to be in place for the takeover they describe. And the world is theirs, as long as they leave the US out of their plans.

Yes, unfortunately, there is no way in hell Maiden will ever get as big again as they would like to in the States. It's not that I wouldn't want them to, or be happily shocked if they did, but the two ways for a band to get big over here, radio and MTV, are all but shut off to them. MTV is pretty obvious, the chance of a Maiden video being played on "music" television is about as likely as Carson Daly wearing a Soulfly T-shirt on TRL (what?...he did?...board up the windows). And modern rock radio is so obsessed with rock-lite crap like Creed and 3 Doors Down that any minor hit that Maiden may have, like they did with "Wicker Man," will stay just that, minor.

But if Maiden stops making outrageous claims, they could be more than happy where they are right now, coming around once a year, putting on a great show, and even cranking out some great albums after all of these years. Maiden doesn't have to prove anything to anybody any more, but they continue to do so, time and time again. They reclaimed former singer Bruce Dickinson and guitarist Adrian Smith, sold out a number of small arenas last summer, and released a fine new album Brave New World, flying in the face of journalists who said they would never pull it off and that metal was dead.

Dickinson had some choice words for said journalists midway through the set, including what part of his British anatomy they could kiss. Not that any of the fans in attendance were buyers into the "metal is dead" philosophy, as Sunday night featured some of the hardest of the hardcore metal audiences you are likely to see. Not the hardcore audience that needs to mosh twice daily, but the guys who aren't wearing their Saxon shirts to show off, but because it's their Sunday shirt.

And for them Maiden played their asses off, never letting the energy level dip too low, even during the number of epic pieces they chose, such as the still underwhelming "The Clansman," the incredible "The Sign of the Cross," and the eerie "Brave New World." Material was certainly not lacking from the latest album, as the first half hour was devoted to the first three songs, the best of which was the stunning "Ghost of the Navigator," memorable not only for it's sing-a-long qualities but also it's thoughtful lyrics and subtle time shifts. "Blood Brothers," an unusually emotional song for the group, is amazing on record, but didn't translate well into a live setting, where the more straightforward but far less interesting "The Mercenary" returned much better results from the crowd.

Maiden classics weren't in short supply either, as "Wrathchild," "The Trooper," and "2 Minutes to Midnight" lit up the set with some classic sounds. The elaborate stage show Maiden has been known to bring was less detailed but twice as lively this time around, with Harris, Murray, Gers, and Smith all running around wildly while Dickinson could be spotted gliding around the raised area behind Nicko, waving a British flag, or doing mad leaps off the speakers. During the closer to their regular set, the timeless anthem "Iron Maiden," Eddie, in Ed Hunter gear, came out for the expected visit, and proceeded to make lewd hand gestures and get smashed with guitars in a ritual that never seems to get old. The brilliant encore selections of "The Number of the Beast," "Hallowed Be Thy Name," and "Sanctuary" were the perfect cap to a night that proved not only that Maiden has an unmatched history, but a bright future as well.

Amherst Survival Center
"FROM TRASH TO TREASURES"

Furniture Sale and Collection

Saturday September 9 9am - 1pm
Town Common
Rain or Shine

- Buy used furniture at very low prices (delivery available)
- All furniture in good condition will be accepted free of charge on the common
- Rugs, mattresses and unusable furniture will be accepted for a disposal fee of $5 per item
- Call 549-3968 for more information

RENOVATOR'S
Now Hiring
Catalog Request / Sales Representatives
Part-Time Evening and Weekend positions available. Basic computer skills and a pleasant telephone manner required. Please apply in person between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at:
THE RENOVATOR'S SUPPLY, INC.
RENOVATOR'S OLD MILL
MILLERS FALLS, MA 01349
413-669-3773 tel.
413-669-3796 fax
Located on Rte. 63 off Rte. 2, right at the bridge over the Millers River

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Featuring the latest in Fitness Training & Equipment
"Everything You Need in A Gym and More!"
- Certified Personal Trainers
- Fitness Testing & Programming
- Nutritonal Consultation
- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & Supplements
- Full Aerobics Programs including:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Sports Step
-and many more

We've expanded our dumbbell area!
Semester Special $150

- Stairmasters
- Precor Treadmills
- Lifecycle Recumbant Bikes
- Lifecycle Upright Bikes
- Precor Crosstrainers
- Body Masters & Icarian Free Weights
- Cybex Circuit Training Equipment

Located in the Campus Plaza next to Liquors 44. For more information call 253-7684

IT'S YOUR BODY
If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?
The TIAA-CREF Advantage.
Call us for a free information package
Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:
- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.
Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™ 1.800.842.2776 www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

Duce's wild in romp of Cowboys, Culpepper silences critics while Rams escape Broncos in Week 1

4th and inches
David Rose

After Week One of the NFL season we know this: the Philadelphia Eagles will not be pushovers this year, Minnesota quarterback Daunte Culpepper is the biggest quarterback I have ever seen, Tampa Bay's Warren Sapp is the most dominant defensive player in the game, the St. Louis Rams wide outs are equivalent to the 4x100 Olympic track team and the Dallas Cowboys were cooked in the 140 degree heat of Texas Stadium.

Let's start out with the Eagles. With the help of Duce Staley, the Eagles dropped a Duce on the "Boys in Big D. His 201 yards rushing made him the first Eagle running back since Steve Van Buren in 1949 to eclipse the double century mark. It also marked the first time that the Cowboys had given up 200 yards to a back since 1984.

Donovan McNabb looked more comfortable in the Eagle offense and scored on a quarterback draw in the fourth quarter. While the Eagles dominated, the Cowboys disintegrated faster than a Firestone Tire.

Troy Aikman suffered his ninth career concussion and will be out of this Sunday's game against the Arizona Cardinals. It went from bad to worse in the fourth quarter when they lost wideout Joey Galloway for the season with a torn ACL. Galloway's four catches on Sunday means that for the season he will make one and a half million dollars per catch. For you math majors at home that's six million dollars for his four catches. This is the start of what will be a horrific season for Dallas.

The same cannot be said for Culpepper. In his first NFL start, Culpepper didn't throw over the top of the Bears defense, but rather ran through them. His three rushing touchdowns instantly made the Vikings a bigger threat in the NFC. At 6'4", 255 pounds, Culpepper will not be brought down easily by defenders, and his quickness makes him a double threat out of the pocket. If he can duplicate his performance of last week, the Vikings will be a dangerous offensive unit to stop once again.

The New England Patriots' loss on Sunday in Foxboro can be attributed to the Tampa Bay defense. In particular, it can be attributed to one man: Sapp. He dominated the game, accumulating five tackles, one and a half sacks, and numerous pressures on Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe. Sapp has become the dominant force in the NFL on the defensive side of the ball. Teams now have to build game plans on the offensive side of the ball primarily to stop him.

Now, if only the Bucs offense could stop looking as ugly as Janet Reno, they might be the team to beat.

Unfortunately for the Bucs and the rest of the NFC teams, I still feel the road to the Super Bowl will go through St. Louis. Although their defense looked suspect, the offense showed no signs of slowing down from last year's frantic pace. In a game where the Denver Broncos gained 422 yards of offense, the Rams still managed to outgain them by 91. Last year's League and Super Bowl MVP Kurt Warner threw for 441 yards and three touchdowns, including two that went for more than 70 yards.

The receivers at his disposal are incredible: Tory Holt, Isaac Bruce, Az-Zahir Hakim and Marshall Faulk coming out of the backfield. This is a team that could score more than the 530 points that they did last season, and not put much effort into it. The only question about the Rams' offense is this: What is that celebration in the end zone?

On to this week's picks. The big game is in Baltimore where the Ravens will host the Jacksonville Jaguars. In order for the Ravens to get to the top of the AFC Central, they must win this type of game. However, that won't happen this week. Although the Jags have more players in the hospital than they do on the field, I still look for Mark Brunell to have a big day, and the Jags to grab a huge win.

The Jets and Patriots clash on Monday night. These two teams hate each other more than Seinfeld and Newman, but it is always entertaining. The difference in this battle is the running game. The Jets have Curtis Martin and the Pats have no one. I'll take the Jets.

For the rest of the games I like the Bills over the Packers, the Bengals over the Browns, the Titans over K.C., Indy over Oakland, Minnesota over Miami, Philly over the Giants, Tampa over 'Da Bears, Denver over Atlanta, the Skins over the Lions, San Diego over the Saints, the 49ers over Carolina, St. Louis over Seattle and Arizona over Dallas.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist

■ volleyball

continued from page 20

"I thought we played very well against Eastern Michigan, especially the people we had playing the middle," Kenny said.

Junior Janeen DeMarte was a main force in the Minutewomen's victory as she tallied 11 digs. Sophomore Claire Baxter had an impressive outing, chipping in a career-best seven kills, while junior Celia Wiste tallied six kills. An additional strong performance was put forth by senior Jenni Drennan, who set up 36 assists for UMass.

"Jenni Drennan, who is like our quarterback, maintained the composure of our team," stated Kenny.

Utah: 15-8, 15-10, 15-2

Fortunes were not as good for the women in the first game on Saturday as the Minutewomen fell to Utah in straight sets. Among the bright spots for the Maroon and White was Davis, who this time led the team with nine kills, while Lovet threw down seven kills of her own.

As for the Utes, it was senior Jen Snow-Richards leading the team. Snow-Richards led the team with 13 kills and posted a career-high .722 hitting percentage. Freshman Kim Turner posted 11 kills for Utah, while Katrena Ellett chipped in 10 kills and led the team with 11 digs.

"Utah was a much better team than us. That third game was the worst we played all weekend," Kenny said.

UMass: 14-16, 15-11, 17-15, 15-15, 15-10

In the initial game of the tournament on Friday, the Minutewomen were victorious in a five-game marathon victory over UNH. Once again, it was Hasson paving the way for the team, who put down 19 kills in the first game of the tourney. Lovet also had a strong performance in the victory, posting a double-double on 18 kills and 10 digs for the Maroon and White.

"That was a great win over New Hampshire. It was a big win in a long, drawn out game," coach Kenny stated.

Other strong performances for the Minutewomen were turned in by Davis and DeMarte who both contributed eight kills, with Davis leading the team on a career-high 15 digs. Also instrumental in the Maroon and White's opening triumph was Baxter, who led the team with a career-best four blocks.

***

After the tournament, the Minutewomen stand at 2-1 for the year, and are looking forward to this weekend's tournament being held at Hofstra University in Hempstead, NY. The weekend non-conference tourney has them facing the Catamounts of Cal State Northridge on Friday, while Saturday's matches are against the University of Illinois-Chicago Flames and the home Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra.

"I think we'll have a tougher weekend. The biggest match of this weekend will be Hofstra, but I think they'll all be really competitive," Kenny said.

THERE WILL BE A MANDATORY SPORTS STAFF MEETING TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12 AT 5:00 PM IN THE NEWSROOM.

NEW WRITERS WELCOME

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL BRYAN AT 545-0718 OR MIKE AT 545-[illegible]

There will be a mandatory All Staff Meeting Thursday, September 14th at 6pm in the Newsroom

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions beginning late August/early September
CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train
MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum three shifts (approx. 3 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week
Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train
DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours
Previous kitchen experience preferred
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at:
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply.

Classes.....Covered ☑ Tuition....Covered ☑
Health Insurance....?
GET COVERED!
The Chickering Group in partnership with UMASS Amherst is pleased to announce the availability of the 2000-2001 Student Health Insurance Plan (formerly Supplemental Health Benefits Plan) which is underwritten by Aetna U.S. Healthcare.
Plan Highlights include:
- Access to local and national Preferred Provider Networks through Aetna U.S. Healthcare.
- Low out-of-pocket expenses.
- $250,000 maximum per policy year.
- Elimination of out-of-pocket expenses for many UHS services.
- Expanded Mental Health / Substance Abuse Coverage.
- Access to the Aetna U.S. Healthcare Prescription Drug Network.
To receive information call The Chickering Group directly at (877) 480-4167.

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?
The TIAA-CREF Advantage.
Call us for a free information package
Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:
- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.
Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™ 1.800.842.2776 www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

HAVE YOU EVER WANTED TO WEIGH 400 POUNDS AND WEAR A DIAPER?
Now is your chance! Friday, Sept. 8th from 5-8 pm @ Campus Center Lawn
Beginning of the school year bash, bringing you...
FREE

SUMO WRESTLING
VOLLEYBALL
DUNK TANK
VELCRO WALL
FOOD & MUSIC!!!
Brought to you by
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org

Field hockey starts season on high note

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

They're thinking about it – that lowly "it," standing for a mere National Championship.

And to these twenty-one women who make up the roster for the 2000 University of Massachusetts field hockey team, it's not a fantasy. They're sick of being the little engine that, err ... maybe could have. This year, the mindset is "let's get it done."

The last two years we've made the tournament and it's not enough anymore for us to just make it," senior Zowie Tucker said Sunday after her team's 2-1 loss to Northeastern. "We're looking to the Final Four. We have such a great program and we need to capitalize on it.

Will there be bumps in the road? Of course. The first came last weekend. After a victory in the season opener versus Colgate, UMass found themselves with two tough regional matchups against New Hampshire and Northeastern. And at the end of the weekend, the Maroon and White's record was 2-1. Northeastern being the earth record spoiler.

To open up the season, UMass, who is returning nine-of-11 starters, shut out Colgate, 7-0, outshooting the Red Raiders 27-5 in a game that saw five different Minutewomen find the goal. Tucker and freshman Ashley Upland combined for the shutout.

The Maroon and White seemingly poised after that explosive start in New York, went into last weekend knowing how important their first two regional games would be. With a bad practice on Friday lurking in the back of its mind, however, the weekend would formulate into more of a wake-up call for UMass than anything else.

UNH (1-2) visited Amherst on Saturday, five days after their 3-2 loss to Old Dominion. Although not at it's best, UMass was able to hold on for a 3-1 victory over the Wildcats. Junior back Anke Bruemmer scored twice, one in each half, both scores coming off shots from penalty corners. It was the eighth multiple goal game of her career.

The other UMass goal was tallied late in the first half by senior forward Kristen Schmidt who drilled in the rebound from her previous shot that had bounced off the right post.

At the beginning of the second half, the Minutewomen clung to a 2-1 lead. But with nearly 14 minutes left in the game, the score remained the same and New Hampshire had begun to show signs of life.

"We were losing control of the game at that point," coach Patty Shea said. "And I asked [the team], 'What do you feel right now?' And they said, 'We've stopped moving and we're losing control of the game.' I said, 'Precisely.' I told them that what we need to do is simple – just pass, pass, pass. We came out of the timeout and we possessed the ball like [UNH] wasn't even on the field. That settled us down right away."

Although content with the win, Shea knew that a similar performance would not be enough to beat a tougher opponent, such as Northeastern, who was up next for the squad. And before the game on Sunday, she mentioned that in order to win, the team would have to possess the ball better and do a better job of taking what was given to them.

The Minutewomen would come up a just short, losing the battle, 2-1, to the visiting Huskies. UMass struggled in the first half, failing to get a shot on goal, but was helped out immensely by Tucker who saved both of the two shots taken by Northeastern, keeping the game scoreless at the half.

The Maroon and White drew first blood in the second half at 52:05 when junior Lindsey Abbot drilled the ball past Huskie goaltender Kathleen Madaus's right side and into the cage. Junior Kaitlyn Byron and sophomore Stacey Blue assisted on the goal.

Abbot's goal would not be enough. In the next seven minutes, Northeastern would strike twice. The first came from Lorna Dobbie with assists being credited to Krisanne Buchenia and Aleisha Bemis. The goal came off the Huskies' second penalty corner of the half.

The second tally, which would prove to be the game winner, came two minutes later by Sara Webber at 60:01.

Webber's goal was the result of a bad bounce over the right shoulder of Tucker and a misplay by UMass defender Bruemmer.

That's probably the first time [Anke] has ever been out of position," Tucker mentioned of the sequence. "And they capitalized on it, which was a shame."

UMass had several scoring chances at the end of the game, including two penalty corners with less than two minutes remaining, but failed to convert.

"We just let them take over the game," Breummer, who was named Atlantic 10 Conference Player of the Week, said. "We just got so frustrated over the little things – that people just stopped playing hard."

We have to play from our hearts," Abbot agreed. "A lot of people out there were letting the pain and the tiring take over their body, and we can't do that."

"We're not where I'd like us to be," Coach Shea said after the game. "My expectations for this team are very high and right now we're not where we need to be. One of the key things is that we need to take care of our region and we didn't do that today. We have alot of work to do."

■ field hockey
continued from page 20

Minutewomen needed to muster more penalty corners in order to become more successful at getting on the scoreboard, and that is exactly what they did yesterday.

"It's [penalty corners] one of the strongest parts of our game," said Shea, "and we have to take advantage of that."

Yesterday's road win also came at an ideal time for the Minutewomen, after suffering through a heartbreaking 2-1 home loss to Northeastern on Sept. 3.

After that game, Shea had said that, "We have to refocus. I mean you turn around and we have another game on Wednesday night. You have to learn from it and move on," and that is exactly what the Minutewomen were able to accomplish.

Because UMass returns nine of eleven starters from last year's team, this seems to be the best chance it has at making a serious run at the national title. At the very least, Shea hopes to improve on last season's quarterfinals exit in the NCAA tournament.

The Maroon and White return to action on Sept. 9, when they travel to Ohio to take on Ball State.

■ men's soccer
continued from page 20

Carolina last week by the same margin. Falling 2-1 in their first loss of the season.

The Gamecocks did not welcome the Minutemen with a warm reception in both teams' season opener as South Carolina came right at UMass, scoring in the first fourteen minutes of the season and the game.

Yet, the Minutemen were not about to let the South Carolina goal go unanswered as team co-captain and senior Patrick Beattie found nothing but net as he hit the top right corner of the Gamecock goal. Beattie's goal was the first of the season for UMass coming less than a minute after the South Carolina goal after taking a perfect on target corner kick from the foot of sophomore Minuteman Derek Rhodes.

Both teams entered the second half with the score tied, but midway through the half South Carolina broke through the UMass defense again to get their second and game deciding goal.

On the lighter side of the Maroon and White's recent defeats to teams with birds as their insignia, both were not Atlantic 10 games, which do not start until the end of September.

Nevertheless, the Minutemen's next game is no less important as UMass will attempt to break into the win column against Maine in Orono.

"I think it is not necessarily win, but play well for two halves. If we play really well and create a lot of chances and prevent them from getting a lot of chances then I think then we should win the game," said Koch. "I mean if they get two shots and put two in, and we get twenty shots and only put one in, we will end up on the wrong end of the stick."

As is the story in college, the Black Bears want a win just as badly as does UMass and will not exactly lie down for the Minutemen. No matter how badly they want to win, if the Minutemen do not do it on the field by finding the net early and often and keep the Black Bears' shots to a minimum, they may once again witness the same results of their first two games.

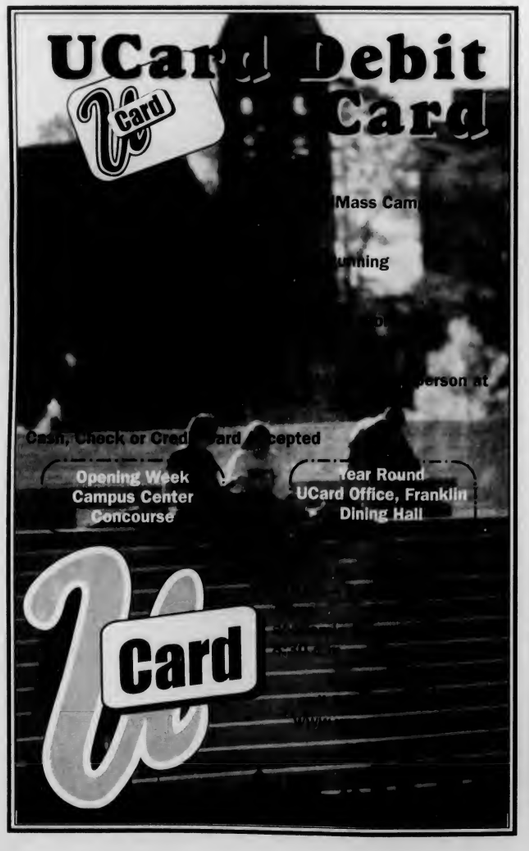
"They are a solid made team, and they are certainly a team that could beat you, they are hungry to win and I am sure they are going to come after us," said Koch, about the team the Minutemen will face this coming Saturday. "As long as we play well, in the end you are going to win most of the games, and that is what we are trying to do."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeff Derren and the men's soccer team dropped their opening two matches of the season to South Carolina and Hartford

Collegian Sports

We're all about the fun.
And not the scary clowns



SAVE $ ON TEXTBOOKS
We Have These U. MASS Courses At Discounted Prices

UM-ACCTG-221-1	UM-CMPSCI-287-1	UM-FOREST-332-1	UM-MATH-421-1	UM-PSYCH-100-2
UM-ACCTG-222-1	UM-COMDIS-211-1	UM-FRENCH-110-1	UM-MATH-425-1	UM-PSYCH-100-3
UM-ACCTG-311-1	UM-COMDIS-313-1	UM-FRENCH-230-1	UM-MATH-431-1	UM-PSYCH-240-C
UM-ACCTG-331-1	UM-COMM-218-1	UM-FRENCH-240-1	UM-MATH-431-2	UM-PSYCH-240-1
UM-ACCTG-371-1	UM-COMM-226-1	UM-GEO-103-1	UM-MATH-431-5	UM-PSYCH-240-2
UM-AN SCI-101-1	UM-COMM-250-1	UM-GER-110-1	UM-MATH-461-1	UM-PSYCH-305-1
UM-AN SCI-311-1	UM-COMM-250-2	UM-GER-230-1	UM-MATH-471-1	UM-PSYCH-350-1
UM-AN SCI-332-1	UM-COMM-340-1	UM-GER-240-1	UM-MATH-511-H	UM-PSYCH-380-1
UM-ART-120-1	UM-CS-161-1	UM-HIS-100-1	UM-MATH-523-1	UM-RES EC-102-1
UM-ART HI-100-1	UM-CS-315-1	UM-HIS-101-1	UM-MATH-523-2	UM-RES EC-211-1
UM-ART HI-115-1	UM-ECON-103-H	UM-HIS-140-1	UM-MATH-532-1	UM-SOC-103-1
UM-ASTRO-100-H	UM-ECON-103-2	UM-HIS-369-1	UM-MATH-551-1	UM-SOC-105-1
UM-ASTRO-101-2	UM-ECON-103-4	UM-HRTA-100-1	UM-MATH-611-1	UM-SOC-201-2
UM-ASTRO-114-1	UM-ECON-104-1	UM-HRTA-130-1	UM-MATH-623-1	UM-SOC-241-1
UM-BIO-100-1	UM-ECON-203-1	UM-HRTA-150-1	UM-MATH-645-1	UM-SOC-243-1
UM-BIO-105-1	UM-ECON-203-3	UM-JAPAN-126-1	UM-MATH-651-1	UM-SOC-281-1
UM-BIO-106-1	UM-ECON-311-1	UM-MATH-412-1	UM-MATH-671-1	UM-SOM-210-1
UM-BIO-283-1	UM-ED-325-1	UM-MATH-011-1	UM-MATH-697-4	UM-SOM-301-1
UM-BIO-339-1	UM-ENG WP-111-1	UM-MATH-100-1	UM-MATH-703-1	UM-SOM-310-1
UM-BIOCHEM-420-1	UM-ENG WP-112-1	UM-MATH-101-1	UM-MATH-731-1	UM-SPAN-110-1
UM-BIOEPI-741-1	UM-ENGIN-111-1	UM-MATH-113-1	UM-MGT-260-1	UM-SPAN-120-1
UM-CEE-240-1	UM-ENGIN-113-1	UM-MATH-101-1	UM-MICBIO-160-1	UM-SPAN-230-1
UM-CEE-241-1	UM-ENGIN-113-4	UM-MATH-127-H	UM-MICBIO-310-1	UM-SPAN-240-1
UM-CHEM-110-1	UM-ENV-335-1	UM-MATH-127-1	UM-MKTG-301-1	UM-SPAN-301-1
UM-CHEM-250-1	UM-ENVSCI-101-1	UM-MATH-128-1	UM-MKTG-491-D	UM-SPAN-311-1
UM-CHEM-261-1	UM-ENVSCI-112-1	UM-MATH-131-1	UM-MUSIC-160-1	UM-STAT-111-1
UM-CHEM-262-1	UM-EXCSCI-130-1	UM-MATH-135-1	UM-MUSIC-160-1	UM-STAT-140-1
UM-CHEM-265-1	UM-EXCSCI-210-1	UM-MATH-233-1	UM-NURS-100-1	UM-STAT-141-1
UM-CHIN-138-1	UM-FOMGT-250-1	UM-MATH-235-H	UM-PHYS-100-2	UM-STAT-497-M
UM-CLASS-105-1	UM-FOMGT-250-2	UM-MATH-235-1	UM-PHYS-131-1	UM-STAT-501-1
UM-CLASS-224-1	UM-FOMGT-300-1	UM-MATH-235-3	UM-PHYS-139-1	UM-STAT-505-1
UM-CMPSCI-102-1	UM-FOMGT-301-1	UM-MATH-235-4	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-515-1
UM-CMPSCI-105-1	UM-FOGMT-304-1	UM-MATH-245-1	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-597-B
UM-CMPSCI-120-1	UM-FOGMT-320-1	UM-MATH-300-1	UM-PHYS-190-B	UM-STAT-607-1
UM-CMPSCI-201-1	UM-FOGMT-347-1	UM-MATH-411-1	UM-POL SC-255-1	UM-STAT-705-1
UM-CMPSCI-250-1	UM-FOGMT-413-1		UM-PSYCH-100-1

SELL US YOUR USED BOOKS AND GET CASH FOR YOUR NEW ONES.

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA
(413) 253-3870 253-7816

■ football
continued from page 20

finishing touches on the drive, bulling into the W&M endzone from two yards out to pad the UMass cushion to 34-10.

Lucero's inexperience in the UMass system cost the team on its first possession of the fourth quarter, as a miscue under center led to a faulty snap that the quarterback fumbled away. But the JuCo transfer's stellar outing had already put the Tribe away as even a late William and Mary TD from running back Komlan Lomergan did little to dampen the Minutemen's spirits.

"I thought we worked together well, meaning our offense helped our defense and special teams," Whipple said. "I'm really happy how we

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
David Sanger

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Jeff Howard

I really welcome this break."

Having a week off is just what the doctor ordered for these student athletes, according to their coach.

"Classes start this week, so it gives them time to get oriented into their academics and get prepared for Richmond," Whipple said. "So Kickoff for that Atlantic 10 showdown is slated for 1 p.m.

■ Lucero
continued from page 20

only did the Phoenix native produce astounding passing numbers, he also guided his team to a pivotal Atlantic 10 win in the first ever night game held at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

With the junior's performance, comparisons are already being drawn to Bankhead. Bankhead, who too came to Amherst as a JuCo transfer, guided the Minutemen to a National Championship in 1998.

The numbers that Lucero posted in his debut as a Minuteman are eerily similar to those that Bankhead put up in his first start at UMass.

Lucero was 18-30 throwing the ball for 376 yards and two touchdowns. He also ran for a touchdown.

Bankhead was 26-45 for 323 yards and four touchdowns.

The only difference is that Lucero's start resulted in a 36-16 victory, while Bankhead's was a loss to Delaware 33-30.

With numbers like this it would seem that Whipple would be inclined to keep producing JuCo quarterbacks as starters, but he assures that is not the case.

In the case of Lucero, Whipple stated, "Coaches told me he was very talented, so when we had a chance to get him we went for it. In junior college, he threw eight touchdowns and over 500 yards in one game versus Arizona Western. They all said he was a gamer and he proved it to his teammates." (The preceding quote was from Sept. 4's A-10 teleconference.)

For now it seems as though the critics have been silenced with the performance that Lucero put forth against William and Mary, but the true test will come Sept. 17 when the Minutemen travel to Richmond for another A-10 game with the Spiders.

And if comparing Lucero and Bankhead's first game wasn't eerie enough, like Bankhead traveled to Richmond Stadium for the second starts at the helm of the UMass offense.

Only time will tell if Lucero can get the Minutemen back to the promised land, a National Championship. With a present No. 2 national ranking in its back pocket, this year's UMass squad is poised for another run at the title. If the offense continues to gel under Lucero as it did for Bankhead, Amherst may be once again called "Title Town."

Bad bounce crushes UM in loss to Orangewomen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

CLIFTON PARK, NY – In the game of soccer, where goals are usually at a premium, one bad break can spell a team's downfall.

Such was the case for the Massachusetts women's soccer team on Monday afternoon in a 1-0 loss to Syracuse University at Clifton Commons.

A turnover in the midfield late in the first half resulted in the only goal of the game. Syracuse freshman midfielder Erica Mastrogiacomo capitalized on one of the few UMass miscues on the afternoon and walked in along the left flank before slipping a shot past Minutewomen keeper Julie Podhrasky.

The Maroon and White would battle feverishly in the final half of play to net the equalizer, but SU goalie Katie Karlander made six stops to allow her team to escape with a win.

"It's unfortunate [to lose] because we outplayed them," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "But unfortunately in this game, that isn't always enough. We got a bit unlucky, and that was the difference.

UMass (2-1) had its share of scoring opportunities, including three corner kicks in the second half alone, but could not convert. And, when the Minutewomen did manage to find the net, Karlander was up to the challenge on each occasion.

Ironically, the winning coach in Monday's game was April Kater, a former pupil of Rudy's during a stellar playing career at UMass. The fifth year Syracuse coach was a three-time All-American for the Minutewomen and also won the Hermann Trophy in 1990 as the nation's top female collegiate soccer player.

Needless to say, Kater saw the win as a key victory for her emerging program against one of the most established clubs in the nation.

"It wasn't the prettiest of wins," she said. "But we showed up ready to play today versus a real opponent in UMass. They are a team that is a lot better than they were last year. I'm just really proud of my kids right now."

In 1999, the same two teams played to a 2-2 stalemate at Agawam High School in a game that was highlighted by a disputed game-tying goal by UMass captain Robin Smith in the second half. At first, it seemed like that memory was fresh in the minds of the Syracuse players – that is, until they got off the bus at Clifton Commons.

"This was real upsetting, to put two Division I teams on a field like this," said Kater of what she deemed as poor field conditions. "Last year's game was definitely a motivating factor. But honestly, when we showed up here and saw what was available to compete, the kids put that motivation [from last year's game] behind them and had a new thing to be motivated by."

Regardless of the field conditions, though, the two teams battled fearlessly for 90 minutes to close the book on the second hard-fought affair in as many years.

Now the only question is whether or not this rivalry will continue.

"Yes [I'd like to continue it]," Kater said. "But it will no longer be played again at a neutral site. You can quote me on that."

Podhrasky made three saves in net for the Minutewomen, who will be back in action on Friday at 4 p.m. to play Georgia in the UMass Classic.

Collegian Sports

MOST USED BOOKS STOCK and
AVAILABLE NOW
Save your book receipts and get a 5% REBATE! See store for details!
NO NIGHTMARES
Pick up your Web Decoder for a chance to win free tuition or millions of other prizes & discounts!
Look for the Guaranteed Buyback sticker: a textbook payback you can depend on.
guaranteed BUYBACK
This Book Is Worth 50% of the Purchase Price at Buyback. Guaranteed!
The largest selection of new and used textbooks, for pick up or delivery...
University of Massachusetts UMASS UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST
an partner of follett.com
NEW & USED COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS

BE ADVISED!
PRE-MAJOR ADVISING SERVICES
615 GOODELL BUILDING
Serving University Undeclared and Pre-Major Students
Advisors available
M-F 9:00-4:30

SOUPer BOWL
Grand Opening
- 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
- Bread bowls
- Fresh bread
- All made fresh daily
- also a limited selection of salads

96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

TAG SALE - Multiple Families 20 Nelson Circle, Amherst Saturday, September 9 from 8:00am - 12:00pm Household items NO Clothes

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

CHILD CARE

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50. Housework, car references experience. 413-247-5800

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT JOB
KITCHEN STAFF NEEDED
Work in low pressure, well maintained kitchen. Positions available for both skilled and untrained staff. Located next to campus. Help maintain kitchen and prep and cook meals. Flexible hours. Call today 549-7321

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week.

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk. $7-8 depending on experience. Car essential. 549-1578

SCORE! Prep Part-time Tutors Needed. SAT Math. Tutor one-on-one, in students' homes. Excellent scores & car required. Great pay & flexible hours. (800) 558-6355

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE. Contact Ellen 585-5133

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

WORK STUDY JOBS: Work with infants and children up to six years old. $7.25/hour. Or earn up to two credits. Must be available on Monday nights from 4:30 to 8:00pm.

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Recreation Leader - After School Program The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

EMPLOYMENT

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring councilers. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker
Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Lockers for Rent: $10 for the year. Cheap! Come to rm 428 Student Union.

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICIANS

Wanted: Drummer for church rock/jazz band. Hours: 8:45 am - 11 am Sundays. $60/wk, 40 weeks a year. Call: 549-0431 to arrange an audition. Freshman or Sophomore a plus. We do not discriminate based on gender, race, sexual orientation, or creed. Wanted immediately.

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

TRAVEL

SPRINGBREAK 2001 Hiring On-Campus Reps SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!! Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849 www.gospring-break.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Maxatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

MAKE YOUR OWN HOURS
Sell Spring Break 2001 Trips HIGHEST COMMISSIONS - LOWEST PRICES NO COST TO YOU Travel FREE including food, drink & non - stop parties!!! WORLD CLASS VACATIONS 2000 STUDENT TRAVEL PLANNERS "TOP PRODUCERS" & MTV'S CHOICE (Spring Break Cancun Party Program) 1-800-222-4432

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sales Manager Wanted! Call 1-800-426-7710

Looking for a Job?? Check out The Collegian Classifieds!! It is your link to Employment Opportunities

Welcome Back!!

Need to Advertise??

Looking for Something?

Call The Collegian Classifieds and let us know what we can advertise for you!!

545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Govet to Govet
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WGCH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/ New Haven		35	ZDTV [Tantetive]
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2		Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Going Places: Sydney		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Wall to Wall	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3		News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother 2	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4		News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother 2	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5		News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Variahed		News	Nightline
WLVI	56		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Chick Flick"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	4		Diverce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date	Real TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)						News	Change Heart
WVIT	30		News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61		Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	Friends		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Fraser
WWLP	22		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57		World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40		News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Variahed		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager "Initiations"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Marilyn
WTBS	18		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves (Live)							Ice "Last Man Standing" (1996)
A&E	17		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Mad Dog"		Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One		Investigative Reports		Law & Order	Louis Morris
CNN	24		Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)	Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	53		Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Canned Ham	It's Pat" (aka "Pat Saint") (1994, Comedy) Kevin Bacon,				Stein's Money	Stein's Money	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tiger		On the Inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries		Mysteries of the Unexplained		On the Inside	Real LAPD
ESPN	43		Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	49		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Ice "The Wrong Woman" (1995, Drama) Nancy McKeon,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	42		Ain. Uncensrd	Video Music Awards Opening Act (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)						Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK	46		Pinky & Brain	Thomberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Rugrats	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	45		Slider's "The Weaker Sex"		Ice "Alien Terror" (1996, Horror) Jeff Fahey, Natasha Gregson Wagner,				Invasion Earth (Part 3 of 3)				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	48		Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornadoe! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies (V)		Welcome to Armageddon		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT	44		ER "Welcome Back, Carter"		Pretender "Pyre" (In Stereo)		Ice "Child Star" (1996, Suspense) Shari Belafonte, Noah Hathaway,				Ice "Dead Calm" (1989, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman,		Strip Poker	Nicole Kidman
USA	47		Walker, Texas Ranger		Strip Poker		U.S. Open Tennis: Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)						Strip Poker	Texas Ranger
HBO	50				Ice "Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Rodman, Rob Lowe,		Inside the NFL (N)		Ice "Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock,				Inside the NFL
MAX	51				Ice "Fatal Error" (1997, Action) Casper Van Dien,		Ice "Predator" (aka "Arnold Schwarzenegger,		Fetish (N)		Ice "The Denial of Death" (1996) Corbin Bernsen,		101 Rent Boys
SHOW	54				Ice "Whore" (1991, Comedy) Taylor Dayne,		Ice "Whore" (1991, Drama) Taylor Dayne,		Outer Limits		Rude Awaken		Rude Awaken

Dilbert By Scott Adams

FROM NOW ON, THIS IS GOING TO BE A FUN ORGANIZATION.
WHEN ARE YOU LEAVING?
I HAD NO IDEA THAT A RUBBER CHICKEN COULD HURT SO MUCH.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SIR, ILLINOIS' GOVERNOR HAS POSITIONED ALL OF HIS ACTIONS BECAUSE HIS STATE'S JUSTICE SYSTEM WAS "FRAUGHT WITH ERROR."
GIVEN THE TROUBLING STATE OF JUSTICE FOR THE POOR IN TEXAS, WOULD YOU CONSIDER YOUR OWN MORAL SCRUPLES AND I'LL TELL YOU WHY — AS HAMILTON ONCE SAID, IT'D BETTER TO HAVE A HUNDRED INNOCENT MEN PLEAD GUILTY THAN TO HAVE ONE GUILTY MAN GO FREE.
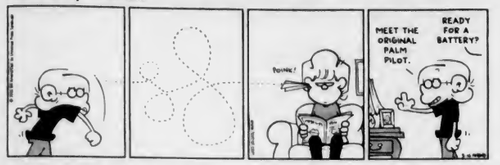
WASN'T THAT JOHN ADAMS?
AND DIDN'T HE SAY THE REVERSE?
LOOK, THE IMPORTANT THING IS HE SAID IT!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MOM, IS IT OK IF I EAT THE LAST POWDERED DOUGHNUT?
SURE.
MOGNCH! CHAMM! SNORPF! GLUMPH! MYUNK! CHEGTH! RLUGGF!
I GAVE YOU PERMISSION TO EAT ONE!
IT WAS A FULL BOX. I HAD TO EAT THE OTHERS TO FIND OUT WHICH ONE.

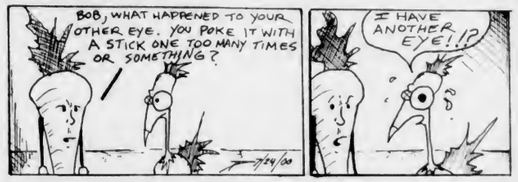
Robotman By Jim Meddick

WE GOT A SHIPMENT OF NON-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS TO MOVE. YOUR JOB IS TO GO THROUGH THOSE BOXES AND THINK UP AN EYE-CATCHING WAY TO SELL THAT MERCHANDISE...
WHY DON'T WE RIG A DISPLAY, LIGHT UP ONE OF THESE BABIES AND HANG A SIGN: NON-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS FOR SALE?
HEY! I JUST GOT A GREAT IDEA!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THE #5 ZINC-PLATED PHILLIPS HEAD WOOD SCREW BIN IS EMPTY
GEEY-DOKEY THAT SHOULDN'T BE A PROBLEM.
I THINK I YES! I THINK WE HAVE THEM IN STOCK!
IF YOU'LL BEAR WITH ME, SIR, I'LL HAVE ONE FOR YOU AS SOON AS POSSIBLE!
20 MINUTES LATER
HERE YA GO, SIR. ONE #5 ZINC PLATED PHILLIPS WOOD SCREW.
I SAY, PHILLIPS HEAD!

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer



Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

GOVERNOR, AN N.R.A. OFFICIAL RECENTLY TOLD ME IF GUNS WERE THEY'D BE WORKING OUT OF A BUSH WANTED HOUSE. ANY COMMENT?
WELL, I THINK IT'S A LITTLE PREMATURE TO BE TALKING ABOUT THAT...
I REALLY HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO SIT DOWN WITH A FLOOR PLAN YET. ANYTHING'S POSSIBLE AT THIS POINT.
GREAT!
N.R.A. HOW MAY I DIRECT YOUR CALL?
JIM, PRESIDENT BUSH, PLEASE.

Horoscopes

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You are likely to be quite adventurous and daring throughout the day, but you may balk at an opportunity a rival offers you after dark.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may have to make even routine things crystal clear for others today, as communication may be quite difficult.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You must be tender, generous, and understanding with those who trust you to show them the way today. Patience is the key!

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You must be willing to look at a difficult issue from more than one perspective today. The unfamiliar may be most beneficial to you.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You will not be able to ignore your own creative impulses today, but you mustn't neglect your more practical responsibilities.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) – It's time you shared that secret with someone close to you. He or she is sure to understand, and can offer you a valid new perspective.

Aries (March 21-April 19) – Someone may accuse you today of making the wrong choice, but the jury is still out. In time you're sure to be vindicated.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) – Something you've not been aware of may become so influential to you today that you are unable to ignore it any longer.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) – Take your cue from someone else who has been in your shoes recently. Be sure you don't shrink from a hidden challenge when it is revealed.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) – You may be able to have exactly what you want by day's end, but you will have to work hard to hang on to it for any length of time.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be unusually stubborn today for no apparent reason. Take care that you don't let your mood become aggressive or abrasive.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your insecurities may be rising to the surface once again today, but a close friend is in a position to see you through a difficult patch.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 73 LOW: 60	HIGH: 77 LOW: 63	HIGH: 80 LOW: 65

Quote of the Day

"If you don't like something, change it. If you can't change it, change your attitude. Don't complain."

–Maya Angelou

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Worcester Breakfast Sandwhich

Chicken Tetrazzini

Spanikopita (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester) (vegetarian)

Sweet & Sour Tofu (Berkshire & Worcester) (vegan)

Garden Burger (Franklin) (vegetarian)

Dinner

BBQ at Stadium

Hamburger

Hot Dog

Chicken Caesar Salad

Vegeburger (vegetarian)

California Chili (vegan)

Cheese Caesar Salad (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

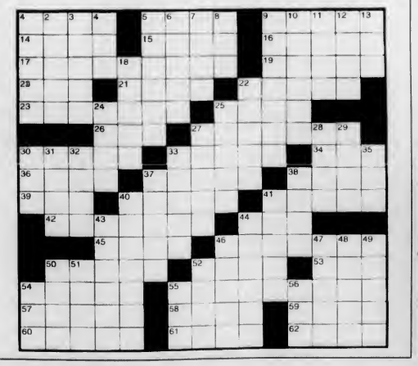
Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	Dave Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Roberto Delgado, Sarah Wingardner

ACROSS
1 Taj Mahal site
5 Pace
9 Caesar's attire
14 Forest dweller
15 Cornbread
16 Singer Bryant
17 Cruise-ship seat
19 Revolt
20 "Born in the —"
21 Actor Foxx
22 Tic
23 Hot
25 Pairs
26 Be indebted
27 Steinbeck's "— Row"
30 Camel stops
33 Dupes
34 Evergreen
36 Baby buggy: Brit.
37 Dnzzling
38 Path
39 "Ballad" ending
40 Cows' homes
41 Thick
42 Quiet
44 Close relative
45 Every
46 Temples of the Far East
50 Cheeky
52 Bandleader Arnaz
53 — cubes
54 Ascend
55 Crunchy morsel
57 Bay window
58 Wild plum
59 Big Foot's cousin
60 Girl in "Peter Pan"
61 Thomas Hardy heroine
62 Idyllic spot

DOWN
1 Make sense
2 Canadian honkers
3 Sum up
4 "Raiders of the Lost —"
5 Globe
6 Sycophant
7 Oklahoma city
8 Apiece
9 Game fish
10 Restless state
11 Pen points
12 Short article
13 Nev. neighbor
18 Teams of workers
22 Fair
24 Ode
25 Early mornings
27 "Alfie" star
28 Pitcher Nolan
29 Urges
30 "To — their golden eyes"
31 Mars, to the Greeks
32 Indian garment
33 Make thirsty
35 Small
37 Cattleman's spread
38 "Tonight Show" host
40 Awful
41 Stray calf
43 Propped
44 Window frames
46 Mexican coins
47 Had supper
48 Perceptive
49 — one's ways
50 Drill
51 Undo
52 Cowgirl Evans
54 Tend the lawn
55 Iowa hrs.
56 25th of a series

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

K	I	S		A	B	Y	S	S		D	O	T
J	U	D	O		B	L	A	N	C		O	P	E	N
A	L	O	U		S	E	P	I	A		G	A	P	E
B	U	L	L	P	E	N		P	R	O	W	L	E	R
			F	O	N	D	A		C	L	O	S	E	D
I	N	S	U	L	T		C	R	E	D	O
G	O	L	L	Y		I	R	I	S		D	E	L	I
E	V	A		P	A	R	E	N	T	S		K	I	D
T	A	P	E		G	O	A	D		I	R	E	N	E
			A	P	I	N	G		A	M	U	S	E	S
C	L	A	R	E	T		E	R	R	O	L
Z	I	N	N	I	A	S		O	M	N	I	B	U	S
A	L	I	E		T	O	R	S	O		N	O	N	O
R	A	T	S		E	A	T	E	R		G	R	I	D
		C	A	T		D	R	E	S	S		S	E	T



COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

TAG SALE - Multiple Families 20 Nelson Circle, Amherst Saturday, September 9 from 8:00am - 12:00pm Household items NO Clothes

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

CHILD CARE

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50. Housework, car references experience. 413-247-5800

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT JOB
KITCHEN STAFF NEEDED
Work in low pressure, well maintained kitchen. Positions available for both skilled and untrained staff. Located next to campus. Help maintain kitchen and prep and cook meals. Flexible hours. Call today 549-7321

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week.

EMPLOYMENT

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk. $7-8 depending on experience. Car essential. 549-1578

SCORE! Prep Part-time Tutors Needed. SAT Math. Tutor one-on-one, in students' homes. Excellent scores & car required. Great pay & flexible hours. (800) 558-6355

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE. Contact Ellen 585-5133

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

WORK STUDY JOBS: Work with infants and children up to six years old. $7.25/hour. Or earn up to two credits. Must be available on Monday nights from 4:30 to 8:00pm.

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Recreation Leader - After School Program The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

EMPLOYMENT

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring councilers. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker
Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Lockers for Rent: $10 for the year. Cheap! Come to rm 428 Student Union.

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICIANS

Wanted: Drummer for church rock/jazz band. Hours: 8:45 am - 11 am Sundays. $60/wk, 40 weeks a year. Call: 549-0431 to arrange an audition. Freshman or Sophomore a plus. We do not discriminate based on gender, race, sexual orientation, or creed. Wanted immediately.

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

TRAVEL

SPRINGBREAK 2001 Hiring On-Campus Reps SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!! Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849 www.gospringbreak.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Maxatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

MAKE YOUR OWN HOURS
Sell Spring Break 2001 Trips HIGHEST COMMISSIONS - LOWEST PRICES NO COST TO YOU Travel FREE including food, drink & non - stop parties!!! WORLD CLASS VACATIONS 2000 STUDENT TRAVEL PLANNERS "TOP PRODUCERS" & MTV'S CHOICE (Spring Break Cancun Party Program) 1-800-222-4432

SPRING BREAK 2001
Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Travel Free
Campus Reps/Group Organizers Wanted
1-800-426-7710
www.SpringBreakDiscounts.com

Looking for a Job?? Check out The Collegian Classifieds!! It is your link to Employment Opportunities

Welcome Back!!

Need to Advertise??

Looking for Something?

Call The Collegian Classifieds and let us know what we can advertise for you!!

545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!
*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER
Just another way that WE GIVE 100%
We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	23	Closet to Closet	33	NBC/22 Springfield
3	CBS/3 Hartford	24	NBC/22 Springfield	34	CNN Headline News
4	CBS/4 Boston	25	CNN	35	CNN
5	ABC/5 Boston	26	CNN Fn	36	CNN Fn
6	PBS/57 Springfield	27	CNN Si	37	CNN Si
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	28	TBS	38	TBS
8	UPN/20 Hartford	29	BET	39	BET
9	Weather Channel	30	College TV Network	40	College TV Network
10	NBC/30 New Britain	31	Univision	41	Univision
11	Fox/61 Hartford	32	Comedy Central	42	Comedy Central
18	PBS/24 Hartford	33	Cartoon Network	43	Cartoon Network
13	WCIOH & HSCN	34	TV Land	44	TV Land
14	International	35	C-Span	45	C-Span
15	UMass Academic TV	36	ZDTV (Tentative)	46	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	WB/New Haven	37	Bloomberg Financial Network	47	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	Sundance	38	History Channel	48	History Channel
19	The Learning Channel	39	HSCN Programming	49	HSCN Programming
20	UVC-TV19
22	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Going Places "Sydney" ⧖		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3) ⧖			Wall to Wall		This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News ⧖	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother 3 ⧖	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo) ⧖		48 Hours (In Stereo) ⧖	News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WBZ	4	News ⧖	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother 3 ⧖	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo) ⧖		48 Hours (In Stereo) ⧖	News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WCVB	5	News ⧖	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⧖	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Variahed ⧖	News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖	Charmed "Heartbreak City" ⧖		Charmed "Chick Flick" ⧖		News	Friends ⧖	Nanny ⧖
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel of Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Friends ⧖	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow" ⧖	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	38	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date	Real TV ⧖	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⧖					Blind Date	Change Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra ⧖	Ent. Tonight	Friends ⧖	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow" ⧖	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Dateline ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Friends ⧖	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		News	Friends ⧖	Frasier ⧖
WWLP	22	News ⧖	NBC News	Wheel of Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Friends ⧖	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow" ⧖	News ⧖	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3) ⧖			Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⧖
WGGB	40	News ⧖	ABC News	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Variahed ⧖	News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ⧖	Judge Judy ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ⧖				Star Trek: Voyager "Imitations"	Med Abn: You	Judge Mathis
WTBS		Roseanne ⧖	Roseanne ⧖	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves. (Live) ⧖							Ent. Tonight	Access Hollyw.
A&E		U.S. Law	Law & Order "Mad Dog" ⧖			Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One ⧖		Investigative Reports ⧖	Law & Order "Causa Mortis" ⧖
CNN	29	Worldview ⧖	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⧖			World Today ⧖		Larry King Live ⧖		Newsstand ⧖	Sports	Moneyline ⧖
COM	28	Saturday Night Live ⧖		Daily Show ⧖	Canned Ham	It's Pat: Sleepless Seas" (1994, Comedy) Sean Baton.				Stein's Money	Daily Show ⧖	Stein's Money
DISC		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tiger		On the Inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries			Mysteries of the Unexplained	On the Inside "Real LAPD"
ESPN		Sportscenter ⧖			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina. (Live) ⧖						Sportscenter ⧖
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV		Ane. Uncensrd	Video Music Awards Opening Act (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)					Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK		Pinky & Brain	Thumbelina	Hey Arnold! ⧖	Rugrats ⧖	Sponge	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI		Sliders "The Weaker Sex" ⧖		Kit "Billy" Kidd's Dad's School" (1997, Sci-Fi) Gary Graham. ⧖				Invasion: Earth (Part 3 of 3) ⧖			Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies IV ⧖		Welcome to Armageddon (N)	Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT		Elf "Welcome Back, Carter" ⧖		Pretender "Pilot" (In Stereo) ⧖		Dead Calm" (1989, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman. ⧖					Law "Dead Calm" (1989, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman. ⧖
USA		Walker, Texas Ranger ⧖		Strip Poker		U.S. Open Tennis: Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)					Strip Poker	Extra Ranger
HBO		(5:00) "Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Rodman. (PG-13)				Inside the NFL (N) ⧖		"Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock. (PG-13) ⧖		G-String Divas		Inside the NFL
MAX		(5:45) "A Perfect World" (1993) Kevin Costner. (PG-13) ⧖		"Philadelphia" (1993) Antonio Banderas. ⧖		"Philadelphia" (1993) Antonio Banderas. ⧖		Fetch (N) ⧖		"The Contract" (1999) Corbin Bernsen. (R) ⧖	101 Rent Boys
SHOW		(5:45) "Jet Setter 2" (1998, Comedy) Colin Quinn. (R) ⧖		"Jet Setter 2" (1998, Comedy) Colin Quinn. (R) ⧖		"Jet Setter 2" (1998, Comedy) Colin Quinn. (R) ⧖		Outer Limits		Rude Awaken. (N)	"Sabateur Boogaloo" (1994) Bruce Ramsay. ⧖

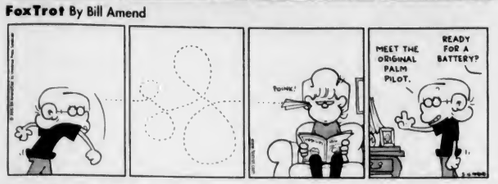
Dilbert By Scott Adams

FROM NOW ON, THIS IS GOING TO BE A FUN ORGANIZATION.
WHEN ARE YOU LEAVING?
I HAD NO IDEA THAT A RUBBER CHICKEN COULD HURT SO MUCH.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SIR, ILLINOIS' GOVERNOR HAS POSTPONED ALL EX-CONVICTS BECAUSE HIS STATE'S JUSTICE SYSTEM WAS "FRAUGHT WITH ERROR."
GIVEN THE TROUBLING STATE OF JUSTICE FOR THE POOR IN TEXAS, WOULD YOU CONSIDER YOUR OWN MORATORIUM?
NO.
AND I'LL TELL YOU WHY — AS HAMILTON ONCE SAID, IT'S BETTER TO HANG A FEW GUILTY MEN THAN TO HAVE ONE INNOCENT MAN PUNISHED.
AUGHH! THAT JEAN ADAMS!
AND DIDN'T HE SAY THE REVERSE?
LOOK, THE IMPERTINENT THING IS HE SAID IT!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MOM, IS IT OK IF I EAT THE LAST POWDERED DOUGHNUT?
SURE.
MOGNCH! CHAWM! SNORPF! GLUMPH! MYUNK! CHEGTW! RLUBGF!
I GAVE YOU PERMISSION TO EAT ONE!
IT WAS A FULL BOX. I HAD TO EAT THE OTHERS TO FIND OUT WHICH ONE.

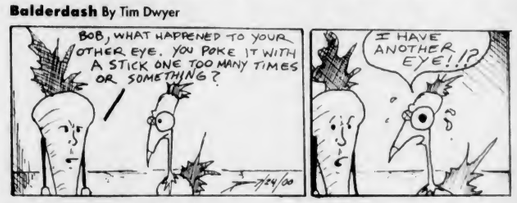
Robotman By Jim Meddick

WE GOT A SHIPMENT OF NON-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS TO MOVE YOUR JOB IS TO GO THROUGH THOSE BOXES AND THINK UP AN EYE-CATCHING WAY TO SELL THAT MERCHANDISE...
WHY DON'T WE RIG A DISPLAY, LIGHT UP ONE OF THESE BABIES AND HAVE A SIGN NOW-STANDARD LIGHTBULBS FOR SALE?
HEY! I JUST GOT A GREAT IDEA!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THE #6 ZINC-PLATED 3½" PHILLIPS HEAD WOOD SCREW IN IS EMPTY.
OKEY-DOKEY THAT SHOULDN'T BE A PROBLEM.
I THINK. I YES! I THINK WE HAVE THEM IN STOCK!
IF YOU'LL READ WITH ME, SIR, I'LL HAVE ONE FOR YOU AS SOON AS POSSIBLE!
30 MINUTES LATER...
HERE YA GO, SIR. ONE #6 ZINC-PLATED 3½" WOOD SCREW.
I SAID PHILLIPS HEAD!

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer



Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

GOVERNOR, AN N.R.A. OFFICIAL RECENTLY TOLD MEMBERS THEY'D BE "WORKING OUT OF A BUSH-WHITE HOUSE. ANY COMMENT?
WELL, I THINK IT'S A LITTLE PREMATURE TO BE TALKING ABOUT THAT.
I REALLY HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO SIT DOWN WITH A FLOOR PLAN YET. ANYTHING'S POSSIBLE AT THIS POINT!
BREAK!
N.R.A.— HOW MAY I DIRECT YOUR CALL?
UM, PRESIDENT BUSH, PLEASE.

Horoscopes

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You are likely to be quite adventurous and daring throughout the day, but you may balk at an opportunity a rival offers you after dark.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may have to make even routine things crystal clear for others today, as communication may be quite difficult.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You must be tender, generous, and understanding with those who trust you to show them the way today. Patience is the key!

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You must be willing to look at a difficult issue from more than one perspective today. The unfamiliar may be most beneficial to you.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You will not be able to ignore your own creative impulses today, but you mustn't neglect your more practical responsibilities.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) – It's time you shared that secret with someone close to you. He or she is sure to understand, and can offer you a valid new perspective.

Aries (March 21-April 19) – Someone may accuse you today of making the wrong choice, but the jury is still out. In time you're sure to be vindicated.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) – Something you've not been aware of may become so influential to you today that you are unable to ignore it any longer.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) – Take your cue from someone else who has been in your shoes recently. Be sure you don't shrink from a hidden challenge when it is revealed.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) – You may be able to have exactly what you want by day's end, but you will have to work hard to hang on to it for any length of time.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be unusually stubborn today for no apparent reason. Take care that you don't let your mood become aggressive or abrasive.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your insecurities may be rising to the surface once again today, but a close friend is in a position to see you through a difficult patch.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 73 LOW: 60	HIGH: 77 LOW: 63	HIGH: 80 LOW: 65

Quote of the Day

"If you don't like something, change it. If you can't change it, change your attitude. Don't complain."

–Maya Angelou

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Worcester Breakfast Sandwhich

Chicken Tetrazzini

Spanikopita (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester) (vegetarian)

Sweet & Sour Tofu (Berkshire & Worcester) (vegan)

Garden Burger (Franklin) (vegetarian)

Dinner

BBQ at Stadium

Hamburger

Hot Dog

Chicken Caesar Salad

Vegeburger (vegetarian)

California Chili (vegan)

Cheese Caesar Salad (vegetarian)

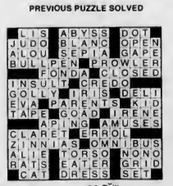
Today's Staff

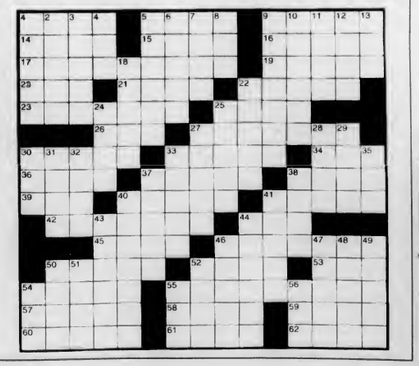
Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	Dave Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Roberto Delgado, Sarah Wingardner

ACROSS
1 Taj Mahal site
5 Pace
9 Caesar's attire
14 Forest dweller
15 Cornbread
16 Singer Bryant
17 Cruise-ship seat
19 Revolt
20 "Born in the —"
21 Actor Foxx
22 Tic
23 Hot
25 Pairs
26 Be indebted
27 Steinbeck's "— Row"
30 Camel stops
33 Dupes
34 Evergreen
36 Baby buggy: Brit.
37 Dnzzling
38 Path
39 "Ballad" ending
40 Cows' homes
41 Thick
42 Quiet
44 Close relative
45 Every
48 Temples of the Far East
50 Cheeky
52 Bandleader Arnaz
53 — cubes
54 Ascend
55 Crunchy morsel
57 Bay window
58 Wild plum
59 Big Foot's cousin
60 Girl in "Peter Pan"
61 Thomas Hardy heroine
62 Idyllic spot

DOWN
1 Make sense
2 Canadian honkers
3 Sum up
4 "Raiders of the Lost —"
5 Globe
6 Sycophant
7 Oklahoma city
8 Apiece
9 Game fish
10 Restless state
11 Pen points
12 Short article
13 Nev. neighbor
18 Teams of workers
22 Fair
24 Ode
25 Early mornings
27 "Alfie" star
28 Pitcher Nolan
29 Urges
30 "To — their golden eyes"
31 Mars, to the Greeks
32 Indian garment
33 Make thirsty
35 Small
37 Cattleman's spread
38 "Tonight Show" host
40 Awful
41 Stray calf
43 Propped
44 Window frames
46 Mexican coins
47 Had supper
48 Perceptive
49 — one's ways
50 Drill
51 Undo
52 Cowgirl Evans
54 Tend the lawn
55 Iowa hrs.
56 25th of a series

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED





The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Thursday, September 4, 2000
20

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith and Michael Kobylanski
sports@daily colegian.com

Lights out on W&M

Lucero brightens night in first start for Minutemen

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It was indeed fitting for the Massachusetts football team to play its 2000 season opener as the first ever night game at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Saturday evening's clash with William and Mary went a long way toward shedding some light on the team's biggest question marks this season.

With an untested transfer at the helm of the offense and one of their top defensive linemen sitting out a one-game suspension, the Minutemen nonetheless cruised to a 36-16 victory over the Tribe before a crowd of more than 10,000 fans. UMass rolled up 529 yards of total offense over the course of the decisive win, riding a 20-point third quarter explosion to the lopsided final tally.

"I told my staff that if we were up by 20 points going into the fourth quarter, we would jump for joy," said UMass coach Mark Whipple. "I thought it would go down to the fourth quarter and because it was hot and humid. fortunately it didn't. I thought it was a great atmosphere."

Any questions about new UMass quarterback Richard Lucero were quickly laid to rest by the Arizona native who shredded the William and Mary secondary for 376 yards and a pair of touchdowns in what would turn out to be the second-best showing by a UMass QB ever. The junior showed great poise right from the game's opening kickoff, guiding the Maroon and White 80 yards down the field in 11 plays and punctuating the drive with a 15 yard touchdown loft to Arian Zullo in the left corner of the endzone.

The Tribe answered UMass' opening fireworks immediately with some magic of its own, as Minuteman safety Jeremy Robinson miscalculated a drive near midfield and W&M wideout Rich Musinski capitalized with an 86-yard sprint to paydirt.

But the Tribe's flamboyance proved costly on its first drive of the second quarter, as W&M quarterback David Corley sent an errant option pitch bouncing across the grass into the arms of UMass linebacker Corey Potter.

Lucero and company made the Tribe pay for its mistake, as the signal caller orchestrated a picture-perfect 66-yard drive off the miscue that he capped with a 6-yard scoring scamper to give UMass the lead.

"I thought Richard Lucero played really well," Whipple said. "Going into the game we didn't know how he was going to perform, and I thought he made great decisions and a bunch of good throws."

The teams hit the locker room at halftime with Lucero's TD spelling the difference, 14-7 UMass. A host's share of the credit for keeping the score so close belonged to Maroon and White punting sensation David Sanger, who coffin-cornered the Tribe on three straight possessions.

The first half had seen William and Mary predictably stacking the line in hopes of stymieing UMass' All-American tailback, Marcel Shipp. That congestion up front had spelled a sluggish 30 minutes of football, but those in attendance were rewarded for their patience once the third quarter unfolded.

The Tribe struck first, moving 64 yards downfield in a mere five plays to set up a 22-yard chipshot field goal from kicker Brett Sterba. But instead of allowing W&M to gain momentum and retake the upper hand, the Minutemen kicked their own game into overdrive and buried the Tribe under three straight touchdown drives.

The first march to glory began at UMass' own 26 yard line and ended 10 plays later when Shipp knifed through the heart of the Tribe defense for a 6-yard TD run.

The senior New Jersey native would go on to notch his first 100-yard game of the season with 104 yards on 30 carries.

The Maroon and White's next drive was less bread-and-butter and more razzle-dazzle, as sophomore receiver Jimmie Howard torched William and Mary corner Ronnie Thomas and took a Lucero pass 55 yards and into the endzone.

Howard finished the game with a team-high 84 yards receiving, while fellow wideouts Zullo (76 yards) and Jeff Howard (83 yards) also chipped in outstanding performances for the Maroon and White Air Force.

"Everyone knows Adrian Zullo can play, but we had four other guys playing a lot who performed well," Whipple said. "I told them that we were going to play all of them, and it was up to them to make the plays. I think they played really well and accepted the challenge."

UMass partayed its third quarter fortunes into a TD hat trick behind fullback Pete Cariello, who turned a 12-yard swing pass from Lucero into a 49-yard gain by cruising down the right sideline past a bevy of hapless Tribe defenders. Shipp again put the Jimmie Howard and the Minutemen defeated A-10 foe William & Mary in the first night game at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium in 117 years. Howard led UMass with 84 receiving yards and scored on a 53-yard strike from quarterback Richard Lucero.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 17

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Richard Lucero

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Todd Bankhead

Passing Attempts	30	Passing Attempts	45
Passing Completions	18	Passing Completions	26
Passing Yards	396	Passing Yards	323
Passing Touchdowns	2	Passing Touchdowns	4
Passing Intercepions	1	Passing Intercepions	0
Rushing Attempts	4	Rushing Attempts	3
Rushing Yards	14	Rushing Yards	11
Rushing Touchdowns	1	Rushing Touchdowns	0
Sacks	1	Sacks	0

JuCo transfer Lucero takes after Bankhead

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Quarterback controversy? That's what the University of Massachusetts football team had much of the summer. As of August 31, the questions have been answered.

The Minutemen came into the season not knowing who there signal caller was going to be. For much of camp head coach Mark Whipple was unsure of whether it would be junior Kelly Seibert, whom he has coached for the past two seasons and was the backup to Maroon and White star Todd Bankhead, or junior college transfer Richard Lucero.

With preparations for William and Mary in his mind, Whipple opted for the more experienced Lucero, who came to Amherst last fall after spending two seasons with Phoenix (AZ) College where he was the Arizona Community College Athletic Conference (ACCAC) Player of the Year as a sophomore.

Choosing Lucero as the starter turned out to be a great move for the Minutemen as he threw for the second most yards in school history (376) in a single game in only his first start for UMass. Not

Turn to LUCERO, page 17

Minutemen drop home opener

Lack of scoring forces UMass defense to be on top

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen failed to shoot down the University of Hartford yesterday, as the Hawks were barely able to avoid the crossbars of the top guns on the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, and fly away from Totman Field with a close victory.

Despite a strong second half, the Maroon and White could not get their sights straight and lock on to the back of the Hartford net. The end result being well fought game, but a 2-1 loss for UMass.

"I thought we played well in the second half, we controlled more of the game, unfortunately we gave up that second goal," said UMass coach Sam Koch.

That goal, which came toward the end of the second half, seemingly came out of nowhere after a series of deflections gave a Hartford player a shot on UMass junior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn.

This event cemented the win for last seasons America East champions and broke a 1-1 tie only after UMass came within one goal ten minutes earlier when senior Benny Hoffman scored off a cross from sophomore teammate Andrew Fichter. However, one would not be enough for Massachusetts who had to play catch up as they entered the second already one goal behind when Hartford scored off a direct kick that came just past the midway in the first half of play.

"They took it to us in the first half which made the game a forty-five minute game, and it is hard to win a forty-five minute game, said coach Koch. I thought for the most part we put them under a lot more pressure and we created a lot more chances, we just didn't put them away and we could have gotten three or four and that would have been a different story."

The game comes as the second loss for the Minutemen in as many games this season, as the Maroon and White entered today's game on the heels of a loss to South

Turn to MEN'S SOCCER, page 15

UMass soars in Boston and grabs 1-0 win

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It might not be quite as one-sided as the Red Sox-Yankees rivalry, but Boston College field hockey fans must be almost as frustrated as their baseball-loving counterparts after watching their hometown squad fall to the Massachusetts field hockey team for the 18th time in the last 19 meetings.

With the 1-0 road win in the unfriendly confines of Alumni Stadium in Boston, the Maroon and White improved to 3-1 on the year while Boston College dropped to 2-1.

Yesterday's defeat was BC's second 1-0 loss in as many years at the hands of UMass, and this year's game played out much the same way that it did last year, in which the Lady Eagles were unable to penetrate the stingy UMass defense, and failed to get a shot by the reach of last year's Atlantic 10 Tournament MVP, Zowie Tucker.

In the 1999 campaign against Boston College, Tucker had three saves on the way to the shutout, while this year she was able to pick up her second shutout of the season and continue the march toward her third straight All-Atlantic 10 selection by rebuffing five Eagle shots.

Senior forward and tri-captain Kristen Schmidt provided all the offense that UMass would need on the day by blowing a shot past Boston College goaltender Jill Dedman at the 11:50 mark of the first half. From there, the Minutemen proceeded to dominate play, out shooting the Lady Eagles 21-8 and garnering a 8-1 lead in penalty corners. In fact, the only dark spot on the day for the Maroon and White was that they failed to tack on an insurance goal in the second half that would have really put the game away.

For the Lady Eagles, goaltender Dedman was one of the lone bright spots and really kept her team in the game by saving 11 UMass shots.

One of the main keys to the game and something four-year head coach Patty Shea had to have been pleased with was her team's ability to get a noticeable penalty corner advantage over their opponent. At the beginning of the year Shea said that the

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Tammy Geryk had her usual strong defensive performance as the Minutewomen defeated Boston College last night, 1-0.

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 16

Twice is nice for Minutewomen

Lilly, Ciocca lead UMass past Albany and UTEP

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

AGAWAM – After using a pair of second half goals to upend Texas El-Paso 2-0 in its season opener, the Massachusetts women's soccer team brought out its proverbial whooping stick on Saturday night against the University of Albany.

Goals by Brooke Bartlett and Kathleen Machamer in the first 10 minutes of the game set the tone for a 9-0 victory over the Great Danes. Freshman Erin Lilly would go on to add a hat trick, while senior Kara Ciocca netted a pair of scores to lead UMass to victory.

Martha Conover and Kara Green also tallied goals for UMass in the win.

"All of the kids got a chance to play, and our level of play really didn't drop at all during the game," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "This game was just a product of a really good three weeks of training."

The second-year Division I program didn't stand much of a chance against the Minutewomen. Albany could only muster two shots on goal in a game where play was predominantly in the Great Danes' half of the field.

Lilly scored her first collegiate goal late in the first half and added two more in the final stanza.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Erin Lilly

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Kara Ciocca

"It was good to get the first one [goal] out of the way," she said. "There were a lot of nerves. This was the first game that I was back at 100-percent [after a pre-season leg injury]."

For Ciocca, a product of nearby Wilbraham, the senior scored twice in a span of 1:07 at the start of the second half. With the two goals, she doubled her goal output from a year ago, while also matching her point total.

"I was pretty psyched before I came into the game," she said. "I felt like I had a lot of juice going."

All in all, 12 different players scored for the Minutewomen in the win over Albany. Kelly Nigh and Julie Podhrasky split time in net for the shutout.

Back on September 25, Katelyn Jones netted the game-winner early in the second half to lead Minutewomen to a 2-0 win. Bartlett put the game away late in the contest with her first goal of the year.

Podhrasky made eight saves in goal for the Minutewomen in the win over UTEP.

Volleyball takes two of three in opening weekend

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team opened their 2000 campaign by taking two out of three matches in a two-day span at the New Hampshire Tournament. The Minutewomen downed the Eagles of Eastern Michigan and the host Wildcats, but fell to Utah. The tournament was held at UNH this past weekend.

Head coach Bonnie Kenny was pleased with the efforts of her team in its opening weekend.

"I thought it was a great opening weekend. I was very pleased," said Kenny.

UMass: 15-3, 15-8, 15-5

In the afternoon match on Saturday, the Minutewomen set down Eastern Michigan in just three games to wrap up their opening weekend tourney. UMass was led by senior Rebecca Hasson, who posted 19 kills in the Maroon and White victory. Junior Lysmarie Llovet and junior Jen Davis made their way onto the leaderboard, each posting 13 digs.

Turn to VOLLEYBALL, page 15

Ice Cube meets up with his old N.W.A. crew to rock da' Centrum. Read more in our continuing series of summer reviews.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Brooke Bartlett and the Minutewomen host Georgia and LIU in this weekend's UMass Classic

ARTS p. 5
SPORTS p. 15

Volume CVII Issue 3
www.dailycollegian.com
Friday, September 8, 2000

Housing shortage addressed

Living with your RA

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

In efforts to relieve the housing overflow, Housing Services offered Resident Assistants (RA's) the opportunity to accept a roommate for a three-week period in return for a $500 dollar stipend.

According to David Vaillancourt, assistant director of housing assignments office, all 200 students moved out this morning into one of the five residential areas.

In return, Housing Services promised an additional stipend of $300 dollars for a period of three weeks that RA's would have a roommate.

However, many RA's were concerned that it would be longer than a period of three weeks before the students would be removed from the RA's space.

Last year, some students were contained in temporary "swing" spaces consisting of lounges for half the semester before they were removed and placed in permanent housing.

Amanda Cronin, a junior resident assistant in Orchard Hill, said she called Housing to be guaranteed that students would be moved out of the RA's room by the end of three weeks.

"They said that if they were in your room for three days or three weeks, you would get paid," Cronin said in a previous interview. "The first thing that caught my attention was that they were offering us three hundred dollars to do it."

When she was reassured of the duration of her roommate, she mailed in her confirmation and waited for her roommate to arrive.

Now, a week after her roommate arrived on campus, Cronin said her life as a student and an RA hasn't changed all that much.

"Everything's cool and she's really an awesome person," Cronin said. "I really lucked out. There have been no RA issues or problems with anything."

Cronin said she didn't have a roommate last semester and having a roommate has posed an ackward situation.

Turn to RA, page 3

"No-shows" ease room shortage

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Last week Housing Services guaranteed that all students living in temporary hotel spaces would be removed and placed in permanent residence hall spaces by today.

According to David Vaillancourt, assistant director of housing assignments office, all 200 students moved out this morning into one of the five residential areas.

The greater demand for housing this semester caused Housing Services to project that 11,058 undergraduates would be requesting on-campus housing, but with only 10,691 spaces, they were left with a housing shortage.

To accommodate the overflow, 200 students were placed in the Campus Center Hotel, the University Lodge and Howard Johnson. The remaining 200 students demanding housing were placed in temporary "swing" spaces such as lounges.

According to Vaillancourt, it has cost the University approximately $32,412 dollars to rent out all three hotels for a period of four nights. As a result, Housing Assignments Office has attempted to re-assign students from the hotels into permanent housing in the residence halls, before removing students from the lounges.

In addition, to accommodate for a larger housing shortage compared to last year, Housing Assignments has agreed to pay Resident Assistants (RA's) an additional stipend of $300 dollars for agreeing to accept a roommate for a period of three weeks.

Four days after students have moved into the residence halls, 200 spaces have become available as a result of what Vaillancourt describes as "no-shows." These students have reserved a space among the residence halls, but they do not show up on campus for various reasons.

In the meanwhile, the remaining 200 students living in "swing" space in the residence halls will be removed as additional vacancies become available.

During last year's housing shortage, some students were contained in lounges for half the semester, but according to Vaillancourt he said he doesn't expect this to repeat.

For him, it is only a matter of time. Vaillancourt explained that approximately 200 students are estimated to drop out of the university or cancel their housing assignment within the first two weeks of classes.

However, there is a risk factor involved and any given semester, the drop-out rate fluctuates, causing some students to possibly be housed in "swing" spaces for the semester. Still, some students living in the hotels for the past four days said it really wasn't that much of an inconvenience. Alex Chassy, a junior food science major, said that even though he received no notification that he'd be living in a hotel, the situation wasn't all that bad.

Chassy transferred from University of Illinois and he said the school has always had a housing shortage problem.

"They had this kind of problem, but I don't recall them ever having to rent out a private hotel," Chassy said.

Gina Larocca, a sophomore nutrition major and transfer student from University of Rhode Island (URI), said she hasn't stayed in the hotel and instead has been commuting from home for the past four days.

"I have all my stuff in my van," Larocca said. "I've been keeping it all there for the past four days."

According to Larocca, she transferred to the University because URI didn't provide on-campus housing. She said it's ironic that she came here for that reason and found herself in a hotel sleeping on a cot with two other females in the same room.

Cameras subject to human error; SGA, students denounce measures

Students voiced concerns over the new security camera in Southwest

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The installation of a surveillance camera in the Southwest residential area was a shock to some students at the University of Massachusetts, but it is only a part of a nationwide movement towards improved security techniques among college campuses.

According to Security Magazine most of the largest school systems have a mixture of electronic and physical security protections. The article states that about 75 percent of schools have police or security officers, 55 percent use ID cards and badges and more than 35 percent employ security cameras on their campuses.

In addition, while only 15 percent of schools rank student violence as a "high risk," 88 percent believe that high-profile school violence incidents could happen in their school system, according to a survey of security practices in school systems.

However, critics of cameras on campus argue that installing cameras to monitor student behavior is an invasion of their privacy.

According Sandy Porter Calabrese, a security expert, cameras can be used to monitor and control situations. He writes that if Columbine High School had cameras that could be remotely monitored, the police could have seen exactly what was happening to the students and where the gunmen were in the building. In these types of incidents, he says security cameras can be used to prevent tragedy.

However they are not effective in decreasing tragedy if they are vulnerable to human error and not operated in the correct way to maximize security measures. Don Sadler, a security expert among schools, said personnel need to be trained on proper use of the system and user errors, ranging from overusing a VCR tape to forgetting to put the tape in the VCR at all, can influence the effectiveness of a security mechanism.

Lastly, he notes that security personnel should not take their systems for granted and make sure proper training is followed through in ensuring that human error is avoided in emergency situations.

The Student Government Association (SGA) Trustee Seth Avakian and President Jeff Howe have expressed their discontent with the University's decision to install the camera without discussing alternative methods in achieving safety on campus.

The camera is positioned on the side of John Quincy Adams overlooking the area known as "the pyramids." The video will only be reviewed after emergencies are reported to police.

Navy bomb tests disputed in Puerto Rico

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

After nearly a year of direct controversy, the battle between the United States and Puerto Rico over bombing rights on the island of Vieques reached crisis status this week.

On Tuesday, two warships from the US Navy completed bombing practices in Puerto Rico without the supervision of the Puerto Rican government. This was seemingly in direct violation to the orders given by President Clinton that require the presence of authorities from the territory during any bombing.

Residents of the island of Vieques began serious protests against the test bombings in April of this year when David Sanes, a resident and patrolman of the island, was killed on the range by two misdirected, 500-pound bombs. The fatality was the first in over six decades of test bombing on the island.

In addition, protesters to the test bombings claimed that it destroyed area wildlife and fishing grounds, contaminated water supplies and caused a cancer rate of 40-percent higher than the rest of Puerto Rico due to toxic residue.

On June 27 of this year, residents of Vieques became violent when they attacked and injured two Navy patrolmen in a confrontation at sea. Over 162 protesters were arrested while they were trying to disrupt the bombing on the island range and caused injury.

Due to this controversy, President Clinton ordered that the Navy limit their test bombing in the area and use only non-explosive bombs and shells. He also established a committee to look at the effects of the bombing on the island, and ordered that the Puerto Rican government must be present and aware of any bombing taking place on the island, and that the bombing must be announced 15 days in advance.

"We were made aware of bombing practices last Friday and we thought they were going to begin next Monday, but they started yesterday (Tuesday Sept. 5)," said the sub-commissioner of Municipal Affairs, Johnny Colon, in a statement to the Puerto Rican newspaper El Nuevo Dia. "There must have been bad communication," he said.

No one from the Puerto Rican government was present for the test bombings to be sure that the bombs were either cement or sand filled, as President Clinton stipulated. Also, residents did not see signs about the cited bombing and claimed that they felt a vibrating sensation similar to the five bombs detonated previous to the presidential ordinance.

COURTESY METROTECS.NET
Puerto Ricans protest the recent bomb tests over the island of Vieques

Residents of Puerto Rico are expressing their displeasure about the situation to the President himself on Friday, September 22 at noon in Lafayette Park in front of the White House. The protesters and people of Vieques will be there for the National Day of Solidarity and for the struggle with the Navy to stop the bombings and leave the city.

According Rene Gonzalez, a member of Boricuas Unidos a Puerto Rican RSO on campus, the issue has been widely discussed within the organization. Members of the organization have been in contact with citizens of Puerto Rico regarding the incident and are deeply concerned about the issue.

SGA seeks to involve campus with politics

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) has reconvened, and while their first official meeting won't be until the beginning of October, their summer is over.

One of their main tasks this year will be to get the word out about who they are and what they do. To them, national politics can often seem confusing, distant and impersonal, but campus politics, involving individuals elected by students, shouldn't, theoretically, evoke the same feelings.

Junior David Lively was incredulous when asked what he knew about the SGA, saying, "You want a quote from me about what the SGA is?" Senior Eric Wisneski merely asked, "The Student Government Association?"

Earlier this week Jim Eltringham, the Speaker of the Senate, laid out the basic structural outline for the SGA.

Like our national government, the SGA is broken up into three branches: executive, legislative, and judicial. According to Eltringham, the legislative branch, known as the Student Senate, is "as representative of the student body as we can manage," but members of the Student Judiciary and the Executive Cabinet are a crucial part of the SGA as well. Judiciary and cabinet members are appointed by SGA president Jeff Howe and do not have a vote in the Student Senate. They are, however, encouraged to voice their opinions.

The only people who can vote in the senate are senators who are elected each fall by the students from each residential area. Senate elections this fall will occur at the end of September.

While keeping abreast of national politics can be a rather laborious task, following the UMass presidential campaigns are considerably easier: the SGA President and Student Trustee are elected each spring. Last April, Jeff Howe and Seth Avakian were re-elected as President and Trustee respectively.

Among Howe's responsibilities is the job of implementing the legislation passed by the senate. Avakian's role as Trustee is somewhat more complicated. The student trustee is a member of the Board of Trustees, the body with the ultimate say on all decisions made by the University of Massachusetts. That includes campuses in Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell.

Avakian is not, however, an official member of the SGA and consequently does not have a vote. But the trustee's voice is an important one to the SGA, as it is a link to the Board.

Besides their official duties, Howe and Avakian want to involve the campus more in the SGA's political events. On a campus where some students, including Eric Wisneski, don't even know that meetings take place, the SGA administration wants to see changes.

Both Eltringham and Howe insist that SGA members would love it if more students would come to meetings or got involved in other ways.

"You pour your heart and soul into this just to get stuff done," said Eltringham, "stuff that will make a difference to people, and you want people to come see what you're doing."

And Howe would like to see more students "taking issues they have with the University and bringing them to the SGA [to help] make us aware of the problems that are going on campus," With more student participation, Howe said that SGA members will be better able to "adequately act on behalf of all portions of the campus population."

He believes that if students would come to more meetings they would "lose some of their preconceived ideas about what the SGA is."

Eltringham went on to point out that when students go to SGA meetings and see things getting done, they then recognize their senators as "efficient tools to foster change on campus."

Some of those changes include little things that most students probably miss. In 1998, Eltringham was at an SGA meeting during which Cyndy Gargano (Class of 2000), then senator and later Secretary of University Police in the Executive Cabinet, proposed a bill to post bus schedules at all bus stops around campus. The bill was passed that night and now, two years later, Eltringham said he still thinks of Cyndy when he sees the bus schedules in the stops.

The first SGA meeting of the school year will be on Wednesday, October 4 at 7:30 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room in the Student Union.

Store closed after sting

By Jolene Crancer
Daily Evergreen (Washington State U.)

(U-WIRE) PULLMAN, Wash. – Bob Enslow, the owner of the Corner Market in Adams Mall, knows the law. So do his clerks, and according to him, they follow the law to the letter.

But, last week when Pullman police conducted a sting operation to see what stores are properly checking identification on alcohol sales, a clerk at the Corner Market was not following the law.

Three other stores in Pullman also were cited for selling alcohol to minors.

The Corner Market, Fairco Mini-Mart, Pullman Safeway and Hico were cited by the Pullman police for not checking the identification of two underage Washington State University Police Department interns who tried to purchase alcohol, said Glenn A. Johnson, public information officer for the Pullman Police Department.

"My clerks know to check customer identification," Enslow said. "And they do."

He believes the problem with checking ID arises when people claim to forget their ID cards and try to hassle the clerks into allowing their purchase.

When the police targeted the store last week, Enslow was just down the hallway, fixing a delivery mishap.

"When I'm there, nothing like this happens," he said. Enslow said he tries to be at the store from 10 a.m. to after midnight every day.

Store clerks fear physical assault and harassment from customers who try to intimidate them into not checking ID, Enslow said. Because of fear, clerks may not check ID when the customer looks old enough, he said.

Enslow said some customers threaten the clerk's safety when asked to show ID, causing clerks to worry about getting hone safely after their shift.

He estimated Shakers and his store either confiscate or refuse 10 to 15 suspicious or illegal ID cards per week.

Enslow said he can recall walking around the Adams Mall at night and stopping by the Shakers ID checkers.

"They always stop me and tell me how many cards they have that night and they always look proud that they're doing a good job when they show me."

Enslow probably will have to close the store for seven days as a penalty for his second violation. He estimated he will lose at least $20,000 in sales.

"It's a shame because we have other things than alcohol here," he said. "There is food and milk. And for those students without cars, it's going to be a big inconvenience for them to walk all the way to Dissmore's and back again."

Stores that sell alcohol to minors once face a five-day closure or fine, and stores that sell for a third time face a possible 30 day closure, a spokesman for the State Liquor Board said.

"During our employee meeting after the citation, I told all my clerks to start carding anyone under 30 years old, no matter what the situation," Enslow said.

All stores in Pullman that sell alcoholic beverages were warned by a hand-delivered letter Aug. 4, Johnson said. The letter told each store of the police department's plans to check for state liquor law compliance during the next few weeks and throughout the school year.

The letter also warned that customers might be checked for proper identification after exiting the store. Two of the stores cited last week had the letter posted within view of the cash registers.

Lines, lines everywhere there are lines...

It your returning, you know about them. If you are new, get used to them

Special week recognizes Black Unity

By LaKesha Washington
The Shorthorn (U. Texas Arlington)

(U-WIRE) ARLINGTON, Texas - Black Students Unity Week has been resurrected by students who say more needs to be done to enhance the relationships between black organizations on the University of Texas Arlington campus.

The week begins Sunday and runs through Sept. 15.

"BSU Week is the brainchild of minority students that have attended several leadership conferences over the past two years," said sociology senior Chedena Haves, one of the re-creators of the week.

The students said they felt the African American student organizations on campus were lacking unity.

Minority students from LNCFE - National Association for the Advancement of Colored People - Center for Multicultural Cooperation, Student Development and National Pan-Hellenic Council came together during the university's Aspire Higher Leadership Retreat in August and were encouraged to take what they had learned from that experience and others to bring something positive back to the campus.

These students were assertive and following their natural leadership tendencies," said Zeb Strong Jr., assistant dean of students. "That is something to be said about the quality of UTA's student leaders."

The students understand the philosophy of why students should get involved," he said. They see the need, and they are moving towards satisfying that need."

The week is intended to keep up with the tradition of organizational unity here. The NAACP sponsored the last BSU Week in 1995. It has always been an event most organizations tried to participate in, Strong said. All student organizations on campus are encouraged to participate in the week's activities and work toward the common goal of uniting students of color on campus.

The students want others to embrace the diversity here and enhance the social environment.

It is a great opportunity for the entire student body to learn more about other organizations and what they are doing on campus," said broadcast senior Tamika Verdell, president for the National Pan-Hellenic Council. "I hope everyone gets involved."

Student retention is also the goal of BSU Week. The week gives new students on campus the opportunity to see others involved in campus life.

"This is an early retention tool for new students. If students can see that this campus is alive and full of activity, they will want to stay here," said public relations junior Sherrell Jackson, who attended the retreat.

"It is important for new students to find a place early," Strong said. "It brings students into the social fabric of the university."

The university's involvement shows its commitment to the students they brought here, Haves said.

The African-American Faculty and Staff Association is working alongside the students in promoting the week. The association is concerned with retention and identification of needs of minority students. The association's president, Robert Bing, will formally introduce the association to students Monday at the Black Student Organization Mixer.

Clinton email archived

By Michael Stroh
The Baltimore Sun

When Bill Clinton and his staffers vacate the White House in January, they'll leave behind a historic mess: eight years' worth of memos, snapshots and bureaucratic bric-a-brac that must be preserved for posterity by the National Archives, the government's official record keeper.

And, oh yes, there's also the little matter of 40 million e-mails.

While the Clinton administration isn't the first to have electronic mail, it's the first to amass so much of it.

Recorded on thousands of magnetic computer tapes, the messages will constitute the largest single deposit of digital records in the history of the National Archives.

They could be a gold mine for future historians. Dashed off by nearly 2,000 White House employees, the e-mails promise the most candid chronicle of day-to-day life inside 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. since Richard Nixon's Oval Office tape recorder.

"Historians live by documents," says Stanley Kutler, presidential biographer and author of "Abuse of Power: The New Nixon Tapes."

"I see e-mail as a tremendous boon to historians trying to reconstruct a record."

But they have become a royal headache for government archivists, who are struggling to figure out how to store and exhibit e-mail and other important electronic records for centuries to come.

The State Department will soon start shipping a million electronic diplomatic messages a year to the Archives. The Defense Department is digitizing its enormous storehouse of personnel records, which it plans to dump on archivists in 2002.

"We're up against the limits of science right now in trying to deal with what is actually a basic archival problem: How do you manage a collection of hundreds of millions of things over time?" says Ken Thibodeau, an electronic-records expert at the National Archives.

To solve the digital quandary, the National Archives has embarked on an ambitious $130 million project to build a next-generation electronic records archive that will make these documents as easy to store and retrieve as those on paper.

Historians and political junkies say it can't arrive soon enough.

Already 6,000 computer tapes from the Reagan and Bush administrations sit in a chilled vault on the agency's College Park, Md., campus. The tapes are thought to contain millions of e-mails, the majority of which have never been seen by outsiders - and won't be until the new electronic archive is finished.

In the early 1980s, the National Security Archive, a nonprofit Washington group that promotes public access to government documents, used public-records laws to obtain nearly 4,000 White House e-mail messages.

It printed the best of them in a book, "White House E-mail: The Top Secret Computer Messages the Reagan/Bush White House Tried to Destroy."

"White House e-mails are phenomenal," says Tom Blanton, NSA executive director. "They're so urgent and immediate and chatty and informational. And everyone who wrote these e-mail believed they would never see the light of day."

Blanton says many of the e-mails contained "wonderful little candid comments" by staffers about each other, well-known Washington politicians and visiting foreign dignitaries. They revealed internal turf battles, horseplay and office romances.

"They didn't make any effort to hide anything," electronic-records expert Ken Thibodeau says. Because it encouraged such candor, the White House e-mail computer system became a favorite target of lawyers and congressional investigators soon after it was installed in 1982.

It was e-mail between former National Security Council staffer Oliver North and his superiors that helped congressional investigators flesh out the Iran-contra scandal during the Reagan era. And electronic kvetching between onetime White House secretary Linda Tripp and intern Monica Lewinsky bolstered the impeachment case against Bill Clinton.

Perhaps recognizing the trouble e-mail might cause, the three most recent presidents have tried to prevent their administration's e-mail from leaving the White House. (It's unclear whether Reagan, Bush or Clinton ever sent any e-mail, but Clinton receives it at both his official e-mail address and a secret one.)

The Reagan administration planned to quietly destroy its electronic records, while Bush struck a secret deal on his last day in office for "exclusive legal control" of his tapes.

Only a series of legal battles against the government in the late 1980s by a coalition of public-interest groups saved the tapes. The Clinton administration tried but failed to have those court decisions reversed.

The upshot: it is the first administration to be definitively bound to preserve its electronic correspondence.

Now it's up to the National Archives to make sure that these electronic documents hold up as long as the original Constitution or Bill of Rights. It's not easy. Paper documents degrade over centuries. Electronic documents are far more fragile, dependent on ever-changing technologies. The fear is that today's digital information could become trapped on obsolete technology and be lost to scholars.

E-mail is especially tricky because it contains not just text but embedded spreadsheets, photos, music, even movies, all of which require their own proprietary software to display.

Archivists surmise they'll need a system that can cope with more than 3,000 software formats to handle all the digital records they're expecting to get.

"The tricky part for the National Archives is they have to be able to present everything in the collection 100 years in the future when all this technology has changed," says Reagan Moore, a computer scientist at the San Diego Supercomputing Center, which has teamed up with the National Archives to develop its new electronic-records archive.

MERCYhouse
It's a church

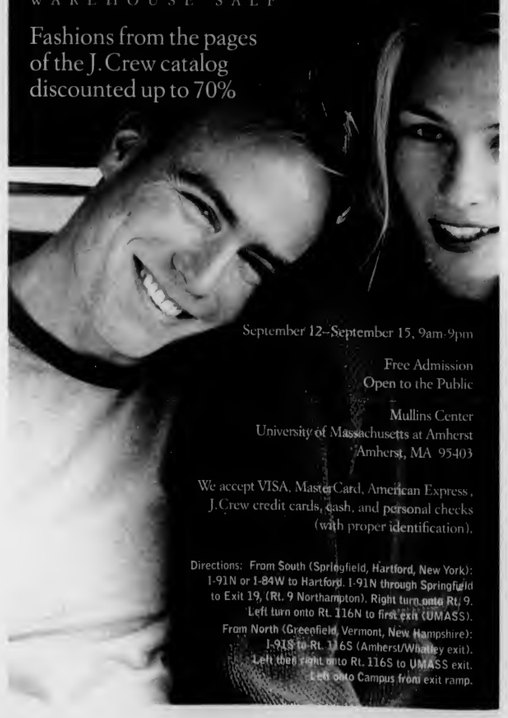
Opening Morning
Sunday, September 10th at 11am
Jones Library Conference Room
43 Amity St, Downtown Amherst

Map of downtown

www.knowmercy.org
374-7532

J.CREW
WAREHOUSE SALE

Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%



September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm

Free Admission
Open to the Public

Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403

We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).

Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS). From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whatley exit). Left then right onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Left onto Campus from exit ramp.

Radio station founded for alternative music

By George Zabolski
Oklahoma Daily (U. Oklahoma)

(U-WIRE) NORMAN, Okla. - A lot of University of Oklahoma students don't like the lack of music options in the metro area. A group of entrepreneurial students have decided to do something about it.

Stardogradio.com is a Web-based radio station run out of Oklahoma City. Vice President Adrian Kent, Public Relations Director Wes Welch and Webmaster Lee Craddock are OU students and co-founders of the alternative rock site.

"The main reason we've started it is because there is no alternative radio station for people on the OU campus to listen to," said Welch, philosophy junior. "We've got a lot of alternative music that no one here has ever heard of."

Kent, a first-year law student, said the station is geared toward students, because he finds nothing on the air that he wants to listen to.

"I just want to make a radio station that an under-represented age group wants," Kent said. "Because they don't have the spending power, they're not going to get what they want on the radio."

The station has a playlist of about 1,600 songs, Welsh said. With a personal computer and a copy of Winamp software, users can listen to Stardogradio.com's alternative music selection 24 hours a day. The entire playlist is online, and with a click of a button listeners can easily request their favorites.

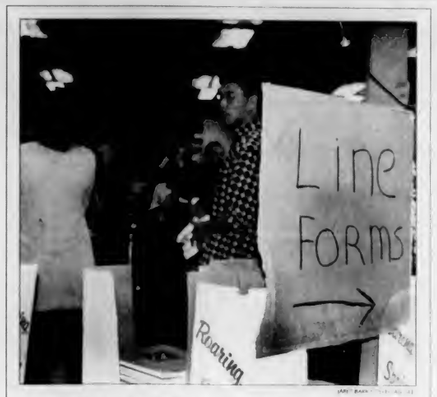
"In comparison to regular radio, or even the Wire, the listener can control what is played on the radio," Welch said.

The site has two audio streams available, a high-band for listeners with fast connections and a low-band for modem users. The high-band offers CD-quality music.

From 6 p.m. to midnight Fridays listeners can tune in to The Happy Hours, a live show put on by DJs. Listeners can interact with the DJs through chat rooms, e-mail and a toll-free phone number. A live Web cam lets them see the action.

Kent said anything goes on the show.

"There are no rules," said Kent, who goes by the handle Pappy on the show. "We can say what we want, we can play what we want."



Students wait in line in the newly privatized Textbook Annex

School newspaper retains journalistic independence

By Tim Logan
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. - The Faculty Senate thinks some things should change at Notre Dame. It also thinks some things should stay the same.

One thing that should definitely stay the same is The Observer's complete editorial and advertising independence from the University, senators said Wednesday. They voted 20-1 in favor of a resolution saying Notre Dame's student newspaper has done nothing that would warrant the University changing its status.

"We think that nothing has happened in the last 34 years, and nothing happened last year, to justify that," said philosophy professor Ed Manier, who chairs the Student Affairs Committee which proposed the resolution.

The measure passed with very little debate among the whole Senate, which also passed a motion in May asking University President Father Edward Malloy to withdraw his policy banning advertising from homosexual groups in the paper.

Wednesday's resolution said no "modification or further codification of [The Observer's] current status" should be made and that allegations of editorial impropriety against the paper should be dealt with in "good faith" between its editorial board and the offended party, without University intervention.

Members of the Student Affairs Committee said that The Observer's track record was strong enough to maintain their independence, and that no incident had come up justifying a change in that status.

The Observer has been criticized in past years for a few isolated incidents, including a 1997 comic that many Hispanic students found offensive, and an advertisement run in 1998 by a group which denies the Holocaust. But Manier said those events are not enough to warrant placing The Observer under the control of Student Affairs or a faculty advisor.

The criticism The Observer has taken in the past does not rise to the level of serious charges of editorial irresponsibility or impropriety," he said.

The issue of The Observer's independence has come to the forefront in the past year, since Malloy said the newspaper was not allowed to run ads from homosexual student groups and other organizations that "espouse positions contrary to the moral teaching of the Catholic Church."

■ RA

continued from page 1

"The room's a little crowded because they give RA's furniture plus there's now an extra bed in here," Cronin said. "She's never here when I'm here and I'm barely here, so it hasn't been a problem."

In fact, Cronin said she wouldn't mind having her roommate stay beyond the three-week period.

"I'm not in a hurry to have her leave," Cronin said. "I was hesitant because I didn't know if the university was going to keep her here for more than three weeks, but I wouldn't mind her staying here longer because I don't mind having a roommate."

Photographers needed!
Come on down to the Campus Center Basement and talk to Jarett

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS

NOW HIRING
$8.75/HR
TO START

No experience necessary.
Paid training program.
Flexible hours to fit your schedule.
Travel pay calculated from campus.

Must be 18 years of age or older and
Have dependable transportation and a phone.
RGIS is an equal opportunity employer.

Call to set up an interview.
(413) 731-6910
Tuesday-Friday
10am-3pm
NO MONDAY CALLS!

MAKE $ BEFORE BREAKFAST!

As a delivery driver or distribution manager for the UMass Daily Collegian you'll have all your work done before classes.

If you are interested & available in the mornings, please contact:

Shawn Ilinitch at the UMass Daily Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center or by calling 545 -3500.

confidence, pride,
[grit]
and plenty of time
to shower before calculus.

In Army ROTC, you'll get to do some pretty challenging stuff. Stuff that builds character and discipline. Not to mention muscles. You'll also learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. Talk to your Army ROTC advisor to find out more. And get ready to sweat a little.

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

School protects sexual rights

By Rolando Garcia
The Battalion (Texas A&M U.)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE STATION, Texas - New rules were posted Aug. 15 on the Texas A&M University student rules Web site, which is maintained by the Department of Student Life, listing sexual orientation as one of the protected categories covered by anti-discrimination - but with in 24 hours, the new clause was removed and the previous wording, which did not list protected groups, was reinserted.

In a statement released at the time, University President Dr. Ray Bowen said he deferred the new wording because there were widespread misconceptions of what the clarification meant, and he emphasized that the University's basic policy had not changed.

"Dr. Bowen wanted a University dialogue about the intent of the change, and he is now satisfied with the proper level of understanding there is," said Brent Paterson, director of the Department of Student Life. "I've met with some concerned students - staff, faculty and GLBTA (Gay, Lesbian Bisexual, and Trans-gendered) Aggies) to bring about some understanding as to what Bowen intended."

The University Statement on Harassment and Discrimination now reads: "Texas A&M University, in accordance with applicable federal and state laws, prohibits discrimination, including harassment, on the basis of race, color, national or ethnic origin, religion, sex, disability, sexual orientation or veteran status."

Associate Vice President for Student Affairs Dr. Bill Kibler said the new clause is not a change in policy, but simply a rewording of an existing rule meant to clarify that University rules do protect gay students from harassment.

"The University doesn't tolerate harassment of any student for any reason, including sexual orientation," Kibler said. "For example, if a student in a residence hall is harassed because he's gay, the University will take specific action. We want gay students to know that they, too, are protected, and that if they bring forth reports of harassment, we can do something about it."

In fall 1999, Bowen vetoed a proposal passed by the Student Senate and Faculty Senate to specifically prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, citing the legal liabilities that would be placed on the University if it extended anti-discrimination protection to categories not covered by state and federal law.

In a statement announcing the change, Bowen stated, "in accordance with applicable federal and state law," which ensures that the rewritten rule does not contradict his original position by extending legal protections that would create legal liability for the University.

None of this, however, dampened the enthusiasm of gay student activists upon hearing of Bowen's decision.

"I think it's a very progressive step for the University to acknowledge gay and lesbian students and explicitly say that harassing and discriminating against them is not OK," said Ann Hintz, a proponent of the addendum and a senior sociology major. "It sends a clear message that gay students are an equal part of the Aggie community."

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Is their eye solution enough?

With the placement of a camera in Southwest, the University of Massachusetts has moved ever closer to invading the personal lives of students. And that isn't the camera's greatest problem.

Of course, it is possible that as a result of this invasion security might be improved, but improved where? In the "Pyramid?" And if security is improved in only the Pyramid how is that any improvement at all?

It isn't.

If anything, it's a shortsighted view concerning the problems of UMass security. On a large campus such as ours, living a totally safe life is a near impossibility. There is always the possibility that, considering all of the people on campus, something will happen and nobody will be there to help. It's a nasty fact, but it's a truth. Solutions for the problem are everywhere and nowhere, each held back by its own limitations.

Adding lighting to the campus is a good idea, but in an empty part of campus, what purpose does additional light serve other than giving a possible victim another few seconds to escape a situation? Those extra seconds might prevent a situation, but isn't there a better way?

Of course there is, but UMass would have you believe that cameras are the way. If we add more cameras, goes the line of reasoning, people will be scared into not committing crimes.

But, just as easily as a camera could be used to identify a student attacking another student, it could be used to identify a student with a case of Budweiser. If that student was allowed to have the case in the first place, isn't that a precious waste of valuable resources?

Yes, but UMass is apparently trying to avoid using the most valuable of resources to solve the security problem; money.

It would cost money to add more officers on the campus, but that would help to solve the problem. It would cost money to have those officers constantly patrolling, but it too would go a long way to solving the problem. But is UMass willing to make those kinds of expenditures?

Unfortunately, this newspaper is willing to bet that it isn't.

UMass has consistently offered up little money to any needy situation on campus, and the issue of safety and the cameras is no exception. But in a way the University's solution is an exception: money is indeed being spent on surveillance equipment that not only can't fix the current problem, but creates more problems concerning the issue of privacy.

When students are worried about their private lives being invaded, when the University is unwilling to tell anyone where, exactly, the camera is, and when Javier Cevallos promises students that we will see more cameras on campus before we see less, what message is sent to our student body?

That UMass believes it to not be trustworthy, but instead dangerous and a consistent threat to itself. Such distrust, on a campus where overall student morale seems to be under the constant strain of controversy, does nothing to better the situation.

As a newspaper, we believe that UMass should do more to fix the problems and less to only Band-Aid them. Sure, cameras might decrease crime in the Pyramid, but what about the rape trail, or Sylvan, or the pond? It takes more than a barrage of cameras to solve our problems, and we hope the UMass administration will continue to look.

MTV: making sex unsexy

MIKE DELANO

If Maxim weren't enough to make one lose all faith in pop culture, along comes something else that would prompt even the most forgiving of viewers to twist their yambags into a tourniquet. Yes, we've got a bigger problem now. The item in question? MTV's late night "sex" show, Undressed. If you've been lucky enough not to have seen it (that means you don't have MTV), it features a talented young cast of Oxford acting school grads who have frank discussions about sexual issues as well as occasionally acting out vignettes as a forum for charged performances regarding relevant teen issues. Wait, no, my fault, that's not Undressed, that's a far better show that doesn't exist.

Undressed is, in reality, cashing in on the "reality TV" craze by placing a hidden camera in the waiting room for Abercrombie and Fitch model try-outs, wherein a mysterious voice sometimes prompts them to strip and/or act out some ridiculous sex dramedy. Undressed can't be a drama, since the only emotion generated by the show is the rage that results in learning that another episode marathon will be replacing the few decent hours of programming on MTV. It also can't be a comedy, because I have seen funnier heart surgery footage than what is meant to induce laughter in this half-hour of agony. It sure as hell isn't reality TV, because I am currently in college and my chances of a second-hand sexual encounter favor the loud slapping and moans of pleasure down the hall over stumbling into a room of beautiful people playing strip poker. So how can you define Undressed? Easy: crap.

While many of my more enlightened peers have since given up hope of ever seeing a video played on MTV, I have not yet accepted that they are totally forgotten, and I see any show that may take away from video time worth examining to see what I am getting instead. Beavis and Butthead and Daria are two shows that I have no problem occasionally ceding some video time for. Of course, both of those cartoons have characters more real and developed than any you will see on Undressed.

Expectedly, MTV loves to work in videos or music from videos into all of their shows, no matter how absurd it may be for certain programs. Videos were brilliantly worked into B&B, since rock videos were no doubt a part of the lives of those two teenage dirtbags. On Undressed, however, the music they work in is often absurd and hilariously forced.

MTV Exec: What should we use to score the scene where Sandra tells Hank she may be pregnant?

Exec #2: Hmm, well, it has to be something completely inappropriate, so I'd go for "Party Up" by DMX.

Exec #1: Bingo.

Thus, the finished scene ends up a lot like this:

Sandra: Hank, I don't know how to tell you this, but...

DMX: Y'all gon make me act a fool, up in here, up in here!

Hank: We'll get through this together...

DMX: Listen, your ass is about to be missin'!

Fear not, though, all hope is not lost. According to the Undressed section of mtv.com, the show needs music, and they welcome your contribution! My suggestions: Discharge's "The Possibility of Life's Destruction" for the opening credits, and Minor Threat's "I Don't Wanna Hear It" for every conversation between two characters.

Undressed has something else in common with Maxim in addition to its status as the yellow snow of pop culture: no nudity. Of course, this is expected; it is MTV, after all. But, like Maxim, Undressed would like to think of itself as somehow "respectable" entertainment since they don't show ans naked bodies. Undressed thinks it's a class act and that it's much better than that soft-core movie on at the same time on Cinemax. Don't fool yourself, Undressed. At least Co-Ed Carwash IX doesn't pretend to be anything that it's not, making sure every plot twist will end in a festive car wash. For honest entertainment, look elsewhere than Undressed.

The show definitely has its fans; after all, there's a reason it's on 24 hours a day. There are a few web sites dedicated to the series, including one dedicated to a single character on the show, the unfortunately named Renzo. And there is already an established anti-Undressed site on the web, dedicated to watching every show and making fun of it. That's more energy than I care to spend on the show, but more power to them.

In the end, Undressed is crappy, but at least it's not dangerously crappy. You can get together with a group of friends and have a good laugh as the show tries to provide some semblance to real-life, but when these watching sessions become more frequent, that's when it's time to pull the plug. Once and awhile is fine, but if you're a regular watcher, there are far better things to be doing than watching Undressed for extended periods of time. That way, when someone asks you what you did last night, your answer won't involve Renzo.

Mike Delano is a Collegian staff member

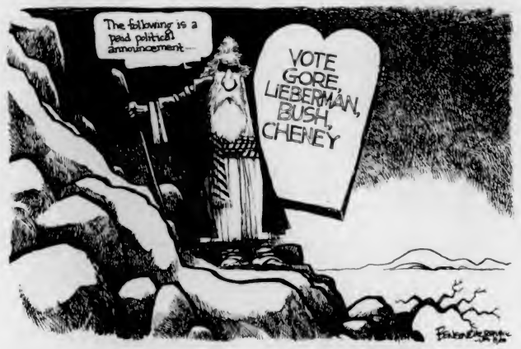
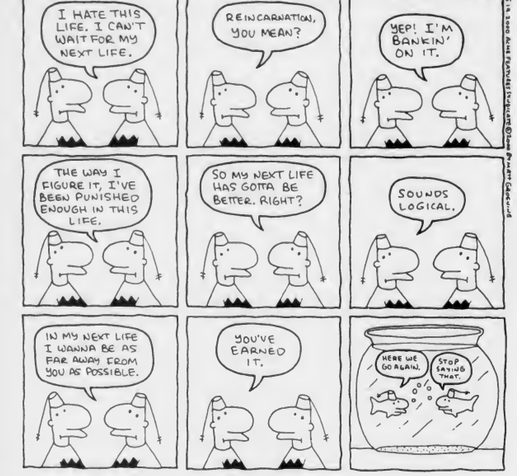
Want your opinion to be heard? Come down to the Campus Center Basement and write for Ed/Op...





LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
I HATE THIS LIFE. I CAN'T WAIT FOR MY NEXT LIFE.
REINCARNATION, YOU MEAN?
YEP! I'M BANKIN' ON IT.
THE WAY I FIGURE IT, I'VE BEEN PUNISHED ENOUGH IN THIS LIFE.
SO MY NEXT LIFE HAS GOTTA BE BETTER. RIGHT?
SOUNDS LOGICAL.
IN MY NEXT LIFE I WANNA BE AS FAR AWAY FROM YOU AS POSSIBLE.
YOU'VE EARNED IT.
HERE WE GO AGAIN.
STOP SAYING THAT.

If It Works on TV...

CHRIS COLLINS

Students will be assigned eight to a room and every week another student will be kicked out of the room. The last one to remain will--get this--be awarded a coupon for 5% off their next purchase at the Bluewall.

I have to say that I am flattered by the trust that the University administration puts in me. They have allowed me to present the University community with the newest plan for handling the problem of overflow housing. The current plan was developed this summer in order to avoid the over-crowding that the University experienced last year.

So what's the new plan? Well, having spent several months watching the Survivor series and visiting the CBS website, and reading the superfluous news reports concerning the television series the Administration has learned a few things. So, the lucky students who have been assigned to live in a building to be announced are going to be participates in UMASS Survivor 2000.

Students will be assigned eight to a room and every week another student will be kicked out of the room. The last one to remain will--get this--he awarded a coupon for 5% off their next purchase at the Bluewall. Of course, there will be cameras, which will be constantly beaming the entire thing on the Internet.

Of course, this plan accomplishes three things. First of all, it relieves the parents of students who are going to be living in overcrowded dorms. They are no longer living in swing space, they are living in a special university project area, just like the people in the Residential Academic Programs. Secondly, just the like the television show did for CBS, UMass will be revived by the money and popularity generated by the program, even more so then we were by the football team becoming NCAA champs. Plus, considering that getting kicked out the room will be a goal of most of the people living there, they should all probably be trying hard to make each other mad, thereby making the show even more interesting than the television show. Thirdly, the participants in the programs will become huge celebrities, have six months or so of fame, and then end up burning out and being addicted to cough syrup by this time next year (which means that it will be an accelerated version of what usually takes two years to happen). This drop-out of students will mean that come next year, their will be no reason to run the program, as their will be plenty of spots available.

Now, for those of you who wonder about the legality of UMass's use of innocent undergrads for its own gain, then I guess you have never read the contracts we sign when we move into the dorms. Sure you think it is all just plain old legal speak, but they really give the university power to not only use undergrads in television rip off schemes, but it also requires them to sell their organs when and if the University finds itself in a dire financial situation, or even in the case of any administrator needing a new car, or household appliance (I'm just kidding, they really don't have the power to sell your organs, just one organ--your kidney, the left one).

Now, I know that you are thinking, "Chris, won't the cost of settling the many legal problems that this program is bound to cause outweigh any and all of the profits that the University could make from the program?"

Well, that would be true if it wasn't for one thing, synergy. What is synergy? Its a made up word that people use to describe what happens when you make a really intelligent business move. In this case, the University has sold the rights to furnish the rooms to thousands of companies. For example, the single bed that is going to be provided for each room is made by Simmons. Anytime anyone is watching the UMass Survivor show--either on television or the Internet--they will be constantly be reminded that Simmons is the official UMass Survivor bed maker, and that Coke is the official UMass Survivor cola-flavored beverage, etc. The plan is to make enough money off of these official product placements that the University will be easily able to pay off anyone who comes crying to them complaining of abuse of any sort. Hey it works for the Olympics!

Of course, the only draw back to the plan is that the University needs to extend the time that people have to leave messages because there is no way that they will be able to get eight names on the current thirty seconds that we now have. But in the grand scheme of things I think we would all agree that it is a small price to pay for a solution to the housing problem.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 •
http://www.dailycollegian.com

Adam White Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Dan Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1965, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Dre, Cube, others rap da' house at the Worcester Centrum

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

Up in Smoke 2000 Tour
With Dr. Dre, Snoop Doggy Dog, Eminem, Ice Cube and others
Worcester Centrum
Friday July 20, 2000

Being surrounded by thousands of music fans always leaves one in awe of just how much music means to people. Around me were men and women of all races and ages. Parents came with their children. A stand-up comedian entertained us throughout the night. No, I wasn't at the Horde Festival or at Nickelodeon's "All That" tour. I was sitting in the Worcester Centrum anticipating the arrival of Dr. Dre and Snoop Doggy Dog.

Dr. Dre brought his particular style of rap to the Worcester Centrum. He is credited with being one of the break through influences in rap music within the last ten years. Dr. Dre set out on the Up in Smoke 2000 Tour, not only to promote his latest best-selling and critically acclaimed album Chronic 2001 but also to follow up on the success of his first album as a performer, The Chronic. This night could have also been called "Aftermath-The World is Ours Tour" or "N.W.A.- Reunite," because not only were Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg in concert, but they were joined by the members of N.W.A. the group which most people claim started the entire gangsta-rap phenomon.

The new N.W.A is still the old N.W.A. except that Snoop Doggy Dogg has taken the place of the late Eazy-E. The other members, Ice Cube and MC Ren, performed together in a combined set. At the end of the show, the members of the new N.W.A. were together on stage.

Joining Ice Cube, Ren, Snoop and Dre, were members of Dre's new record label Aftermath Records. They included Warren G, the heavily hyped Nzibit and the popular Eminem.

The first three acts were all new talents from Aftermath, getting the crowd psyched for the evening, as was a young stand-up comic who kept the audience awake and interested in the music being played. Despite all of the warm up acts and jokes told, the crowd didn't really get on their feet until the Don Mega, Ice Cube himself appeared. Accompanied by Mac 10 and MC Ren, he appeared in smoke on a stage that spelled his name in gothic, illuminating lights. Playing most of the songs from the recently released "Peace" record, Ice Cube threw in songs from his films The Players Club ("We Be Clubbin'") and Friday ("Today was a Good Day").

Ice Cube rejoins NWA on the Up in Smoke tour.

Following Ice Cube was the reason why most young children toted their parents with them, Eminem. His set was very plain, so that all the members of the audience were focused on him. After starting his first single "My Name Is" he abruptly stopped the tune stating that he was "Sick of this song." Throughout the show he performed the songs off of his new CD ending with "The Real Slim Shady."

Following Eminem were the showstoppers, Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg. Their portion of the show opened with a video that showed them mocking some half-naked ladies and ended with them as the heroes in a liquor store hold-up. Immediately they burst into not only new favorites, but also classic songs from both of their respective albums. The set was made to look like a small block from somewhere in the projects, and above this mock street was a giant porcelain skull that at one point "floated" down and told everyone how much he liked to smoke weed. Throughout the set guests came out, including Nzibit and Eminem, who are both featured on Chronic 2001. Toward the middle of the show Dre and Snoop gave tribute to all their fallen artists including Big Pun, Notorious B.I.G., Eazy-E and Tupac Shakur. The show ended with a cheesy montage that had been lifted with hydraulic shocks and began to bounce.

The encore brought out Cube, Dre, Ren, and Snoop to do a preview of the N.W.A. tour in which they performed the classic, "Straight out of Compton."

Dre had never done an L.A. tour until now and he showed that he has the skill and the power to put on one of the best concerts of the summer. Mixing humor with music of popular acts in today's hip-hop culture brought the Centrum's capacity crowd to its feet and showed that we, have not forgot about Dre. The show was awesome, always keeping the crowd involved and anticipating what came next.

Nurse Betty an ambitious failure; LaBute, story showed promise.

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Nurse Betty
Directed by Neil LaBute with Renee Zellweger, Greg Kinnear, Morgan Freeman
Pleasant St. Theater

Nurse Betty is one of the most ambitious, and undoubtedly one of the most surreal, films examining love and attraction to come out of Hollywood in recent years. In fact, the film is so surreal that the true identities of the infatuated are never fully revealed.

Indeed, Nurse Betty centers on these ideas of identity of infatuation. Renee Zellweger plays Betty Sizemore, a small-town diner waitress obsessed with the (not insignificantly titled) soap opera "A Reason to Love." As soap opera fanatics are known to do, Betty watches religiously. For Betty's birthday, her friends even buy her a life-sized cutout of the show's star, Dr. Peter Ravell (Greg Kinnear).

Here, director Neil Labute, ensures that Betty's actions do not seem "fanatical" in the crazed stalker sense of the word. Betty may be overly intent on "Reason's" characters and the story arcs, but she appears, at worst, to be a devout fan. Certainly, there is no alarming indication that would explain her later actions in the film, and this is important if Nurse Betty is to work.

Early on in the film, Betty's husband is shot by two hired gunmen (Morgan Freeman, Chris Rock) because of his involvment in a drug deal. Betty witnesses the bloody event (including an almost scalping) and it jolts her into some new consciousness. Subconsciously ignoring the murder, Betty decides to "leave" her husband in pursuit of Dr. Peter Ravell (the character, mind you, not the actor). In doing so, she assumes the title role of Nurse Betty--one of the Dr.'s ex-fiances on the show.

The Los Angelenos think she's hilarious (they even put her on the show because of her great "acting" ability), but somewhere in Betty's mind this is real. The characters, the hospital and even herself (even Nurse Betty) exist outside of simply television. The film's moments of awkward hilarity and contorted drama may lead some to believe that Nurse Betty is either a poke at or an homage to soap operas. But I think the filmt tries something deeper.

While the hit men try to track down Betty (they're unaware of her mental condition), Morgan Freeman's character (Charlie) becomes fascinated by her. He defends her from son Wesley's verbal attacks and guards her picture as if it were a valuable family heirloom. He even envisions himself dancing with her in the Grand Canyon moonlight.

Again, the audience is unsure whether this is the same "person," the same assassin whom they first encounter. Like Betty herself, Charlie becomes swept up by the picture, the image of his desire. Both fall for an ideal, rather than a real person.

However, the bizarre twists and turns of Nurse Betty never pay off concretely. The offbeat comedy comes to an unsatisfying fairy-tale conclusion. Fiction begets depressing reality, which in turn begets more silly fiction. And the result is confusion more than comedy.

The individual performances here are good all around, but there seems to be no cohesive among them. Renee Zellweger is tremendous in the lead role. Her natural, sweet innocence makes the pathetic and vulnerable yet lovable Betty come alive. Greg Kinnear (quickly becoming one of my favorite actors) is perfect as the typecast soap star. Morgan Freeman is always good and Chris Rock provides some much needed hilarity.

I just never felt anything for any of the characters. As much as they were deluding themselves, Nurse Betty was deluding the audience. It is certainly unique, but not as funny nor as insightful as the director might have hoped. C+

COURTESY / NURSE BETTY WEB SITE
Chris Rock, Morgan Freeman and Rene Zelweger all look longingly at Ethan Hawke photo above.

A brooding Hamlet (Ethan Hawke) stalks away from mother Gertrude (Diane Venora).

What a piece of work is Hamlet

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Hamlet
Directed by Michael Almereyda with Ethan Hawke, Kyle McLachlan, Diane Venora, Bill Murray

The concept is nothing new. Still, people seem surprised and excited whenever an adaptation of Shakespeare pops up in the theater or, as seen most recently, on the screen with Michael Almereyda's Hamlet. If not for the irony most of these ventures, including this one, they are nothing compared to reading the real thing. Irony, like seeing Keanu Reeves trying his hardest to not look laughable as Don John in Kenneth Branagh's film version of Much Ado About Nothing. Or, how about Alicia Silverstone and Matthew Lillard singing in the Branagh's musical-like interpretation of Love's Labour's Lost? And the absolute silliness that ensues when actors like Calista Flockhart, Claire Daines, and Leornardo DiCaprio are left to interpret 4,000 year old texts so that they appeal to the same people who think Ally McBeal is funny.

But, wait Almereyda deserves props. In his Hamlet irony reaches a new plateau. I doubt anyone else has been, uhm, bold enough to deliver Hamlet's To Be or Not To Be speech in a Blockbuster video. Certainly, this is the first time the ghost of Hamlet Sr. has disappeared into a Pepsi machine. Ethan Hawke, as Hamlet, in dark eyeliner and messy hair, is one of those hip indie film kids that hangs pictures of Che Guevera and Malcom X on his wall. Denmark is a corporation in this contemporary New York City setting. Elsinore is a hotel. And, in perhaps the most daring creative choice, Bill Murrary plays Polonius.

Unlike Branagh in his four-hour epic, consummate act of self-indulgence, 1996 film version of Hamlet, Almereyda is merciful. He keeps the film under two hours and fills it with delicious eye-candy. Ophelia goes mad in the Guggenheim, making for some wonderful cinematography. Hamlet's clever splicing to create Mousetrap, a short film piece (and not a play this time) is entertaining. The tenor of the entire film relies on that irresistible pulse of tragic, misunderstood, and painfully trendy clothed youth so much that it makes you want to go out and buy horn-rimmed glasses. But in a good way.

The acting, needless to say, is nothing impressive. Hawke isn't terrible, but he is monotonous. Hamlet doesn't really descend into madness with occasional bouts of poignancy. He's just kind of moody all the time. Luckily, Julia Stiles as Ophelia doesn't get to talk a lot. Otherwise, the few lines she has wouldn't seem so painless. Liev Schriber as Laertes falls into that age-old trap that makes one think that Shakespeare can only be delivered in an English accent. Aside from that, however, his work in the film is appropriate.

The rest of the cast is truly forgettable, but it might not be fair to blame the actors for this. In Almereyda's adaptation too much of the script is lost, too much of the real meat of the play is sacrificed. The dynamics of the plot are forsaken so that, conveniently, all that remain are the superficial points of despair, depression and disillusion. The result is a one-dimensional examination of the darker suggestions of the play and not the true complexity that five acts of total Shakespeare drives home. But this is obvious from the first moments of the film when Hamlet broods over the "what a piece of work is man" speech that, within the proper context is actually part of the crazy act he gives Rosencrantz and Guildernstern mid-play.

Sure it's kind of creative, and all when someone finds a way to make a really old story fit into a modern situation. But, inevitably, things aren't going to come together seamlessly and something from the original will be lost. Here you lose the delicate balance between fate and will, thought and action, to be or not to be. But I guess a good electro-acoustic soundtrack, pretty kids in leather and New York City luxury make up for all of that. Kind of. B

Not your mom's rap-metal: Deftones' White Pony a raw good time

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

DEFTONES
White Pony
Maverick

I regret having to take review space away from such an amazing record, but I feel I should address an issue that is long overdue. Korn and Deftones are NOT rap-metal. Every time I read a related article in a newspaper or magazine it is guaranteed I will see these two bands in a list of rap-metal bands, in a rant about the "rap-metal" revolution to which they supposedly belong. While there is no doubt there is a hip-hop undercurrent flowing through the music of these two bands, it is no more prevalent here than in hordes of other alternative and metal bands. You can count on one hand the songs between the two bands' combined seven albums where you could actually call it rap-metal, and even then, the majority of those tracks are covers of rap songs or collaborations with rappers. I am a big fan of rap music and a lot of rap metal, but I can't stand seeing journalism where the writer has obviously just thrown these bands into a broad categorization when there is absolutely no basis. If such journalists actually listened to the music of Korn and Deftones, and put it against actual rap-metal likeHed(P.E.) or Limp Bizkit, the gap between the different styles would be quite apparent.

Deftones, with their third album, have taken a similar route as Incubus, another group often wrongly thought of being rap metal. With both bands you could see it coming; Make Yourself expanding on the more subdued selections of S.C.I.E.N.C.E., and White Pony embodying the same progression in a much grander fashion. 1995's Adrenaline was a masterful entry onto the scene with all of the right elements in place: Chino Moreno's strikingly emotive voice complementing Stephen Carpenter's brutal yet careful riffs, and a strong rhythm section of bassist Chi Cheng and drummer Abe Cunningham that has only gotten better with age. 1997's Around the Fur retained much of the debut's aggression, but wasn't afraid to slow things down and he unabashedly emotional like on "Mascara" or "mx," but at no point losing the band's musical edge, evidenced by the beautiful "Be Quiet and Drive (Far Away)."

White Pony blurs the line between emotion and aggression even more, thrusting them both together to create a sound that had been previously hinted at and is now finally achieved. It is also the sound of the one of the best records of the year.

The opener "Feiticeira" may not have the immediate kick of "My Own Summer," but it soon reveals itself to be one of Moreno's most intriguing stream-of-consciousness stories thus far. Disparate themes are presented in rapid succession: kidnapping ("untie me for now"); paranoia ("a machine that takes pictures of us") and S&M ("I'm choking from gnawing on the ball"), all emoted perfectly through Moreno's extremely communicative voice, which progresses from helplessness to the ominous third-person chant of "soon I'll let you go." This is just the first song.

"Digital Bath" is amazing, and is our first opportunity to really meet the newest Deftone, Frank Delgado, the man on the turntables that has been accompanying the band on tour for some time. Following a heart-wrenching wail, Delgado adds a beautiful sample of electronic trickling behind softer vocals before ceding to Carpenter's wall of noise. Delgado is similar to Incubus' DJ Kilmore on da wheels, never trying to compete with the guitars, instead subtly making his mark where he can, and the music is that much better for his contribution. Delgado also gets to showcase his minimalist technique fully, as he is the only backing for Moreno on the serene "Teenager."

The new, softer Deftones are on full display on "Rx Queen" and the unlikely radio hit "Change (in the house of flies)," both which showcase the group's newfound maturity, but retaining the melody and strong songwriting that has taken them this far. Fear not that they have lost their metal edge either, as there is plenty here to keep the pit from dying down. "Korea" has a riff like a pounding heartbeat, while the relentless "Elite" lashes out at the phony rage that is prevalent in the metal scene ("stop this faux to be famous").

The packaging is excellent on the two limited edition versions of the album, with sleek blood red or jet black colored plastic cases as well as a decent bonus track ("Bloody Republic"). The booklet is stylishly done, and the multimedia aspect is chock full of good stuff, including an answer to the prayers of anyone who had ever wished to play Pac-Man with a white pom.

White Pony is without a doubt the Deftones finest hour so far, and manages to leave you not only in awe of their talent but itching to see what their future holds. In a year teeming with excellent music, Pony plants itself firmly among those at the top of the heap. 4+

Not quite mom's apple pie: Biggs, Suvari lose in latest

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Loser
Directed by Amy Heckerling with Jason Biggs, Mena Suvari

The queen of teen comedies Amy Heckerling who gave us Fast Times at Ridgemont High and Clueless returns with Loser—a disconcerting look at the effects of vanity and conformity through the eyes of a teen.

That teen is Paul (Jason Biggs), a native Minnesotan who gets his first taste of the big city (and life for that matter) at college in New York City. Unfortunately, it's more like rotten scrod than candy apples and bubble-gum.

People are mean and vicious. Nobody will even talk to him because of the way he looks. His three roommates are inconsiderate, messy, party animals who don't take well to Paul's study habits. They get him kicked out of the house within a month. In fact the only person who shows Paul any compassion is Dora Diamond (Mena Suvari), who sees Paul's knee after he tumbles into English class one day.

The pair seem to be the perfect oddball couple. Dora is also unloved, relying on packets of honey for the sweetness in her life. She must hide her job as a strip-club waitress, just to pay for school, from her mother. One day she gets fired and thinks she can fall back on Mr. Alocott (the exceedingly depraved English teacher with whom she's having an affair). Fortunately, Paul is there to pick up the pieces when Alcott disowns her. The two become close friends and an irresistible relationship develops.

They come together over Everclear (presumably the three-year-removed "alternative" version of the band before So Much For the Afterglow became the most played album on the radio) and get to know each other through the veterinary clinic where Paul is now forced to live. Despite Paul's sincere and good-hearted attempts (there hasn't been an onscreen character with a heart this good since George Bailey), Dora always seems to stumble back to Mr. Alcott.

Amy Heckerling does not deliver an instant teen classic, which Fast Times undoubtedly was, and what many people argue Clueless was, but she does deliver one of the most sincere, touching teen movies in recent memory. Her ear for teen cadence and feel for teen emotion give Loser an intangible feel of genuine.

Both leads are superb. This is the kind of role that the goofy charms of Jason Biggs were made for. And after her role as teen sexpot in American Beauty, Mena Suvari shows that she can play vulnerable. The two share an onscreen chemistry that cannot be better described than earnest. Add to these two, an absolutely genius comical performance from Greg Kinnear (Mr. Alcott). Kinnear plays the over-intellectualized, arrogant, unaffected teacher to perfection, spouting off vain lines of over-the-top insensitivity with impeccable callowness.

Loser is anything but. Heckerling perhaps idealizes teen love, making it way too easy, to the point of being sloppy. In the end, but it's somehow reassuring, if not cheesy, to know that two oddballs can find each other in the midst of apathy and cruelty. Loser's greatest achievement is not to convince us that love conquers all, but instead that these two characters can conquer love. B

COURTESY: LOSER WEB SITE
Jason Biggs is a loser around Mena Suvari.

A triumphant return: Weezer in RI

By Matthew Maggiacomo
Collegian Correspondent

Weezer
Lupos – Providence, RI
August 27

It's been a while since Weezer's made any public appearances as a band. Actually, it's been a good three or four years since Weezer's done anything at all. That's precisely why their current North American tour has sold out every date from San Jose to Boston. In a sudden burst of confidence and solidarity, Weezer has returned triumphantly to the modern rock scene. Their show at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence captured the emotions, and their reemergence has stirred in the hearts of their most loyal fans.

Before Weezer could take the stage, Lupo's was graced with a fine opening performance by Dynamite Hack. Though the crowd was relatively indifferent towards their music, front man Chad Robinson led the band through a tight, fast set that highlighted the band's most impressive qualities. With their t-shirts, baseball caps, and overall goofiness they looked like the frat boy alter-ego of Weezer. In fact, Weezer has obviously influenced their sound, which is characterized by catchy melodies and simple chord structures. Other apparent influences include Blink 182 and Pavement, and often their most melodic moments would give way to loud feedback screaming over surprisingly impressive drum solos, courtesy of drummer Chase Scott.

Despite a solid performance and a commanding stage presence, Dynamite Hack couldn't muster up any significant reaction from the crowd. The audience stood completely still and offered only an occasional nodding of the head, even during Hack's hit cover of Eazy E's "Boyz-N The Hood." However, the band remained unbothered by the crowd's lack of appreciation and even expressed joy at the return of Weezer. When Scott formed a "W" with his fingers and raised it in the air, the crowd screamed and cheered, foreshadowing what would occur when Weezer finally took the stage.

Weezer's most attractive quality is their ability to consistently produce simple, catchy rock music. A quality that was lacking in the majority of alternative bands when Weezer released its self-titled debut in 1994. While bands like Nirvana and Pearl Jam were writing about and/or living contemporary tragedies, Weezer kept their subject matter simple. Most of their songs are about girls, teen angst, and insecurity—themes that tug at the heart-strings without inducing the urge to commit suicide. Thus, Weezer has been dubbed the Beach Boys of the 90's, and have effectively built upon the legacies of bands like Devo and Kiss.

Opening with an emotional performance of "My Name is Jonas," singer/songwriter Rivers Cuomo barked in the irony of the song's newly relevant lyrics: "...But we're still making noise!" As if responding to Cuomo's victorious proclamation, the audience sang along to every song so passionately that they almost took on the role of a choral accompaniment.

Their passion for Weezer's music is understandable when one takes into account the several anthems of adolescent anguish that Weezer has offered in their two released albums. Their Providence set focused mostly on these anthems, including songs like "Say It Ain't So" and "In the Garage." The former song confronts the destructive nature of alcoholism; the latter is Cuomo's ode to his "favorite rock group Kiss" a song which celebrates the isolation and egocentrism experienced exclusively by teenagers. One might say that "In the Garage" is a contemporary update of the Beach Boys' "In My Room."

Weezer's set also included four new songs, foreshadowing the release of a much anticipated, third album. Despite the unchatacteristic angularity of "Superman" and the relatively droning "Mad Cow," Weezer's new material promises a perpetuation of their straightforward, catchy rock music. The evidence lies mostly within "The Sister Song," which is an apparent continuation of Cuomo's quirky sexual tastes that dominated at least half of the songs on Pinkerton. The chorus includes the lyrics, "Why am I so hung up on your sister, why am I so hung up on your mom," words that inspired a few cat calls and screams from the Lupo's crowd.

Virtually, Weezer's performance provided some complimentary eye candy to keep things interesting. Above drummer Pat Wilson's set hung a giant "W" adorned with flashing lights and gold trim. Appealing to the indie component of Weezer's fan base, Cuomo was sporting a plain button-down shirt and a pair of horned-rim glasses. Guitarist Brian Bell courted the audience with his rock star charm while bassist Mikey Welsh, who has replaced Matt Sharp in Weezer's line up, provided pelvic thrusts and a lusty countenance.

After ending their set with "You Give Your Love to Me Softly," their contribution to the Input soundtrack, Weezer began their encore with an extended version of the sweet "Only In Dreams." After dedicating the song to his mother, Welsh opened the song with nearly a minute of unaccompanied bass, deliberately twisting the simple, droning notes to form a somewhat disorienting pattern of instability. However, he soon eased out as Cuomo's guitar slid eloquently into the song's opening arpeggiation. What followed was a heartfelt performance of a song that fluctuates between periods of loud, booming power chords and soft, minimal interludes. But the highlight of the encore was Weezer's final song of the night, "Surf Wax America". As it mirroring the victory cries of "My Name Is Jonas," Cuomo burst into another affirmation of Weezer's continued presence: "I never thought it would come to this, now I can never go home."

Weezer's performance marks both their return and the beginning of a new era in their career. While mainstream modern rock has taken a turn towards two extremes—loud, angry hybrids of rap and metal, and overly-produced, goofy alterna-pop—Weezer has remained true to the roots of rock and roll. However, their current tour has proven that Weezer has a place in today's scene.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

SAVE $ ON TEXTBOOKS
We Have These U. MASS Courses At Discounted Prices

UM-ACCTG-221-1	UM-CMPSCI-287-1	UM-FOREST-332-1	UM-MATH-421-1	UM-PSYCH-100-2
UM-ACCTG-222-1	UM-COMDIS-211-1	UM-FRENCH-110-1	UM-MATH-425-1	UM-PSYCH-100-3
UM-ACCTG-311-1	UM-COMDIS-313-1	UM-FRENCH-230-1	UM-MATH-431-1	UM-PSYCH-240-C
UM-ACCTG-331-1	UM-COMM-218-1	UM-FRENCH-240-1	UM-MATH-431-2	UM-PSYCH-240-1
UM-ACCTG-371-1	UM-COMM-226-1	UM-GEO-103-1	UM-MATH-431-5	UM-PSYCH-240-2
UM-AN SCI-101-1	UM-COMM-230-1	UM-GER-110-1	UM-MATH-461-1	UM-PSYCH-305-1
UM-AN SCI-311-1	UM-COMM-230-2	UM-GER-230-1	UM-MATH-471-1	UM-PSYCH-350-1
UM-AN SCI-332-1	UM-COMM-340-1	UM-GER-240-1	UM-MATH-511-H	UM-PSYCH-380-1
UM-ART-120-1	UM-CS-161-1	UM-HIS-100-1	UM-MATH-523-1	UM-RES EC-102-1
UM-ART HI-100-1	UM-CS-315-1	UM-HIS-101-1	UM-MATH-523-2	UM-RES EC-211-1
UM-ART HI-115-1	UM-ECON-103-H	UM-HIS-140-1	UM-MATH-532-1	UM-SOC-103-1
UM-ASTRO-100-H	UM-ECON-103-2	UM-HIS-369-1	UM-MATH-551-1	UM-SOC-105-1
UM-ASTRO-101-2	UM-ECON-103-4	UM-HRTA-100-1	UM-MATH-611-1	UM-SOC-2/02-1
UM-ASTRO-114-1	UM-ECON-104-1	UM-HRTA-130-1	UM-MATH-623-1	UM-SOC-241-1
UM-BIO-100-1	UM-ECON-203-1	UM-HRTA-130-1	UM-MATH-645-1	UM-SOC-242-1
UM-BIO-105-1	UM-ECON-203-3	UM-JAPAN-126-1	UM-MATH-651-1	UM-SOC-281-1
UM-BIO-106-1	UM-ECON-311-1	UM-MATH-412-1	UM-MATH-611-1	UM-SOM-210-1
UM-BIO-283-1	UM-ED-325-1	UM-MATH-011-1	UM-MATH-697-4	UM-SOM-301-1
UM-BIO-339-1	UM-ENG WP-111-1	UM-MATH-100-1	UM-MATH-703-1	UM-SOM-310-1
UM-BIOCHEM-420-1	UM-ENG WP-112-1	UM-MATH-101-1	UM-MATH-731-1	UM-SPAN-110-1
UM-BIOEPI-741-1	UM-ENGIN-111-1	UM-MATH-113-1	UM-MGT-260-1	UM-SPAN-120-1
UM-CEE-240-1	UM-ENGIN-113-1	UM-MATH-113-1	UM-MICBIO-160-1	UM-SPAN-230-1
UM-CEE-241-1	UM-ENGIN-113-4	UM-MATH-127-H	UM-MICBIO-310-1	UM-SPAN-240-1
UM-CHEM-110-1	UM-ENV-335-1	UM-MATH-127-1	UM-MKTG-301-1	UM-SPAN-301-1
UM-CHEM-250-1	UM-ENVSCI-101-1	UM-MATH-128-1	UM-MKTG-491-D	UM-SPAN-311-1
UM-CHEM-261-1	UM-ENVSCI-112-1	UM-MATH-131-1	UM-MUSIC-100-1	UM-STAT-111-1
UM-CHEM-262-1	UM-EXCSCI-130-1	UM-MATH-135-1	UM-MUSIC-160-1	UM-STAT-140-1
UM-CHEM-265-1	UM-EXCSCI-210-1	UM-MATH-233-1	UM-NURS-100-1	UM-STAT-141-1
UM-CHIN-138-1	UM-FOMGT-250-1	UM-MATH-235-H	UM-PHYS-100-2	UM-STAT-497-M
UM-CLASS-105-1	UM-FOMGT-250-2	UM-MATH-235-1	UM-PHYS-131-1	UM-STAT-501-1
UM-CLASS-224-1	UM-FOMGT-300-1	UM-MATH-235-3	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-505-1
UM-CMPSCI-102-1	UM-FOMGT-301-1	UM-MATH-235-4	UM-PHYS-151-1	UM-STAT-515-1
UM-CMPSCI-105-1	UM-FOGMT-304-1	UM-MATH-245-1	UM-PHYS-152-1	UM-STAT-597-B
UM-CMPSCI-120-1	UM-FOGMT-320-1	UM-MATH-300-1	UM-PHYS-190-B	UM-STAT-607-1
UM-CMPSCI-201-1	UM-FOGMT-347-1	UM-MATH-411-1	UM-POL SC-255-1	UM-STAT-705-1
UM-CMPSCI-250-1	UM-FOGMT-413-1		UM-PSYCH-100-1

SELL US YOUR USED BOOKS AND GET CASH FOR YOUR NEW ONES.

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St.
Amherst, MA
(413) 253-3870 253-7816

HAVE YOU EVER WANTED TO WEIGH 400 POUNDS AND WEAR A DIAPER?
Now is your chance! Friday, Sept. 8th from 5-8 pm @ Campus Center Lawn
Beginning of the school year bash, bringing you...
FREE

SUMO WRESTLING
VOLLEYBALL
DUNK TANK
VELCRO WALL
FOOD & MUSIC!!!
Brought to you by MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org

Virgin Suicides full of life

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

The Virgin Suicides
Directed by Sofia Coppola with Kirsten Dunst Josh Hartnett
James Woods

In his directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, Sofia Coppola achieves a delicate, sensitive and a humor rarely [illegible] by any filmmaker—let alone [illegible] Coppola's film, [illegible] creation incorporates [illegible] past poignant fact [illegible] thirty-odd years of five suicidal Lisbon sisters.

Coppola [illegible] cast a spell over the [illegible] neighborhood and in particular the shy, lonely neighborhood boys next door. However Mr. Woods and [illegible] James Woods and Kathleen Turner are here stifled with [illegible] Coppola's tonally strong [illegible] the well-kept cages of [illegible] This reclusiveness [illegible] the Lisbons more attractive [illegible] Lisbon girls.

Also [illegible] Trip Fontaine, [illegible] Virgin [illegible] about these young [illegible] Despite the mysterious [illegible] of the girls, the innate [illegible] of their parents or the [illegible] circumstances surrounding their [illegible] torment, the adolescent boy psyche is at the heart of the film. The Virgin Suicides is the ultimate tribute to the innocence of adolescent, platonic love and the corruption that comes with maturity.

That is not to say that the parents are justified in locking their daughters up to protect them from the world, but rather to say that in the few fleeting moments of puberty, there is something altogether pure about the way a boy looks at a girl, the cold sweat he gets by being in her proximity and the lump in his throat as his voice freezes.

Coppola contrasts these few fleeting moments of purity with the lifelong failures of Trip Fontaine (Josh Hartnett). One of the film's first- hand witnesses to the Lisbon power, Trip is interviewed from the reform home where he is forced to live. He relates his days of being a high-school pretty-boy, obsessed with Lexy, the most rebellious Lisbon daughters. However his interest is superficial and lust—quite a contrast to the neighborhood boys. The Virgin Suicides convinces you that the latter is one of the purest moments of human experience and the former is nothing short of an unforgivable crime.

One day after a high-school dance, Trip takes advantage of Lexy on a lonely football field (in my opinion a brilliant metaphor). The consummation of his sexuality is anything but innocent and his life-troubles seem, to Coppola at least, a fitting punishment.

Through her often-eerie, Looking Glass style, Coppola clearly distinguishes the ideal of innocence from the ever-increasing world. Symbolically, the elm trees surrounding the Lisbon household are slowly being cut down as a disease (worldliness) threatens to kill them. Eventually, the disease infects everyone, but only after the daughters are gone and innocence is lost.

In the midst of her often-bizarre narration and visual displays, Coppola still manages to capture some of the subtlest moments of adolescent humor and angst. Anyone who sees this film and cannot smile (or maybe squirm a little) from memories of their adolescence has not lived the human experience.

The Virgin Suicides has surprisingly honest performances from its ensemble cast of young actors/actresses and both Lisbon parents (James Wood's absent-minded professor is wonderful). However what makes the film so amazing is that it astutely captures a pivotal moment of the human experience and captures it in a heart-warming, original way. Clearly, one of the summer's best films. A

Kirsten Dunst doesn't want to die a virgin.

COURTESY VIRGIN SUICIDE WEB SITE

Pearl Jam meets Blind Melon for a unified effort.

COURTESY UNIFIED THEORY WEB SITE

Talent doesn't save Unified Theory

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Unified Theory
Unified Theory
Uni/Universal Records

It's difficult to say whether Unified Theory is trying to breathe new and unique life into alt-rock, or simply sucking down the last thin fumes of a dying movement. One-fourth ex-Pearl Jam (drummer David Krusen) and one-half ex-Blind Melon (guitarist Christopher Thorn and bassist Brad Smith), the band can't be faulted for lacking musical chops, and regardless of the originality quotient, every track is performed and produced with an attention to detail and a calculated grittiness that renders always listenable, and often easily enjoyable.

The album opens with "Cessna," a soaring phaser-driven song that recalls the energy of Radiohead's "Planet Telex" and "Airbag," with all the layered guitars and wounded vocals such a comparison would indicate. It is the most forward-looking track on the album, twisting bare-knuckled rhythm guitars with all manner of effects into a sweeping musical texture that sits triumphantly on the outside of mainstream rock, both now and five years ago. As the album progresses, however, the number of murky angst-rock tunes without as much clarity and appeal as "Cessna" begins to mount; the band seems anchored by its influences and its love of how things used to be.

The second track and the album's lead-off single, "California," is generally forgettable, constructed around a paint-by-numbers lead riff. The spacey chorus again references Radiohead, but this time less effectively and with nothing new to offer.

This is not to say, however, that the album isn't without its highlights. "Wither" is an instantly likable song with an excellent pop sensibility and an irresistible guitar hook. "A.M. Radio" combines Thorn's playful lead work with a refreshingly jaunty chorus, and "Fin" and "Not Dead" each demonstrate the band's talent at constructing more atmospheric, subtly drifting pieces.

One of the band's greatest assets, as well as its greatest hurdle, is newcomer singer/guitarist Chris Shinn. Listening to the album, it becomes clear that Shinn has studied and worked hard to emulate the vocal styles of Jeff Buckley and Thom Yorke, among others; the unfortunate truth, however, is that Shinn is not, nor likely will ever be, a Buckley or Yorke, and so his singing style sounds too often like an affectation. When he allows himself to belt out notes in a less moderated, more sincere style, the results are much more impressive. Shinn's performance has the manner of a singer uncomfortable with his own textures and limitations, and it would only take a few shifts to transform his singing into the supremely effective vehicle for emotion that every band desires.

There's no denying that Unified Theory is a talented band, but while their debut album is thoroughly listenable, a greater effort at separating themselves from their roots and influences is needed in order to make their work truly captivating. B

Mike's Amaizing 4 Acre Massachusetts Minuteman Corn Maze
665-8331
Weekends 11am-5pm
Warner Farm, 23 So Main St Sunderland (across from the Millstone Market)

First Baptist Church
YOUR CAMPUS CHURCH
Address: Corner of Massachusetts Ave. & North Pleasant St.
INFORMATION: Email: Campus@fbcamherst.org Telephone: 549-3596
Sun 9:15 am College Class
Sun 10:45 am Contemporary Service
Sun 12:00 pm College Lunch! (Free food!)
Fri 7:30 pm International Bible Study

PIZZA PAPA JOHN'S
UMASS/HAMPSHIRE/AMHERST COLLEGE SPECIAL
Now Hiring Delivery Drivers
Earn $12+ Per Hour
OCMP
One 14" Large One Topping Pizza $6.99
One 14" Large Pizza With One Topping, Breadsticks & A 2-Liter of Coca-Cola $12.99
3 Large 1 Topping Pizzas $19.99
Call 586-7272 For Fast, Free Delivery!
Open Until 1am Sunday-Thursday & 3am Friday & Saturday

Atlantis
DJs SPINNING VINYL 7 NIGHTS A WEEK
FRI 9/8 GROWROOM RECORDS "HOUSE ON THE ROCKS" W/SIMI, BON BONS, HUSH & SALTY $2 COVER
SAT 9/9 HIP HOP, R&B, AND REGGAE W/ DJ TRENDZ (DRUNK MONKS) NO HATS, SPORTS JERSEYS, BOOTS $2 COVER
SUN 9/10 "DRESS TO IMPRESS" REGGAE W/ SELECTOR C AND DJ U NO COVER
MON 9/11 B-SKI'S BINS UNDERGROUND HIP HOP AND SOUL NO COVER
TUE 9/12 INTELLIGENT DRUM N' BASS W/DJ BEN TAYLOR
WED 9/13 CAESAR (DIGITAL DOMAIN, NYC) JUNGLE/ DRUM N' BASS $2 COVER
THU 9/14 HIP HOP W/ DJ SEMANTIK $2 COVER
41 BOLTWOOD WALK, AMHERST
21+ POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

CAMPUS RECREATION

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

(Corrected Dates)

Flag Football: (M/W/C)	9/11
Soccer (M/W)	9/11
Co-ed Softball	9/12
Field Hockey	9/12
Cross Country (M/W)	9/19
Field Events (M/W)	9/19

On the web: www.umass.edu/umim

LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

104 Fest rocks your mom

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Radio 104 Fest
With Creed, Sevendust, Three Doors Down, Eve 6 and others
Meadows Music Theater
June 24

Simply put, they're nothing more than a four-man conglomeration of rock superstars. In actuality, Creed represents what may be the past, present and future of mainstream music in the new millennium. Despite the cries of some critics to peg them as another "Pearl Jam imitation," the band has been able to develop a following that has become an army.

In the heated middle of the success of their first two albums, Creed invaded the Meadows Music Theater this past June along with an enormous variety of other acts. Big names such as Sevendust, Eve 6 and Veruca Salt were on hand to join in the festivities. Also joining the list were newcomers Three Doors Down, who's debut album The Better Life has sold 500,000 copies thanks to the number one single "Kryptonite."

What Radio 104 (104.1 Hartford) Fest attempted to do, was sell out an enormous arena by taking one huge band such as Creed, and mixing it with some fairly well known acts. They also brought in Dee Snyder, a former member of the band Twisted Sister, and current morning disc jockey for the station as an added guest. What often happens with radio shows like 104 Fest, is they become mixed up in cheap promotional tactics, and there is no concentration on the quality of performed music. Nothing is more apparent than the annual Kiss concert that takes place in Mansfield at the Tweeter Center every year. Of the headlining acts on any given year (such as this year's Christina Aguilera) you can pretty much guarantee that they will be the most famous teenage pop-crap of past twelve months. Radio 104 Fest somehow managed to avoid this.

I'm not sure how 104 Fest avoided being a typical radio self-gratification affair. One thing that is for sure, is that Radio 104 cannot take the credit by themselves. Right down to the smallest details, the event was terribly unorganized. When I arrived at the VIP tent to pick up press passes for the show, a representative told me, "We don't have a list. You're not alone. There are about 40 people who are in the same boat as you." I also had the luxury of watching one of the performers scream at the same representative, "My mother's here and she's coming in whether you have a (expletive) list or not." I'm sure the radio station would try to shift the blame for this on the record labels, such as the one that placed me on their guest list, but the fact that they did not have a list for over thirty bands is obviously no one's fault other than their own. Every single band always leaves a guest list for the host of the show, and Radio 104 made a huge media mistake. There was no excuse for it.

As for the quality of the show, it was very good. Eve 6 put on an impressive set that included a cover of TLC's "Waterfalls." Eve 6 is starting to realize what life is like after the one-hit wonder. Their first single, "Inside Out" was their first real test with stardom, and they seemed to fade away after it.

Three Doors Down is just starting to encounter what it is like to have a huge hit on the radio. "Kryptonite" finally reached number one on the alternative rock charts, and it established them as genuine performers. The second single and track off of the album, "Loser," may be the actual test of the band's ability to maintain stardom. They were really able to incite the crowd into a frenzy with "Kryptonite." The fact remained that the first single off of the album was the only song that a majority of the audience would recognize from the band. It was vital that they delivered the goods with it. Though the stage performance of the band is a bit weak, they certainly tried hard to prevent listeners from becoming bored with the songs that they did not know. Three Doors Down may be a much better club performance than in a large theater such as this one. However, I'm sure that if they are able to really make it big, they will not be fighting crowds of people who just want to hear one song. It would make their large-scale concerts much more appealing.

On the same record label as Three Doors Down, were newcomers Dynamite Hack. The band played a short set on one of the small stages at the Fest that included a cover of Easy E's "Boyz in the Hood."

Throughout the past few months, Creed has traveled everywhere with heavy metal rockers Sevendust. Radio 104 Fest proved to be a sentimental break between the two bands, since it was the end of their tour together. Creed finished out their summer tour with Three Doors Down, while Sevendust joined Slipknot on the Tattoo the Earth Tour.

Sevendust entered the stage to an audio clip from Oliver Stone's Natural Born Killers. They began their set with "Denial," the first single from the band's most recent album Home. After a high-energy performance that really pumped up the crowd, Sevendust addressed the issue that everyone had on their minds. Lead singer Gene said, "To all of you out there who have been saying, 'what is Creed doing touring with Sevendust?' all I have to say is F-You." He then proceeded to play "Black," from the band's first album.

After a long hot day of music and other forms of entertainment, the crowd packed into the large stage for the main attraction. Even though there was so much going on, everyone in attendance was really only there to see Creed.

Creed opened the night with "Ode," from their quadruple platinum album My Own Prison. The intense loud sound mixed with an incredible lights and fire propelled Creed into an audience that hung on every word they said. Over the course of the evening, Creed tackled all of their radio hits including, "Torn," "What's this life for," What If," and "My Own Prison." Lead singer Scott Stapp dedicated "With Arms Wide Open," the third single from Human Clay to his baby son Jagger, and proclaimed that he wrote the song for him, and even when he could not see his son it always made him feel better to play that song. The night ended with a two-song encore comprised of the band's two biggest hits. "One," and "Higher" were simply the most satisfying way to end the day.

What Radio 104 Fest attempted to be was the epitome of a hard rock extravaganza. In reality, it was a poorly organized horde of mayhem that was saved by great music from some terrific bands.

Seven Dust bassist and guitarist jump after learning to at Breakaway & Fitness.

COURTESY SEVEN DUST WEB

Breakaway Sports & Fitness
Student Membership
$249/year
$139/semester
Free Weights
Batting Cages
Aerobics
Indoor Soccer League
549-3638
Route 116, near campus on bus line

DON'T MISS OUT ON THE FUN!!
AUDITIONS
For UMass Theatre Guild's Production of:
SWEET CHARITY
Friday, September 8th at 6:30 pm: CC Rm.101
Saturday, September 9th at 10 am & 3 pm: CC Rm. 162
For more info:
Call Shira 549-7417 or call the UMass theatre guild office 545-0415 or stop by 423A in the Student Union!

IT'S YOUR BODY
If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Amherst Survival Center
"FROM TRASH TO TREASURES"
Furniture Sale and Collection
Saturday September 9 9am - 1pm
Town Common
Rain or Shine
• Buy used furniture at very low prices (delivery available)
• All furniture in good condition will be accepted free of charge on the common
• Rugs, mattresses and unusable furniture will be accepted for a disposal fee of $5 per item
• Call 549-3968 for more information

Now You See nothing special SR71 merely looks the part

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

SR71
Now You See Inside
RCA Records

Punk music will never change. Ever since it's inception, punk may be the only musical genre that refuses to adapt to the chameleon style record industry. Punk is easy to identify, and in very many ways it is very easy to listen to. A good punk song only contains only a few guitar chords, upbeat vocals and very fast drums. Most songs are usually extremely short and repetitive.

The Ramones were punk pioneers. Green Day have become punk legends, and Blink-182 may be the inheritors of the punk world. Somewhere in between are bands like Weezer and Less Than Jake. The punk structure is extremely defined. That being said, where do newcomers SR71 fit in?

SR71, a band made up of four members includes, Mitch Allen on lead vocals and guitars, Dan Garvin on drums, Jeff Reid on bass and Mark Beauchemin on guitars and keyboards clearly have the look of rock superstars. The band has done a very good job marketing themselves as a group that is prepared to deal with the burdens of stardom. The pictures inside of the album portray the band members as willing posers with a lot of self-assurance. Looks can be deceiving, but this does not seem to be the case. Even with the popularity of the band's first single, "Right Now" growing, SR71 was able to create a video that also displays the same type of musical confidence that is absolutely necessary to create a basis for fame.

Now You See Inside, the debut album from mid-Atlantic rockers SR71 bursts onto the scene with some very interesting lyrics, and a somewhat different tone. Now You See Inside provides an entertaining medley of punk songs.

The album has all of the necessary makings of a mix of pop and rock music. There is "Politically Correct," an apologetic, reasoning tune obviously dedicated to a previous relationship. "Go Away" is the slow love song that is supposed to contain the band's heart. "Right Now," the first single, is the obvious award winner on the album.

Though the album works like a punk music dictionary in the sense that all of the fundamental elements are there, SR71 try extremely hard to be unique from their predecessors. The way that they attempt this is through creative lyrics. Unfortunately the lyrics come off sounding more absurd than anything else. With lines such as "I could never be Neil Armstrong. I'd be the last man on the moon," from the song, "Last Man on the Moon," the band appears too desperate to be different. "Politically Correct" has a random line that says, "You couldn't make a Mel Brooks movie today. I saw Blazing Saddles yesterday." After a while the poetry becomes a bit irritating, and you begin to wonder how seriously they took themselves. The album ends with a song titled "Paul McCartney." The band says, "Tell each other's lies in a world so much brighter if Paul were still alive." I'm sure they know that Paul is still alive, but what is the listener supposed to get out of this?

The only balance from the incongruous lines appears to be "Right Now." Much like the entire album, the song is a bit blasé, but is quite enjoyable. If the song brings the band stardom, that is great. However, it seems unlikely that they will have follow-up success with anything else on the album.

Besides the lyrics, everything else on the album sounds nice. There is nothing out of the ordinary about the guitars, keyboards or drums. These things are just more proof that the band is a typical, modern punk band.

It seems like in the strange realm of punk music, SR71 fits in the place that most mediocre bands find themselves. They may not be as good as Green Day, or have as huge a following as Blink-182, but they're trying. They seem to have a firm grasp on what they want. With a little enhancement they could improve on a noble first effort. C+

Don't these guys look like tools?

COURTESY - SR71 WEB SITE

Memories of summers on CD

By Robert Hilburn
Los Angeles Times

Summer has always been a magical time for pop music, largely because the season is synonymous with freedom and fun for pop's core teen audience.

That's why the titles of more than three dozen hit singles during the rock era have started off with some variation of the word "summer" including such landmarks as Eddie Cochran's "Summertime Blues" and the Lovin' Spoonful's "Summer in the City." The number of songs with summer as a theme or sub-theme probably reaches into the hundreds.

Varese Sarabande, the Sherman Oaks, Calif., record label that recently released a retrospective on bubblegum pop, now salutes the summer pop tradition with a CD that brings together summer-themed recordings, both hits and obscurities.

There are major omissions in this single-disc package, starting with "Summertime Blues," the Jerry Capehart-Eddie Cochran song that was a hit not only for Cochran in the '50s, but also for Blue Cheer in the '60s and the Who in the '70s.

Still, the new collection conceived and produced by Cary E. Mansfield and Bill Pitzonka is ideal for summer parties and as a starting point for drafting your own list of the great summer songs.

Most summer songs are calculated novelties that are only of interest when attached to memories of a particular time in one's life.

This package contains some of the most memorable of those novelties including the Jaimes' hyperactive "Summertime, Summertime" and Mungo Jerry's good-natured "In the Summertime" as well as Annette's relatively anonymous "Beach Party" and Connie Francis' "Vacation."

The best summer songs, however, touch us with an innocence or optimism that transcends a particular era. Here are some selections from "All-Time Greatest" that fall into the latter category records that should catch your ear regardless of the season. They are in the order they appear on the disc.

The Lovin' Spoonful's "Summer in the City." Because I grew up in Southern California and associate summer records with sunshine and the beach, this gritty 1966 hit, with its talk about escaping to rooftops, always struck me as more about big-city congestion than glorious summers. By contrast, the Spoonful's earlier hit, "Do You Believe in Magic," seemed more like a reassuring summer song. As Los Angeles itself has become more congested over the years, it's easier to appreciate "Summer in the City" and the yearning for good times that is embodied in the song.

Chad & Jeremy's "A Summer Song." One reason this single made it into the Top 10 in 1964 was that Chad & Jeremy were part of the British rock invasion. The only reason it's on this list, however, is that song-writers Clive Metcalfe, Keith Noble and David Stuart captured so deftly the unchecked romanticism of summer love. The lyrics are little more than greeting-card sentiments, but who can resist the devotion in such links as, "When rain beats against my window pane/I'll think of summer days again and dream of you."

Martha & the Vandellas' "Dancing in the Street." The lyrics—which call out the names of cities around the country are simply a variation on what Chuck Berry did in "Sweet Little Sixteen," but Martha Reeves' driving vocal and the Motown musicians' scorching beat are knockouts. The 1964 single—produced by Smokey Robinson—was such a marvelous blueprint that "Dancing" became a hit again over the years for the Mamas & the Papas, Van Halen and the team of Mick Jagger and David Bowie in 1985. This, however, remains the version.

The Kinks' "Sunny Afternoon." Think of this as the great anti-summer song. The mood in this 1966 gem may be leisurely, but the tone is almost perversely dark—a piece of biting satire about a wealthy bloke who is grumbling because the tax man has taken his money and left him in his stately home without even enough dough for him to sail his yacht.

Percy Faith and His Orchestra's "The Theme From 'A Summer Place.'" This was the theme for a 1959 movie about young love, and composer Max Steiner expressed the gentle allure of summer romance so well in this instrumental that the song soared to No. 1 on the charts.

Nancy Sinatra and Lee Hazlewood's "Summer Wine." This team is best remembered for Sinatra's 1966 hit "These Boots Are Made for Walkin'," but this psychedelic-accented tale of summer seduction was also a goofball classic.

Gary U.S. Bonds' "School Is Out." Bonds came out with this 1961 hit a decade before Alice Cooper's "School's Out," and it had the liberating ring of a recess bell. Among the classic lines: "I can root for the Yankees from the benches. . ."

Freddy Cannon's "Palisades Park." There's no direct reference to summer in this 1962 hit, but "Palisades Park" is one of the most effervescent pop records ever. The single came complete with the sounds of an amusement park calliope and the screams of roller coaster riders. Trivia note: The song was written by Chuck Barris, of TV's "The Gong Show" fame.

The Legendary Masked Surfers featuring Dean Torrence's "Gonna Hustle You." This song, originally recorded by Ian & Dean, was reworked in 1973 by the duo's Dean Torrence and the Beach Boys' Brian Wilson, and it is a hoot—a track with a bit of a harder edge than is normally associated with the Beach Boys.

War's "Summer." A decade after "Summer in the City," this record served as the West Coast equivalent of several East Coast hits of the '60s by transplanting some New York R&B sentiments into a SoCal setting. It's moodier than the pure surf's-up energy of the Beach Boys' summer tales.

Collegian
where stars are born

Klein's All Sports
is your college sports headquarters

This Weekend Only
BRING IN THIS AD AND TAKE AN ADDITIONAL 20% OFF*
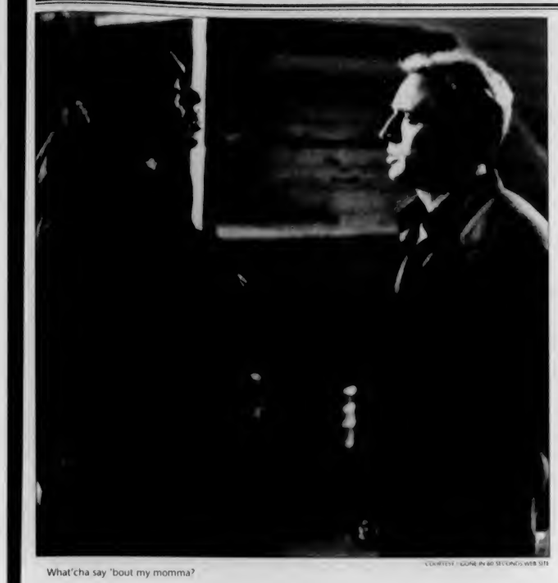
any one item

featuring the best names in athletic footwear clothing and equipment

KLEIN'S ALL SPORTS
UNBEATABLE!
Holyoke Mall, Holyoke Hampshire Mall, Hadley
Second Floor, next to Filene's

*EXPIRES 09/11/00. Must present ad for offer. Limit one per customer. Excludes all prior sales, gift certificates, and layaways. Cannot be combined with any other special offer, coupon, or manufacturer's discount.



What'cha say 'bout my momma?

COURTESY - GONE IN 60 SECONDS WEB SITE

Gone 60 sixty seconds too long, too loud, not enough Angelina Jolie

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Gone in 60 Seconds
Directed by Dominic Sena with Nicholas Cage, Giovanni Ribisi
Robert DuVall

Noticeably absent from the above list of stars is Angelina Jolie, the charismatic Academy Award winner for her supporting performance in Girl Interrupted and all around bombshell. No, Jolie did not get edited from the massive display of male ego that is Gone in 60 Seconds, but her limited screen time is easily the movie's biggest fault.

Jolie's ability to snap off one-liners and her undeniable intensity both would have been welcome additions to a movie that should have been fun, but often gets bogged down in maudlin plot arcs.

Nicholas Cage does his best (and at this point, I'm not sure what that is anymore) with Randall Raines—an ex car thief turned good thanks to his poor mother. When Randall's brother Kip (Giovanni Ribisi) gets in trouble with the most stereotypical Russian bad guy imaginable, it's big brother to the rescue. Randall must steal 50 cars in 48 hours while dodging the Feds, most notably Detective Castleback (played by the always-good Delroy Lindo).

He assembles a team to help him including his mentor Otto (Robert Duvall playing a darker version of his Days of Thunder character) and his ex-girlfriend (Jolie admirably steps in here).

With the exception of Ribisi who plays Kip like a degenerate New York mobster, the performances here are surprisingly earnest. Cage is properly subdued. DuVall and Lindo are wildly entertaining. And Will Patton brings his usual everyman quality to Randall's longtime-friend-turned-nemesis Atley.

The cast wades through a particularly saccharine story of friendship, family, betrayal. Most of the action promised by the fairly likeable trailer is prolonged until the latter third of the film. Indeed with the combination of super-fast, ultra-expensive sports cars and Angelina Jolie, I simply expected more.

Gone in 60 Seconds tries to do too much. Instead of accepting its place as a mindless action flick (like other Nick Cage vehicles The Rock or Con Air), it tries to pull emotional heartstrings (like Armageddon or Independence Day) and ultimately fails.

I won't say that I didn't enjoy Gone in 60 Seconds at all. Anytime nitrous oxide is super-injected into an engine to reach speeds upwards of 180 miles per hour or a car leaps a 75-foot chasm in a bridge, then something is cool. I will say however that I was slightly disappointed. Too much setup doesn't quite pay off with enough high-octane action sequences. C+

Come down to the Collegian offices in the Campus Center basement and write for arts.

resources
We've got you covered
- FLEXIBILITY
- Competitive Pay
- Temp
- Temp to Perm
- Career Opportunities
- Vacation

HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

CAMPUS RECREATION
Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Volleyball & Ice Hockey
Clinics: Football, Soccer- Sept. 12.13.14,15
Co-ed Softball- Sept. 18, 19 Field Hockey- Sept. 18
Volleyball- Oct. 3, 4, 10, 11 Ice Hockey- Sept. 27
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693

Affordable
Happy Bday Cards
Rings Bracelets Chains
Candles Incense
Earrings
Great Clothing
Posters
And Gifts
Baskets
Paper Lampshades
India Print Bedspreads
Area Rugs
Chinese Shoes
Sale
20 to 50% off selected Clothing
Bead Curtains
Mugs
The GreatGifts Mercantile
Visa / MC
Th Fri 9PM
Sun 12-5:30
Daily 10-6
Amherst-Carriage Shops
Northampton 108Main St

ATTENTION COLLEGE JUNIORS:
It's not too late for you to get a scholarship...
Air Force ROTC has scholarships available immediately in the following majors...

Chemistry
Computer Info Systems
Computer Science
Mathematics
Meteorology
Physics
Aeronautical Engineering
Aerospace Engineering
Chemical Engineering
Civil Engineering
Computer Engineering
Foreign Area Studies
Foreign Languages
Electrical engineering
Industrial Engineering
Mechanical Engineering
Nuclear Engineering

You can also still join AFROTC and compete for a two year scholarship no matter what your major. Register before add/drop ends.
Call Captain Chris Lewis (545-2437) or afrotc@... for more information

NFL WEEK 2	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White Editor-In-Chief	Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor	Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor	Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor	David Rose Collegian Staff
Green Bay @ Buffalo	Buffalo by 6	Green Bay	Green Bay	Buffalo	Buffalo	Buffalo
Kansas City @ Tennessee	Tenn. by 8 1/2	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Tennessee	Tennessee
Oakland @ Indianapolis	Indy by 6 1/2	Indianapolis	Oakland	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Jacksonville @ Baltimore	Baltimore by 3	Jacksonville	Baltimore	Baltimore	Jacksonville	Jacksonville
Miami @ Minnesota	Minnesota by 3	Minnesota	Miami	Minnesota	Miami	Minnesota
NY Giants @ Philadelphia	Philadelphia by 3	NY Giants	Philadelphia	NY Giants	NY Giants	Philadelphia
Cleveland @ Cincinnati	Cincinnati by 6	Cleveland	Cleveland	Cincinnati	Cincinnati	Cincinnati
Chicago @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 7	Tampa Bay	Chicago	Chicago	Chicago	Tampa Bay
St. Louis @ Seattle	St. Louis by 7 1/2	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis
Carolina @ San Francisco	Carolina by 3	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	San Francisco
Washington @ Detroit	Washington by 6	Detroit	Detroit	Washington	Washington	Washington
Atlanta @ Denver	Denver by 4 1/2	Atlanta	Denver	Denver	Atlanta	Denver
New Orleans @ San Diego	San Diego by 1	New Orleans	New Orleans	San Diego	New Orleans	San Diego
Dallas @ Arizona	Arizona by 2 1/2	Arizona	Arizona	Arizona	Arizona	Arizona
New England @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 6 1/2	New England	New England	New England	NY Jets	New England

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments); Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors.

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

Bragging rights.

The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.

NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports

We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

IN SHAPE NUTRITION

NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER

GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale

Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!

Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements

Also check out our online store at...
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM

65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

U.S. struggles as MLS season finishes

As the end of the 5th regular MLS season approaches, U.S. soccer fans can once again revel in the fact that they are indeed different than the rest of the world. Not only will there not be a league champion based on overall points, but the league champion could possibly be the New England Revolution, currently holding onto its playoff possibilities like an adolescent boy to his burgeoning manhood.

Though the league structure, name and fanciful mascots more resemble minor league baseball than the professional football league for the sixth largest population on the planet, there have been dramatic improvements in the last few years. True, the league still depends heavily on ageing European and Latin American stars like Lothar Matthaus, Hristo Stoickkov, Carlos Valderrama and Miklos Molnar to imbue the game with quality and credibility, but Americans like Clint Mathis, Jason Kreis, Ante Razov and Rusty Pierce have made their distinct impressions upon the league. MLS even loses the occasional player to English teams, Joe Max-Moore, Stern John and soon Brian McBride (on loan to Preston North End) will all be playing in front of gap toothed hooligans this year.

Chris Gaffney on Major League Soccer

The rise in the level of American players has helped the overall quality of league play in the last two years. For example, Newcastle United of the English Premier League was resoundly beaten by both D.C. United and the Columbus Crew on a pre-season tour of the states. Now, I know many readers will say, "Yeah, but it's Newcastle", and will have a valid point, but the fact remains that on any given day MLS sides can compete with perennial middle sides of one of Europe's best leagues. No one doubts that teams like San Jose, Dallas and sadly, New England, would be quickly relegated to the lower divisions of Europe. Fortunately, in the U.S., there is a more forgiving system that allows teams to either put up or, well, put up again next year with some help from the league in terms of player allotments.

So with all of the improvement in the MLS one would certainly expect to see reciprocal results at the national team level. Wrong. The U.S. currently stands second in their preliminary qualifying group which they must get out of to get to another qualifying group before they can book a ten day stay in Korea or Japan for the 2002 finals.

After drawing away to Guatemala, losing away to Costa Rica and thrashing Barbados at home, the recent one – nil victory over Guatemala in Washington, D.C. was emblematic, symptomatic and unemphatically empathic about how far U.S. soccer has to go to compete at a world-class level.

For those who didn't see the game, the U.S. was lucky to escape R.F.K. with three points. McBride, who epitomizes the media ideal of an American player in that he runs a lot, "sacrificed" himself to slot home a difficult chip from substitute Cobi Jones in the 77th minute after the only left sided player on the squad had himself sent off after 8 minutes of spastic action. While the U.S. had the better of the play, it doesn't matter much if the ball doesn't take a rest in the back of the net once in awhile. Ten men U.S. barely survived the match and could count their three points on Kasey Kellers fingers. What the game brought strictly into focus was that there are no class finishers in this country, nor, apparently, any that have moved here, married American women or are sons of U.S. servicemen abroad. Until the U.S. can develop an effective system for player development through the professional ranks, which would necessitate the elimination of collegiate soccer, the U.S. will continue to hope to get to the next World Cup and have three matches once they get there.

One interesting aspect of the game in RFK was the segregation of the crowd. While there was a tremendous amount of support for the U.S., there is never an international game played in this country that doesn't draw a great deal of support from ex-patriots of whatever stripe. However, at RFK, all the red clad U.S. supporters were on the lower tier of the stadium and all of the blue-clad Guatemalans were on the upper deck. Or at least it was assumed that they were on the upper deck because the cameras never bothered to focus on the entirety of the stadium. Whether the reasons for the uneven distribution of fans was socio-economic, or dictated by ABC or the U.S. Federation, it looked to be a tremendous atmosphere (though muted by the commentary of Ty Keough and Jack Edwards) and perhaps was a sign of more passionate home support to follow.

Chris Gaffney is a Collegian Correspondent

■ womens soccer

continued from page 16

"LIU is off to a very slow start," Rudy said. "They had a bunch of players who didn't come in or back, as well as a few injuries. But they were in the NCAA's last year, so they have some players who have that experience."

The other two losses for LIU came to Hofstra and St. John's.

Fairfield, the final team in the field, enters the weekend with a 0-2-2 record. The Stags lost to Boston College and Villanova, but have tied Long Beach State and Yale.

On the UMass side of things, the Minutewomen have only allowed one goal in its first three games. Junior Julie Podhrasky has seen the majority of the action for the Minutewomen, performing well in the starting role.

Top offensive threats for the Maroon and White include freshman Erin Lilly (six points) and junior Brooke Bartlett (five points). Senior Kara Ciocca and junior Kat Machainer each have four points apiece for the Minutewomen so far this season.

All games this weekend will be played at Totman Field.

■ field hockey

continued from page 16

on there strength defensively because they're on their stick side."

In sharp contrast to UMass, both Ball State and Miami of Ohio are entering rebuilding years, and a win against the Minutewomen would do a lot to get them moving in the right direction.

Ball State has ten first year players on the team and lost five seniors the previous spring to graduation, but still managed to beat Northwestern 2-0 and Syracuse 1-0 before falling to Delaware 4-2 in last week's Blue Hen Tournament. The Cardinals have been the team to beat in the Mid-American Conference in the 90's, and at least one Ball State player has been named an All-American each of the past eight years. In addition, head coach Karen Fitzpatrick enters the game as the third winningest coach in Division I history.

For Miami of Ohio, seven new players have been thrust into the fray this year to fill in the spots left by a strong graduating class. Despite their youth, the Red Hawks are coming off a fairly strong performance out west in which they beat Pacific University 2-1 before falling in double overtime to Cal-Berkeley 2-1 and to Stanford 4-0.

■ volleyball

continued from page 16

Thus far, the Flying Dutchwomen have struggled stumbling to a 1-5 overall record. Last season, they finished 26-6 overall and 13-1 in the America East conference, but the Dutchwomen lost four starters and five letterwinners from last year's squad.

After sweeping Coastal Carolina in the first game of the Carolina Fall Preview last weekend, Hofstra dropped three straight to East Tennessee State, Pittsburgh and North Carolina. This will be the tenth meeting between the Flying Dutchwomen and Minutewomen, with UMass holding a scant 5-4 advantage heading into this weekend's contest. The last time the two teams met was in 1995.

Following the Hofstra Invitational, the Minutewomen will travel to Fort Collins, Colorado to take part in the Coors Classic before they go to Dayton to begin Atlantic 10 Conference play on Friday, Sept. 22 at Dayton.

SPORTS MEETING TUESDAY at 6 PM in the NEWSROOM BE THERE!

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
Welcomes You at 6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card

Rubinoff 1.75	$9.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack	$9.99
Beck's , Heineken 12 Pack	$9.99
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$9.99
Magic Hat 9 Pack	$9.99

Prices Good Until 9/13/00
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
(Corrected Dates)

Flag Football: (M/W/C)	9/11
Soccer (M/W)	9/11
Co-ed Softball	9/12
Field Hockey	9/12
Cross Country (M/W)	9/19
Field Events (M/W)	9/19

On the web: www.umass.edu/umim
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions beginning late August/early September

CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special luncheon/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.

MEAL CHECKERS
Breakfast, lunch, dinner and weekend schedules available. Must be able to work a minimum three shifts (approx. 5 hours each) up to a maximum of 19 hours per week. Light cleaning duties (including tables) during and after hours. Will train.

DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours. Previous kitchen experience preferred.

We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply.

There will be a mandatory sports staff meeting Tuesday, September 12th at 6:00 PM in the Newsroom. New writers welcome. For more information, call Bryan or Mike at 545-0719 or 546-1749.

YANKEE CANDLE

If you're looking for a
SEASONAL or PART-TIME
position, we want to meet you!

Come to the Yankee Candle Company located in nearby Whately, MA and pick up an application today.

Corporate Headquarters, YCI, at 102 Christian Lane in Whately, MA. Directions: Route 116 North to Route 5 & 10 intersection, take left onto Route 5 & 10 South, left onto Christian Lane. (No phone calls, please; EOE)

Flexible schedules, including Seasonal and Part-Time Weekend hours, are available to fit your unique scheduling needs. We are currently looking for help in the following areas:

- SEASONAL SALES ASSOCIATES
- SEASONAL RESTAURANT STAFF
- SHIPPERS (year round)

We are a progressive company offering our Seasonal and Part-Time associates many extras including: competitive wages, generous discount on candles, as well as use of our fitness center. We compensate all employees required to work on Sundays with time-and-a-half pay.

YCC Listed NYSE
www.yankeecandle.com
For a complete listing of current job openings, please call the Yankee Candle jobline at 800-839-6038 and select menu option 4.

RENOVATOR'S
Now Hiring
Catalog Request / Sales Representatives

Part-Time Evening and Weekend positions available. Basic computer skills and a pleasant telephone manner required. Please apply in person between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at:
THE RENOVATOR'S SUPPLY, INC.
RENOVATOR'S OLD MILL
MILLERS FALLS, MA 01349

413-669-3773 tel.
413-669-3796 fax

Located on Rte. 63 off Rte. 2, right at the bridge over the Millers River

Real Life

Campus Crusade for Christ's Weekly Meeting

Friday's @ 7 p.m.
Campus Center

Room # is posted at information desk

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

TAG SALE - Multiple Families 20 Nelson Circle, Amherst Saturday, September 9 from 8:00am - 12:00pm Household items. NO Clothes.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

AUTO FOR SALE

96Mercury Station Wagon excellent condition 117k miles/ac $2000 413-467-3938

CHILDCARE

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50. Housework, car references experience. 413-247-5800

CHILDCARE

Childcare for 2 1/2yr girl with medical needs at home in Montague. Car a must! CPR/First Aid req. MWTH eves. $6.50 hr. Call Darci 367-9129

COMPUTERS

Laptop P-166, 1.4GB, 64MB, 28.8KB, Win95. $400 o/b/o 256-4150

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

TUTORS/TRANSLATERS

Bilingual/for par-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Amharic, Chinese, Japanese, Khmer, Korean, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Vietnamese. Call ESL Office at 413-549-9857 Amherst Public Schools An Affirmative Action/ Equal Opportunity Employer

Personal Care Attendent for male quad evenings and weekend $9.50 per hour. Call 546-0666

Paid Internship Seeking creative & responsible students to work for an e-commerce company on campus 30hrs/semester. Call 256-4560

EMPLOYMENT

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle. $7-14/hr. 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Make Money & Do Good Stuff Earn good money while saving the earth. Flexible hours, paid training, students welcome. ($7.30 - $9.00/hr) Call Clean Water Action 413-584-9830

WORK STUDY JOBS: Work with infants and children up to six years old. $7.25/hour. Or earn up to two credits. Must be available on Monday nights from 4:30 to 8:00pm.

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT JOB KITCHEN STAFF NEEDED Work in low pressure, well maintained kitchen. Positions available for both skilled and untrained staff. Located next to campus. Help maintain kitchen and prep and cook meals. Flexible hours. Call today 549-7321

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk. $7-8 depending on experience. Car essential. 549-1578

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE. Contact Ellen 585-5133

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week.

EMPLOYMENT

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring councilers. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Recreation Leader - After School Program The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Lockers for Rent: $10 for the year. Cheap! Come to rm 428 Student Union.

FOR RENT

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

MISCELLAEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

MUSICIANS

Wanted: Drummer for church rock/jazz band. Hours: 8:45 am - 11 am Sundays. $60/wk, 40 weeks a year. Call: 549-0431 to arrange an audition. Freshman or Sophomore a plus. We do not discriminate based on gender, race, sexual orientation, or creed. Wanted immediately.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Cancun, Bahamas, Mardi Gras, Barbados Sell trips, earn cash, go free! Lowest rates guaranteed! Group discounts for 6+. Information/reservations 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

TRAVEL

MAKE YOUR OWN HOURS Sell Spring Break 2001 Trips HIGHEST COMMISSIONS - LOWEST PRICES NO COST TO YOU Travel FREE including food, drink & non - stop parties!!! WORLD CLASS VACATIONS 2000 STUDENT TRAVEL PLANNERS "TOP PRODUCERS" & MTV'S CHOICE (Spring Break Cancun Party Program) 1-800-222-4432

Need to sell something?

Look no further...

Place an Ad in The Collegian Classifieds and Sell it EASY!!

Call 545-3500 TODAY!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN International
14	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govst to Govst
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 8, 2000

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Journal		The Grand (in Stereo)		Ayers Rock: Naked Planet
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Candid C.	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Candid C.	JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Making-Band	Making-Band	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Baby Blues	PJs (In Stereo)	Popular "We Are Family"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Major League Baseball: New York Yankees at Boston Red Sox. (Live)						News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	9	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Teen Choice Awards (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	12	26	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Making-Band	Making-Band	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	The Strip "We Will Rock You"		Secret Agent Man (In Stereo)		Star Trak: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Montreal Expos at Atlanta Braves. (Live)							★★★ "It Could Happen to You" (1994)
A&E	14		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Savior"		Biography: McDowall		Poirot "Problem at Sea"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Blood Libel"
CNN	19	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	18	16	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live
DISC	42		Your New House		Wild Discovery "Ocean Peril"		On the Inside "K-9 Teams" (N)		Science-Summer Olympics		Storm Warning!		On the Inside "K-9 Teams"
ESPN	43		Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Double Jeopardy" (1996, Drama) Joe Pesci, Tori Garr,				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	33		(5:30) To Be Announced			TRL (In Stereo)			Best of Say What? Karaoke		NSYNC's Dedications		Fashionably	Dream Date
NICK	35		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	U Pick Nicktoons (In Stereo)			Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	45		Sliders "Eggheads" (In Stereo)		Quantum Leap (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Reunion" (N)		Farscape "The Ugly Truth"		Lexx: The Series "Gametown"		Invisible Man "Reunion"
TLC	27	28	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Nowhere to Hide"		Dangerous Pursuits		Death Defying Stunts		Motorcycles – Born to Be Wild		Dangerous Pursuits
TNT	53		ER "John Carter, M.D."		Pretender "Curious Jarod"		★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman.						★★ "Fallen" (1997)
USA	31		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Jinx" (In Stereo)		★★ "Seven Years in Tibet" (1997, Drama) Brad Pitt, David Thewlis. (In Stereo)						Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	39		(5:15) "Three Men and a Baby"		Inside the NFL		★★ "Lethal Weapon 4" (1998, Action) Mel Gibson. "R"				★½ "Devil in the Flesh" (1997, Suspense) Rose McGowan. "R"
MAX	40		(5:45) ★★ "Thief" (1981, Crime) Jack Nicholson. "R"				★½ "Multi Money" (1994, Comedy) Maxine Griffith. PG-13				★★½ "The Thirteenth Floor" (1999) Craig Bierko.		Pleasure Zone
SHOW	29		★★ "Sliding Doors" (1998, Comedy) Gwyneth Paltrow. "R"						★★★ "The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan. "R"		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "The Final Appeal"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

THERE'S A RADIOHEAD SONG THAT GOES, "I'LL TAKE A QUIET LIFE, A HANDSHAKE, AND CARBON MONOXIDE." BUT THE SINGER INSISTS IT'S NOT ABOUT SUICIDE.
I IMAGINE THAT'S HOW GOD RELATES TO THE WORLD.
LEMON BUTTER!

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

FALLING INTO THIS HOLE WASN'T SUCH A GOOD IDEA.
HEY WHAT'S UP BOB?
QUITE A BIT, SINCE I'M DOWN HERE.
LOOKS LIKE YOU'RE STUCK IN A HOLE
YUP
THAT'S A SHAME
4/21/00

Over the Hedge By Michael Fry & T Lewis

RJ: HE'S A LITTLE MOTHERLESS EAGLET... WE HAVE TO SAVE IT!
IF WE TOOK IN EVERY ENDANGERED SPECIES, WE'D BE THE ENDANGERED SPECIES.
RJ... THERE'S PLENTY OF POP TARTS TO GO AROUND.
MAYBE... BUT ARE THERE PLENTY OF CHERRY POP TARTS TO GO AROUND?...WAIT... IT MAY BE TOO LATE ANYWAY...
NO... NO... HE GOT AWAY!... HE'S OUT OF THE FRYING PAN...
HONK!! BEEP!! SQUAWK!!
AND INTO THE FIRE!
ZOT!
comics.com

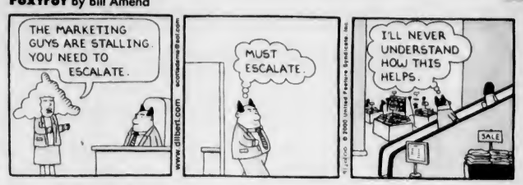
Foxtrot By Bill Amend

I'LL SEE YOUR FRITO AND RAISE YOU A RUFFLE.
I'LL SEE YOUR RUFFLE AND RAISE YOU A PRINGLE.
I'LL SEE YOUR PRINGLE AND RAISE YOU A DORITO.
QUICK! HIDE EVERYTHING! MOM'S COMING!
MOM DOESN'T CARE IF WE PLAY CARDS.
TRUST ME ON THIS.
MMM... THANKS SWEETIE.
AAAA! MY $25 WAVY LAY!
THIS IS WHY THEY USE FAKE CHIPS IN VEGAS.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

YOU'RE GOING TO SIT IN YOUR CLOSET AND THINK ABOUT WHAT YOU DID.
FIRST YOU YELL AT ME TO CUT MY FUR AND NOW YOU YELL AT ME FOR TRYING TO GET RID OF IT. MAKE UP YOUR MIND!
RUSKY... YOU POURED A WHOLE BOTTLE OF NO-HAIR CREAM INTO MY SHAMPOO. THERE'S NO WAY YOU CAN TALK YOUR WAY OUT OF THIS.
JEEZ, YOU JUST GOT THIS TEENY CLUMP OF HAIR ON THE TOP OF YOUR HEAD. WHO KNEW YOU'D BE SO DEPENDENT ON IT!

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



Over theHedge By Fry Lewis

THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 2
"THE ONE METER BREASTS STROKE"! WATCH AND BE AMAZED.
AYYEEEEE!!!
OOOO...CLOSE... BUT NO STROKE... BUT SAMMY DOES GET POINTS FOR EXPLETIVES!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

WE HAD DINNER, THEY CLEARED OUR TABLE AND HE'S STILL BABBLING.
THE NEVER MET ANYONE LIKE HIM BEFORE. SO INTERESTINGLY PREOCCUPIED SO QUIETLY TORMENTED. WHAT MAKES SENSES, IS HE STRUGGLING WITH? WHAT PROFOUND AND TURBULENT THOUGHTS?
WHAT'S 6% OF $53.95?

Robotman By Jim Meddick

I'VE NEVER BEEN OUT WITH ANYONE LIKE YOU SO INTENSE SO BROODING
YOU'RE A TOTAL MYSTERY
WOW! I'M SO MYSTERIOUS, I'M ALMOST OBVIOUS. SO BROODING, I'M ALMOST HOPELESS
I REALIZE THIS IS AN EASY WAY TO UNDERSTAND, BUT THAT'S BECAUSE I'M SO, SO SO COMPLICATED?
EXACTLY. I'M SO COMPLICATED I'M ALMOST SIMPLE

MONKEY-BOX BY FRED

Horoscopes

Aries (March 21-April 19) - A secret partner could be hands. Don't talk much in public but do get a message across. By working through a mutual friend, you'll accomplish your mission.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - A project you've worked on for quite some time could pay off. You've done it so long, it could almost be a habit by now. This is good 'cause more work may be required soon.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) - Although you're charming, your energy level's not high. You may feel like you're struggling against overwhelming odds. Don't despair. Finish something you've started. Completion is energizing.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) - A compromise you work out with a partner might feel more like a capitulation. You might not get your first option, but don't give up. If you hold out for what's important, you could win after all.

Leo (July 23-Aug 22) - If you're trudging away at a difficult chore, you may feel like you're getting nowhere. That's not the case, however. You're gaining experience, and that's valuable.

Virgo (Aug 23-Sept 22) - The most difficult topic has probably already been addressed. You've said your piece. Finish your job and accept your reward, which might be more than you expected, due to a high-ranking person's favorable impression of you.

Libra (Sept 23-Oct 22) - You've made your point. Now wait and watch. A person you thought you'd never convince might have a change of heart. Stranger things have happened. Don't mention it again, though. Let him or her save face.

Scorpio (Oct 23-Nov 21) - Your formula for success should work pretty well. A good friend's a big help. Something you're learning seems to give you an advantage. Something you're doing privately, however, could bring you the greatest reward.

Sagittarius (Nov 22-Dec 21) - Money's not short, although your pockets may seem too empty. Don't worry. You'll have everything you need. A conversation with a friend will help you understand another person better, and that's valuable.

Capricorn (Dec 22-Jan 19) - The danger's passed and you should have smooth sailing. That should be true for projects you begin now, too. A lucky break could open up a new possibility. Use it to increase your influence and authority, watch for it.

Aquarius (Jan 20-Feb 18) - worries could make even the simplest tasks seem complex. If you're avoiding something, do that first. You'll be amazed at how much more energy you have after that's checked off your list.

Pisces (Feb 19- March 20) - An insider tip could lead to an excellent bargain. If you've done research, you'll know a good deal when you find it. Be ready to move quickly. Take action now through the weekend to get what you want for your home.

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 75 LOW: 47	HIGH: 81 LOW: 57	HIGH: 82 LOW: 54

Quote of the Day

"There's too much traffic. I can't wait 'til everyone stops going to classes next week."

–Overheard

ACROSS

1 Gnnd. as teeth
6 Dept. of Labor div.
10 Salad-bowl wood
14 Pound part
15 Multicolored
16 Bronte governess
17 Embellish
18 Actress Raines
19 Count (on)
20 Bolshevik founder
21 1986 Schwarzenegger movie
23 — -relief
25 Curvy letter
26 Basilica part
29 Oater actor Tim
32 Mottled horse
37 Calif. ocean
38 Hockey great Gordie —
39 Velvety fabric
40 Healthy
43 Second helping
44 Heart of the matter
45 Octopus' home
46 Court event
47 Landlord's fee
48 Seedless plant
49 Ghost — chance
51 Motorist's org.
53 Uneven
58 Popular gambling game
62 Diamond Head locale
63 Ceremony
64 Passion
65 Guns and rifles
66 Spouse
67 Blaze up
68 Heading
69 — dunk
70 Little kids

DOWN

1 Target
2 Naked
3 Pretty soon
4 Professional copyist
5 Hair tint
6 Fuel org.
7 Farm structure
8 Boxer's gear
9 Smith and Wesson
10 Seabird
11 Ogled
12 Singer Guthrie
13 Lock opener
22 Appearance
24 Sandbar
26 Not together
27 Lighter
28 Bookstore section
30 Have
31 Shelf
33 Sort
34 Ruckus
35 Piano fixer
36 Heart or liver
38 Greetings
39 View
41 — Appia Roman road
42 Relatives
47 Kind of tire
48 Equitably
50 Companies
52 Behind, on a ship
53 Zhivago's love
54 Electrical units
55 Word on a door
56 Sundance Kid's girl
59 Bismarck's st
60 Tipper — 61 Mines products
62 Power's need

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

A	G	R	A		S	T	E	P		T	U	N	I	C
D	E	E	R		P	O	N	E		A	N	I	T	A
D	E	C	K	C	H	A	I	R		R	E	B	E	L
U	S	A		R	E	D	D		S	P	A	S	M
P	E	P	P	E	R		I	D	U	O	S
		G	O	W	E		C	A	N	N	E	R	Y
O	A	S	E	S		P	A	W	N	S		Y	E	W
P	R	A	M		R	A	I	N	Y		L	A	N	E
E	E	R		B	A	R	N	S		D	E	N	S	E
		S	I	L	E	N	C	E		S	O	N
B	E	A	C	H		P	A	G	O	D	A	S
B	R	A	S	H		D	E	S	I		I	C	E
M	O	U	N	T		C	A	S	H	E	W	N	U	T
O	R	I	E	L		S	L	O	E		Y	E	T	I
W	E	N	D	Y		T	E	S	S		E	D	E	N

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

HOT TURKEY SANDWICH

RAVIOLI

CUBAN BLACK BEANS (VEGAN)

Dinner

LEMON PEPPER COD

JAMBALAYA CHICKEN (Worcester)

THAI SEITAN (VEGAN)

ZUCCHINI MUSHROOM CREPES (Berkshire and Worcester)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician — Jarett Barr
Copy Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — Alan Basque, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Friday, September 8, 2000 16

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
Mike Koboylanski
Co-Sports Editors
sports@dailycollegian.com

Tough schedule continues for women's soccer

UMass to face Georgia, Long Island

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Things won't get any easier for the Massachusetts women's soccer team this weekend when it takes to the pitch for the UMass Classic.

After dropping a 1-0 decision to Syracuse on Monday afternoon to fall to 2-1 on the young season, the Minutewomen will take on Georgia and Long Island University on Friday and Sunday, respectively. Fairfield University rounds out the four-team field, but will not play UMass.

The Bulldogs, today's opponent at 4 p.m., finished 15-6-2 a year ago, just missing out on their third straight NCAA tournament appearance. LIU won the Northeast Conference title in 1999 and reached the NCAA tournament.

Georgia and LIU are both very tough opponents," Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "But it's just another few games in succession of our Murderers' Row schedule here in September."

The matchup with Georgia will also mark the return of former UMass standout Sue (Montagne) Patberg, who played for the Minutewomen from 1985-88. Patberg arrived in Athens after a stint at the University of Minnesota. In her seven seasons with the Golden Gophers, the former UMass defensive stalwart took an infant program and turned it into one of the best in the Big Ten.

We're excited to have Sue back," Rudy said. "It's exciting whenever you have one of your greats come back, and Sue was one of the greatest defenders to ever play at UMass."

Rudy coached Patberg in his first season at the helm of the Minutewomen, which happened to be her senior season in Amherst. She was a tri-captain on that 1986 club that finished 14-3-1 and reached the NCAA quarterfinals.

"Unfortunately, I only coached Sue for one year," Rudy said. "And we already had two captains in place, but I kind of bucked the trend and made her a third captain."

This season, the Bulldogs have come out of the gate with a 3-1 record. In its last time out, Georgia rallied back to upend Cincinnati by a score of 4-3. Other wins came over Elon College and the College of Charleston. UCLA handed the Red and Black its only loss.

"They beat a very good Cincinnati team the last time out, and they did it the hard way," Rudy said. "They were up 2-0 after 20 minutes, but then the game was called because of lightning. The game had to be replayed in its entirety the following day, and they came from behind twice. They weren't going to lose, and they didn't."

Top players for Georgia include seniors goalkeeper Nicole Williams, Stephanie Bertcher, Kristy Bongiovanni and sophomore Carolyn Cavard. Transfer Jessica Winton has also provided an offensive spark up front for the Bulldogs.

"Nicole really dominated us a few years ago [when the teams played in Georgia]," Rudy said. "We just could not beat her. She is one of the top senior keepers in the country."

"Stephanie and Carolyn are both quite good, and Kristy came to our advanced camp here at UMass. She's a player that we liked very much," added Rudy. "Jessica has been a big addition for them up top. From what we hear, when she's on, Georgia is on."

LIU has struggled in the season's early going, as evidenced by its 0-4 start. In fact, the Blackbirds lost to Atlantic 10 opponents in St. Joseph's and La Salle back in late August.

Turn to womens soccer, page 13

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Brooke Bartlett, recently promoted to forward from her usual midfield position, leads a young Massachusetts women's soccer team that will take the field twice this weekend at home in the UMass Classic.

Field hockey out to ruffle feathers

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

In field hockey, as in most sports, the team with the most points at the end of the game will pick up the victory, and that is exactly what the Massachusetts field hockey team will attempt to do this weekend when it travels to the rustic Midwestern state of Ohio to take on regional powerhouses Ball State and Miami of Ohio.

The upcoming weekend will be very pivotal in showing head coach Patty Shea and the rest of the UMass faithful whether or not the Minutewomen have what it takes to contend for the national title.

So far the 2000 campaign has gone fairly well for the Maroon and White, but Shea is well aware that her squad has a long way to go before it has any chance of joining the nation's elite. She also knows that a team returning nine of eleven starters should not be making the kinds of mistakes that her team has made in the first four games.

"We have a pretty experienced team right now. I mean, if I look across the board I see seniors and juniors out there and we have a lot of players with a lot of experience and my expectations are really high for the team, so, no, I don't think we're where we need to be right now," said Shea after last week's loss to Northeastern.

Still, despite some sloppy play in the season's first four games, UMass has posted a very respectable 3-1 record, and there have been many positive developments to build on, most notably the play of All-American candidate Zowie Tucker.

Tucker, a senior goalie and native of Neath, South Wales, has continued her steady play by using a combination of athletic prowess and intelligence that has categorized her game over the past few seasons. Since 1997 she has posted a career 1.52 goal against average, and through four games this year has a ridiculous 0.75 goals per game average to go along with two shutouts. Clearly, the Minutewomen will go as far as Tucker can take them.

Another strong point for the Maroon and White is the defense. Although this year they haven't quite lived up to high expectations, junior Anke Bruenniger and junior tri-captain Kerry Ann Jaggassar lead an experienced group that should be very dependable as the year progresses. They have both done a solid job this year, but neither has been at their best, and against Northeastern, they failed to control the ball, especially in the first half.

After the game against the Huskies, Shea explained that the reason her team failed to control the ball was because they didn't keep it on the right side of the field. "Because you can only play with the right side of the stick you always want to try and work the ball down the right side of the field and if you get it caught on the left side of the field you're actually at your reverse stick side which is a major disadvantage. If we're on the left corner of the field they're

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY page 13

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Zowie Tucker, one of the top goaltenders in the country, has already compiled 2 shutouts this year. Ball State and Miami of Ohio are up next for UMass and the ball goblin.

UMass aims at biting Black Bears

Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

This Saturday the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will square off against a pack of bears not looking to steal picnic baskets from fellsstone park tourists, but steal their first win of the regular season from the Minutemen.

Playing the role of conservative Ranger Smith, UMass will be trying to stop the University of Maine, and by doing that, post its first win of the regular season at Alumni field in Orono.

Heading into the weekend 0-2 and coming off recent losses to South Carolina and the University of Hartford, the game will be a critical one for the Minutemen as they hope to snap their losing streak and head in the opposite direction.

However, the Black Bears are not going to be pushovers, leaving their first and only game this season with a tie against Sacred Heart University. The match ended 2-2 after thirty minutes of overtime where neither team could find the back of the net.

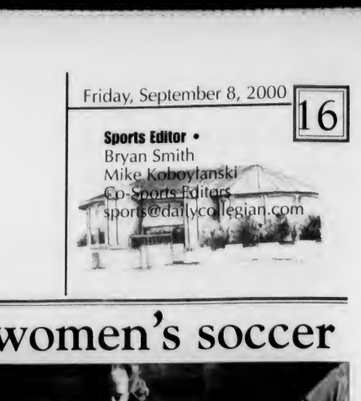
"They are solid made team and very effective," said head coach of the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team Sam Koch when asked about the University of Maine squad. "They definitely have some good players."

Yet, it may take more than just a team that can play well, when Maine meets the Maroon and White. Despite its recent loses, a surging UMass offense can be some hard opposition as last season's American East Champions, the University of Hartford, witnessed at Totman field last Wednesday. Although the Hawks took the game 2-1, as the Minutemen poured in on during the second half it became apparent that the Hawks just barely escaped with victory.

"To give them credit, they defended very well, but we created a lot of chances," said coach Koch. "We just didn't put them away."

The Hawks may have left Amherst lucky, but for the Minutemen to walk away from this weekends game with the win, they are going to have to score goals. Which would mean finishing the opportunities they create on the field to put the Black Bears away. In its first two games, the University of Massachusetts has only scored two goals, while in last year's home opener for the Minutemen, they tallied that much.

"As long as we communicate we should be able to get it done," said coach Koch.



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Looking to avenge its last loss to Hartford, the Massachusetts men's soccer team will travel to Maine to take on the Black Bears on Saturday, September 9, at 1:00 p.m. UMass leads the all-time series with a 22-11-1 record.

UMass harriers to open season at UNH

By Kevin Stone
Collegian Correspondent

There is no question that the Massachusetts men's cross country team has been running through campus for miles on end in recent weeks in preparation for its season opening meet today.

The Minutemen have been in countless hours of time and effort in hopes of a solid showing today. So, despite all of its hard work, it may come as a bit of surprise that the Maroon and White have elected to take a bus rather than run to their meet in New Hampshire today.

The UMass men's cross country squad travels to the University of New Hampshire today to compete against UNH, Boston College and the University of Connecticut in a quadmeet today.

A year ago at the same meet, UMass placed fourth against Iona College, UNH and BC.

"Right now, the team seems to have five or six runners competing close together," said UMass men's cross country coach Ken O'Brien, who is entering his 34th year with the team.

Top runners for the Minutemen this season include Ryan Corbet, Mike Picek, Kevin Somers, Brendan Sullivan and Sal Satasi.

As a sophomore, Corbet led the Minutemen at this same meet, placing first for the team and 17th overall.

Preseason training results indicated that junior Mike Picek and senior Kevin Somers are among the faster runners on the squad, along with Corbet.

O'Brien's also mentioned that other key athletes senior Sullivan and junior Satasi.

Women's cross country opens this weekend

Like its male counterparts, the Massachusetts women's cross country team will also open its season this weekend.

Along with BC, UConn and UNH, Northeastern will also attend this weekend's meet in Durham, NH.

Coach Julie LaFreniere's club has a host of talented returning runners. Among them include Elizabeth Mitchell and Melissa Henderson.

Be sure to pick up a copy of Tuesday's Collegian to see how both teams fared over the weekend.

Michael Kobylanski contributed to this story.

After an opening weekend success, volleyball goes to Hofstra Invitational

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

For any team looking to ascend the ranks on the national level, confidence always plays a pivotal role. So even though the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team will not commence its Atlantic 10 Conference schedule until the third weekend of this month, every game is important.

After opening their season by going 2-1 in non-conference games at the New Hampshire Tournament, UMass will try and continue its success as they travel this weekend to the Hofstra Invitational Tournament in Hempstead, NY.

In the tournament held last weekend, the Minutewomen downed the Wildcats in five sets and Eastern Michigan in three, while falling to eventual tournament champion Utah, who just this week defeated No. 1 ranked Stanford.

In last weekend's tourney, senior Rebecca Hasson, who averaged just under four kills per game, and junior Lymarie Llovet, who tallied a bit shy of one block per game, were awarded with All-Tournament honors for their performance.

The first game of the two-day, three-game tourney will see the Maroon and White square off against the Matadors of Cal-State Northridge on Friday at 5:00.

The Matadors [1-0] opened up their season with a win over UC-San Diego this past Tuesday, winning in three sets. It will be the first time the Minutewomen have faced the Matadors in school history.

On Saturday morning at 11 o'clock, UMass will face Illinois-Chicago in another first meeting for the Minutewomen. The Flames [4-0] have rolled so far this season, cruising to three victories in the Wilson UIC Invitational Tournament and a win this past Tuesday in which they swept Fairfield three games to none.

The third, pivotal game of the tourney will be played at 7 p.m. on Saturday as the Maroon and White will do battle with host Hofstra.

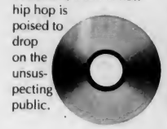
"Hofstra is the biggest game of the tournament for us," coach Bonnie Kenny said. "Like New Hampshire, it is a team in our district that we need to beat."

Turn to VOLLEYBALL page 13

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 4 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, September 11, 2000

Between now and Christmas, a ton of new hip hop is poised to drop on the unsuspecting public.



ARTS p. 5

Benny Hoffman and the UMass men's soccer team won their first game of the year on Saturday afternoon.

SPORTS p. 12

Parking crunch flattening morale

COURTESY MONSTERTRUCKS.NET

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

The majority of students on the University of Massachusetts campus have expressed concern and disappointment recently over the parking services system as a whole.

Many students are having problems obtaining parking stickers for various lots and have been waiting in lines for hours at a time. Another problem has been an increase in towing and ticketing.

Allyson Hopkins, a junior psychology and pre-education major expressed her concern by saying, "I don't think there are enough people working there [parking services], attending to student needs. There also needs to be more accessible parking available for the students."

Some students also expressed concern over other aspects of parking services. Some found themselves asking questions such as, "why was Parking Services closed Sunday (September 3) and Monday (September 4) of last week?" "Who is eligible for purple stickers and who is eligible for yellow stickers?" And "Is Parking Services gradually trying to deny freshman parking stickers this year?"

These are all questions that were answered by Michael Brennan, Manager of Parking Services. He commented that parking services was closed both Sunday and Monday of last week because of the Labor Day Holiday weekend. He also explained that other than freshmen, who are only eligible for yellow stickers, anyone is entitled to receive both yellow and purple stickers.

However, Michael Brennan did not comment on the problem of ticketing and towing on-campus.

Many students were concerned about being ticketed or towed in various lots during the move-in days. They felt that it was not fair to be ticketed on these days simply because many cars were parked by parents or new students who were not familiar with rules and regulations established by the parking services system.

"I have tried to argue some of my tickets and they ignored me. I have gotten no responses to my calls," Mike Daly, an undeclared sophomore, commented. "We need more parking for the students [because] there are too many cars out here."

Ann Awad and Dolls Jolly, both members of the Amherst Selectboard commented on how UMass parking is affecting downtown Amherst. They explained that parking in Amherst was a big issue and that a few years ago, they implemented a residential parking permit system. Within this system, they explained, residents were able to purchase a permit to park on their neighborhood streets until 8 a.m. in the morning. After 8 a.m., they had to move their cars, so workers employed by Amherst businesses who also owned a permit would have a place to park.

They explained that due to the fact that there are so many cars on campus, students are forced to compete for spaces in downtown Amherst.

Many students have had problems with this system because they have to move their cars if they do not have an Amherst parking permit in addition to their regular University parking permit. If these students do not move their cars, they will get a ticket.

"We have also asked the University to ban freshman from having cars on campus, yet the University has their own problems with parking to deal with," said Awad.

Carl Sappala, a member of the Amherst Selectboard also expressed his concern for the parking problem in downtown Amherst.

He said, "Despite some problems we have had, we are trying to alleviate the problem of parking downtown by proposing to build a parking garage."

A quest for excellence: worthy candidates sought

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Recommendations for the University of Massachusetts 2001 Honorary Degree recipient are being accepted until Sept. 22 and can be sent to Student Trustee Seth Avakian in room 420 of the Student Union.

Avakian explained that the recommended nominees should follow the requirements set forth by the Board of Trustees and should be persons of great accomplishments and high ethical standards.

Some factors considered in awarding degrees include intellectual distinction in a particular field, outstanding achievement that the University wishes to acknowledge and outstanding contribution to the University and/or the Commonwealth.

"This person could be anybody from former President Carter to Dave Thomas, the founder of Wendy's," Avakian said. "However, somebody like Tom Green, although very funny, would not be entirely appropriate."

According to him, the nominees aren't required to have graduated from the University or received any kind of secondary degree.

"It doesn't have to be a person who wrote a good book; it could be a Mother Theresa," Avakian said. "Anything of distinction that separates them and makes them stand out."

Once all recommendations from students are collected, Avakian explained, the Student Government Association (SGA) leadership will review them before they are voted on.

"I want the name to come from someone in the Student Body and for me to say, 'yeah, this person makes a lot of sense,'" Avakian said. "They tend to be nationally or internationally known, but they can also be known statewide or even just within their community."

Both Avakian and the University Board of Trustees must approve the names of the nominees before they are awarded with the honorary degree.

"I go to the Board with a name, a biography and a statement as to why they are deserving of an honorary degree," Avakian said. "Then the full Board will decide in executive session whether that person will or will not receive an honorary degree. Until the person is approved by the Board of Trustees, they will not know they are up for being nominated."

According to policy, honorary degrees cannot be awarded to current members of the Board of Trustees, faculty or staff of the University. Also, persons holding an honorary degree from one UMass institution or current candidates or holders of state or federal elective office in Massachusetts cannot be awarded the degree except under extraordinary circumstances as determined by the Trustees.

In addition, standard procedure requires the need for confidentiality at all stages of the honorary degree process. According to the Open Meeting Law there should be no communication with prospective degree recipients until after the Board has approved the award, allowing Trustees to consider the award in executive session.

The winner of the 2001 Honorary Degree will have the opportunity to be the guest speaker for Commencement. Last year's speaker was Billie Jean King. While Avakian doesn't know whether King was the recipient of the UMass honorary degree, he said she was nominated for her distinguished honors.

After the Board of Trustees reviews the nomination papers for each potential recipient, it comes to an agreement based on what candidate the award should be bestowed upon.

"If they accept, they would come to a commencement at UMass," Avakian said.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Alex Ballo (left), a freshman Computer Engineering major, speaks with Assistant Parking Manager Barb Simken about parking permits still available.

Survey: UMass party scene gone flat

Top 10 Party Schools (For Beer)	Top 10 Party Schools (For Hard alcohol)
1. Union College	1. Bucknell University
2. University of Texas-Austin	2. Trinity College
3. Saint Bonaventure University	3. Tulane University
4. Louisiana State University-Baton Rouge	4. Union College
5. Florida State University	5. Lehigh University
6. St. Lawrence University	6. Louisiana State University-Baton Rouge
7. Seton Hall University	7. Florida State University
8. Lehigh University	8. University of Wisconsin-Madison
9. Lafayette College	9. Saint Bonaventure University
10. University of Tennessee-Knoxville	10. University of Alabama-Tuscaloosa

Courtesy Princetonreview.com

By Patrick O'Connor
Collegian Correspondent

Despite its reputation, the University of Massachusetts does not appear on The Princeton Review's list of the top 20 party schools in the nation.

The Review attains its numbers by conducting surveys across the country, voluntary questionnaires filled out by approximately 100 students at each college. UMass, a one-time leader in The Princeton Review, now goes unnoticed. While some question the validity of the review, it raises an interesting question about the changing face of UMass, a face that some see as unaltered since the 80's.

> " The image of UMass has changed for the better. Our alcohol policy has been enforced in a strict way."
> -Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs

Reflecting on the stories of her parents, who also attended UMass, Amanda Reidyn, a junior School of Management major believes that not much has changed.

"If you want to go out any night of the week and party, you can," she said. "I have as much fun as they [her parents] did."

Some policies are different today on campus than they were years ago. Before 1987, UMass was a campus that was tolerant of student drinking. During that period, tailgate parties at football games could include kegs out in the open. In addition, seeing students walk around the dorms with an open bottle of beer was not an uncommon sight.

"When I first came to UMass, in 1987, the campus was closed, but before that time students could be seen walking around campus with alcohol," Gary Malanes, a UMass alumnus, said.

But even if alcohol is not readily in view on campus, many still believe that it is available.

"In certain places on campus, yes it is a party school," David Peck, a senior English major, said.

However, not all students agree with the idea of UMass being labeled a "party school."

"We were one of the top party schools at one time, but in the last few years [the administration has] cracked down," Tavar Davis, a senior Social Thought and Political Economy major, said.

Some students feel pressure from the University because it no longer tolerates irresponsible drinking.

"Because of all the alcohol related incidents, today the administration strongly warns students of the penalties accompanied with drinking on campus," Davis explained.

Whether or not the party scene has changed, the word is spreading that UMass is no longer the "animal house" of its forefathers.

Even as he questioned the validity and use of the Princeton Review's surveys, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos agreed that UMass is cleaning up its image.

"The image of UMass has changed for the better," he said. "Our alcohol policy has been enforced in a strict way."

Fair gives students opportunity to get involved

By Melissa Hammel and Jennifer Lachambre
Collegian Staff

Students interested in involving themselves in the world of campus volunteerism will have their chance today at the Volunteer Fair, to be held from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Over 70 community organizations will be present at the event, which is open to the public. Both students interested in volunteering their time on campus and students already involved in bettering the community are invited to attend the event. Members of the faculty are also encouraged to visit if they are interested in incorporating community service into their courses.

At present, the University offers upwards of 70 classes with community service options. While some of these are designated Honors or Commonwealth College classes, John Reiff, Director of Community Service Learning explained a majority of courses with the service component actually exists outside of the Honors program and are available to all students on campus.

Any student interested in implementing a service component into their personal curriculum can find service options in a variety of fields including anthropology, environmental science, marketing, physics, communications and many other disciplines.

However, the Volunteer Fair is offering more than just supplements to classes. Representatives from on-campus service organizations are also welcoming those who wish to get involved in the local community. Those who attend the fair can expect to see volunteering options in regards to housing, education, social justice, homelessness, aging and other pertinent issues.

The fair also presents students with a great opportunity to explore internship possibilities for next semester with the Campus Career Network at hand to answer questions and direct those that express interest.

With groups such as AmeriCorps and Peace Corps in attendance at the event, interested students will be given the opportunity to explore post-college service opportunities.

One organization on campus that allows students to benefit the UMass community while acquiring credits is the Boltwood project. This organization offers students the opportunity to work with both disabled children and adults.

Another organization on campus that provides service to the Amherst community at large is the Circle K. Some recent projects that this group has partaken in are playground construction for the town, working with the local animal shelter, volunteering both time and blood at the campus blood drive, and assisting at an Amherst soup kitchen.

An additional predominant service organization on campus is Habitat for Humanity, which helps to build shelter for the homeless, raise money to build structures, and raises awareness about the dispossessed.

In conjunction with the fair, State Representative Steve Kulik will be speaking today in room 162 of the Campus Center to a group of invited guests. Kulik will address the community service agencies concerning the best ways to go about lobbying state officials for support.

The agony of de-feet

Sophomores Jen McNeil (left) and Becky Norris enjoy the sunny skies at the horseshoe in Southwest on Sunday.

Army constructs war games for practice

By T. Christian Miller
Los Angeles Times

FORT POLK, La. — The Army came here to kill its own. Pitting unit against unit, war games raged across 200,000 acres of Louisiana bottomland constructed to mimic the real world.

There were villages with homes, restaurants, graveyards. Mortar rounds exploding overhead. Even a riotous population demonstrating against the invaders.

Unlike war games of old, when U.S. troops pretended to battle the Soviets, the approximately 5,000 troops here were fighting the fictitious "Cortina Liberation Front," a well trained guerrilla army.

The Pentagon's decision to battle a guerrilla force, and not a superpower, in these war games underscores a fierce debate taking place in the presidential race on the nation's ability to wage war. The fundamental question is not whether the military is ready, experts say. The question is ready for what?

"The real readiness debate is, 'Are we ready for yesterday's battles or the ones we will have to fight tomorrow?'" said Andrew Krepinevich, head of the nonpartisan Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments.

Republican presidential candidate George W. Bush repeatedly charges that the Clinton administration has allowed the military to lapse since its modern fighting peak during the Persian Gulf War. Equipment is in disrepair, he claims, and morale low.

But experts say the most vital military questions for the next president go beyond pay and parts to a critical judgment about the military's future mission. And while both Bush and Democratic nominee Al Gore have promised to review U.S. deployments abroad, neither has taken a stand on whether to fundamentally retool the nation's military goals.

The choices are framed by the Pentagon and military traditionalists, on the one hand, who insist that the U.S. armed forces must

Turn to ARMY page 3

Students scalp tickets

By Anne Marie Mattingly
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. – With online auction bids surpassing the $500 mark, tickets are selling for prices that make them literally worth their weight in gold.

Though Notre Dame does not expressly forbid the resale of tickets won by alumni in the annual lottery or of student tickets upgraded to general admission seating, the University does not intend its coveted football tickets to be sold to the highest bidder.

"There's no official statement that's been sent to alumni [on ticket resale]," said Jim Fraleigh, director of Ticketing and Marketing. "Alumni are allowed to resell their tickets for face value, hopefully to other alumni."

Students are permitted to resell upgraded general admission tickets, as are faculty and staff, according to Fraleigh, who emphasized that sellers should only ask for the price printed on the ticket.

"We have a program where we allow up to 300 students for each particular game [to upgrade]," he said, noting that the program was initiated at the request of student government.

"The purpose of that is for them to get family or friends into the game with them. It's not intended for a money making purpose."

Despite the University's intentions, several students upgraded tickets to this past weekend's game expressly for turning a profit.

"It was the financial opportunity of a lifetime," said Paul Hastings, a Notre Dame senior who planned to sell his upgraded ticket last weekend. Hastings traded in his student ticket for a general admission seat with three friends because the group believed they could command a better price if they were able to sell four seats together.

"When we found out the amount they were going for, I couldn't turn that down with bills to pay," said Hastings, noting that the sale of his ticket will cover the cost of this year's season tickets with money to spare.

Class of 1998 alum Jason McKenna also said that the amount buyers were willing to pay contributed to his decision to sell.

"I'm selling my tickets because I'm a law student and poor as hell," said McKenna, who sold the pair tickets he won in the alumni lottery for $535. "The Nebraska tickets are paying for my airfare to the Stanford game."

Sellers on eBay, like McKenna, were able to find a national audience of buyers willing to pay handsomely for their tickets, in large part because of the rich football history of Notre Dame.

"I was willing to pay around $200 per ticket because it will likely be my only trip to South Bend," said Nebraska fan Kris Covi of Omaha. "I'll be honest – I don't like Notre Dame. But as a fan of college football and its history, of which Notre Dame played such a storied part, I am excited to visit the campus and the Stadium. Every college football fan should go there to check it off the list."

That checkmark was worth $1,160 to Covi, who purchased one pair of tickets for $350 and four others for $810 from Notre Dame alumni. Fellow Nebraska fan Joe Booth, also of Omaha, paid $305 to a Notre Dame alum for his tickets to this weekend's event.

"The tradition of these two teams is the reason I'm willing to pay more," said Booth. "I want to step inside Notre Dame's stadium. I'm rooting for Nebraska."

Although Indiana has no anti-scalping laws, the sale of tickets on University property is prohibited, said Rex Rakow, director of Security. Buyers and sellers who violate this policy are subject to losing their tickets.

"What we do is confiscate the tickets, turn them back into the athletic department on Monday, and in some situations we issue the people a trespass loiter and ask them not to come back, depending on how cooperative they are," said Rakow. "If somebody is combative with officers, they're upping the chance of getting arrested on the spot. Every case is different, but we've done that in the past."

All-Star Meeting of the Campus Center Basement ther involved with the Collegian or wants of the team. So be there or....

what's happening on the street these days?

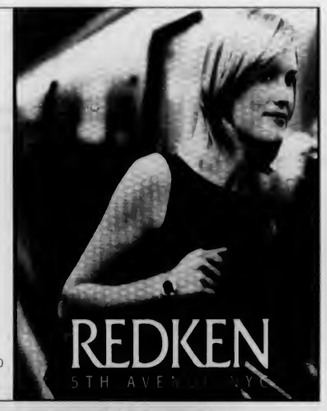
CUTTING EDGE STYLE

Go soft and smooth or out on the edge. Come see us for countless style possibilities!

Hair East
103 N. Pleasant St.
256-0438

HAIR EAST

Hours
Mon.-Fri. 9-8:00
Sat 9-7:00



WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?

CLUB 21

21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY

WITH

D.J. MATT Filmore

DRINK SPECIALS

Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing

GIVEAWAYS

CONTESTS

ALL NIGHT MENU

5 TVs

CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

ESPN THE MAGAZINE

SAVE 82%

LIKE SPORTSCENTER™ WITH STAPLES

ESPN THE MAGAZINE

SPECIAL $11.97 DISCOUNTED STUDENT RATE!
MAIL CARD BELOW TODAY OR CALL
▶ 1.888.335.ESPN

SUBSCRIBE ONLINE: WWW.SUB3.ESPNMAG.COM

GET 23 ISSUES OF ESPN THE MAGAZINE FOR $11.97. JUST 52¢ AN ISSUE. 82% SAVINGS OFF THE NEWSSTAND PRICE!

CHECK ONE: ☐ PAYMENT ENCLOSED ☐ BILL ME

NAME
ADDRESS APT NO
CITY STATE ZIP
EMAIL ADDRESS

MAIL COUPON TO:
ESPN THE MAGAZINE P.O. BOX 37380 BOONE, IA 50037-9228

SOJBMA

get that GiG .com

Why Not... Do Something Cool?!

GIG CONTEST!
How cool is this gig? Surf the net and be an on-line critic!

"Learn every angle of a profession."

"Know how to listen. You will learn most from the people around you."

"Everyone is dying to see me."

"Persistence is important."

Cool jobs

- who has them
- how to get them
- thousands of possibilities in hundreds of fields

www.getthegig.com

careers • internships • fellowships • part-time jobs

Gig Chat - special guests
Day In The Life Of - behind the scenes
Profiler - match me with a career
What's Up With That - weekly reviews

army

continued from page 2

be able to fight two major wars almost simultaneously, a goal that has long served as the cornerstone of American defense policy.

On the other side are some military strategists and a handful of politicians, who say the military should ready itself for conflicts that will be smaller, faster and geographically diffuse. Democratic vice presidential nominee Joseph I. Lieberman has long been a leading voice in pushing for just such a force.

Using the two-war goal as measuring stick, few analysts outside the Pentagon believe the United States today is ready to fight two massive wars against two opponents, no matter how improbable that scenario may be.

But take the small war goal standard – with enemies like the Cortina Liberation Front – and the picture changes. Nearly everyone in the military community believes the U.S. is ready to fight the small conflicts it is most likely to face. But that readiness could soon deteriorate.

Experienced officers are fleeing for more rewarding private sector jobs. Ships and tanks are getting old. Soldiers are serving long, dangerous missions far from their families.

"Today's readiness is good, but tomorrow's is in jeopardy," said Michael O'Hanlon, an informal advisor to Vice President Al Gore and a military scholar at the centrist Brookings Institute. "There are some troubling signs in the next 10 years."

Further complicating the picture is money. The Pentagon's $291 billion budget for next year is greater than the combined defense budgets of the next 10 largest countries, including Russia, China and Germany.

Bush has pledged to add $9 billion for raises, and another $36 billion over 10 years to the research and development budget. Gore has pledged a total of $100 billion over 10 years to increase everything from raises to technology.

Military experts point to the vast amounts of cash involved, and the politics entwined with that money, as part of the reason why it is so hard to change the nation's overarching military goals.

Smaller wars mean smaller budgets for Pentagon officials. And less money for politicians to devote to pet military projects in their own districts.

"It's not a lack of resources, it's how the resources are used," said John Isaacs, head of the Council for a Livable World, which favors reduced defense spending.

The abstract debate over readiness played out in plain view of hundreds of journalists, military officials and defense department contractors during the war games this week in "The Box" at Ft. Polk, one of the U.S. Army's premier training centers. The experiment was one of the most technologically advanced war games ever staged.

Long after night fell Friday, C-130 aircraft with the fabled 82nd Airborne Division inside flew low over the piny woods, ejecting nearly 500 paratroopers. They drifted across the night sky toward a landing field, their chutes appearing like ghostly jellyfish through the green glow of night vision goggles.

The attack was part of an ambitious experiment in modern warfare, designed to gather real time battle information and provide it simultaneously to all branches of the armed forces, at all levels, from general to soldier. For instance, some soldiers carried helmets outfitted with eyepieces that displayed computer images not only maps, but of fellow soldiers as they moved about.

Staff Sgt. David Barron landed near an airplane strip late Friday night. By Saturday morning, the veteran paratrooper was squatting on his helmet near a strand of concertina wire. He had no doubts about his, or his unit's, readiness to fight. But he was less sure of who he may have to kill in future wars.

"It used to be, it's the guys in a different uniform. I shoot him before he shoots me," Barron said. "Now, it might be an old lady with a car bomb. You don't know anymore."

Do you need a Baller...

Students played some pick-up basketball in Southwest this weekend.

Frat not responsible as death ruled an accident

By Nicole Schuppert
The Daily Iowan (U. Iowa)

(U-WIRE) IOWA CITY, Iowa – The Iowa Supreme Court decided Thursday to uphold a district court decision that the University of Iowa's Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity was not responsible for the 1995 alcohol-related death of pledge Matthew Garofalo, then 19.

The court also affirmed the dismissal of the suit against Timothy Reter, a former member of the fraternity who was at the house the night Garofalo died.

However, the court said Garofalo's parents may choose to pursue legal action against Chad Diehl, the former fraternity member who purchased the alcohol that Garofalo consumed.

Diehl, who declined to comment, was assigned to be Garofalo's mentor, or "big brother." Following a "Big Brother/Little Brother" ceremony on the evening of Sept. 7, 1995, members went to their rooms for a traditional toast to celebrate the relationship, the ruling said.

It was at this time that Garofalo drank beer and hard liquor and began to "stagger and became loud," according to the ruling. Diehl and Reter helped Garofalo to a couch where he passed out.

At roughly 11:30 a.m. the following day, Garofalo was found dead. The medical examiner determined his blood alcohol level to be .188, but said it may have reached the level of .300 prior to his death, court documents said.

The cause of death was determined to be pulmonary edema and fluid in the lungs caused by excessive drinking.

In the aftermath of the incident, UI fraternities voluntarily became alcohol-free in 1998.

Edward and Monica Garofalo, Matthew Garofalo's parents, were unavailable for comment. They filed a suit in October 1996 against Reter and Diehl, as well as two other members who were later dropped from the suit, alleging that they "failed to properly care for him after securing his intoxication," the ruling said.

"We were disappointed with (Thursday's) decision and will confer with our clients regarding any further action," said Edward Gallagher, the attorney representing the Garofalos.

The Iowa Supreme Court said neither the UI chapter or the national chapter of the fraternity were responsible because the alcohol was not purchased with chapter money and Garofalo was not forced to drink as a hazing act.

"Garofalo's consumption of alcoholic beverages was not required or compelled as a condition of membership in the chapter," stated the ruling.

An official from the Lambda Chi Alpha's national chapter said the fraternity was relieved, but not surprised, about the decision.

"We know from the beginning that this was not a hazing act," said Tom Helmbock, the fraternity's executive vice president.

Now that the court has made its ruling, the fraternity plans to approach the UI within two to five years in hopes of re-establishing a chapter, Helmbock said.

If you are reading this now, all of my hard work paid off.

CAMPUS RECREATION

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

(Corrected Dates)

Flag Football: (M/W/C)	9/11
Soccer (M/W)	9/11
Co-ed Softball	9/12
Field Hockey	9/12
Cross Country (M/W)	9/19
Field Events (M/W)	9/19

On the web: www.umass.edu/umim

LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

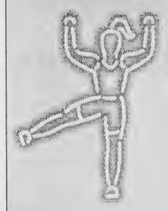
NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANNA EAT?
CAN'T FIND A MENU?
DON'T WANNA PICK UP THE PHONE?

LOG ON TO
WWW.MASSMUNCHIES.COM

Point, Click, Eat!

Browse menus and order food for delivery with a few clicks of the mouse!

Breakaway Sports & Fitness



Student Membership
$249/year
$139/semester

Free Weights Batting Cages Aerobics Indoor Soccer League

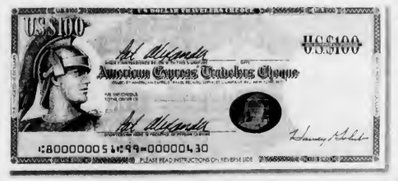
549-3638

Route 116, near campus on bus line

Lost cash.

One travel adventure you can live without.



Travel smart.
Carry American Express® Travelers Cheques. They're safer than cash.

Whether you're surfing Baja, backpacking Europe, or just getting away for the weekend, American Express Travelers Cheques are the way to go. They're accepted virtually everywhere around the world — at hotels, stores, and restaurants. Simply sign the Cheques and use them as you would cash.

American Express Travelers Cheques never expire. And if they're lost or stolen, they can be replaced quickly — usually within 24 hours. Pick them up at any participating American Express Travel Service location, bank, credit union, or AAA office.

American Express Travelers Cheques. Don't leave home without them.®

© 2000 American Express TCST-00

American Express Travelers Cheques

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Knight's fall: a warning to UMass?

Push finally came to shove for Indiana University's Bobby Knight yesterday, as the 59 year-old Hall of Fame basketball coach was fired for violating the "zero tolerance" conduct policy imposed on him by the University in May. Knight's dismissal came after he reportedly grabbed IU freshman Kent Harvey by the arm while lecturing the student about, of all things, manners.

We at the Collegian feel that Knight's firing was justified and actually overdue. We also feel that the Knight situation should motivate officials at UMass to keep a keener eye on the conduct of our own coaches.

The very name Bobby Knight has been synonymous with trouble essentially since he took the reins of the IU men's hoop program in 1971. Even as he was guiding the Hoosiers to three national championships and coaching the U.S. Olympic team to a gold medal in 1984, Knight's temper and penchant for controversy practically overshadowed his on-court success.

Among his many highly publicized tantrums were incidents of throwing chairs, shoving players, cramming a fan into a garbage can, brawling with police and even kicking his own son on the IU bench. His behavior reached a low point last spring, when a videotape surfaced showing Knight choking one of his players during practice in 1997. An IU investigation into that and other incidents led to the implementation of the zero tolerance policy, which apparently had the exact opposite effect on the coach's behavior that the school expected.

"I still believe that we had to give him one last chance," said IU President Myles Brand. "He failed to live up to that. His unacceptable behavior not only continued since then but increased."

Simply put, coaches should not be allowed to physically abuse players, period. Physical abuse is a crime in every other facet of society, and cannot be accepted in the realm of athletics. No matter what field you work in, your boss cannot shove or choke you for not doing your job without facing serious legal repercussions. Hence, Knight should have lost his job some time ago.

The argument over whether or not verbal abuse by a coach is a crime has been the topic of heated controversy for decades. Last year, a lawsuit was leveled against UMass accusing one of its coaches of, among other things, yelling too loudly and too often in the faces of her players. Those close to that particular coach dismissed the charges as sour grapes from players that simply couldn't cut it on the squad, while arguing that the coach's style was simply "intense."

But having observed that tame coach grabbing, shaking and berating a freshman player whom she asked to fill a pivotal skill position last season, we at the Collegian feel that the behavior of that coach isn't all that different from that which got Knight axed yesterday. Subsequently, this University needs to exercise greater control over how far its coaches can (literally) push their players.

Even though last year's lawsuit ended up being dropped, it should serve as warning that questionable behavior by coaches isn't limited to the chairs flying across the court at IU. When that sort of controversial action is occurring right here at UMass, it's time to reexamine the boundaries of behavior that we impose on our coaches and whether or not they are being crossed.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

The inevitable conclusion

Look out, ladies. Rob Schulze is a single man again.

By which I mean the only reason I'm not crying right now is because I'm too sad. Crushed, actually. Broken. That's it, actually, that is perfect. I am broken. I'm not sure I'm going to get fixed.

I called her. We talked about what we were going to do on our one-year anniversary, which, by the way, would have been September 16. I was going to buy her dinner, I think, and then give her the present I was planning on buying when I got money and actually knew what I wanted to get. It was going to be nice, though – you don't have one-year anniversaries every day, you know. Or, in my case, you don't have them any day. Ever.

Then she got all depressed and I knew there was something she wanted to tell me. About a half an hour later I was a single man.

She told me I was perfect.

She told me that she wanted to marry me, or someone like me.

She told me that I was the greatest human being that she had ever met.

Still, however, I am currently without any form of girlfriend whatsoever. Unless, of course, my fish, Chicken Nugget, is female, but I have no idea how I would figure that out.

She named my fish. There are pictures of her all over my room, pictures she drew on my walls. The password to my voice mail is her birthday. I have one of her sweatshirts in the closet. I have a barbell in my tongue that is there for no other reason other that she thought it would be cool. It seems that everywhere I turn, there she is. And I have no right to have any of this stuff.

She isn't mine. I'm not hers, and nothing is the same as it was a few hours ago.

Oh, it's 1:41 AM right now. Sleep isn't really an option. I can't imagine why.

She told me that I was too mature, that she just wanted to be a little kid that she wanted to 'go with the flow.' She told me that she felt guilty because of me, that I made her feel guilty by being so perfect. I was too good to her, I guess.

Note to self: next time, don't give every ounce of your being, mind, body and soul, every second of your waking time, all your money and effort into making a girl happy and loved. Instead, tell her she's a whore and give her a good punch every so often. She'll love you forever – it seems to work for all the other guys I know.

The only real relationship I have ever had in my life is over. What am I going to do now? Go to frat houses? Party down with the women? Big pimpin'? I can't do any of that. I'm an ugly, pasty, bald, inarticulate, short, skinny sort of guy. My main interests are the Collegian and metal. I drive a Corolla.

My God, how did I ever get a girlfriend in the first place?

The only time I think I've every physically shaken this much was when I asked her to be with me in the first place. She said she never wanted that night to end, and that she was warm to the bone, and happy through and through. I guess that night ended after all.

And, bitch and moan as I might, I don't even have any hard feelings. I can't just say "she was a bitch" and move on. She isn't a bitch, and never will be. She's the most wonderful person I have every known. I always knew, deep down, that it couldn't last, because she was so much better than me in every way.

I just did not see it coming. It was a shot from the dark, killing me without warning. Where did it come from? How do you deal with something so unexpected, so lethal?

I want to thank, right now, less Cornwall and Mike Delano, for the hugs and the walk, respectively. They kept me going, and better friends do not exist.

I don't know what I'm going to do now. I'm not going to sleep, probably. Maybe I'll take a shower. I'm definitely going to listen to music. That won't make me happy, but it'll be cathartic. For the first time in my life I hate quiet hours; I would sell my soul to be able to deafen myself with "In My Darkest Hour" right now. It might numb me a little.

I don't know why I'm writing this column right now. I definitely plan on printing it. I don't know. I'm sorry if this sucks – I just don't know anything anymore. Nothing. My foundation is gone. I'm empty and useless. Maybe, if I can ever fall asleep, tomorrow will be better. Right now, though, tomorrow is a long way away.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Interested in Ed/Op? Email collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, come to the office and talk to Rob Schulze, Brian Lohnes or Boo Downs, or attend the all-staff meeting this Thursday! More details to follow!

All the marbles

The latest polls show that Al Gore has erased George W's lead and, following his highly successful speech at the Democratic Convention, brought the race to a statistical dead heat (a phrase we'll all be hearing a lot of this year). This looks like good news for Gore, but he still has an uphill battle to fight, and while the numbers look promising (one poll has Gore with a six-point lead, 48 to Bush's 42 percent), he still has to prove that he will make the right decisions if we bestow the Presidential mandate upon him.

For one thing, Gore went into the convention trailing Bush by 10 points, and big poll increases, especially developing on the heels of a convention, usually evaporate faster than Joe Lieberman can change his mind.

While Gore has gained on Bush and surpassed him in things like leadership and even charisma, this probably won't last. Gore escaped his earlier problems at the convention, specifically his tendency to confuse voters with the four or five messages he sends. Every time he reinvents himself, he projects another message, not always agreeing with the one before it. This only confuses the electorate he must win over – the swing voters, a growing group who call themselves independents and could go either way. Gore can easily court those who won the election for Clinton, but married middle class women, a key category in that election, are a shrinking majority. Hot on their heels are married, young, middle class men, who still cast their lot with Bush.

According to Kenneth Walsh, "Gore is a complicated candidate who has undergone more makeovers than an ageing character actor in the middle of a career crisis."

The Gore that people saw at the convention was projecting one of those messages, and if he doesn't refine and consolidate them all, his cause may be lost.

It may, however, be lost already. Another one of Gore's problems leading up to the convention was that he couldn't slip out from underneath the shadow of his omnipresent predecessor. That one has hurt him badly, and it may be his undoing.

Paradoxically, the bad things about Clinton seem to stick with him, while he just can't seem to convince us that he's responsible for the good ones. Credit for the mind-boggling growth of the economy in the last few years eludes him still, with many assigning the success more to Reagan's tax cuts and deregulation than to Clinton/Gore reforms. The reason this is so important: since 1945 the incumbent party almost never loses when the economy is good, with few exceptions. What James Carville did so successfully in 1992 was convince voters that the recession would continue and get worse under four more years of 'Dubya's father, Bush. In actuality, under Bush, the economy already was showing the beginning of the incredible expansion we have seen, which is the reason for the varying explanations.

Gore has to decide who he is and he has to project that to the voters. He'll have to advance his own plan: one of big government, with vast spending proposals and a slew of programs to impose unsought government influence in every school, every statehouse, and every office building. His plans to pump more and more money into failing or 'risky' programs has already begun to characterize the Gore campaign.

Proposals like his $200 billion ten year retirement program and Clinton's $15 billion bailout for the Department of Education would eat up the $2.2 trillion surplus (which some estimate to be much smaller) while according to Bush, offering no relief to heavily taxed, "average working families."

Bush, in the line tradition of Ronald Reagan, instead proposes a $1.6 trillion tax return that is supposed to offer an alternative to Gore's big government. Bush's option means smaller government, but also carries greater risk. If he is wrong, and big government is not the problem but the solution, then whatever the problem is will be much worse by the time anyone realizes it. But then, the same could be said for Gore.

There are signs that Gore's revamped Liberalism will not hold water with most voters who have repeatedly indicated their aversion to such retroactive policies. Instead of giving the people back some of their own money, taken under Clinton with the heaviest tax burden in peacetime history, he wants to use it in "a raft of new spending programs," and to save Social Security and Medicare (a big problem for him, since most of the surplus was stolen from there anyway).

Bush, for his part, is going to try to peg Gore in this light, instead of as the 'New Democrat' he says he is. Gore's reversion to Old Guard Liberalism was also evident at the convention, when a whole night was given to them in the form of Teddy Kennedy and Mario Cuomo. The decision to make this dangerous play had much in common with Bush's trip to Bob Jones University during the Primaries. While the Liberal Camelot that Ted K. embodies is dying, Gore was motivated by political necessity. He needed to nail down the shrinking Liberal base of the party before courting swing voters, and the polls show that he has done it. He may have some explaining to do in the future, but Gore has learned much from Clinton, and he too can play Machiavelli's game.

SIMON PONGRATZ

The pollsters predict a tight race, and it looks like they're right. If examples hold, then Gore's bounce will shrink and the race will become very, very tight. But remember one thing: the Electoral College is what decides the victor in the national election, and Bush is still very much in the lead on that front. In this atmosphere, no prisoners will be taken and no quarter given.

The Clintons, inventors of the continuous campaign, will not go without a fight. If Clinton could run for another term, you can bet he would, and he'd probably win too. But Gore is not Clinton, and the election is, and has been Bush's to lose. If he wins, according to Carville, the Democratic Party might "sink...into an abyss from which there shall be no resurrection of it," as Jefferson once said of Federalism. This is the task that Bush II has before him. If he loses and the Democrats retain the Presidency, Clinton is vindicated, schools remain under Government control, the military remains over committed and under-funded...etc.

Again, the race will be very tight, and the polarizing atmosphere that has characterized American political and social life for the last eight years will continue. Pollsters even predict a higher voter turnout this year. It makes sense that people would be very concerned with the outcome, because this one, more than many before it, is for all the marbles.

Simon Pongratz is a UMass student.

Think before you take my space

I didn't pay any attention to people with disabilities when I was a dance major at UMass. If anything, I considered 'them' an annoyance in that they reminded me of my vulnerability; 'they posed a threat.' Little did I know that, in time, I would end up with Multiple Sclerosis and be in a wheelchair. My days are now filled with challenges ranged from figuring out how to get in and out of bed to where I might park when I do go out.

I very summer, those of that live in Amherst year-round easily acclimate to the relative quiet and ease with which one can park downtown. I think I can safely represent this populace in saying it always takes us by surprise when the students come back. The annual migration of mostly healthy young people bearing mattresses, balanced precariously atop overstuffed cars remains a spectacle to behold.

Legally and practically speaking, HP stands for 'handicapped parking,' which is supposed to ensure that the bearer of a handicapped placard or plate will travel the shortest distance from their vehicle to where they are going. If YOU park there, even for one minute, it means I can't.

Some of 'us' have been known to block 'you' in. Some of 'us' know better than to stress ourselves out any more than we already are, and resign to seek a parking spot elsewhere. Another satisfying and informative (if unsympathetic) response is to slap on a yellow sticker that can only be removed with a razor. Some messages are innocent enough (albeit difficult to remove), but one says, "This space is reserved for people with HP placards and asses.

DEBRA H. WALDRON

Which one are you?" Ouch!

Those with lift vans need two parking spots side-by-side in order for the person in the wheelchair to exit safely and have enough room to get off the lift once on the ground. Contemplating going out into the world is truly a constant exercise in logistics. Are the facilities where I'm going accessible? Is the parking space equipped for my lift van? These are questions that can only be answered either with phone calls ahead or taking your chances upon arrival.

Special plates or placards for individuals with disabilities require appropriate documentation of eligibility. The award determination is based upon medical justification, and temporary ones can be obtained at the local town hall. Getting a permanent placard or plate requires documentation of your permanent disability from a doctor, plus paying a fee to the RMV in Boston. So, basically, anyone who is eligible to park in an HP spot genuinely NEEDS IT!

If I promise not to lend my placard to my friends for them to use to park in HP spots when I'm not with them would you promise not to park in an HP spot "even for a minute?" The responsibility is ours. There is no 'us' and 'them.' If you don't have an HP placard or plate, it means you don't need it. Count your blessings and pay attention.

If you do park in a HP in Amherst there is a good chance you will find yourself receiving a $50 ticket in the mail. A handful of us with disabilities have been trained by the police and parking patrol and are authorized to take a Polaroid photograph of your car and submit it, along with pertinent documentation, to the police. So, unbeknownst to you, while you're taking advantage of a convenient parking spot, you may well also be incurring debt.

If you do have an HP placard or plate, it means you need it. They don't give them away lightly. Please respect this, and don't take our parking spaces lightly.

Debra H. Waldron was a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Adam White Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

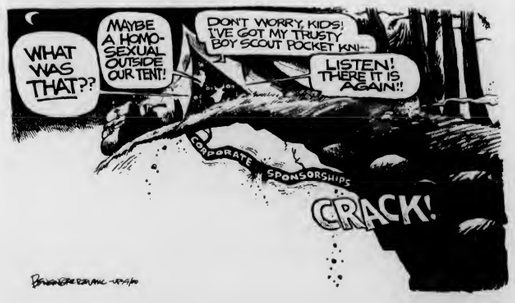
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.



WHAT WAS THAT??
MAYBE A HOMOSEXUAL OUTSIDE OUR TENT!
DON'T WORRY, KIDS! I'VE GOT MY TRUSTY BOY SCOUT POCKET KNIFE!
LISTEN! THERE IT IS AGAIN!!
CORPORATE SPONSORSHIPS CRACK!

Two new entries top box office best

1. (new) The Watcher - $9.1 million
2. (new) Nurse Betty - $7.3 million
3. (1) Bring It On - $6.5 million
4. (2) The Cell - $3.5 million
5. (3) Space Cowboys - $3.3 million
6. (6) What Lies Beneath - $2.9 million
7. (7) The Original Kings of Comedy - $2.5 million
8. (4) The Art of War - $2.4 million
9. (new) The Way of the Gun - $2.2 million
10. (5) Highlander: Endgame - $1.8 million

Chuck and Buck: independent gem

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Chuck and Buck
directed by Miguel Arteta
with Mike White, Chris Weitz and Beth Colt playing at Pleasant Street Theater

A 27 year-old man who walks with the posture of a child, sucks on blow pops constantly, decorates his bedroom with matchbox cars and stuffed animals, and is fixated on a friend that he hasn't seen in eleven years. It sounds like a desperately sad situation.

But this is precisely the situation in Chuck and Buck and there is hardly a moment in the film when that desperation surfaces.

Chuck (Chris Weitz) and Buck (Mike White) haven't seen each other since they were kids. But when Buck's mother dies, Chuck flies back east with his fiancee, Carlyn, for the funeral to find that Buck hasn't changed a bit. While Chuck has grown up, has gotten a job as a record exec in L.A., and has made lots of important friends, Buck has remained stagnant—the tragic man-child who has been fixated on Chuck over the years.

Chuck and Carlyn invite Buck to visit them in L.A. and Buck, overestimating this invitation, decides to move there. He find out where Chuck works and lives and stages interactions with him. He rents out a theater across the street from Chuck's office where he directs a play he wrote called Hank and Frank. He's obsessed, and believes that if both of them should be together. When he gets the chance, he makes it clear that he wants a physical relationship with Chuck.

Both director Miguel Arteta and screenwriter Mike White could have easily made this a movie that exploits the homosexual tones of Buck's feelings for Chuck. Instead they, especially White, let the complicated psychological attraction between the two play out quietly beneath the superficial humor of the situation.

Chuck and Buck doesn't simply tell the story of two men who shared a gay experience as children. It addresses appropriately how children do handle sex, and how it can impact them for the rest of their lives. Their relationship then versus now isn't just about being straight or gay. It explores how attraction and obsession have to do with much more than physical desire, and how physical desires are much more than just the result of sexual drive.

If it weren't for a superior cast this wouldn't have been executed so well. Mike White did a fine job balancing pity, comedy, and torture as Buck. Chris Weitz was consistently a vapid L.A. success story without excess, with excellent moments of delicate understanding and submission to Buck's circumstances. And Lupe Ontiveros as Beverly, the woman who works with Buck and tries to direct his play as though it were a real piece of theater, is outstanding as the standard maternal role with attitude.

Most of the film is shot in hand held close ups with occasional periods of time dedicated to what seem like completely superfluous shots of things like a wedding cake. But this is an independent film and the camera adds to the uncomfortable, silent despondency of the story.

Like most good art this one isn't an accomplishment because of its impressive production or overwhelming truth in grandiose images. Chuck and Buck is worth while because of what it successfully implies, provokes, and leaves an audience member to contemplate and decide when the film is done.

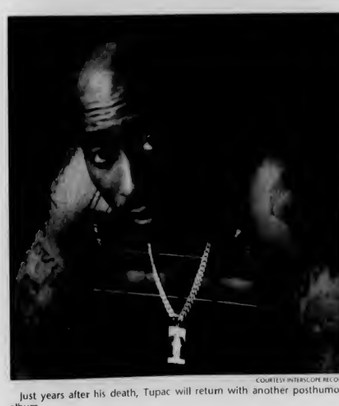
COURTESY ARTISAN ENTERTAINMENT

Chuck and Buck combines creativity with quality screenwriting to form a unique production.

Tupac resurrects fall's hip hop albums

COURTESY JIVE RECORDS

R Kelly will try to "fly" again with the release of his new album tp-2.com



COURTESY INTERSCOPE RECORDS

Just years after his death, Tupac will return with another posthumous album

COURTESY EPIC RECORDS

Bone Thugs N' Harmony will "see you at the crossroads" with a collection of greatest hits, due out in November.

The following is a list of up-coming hip hop and R&B albums:

September 12:
95 South - Tightwork 2000 (RCA). Hot, topical album from the kings of Southern Bass.
Rachelle Ferrell - Individuality (Can I Be Me?) (Capitol Records). A jazzy, sophisticated effort; could she be the new Anita Baker?
R Kelly - tp-2.com (Jive). Kelly updates his 12 Play approach for the computer age.

September 19:
Amil - All Money Is Legal (Rockafella Columbia). Debut album by rapper Jay-Z's girl. Expect major cameos.

September 26:
Shola Ama - In Return (Warner Bros.). Brilliant effort by British R&B diva.
Black Eyed Peas - Bridging the Gap (Interscope). Who says a rap group can't play like a band?

October 10:
Scarface - In My Time of Dying (Virgin). Solo effort by former Geto Boy.
Mystikal - Let's Get Ready (Jive). His first album since leaving No Limit, powered by the hit Shake Ya Ass.
Outsiderz 4 Life - Outsiderz 4 Life (Virgin). Discovered by 2Pac (who posthumously appeared on their debut album), this rap crew takes it solo.
Tamia - A Nu Day (Elektra). The best R&B singer you never heard.
Willie D. Loved by Few - Hated by Many (Virgin). Another solo effort by a former Geto Boy.

October 24:
Patti Labelle - When a Woman Loves (MCA). True divas keep on keepin' on.
Outkast - Stankonia (LaFace). More from the smartest rappers in the dirty South movement.

October 31:
Babyface - title to be determined (Epic). A greatest-hits collection.

November 7:
Bone Thugs-N-Harmony - The Bone Collection (Epic). A greatest-hits collection.

November 14:
Sade - title to be determined (Epic). After eight years, a new one from the smoothest operator in R&B.
Keith Sweat - Didn't See Me Coming (Elektra). Further adventures from the king of New Jack Swing.
Usher - title to be determined (LaFace). Long-awaited studio album from the teen heartthrob.

November 21:
112 - title to be determined (Bad Boy). Sophomore effort from Puff Daddy's favorite girl group.
2Pac - title to be determined (Interscope). He's still dead, yet nonetheless produced a new double album.
Eve - title to be determined (Interscope). Second album from the Ruff Ryders' first lady.

December 5:
K-Ci & Jojo - title to be determined (MCA). More from the top duo in R&B harmony.

December 12:
Cypress Hill - title to be determined (Columbia). Live album from the Latin hip-hop giants

December 19:
Layzie Bone - title to be determined (Epic). Solo effort from a Bone Thugs-N-Harmony member.

-The Baltimore Sun

There will be an Arts staff meeting immediately following the All-Staff meeting on Thursday at 6 pm. So if you're interested in becoming a part of the magic, plan on being in room 113 of the Campus Center Basement, peeps!

Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In UNIVERSAL HEALTH & FITNESS

UNIVERSAL HEALTH & FITNESS

M-T 4:30 am - 10:00 pm
Fri 4:30 am - 9:00 pm
Sat 7:00 am - 8:00 pm
Sun 8:00 am - 6:00 pm

•Personal Trainers
•Largest free weight room in the valley
•The best equipment from Hammer Strength, Icarian, and Flite
•Lifting competitions and contests
•Coupons for IN SHAPE NUTRITION

Rates
1 semester
149.00
1 student year
(Sept.- May 23rd)
300.00
w/valid student i.d.

EFT rate of
37.95/month

•Huge cardio room including eliptical trainers, crosstrainers, treadmills, bikes, and steppers
•Life Fitness, Startrek, Precore equipment
•All levels of aerobics programs including spinning and kickboxing
•Supportive, clean, and friendly atmosphere
•Crank & Cruise contest. Lifting and Running combination Sept. 30th

33 Hawley Street, Northamphton
Plenty of parking available, or take the PVTA!
413-585-9900

Full locker room and shower facility with free towel service
Juice bar

Free Day Pass with this ad!
Good thru 2000

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER

GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale

Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!
Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements
Also check out our online store at...
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM

65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

Guest Passes to Universal Health & Fitness available

Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape Get In Shape

Saving Grace doesn't need one

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Saving Grace
directed by Nigel Cole
with Brenda Blethyn, Craig Ferguson
playing at Academy of Music, Northampton

English housewives and marijuana. Throw in some sappy romantics, a bucketful of kooky British hijinks, and a waxing-hip sound track and musical score, and you've got Saving Grace. Still unsure what to think of the movie? So am I.

In its simplest role, Saving Grace is a British comedy about a recently widowed gardener who discovers that her late husband had accumulated massive debts in various failed business ventures, leaving her with no money and the terrifying prospect of losing her home. In order to raise the 300,000 pounds necessary to stave off the bill collectors, Grace and her pothead groundskeeper Matthew decide to grow hemp in her greenhouse, and through Grace's aplomb as a gardener, they succeed beyond their wildest expectations. Comedy ensues.

Simple enough, right? Most of the jokes are funny and the movie moves effortlessly enough from scene to silly scene. In between the silly scenes, however, is a disorganized heap of other elements, including a romantic quarrel between Matthew and his girlfriend Nicky (Valerie Edmond), some jarringly serious encounters between Grace and her husband's mistress, and a much-contrived ending which cakes on the feel-good vibes in ever-sickeningly sweet layers.

Some sincerity comes as a welcome antidote for all of the marijuana humor, but the movie's attachment to its own characters too often interrupts the film's comedic pace with scenes more befitting Notting Hill. Let's not forget that this is a movie about growing pot.

Beyond these deficiencies in story structure, however, Saving Grace has a lot to make it recommendable. The acting is all-around charming and effective; the cast handles the comedic and emotional material equally well, even if some of the characters are of the stock varieties.

The director also takes the frequent breaks from the dialogue to treat the audience to gorgeous panoramas of the English coast. I'm not certain what they add to the story, but I'm not complaining.

Saving Grace is considerably less than the sum of its parts, because its parts so infrequently fit together properly. The jokes are funny enough, however, and the character stories lighthearted enough to make it an enjoyable two hours, despite its scattered style. B

COURTESY FINE LINE FEATURES

Sex, Drugs and British culture. There's nothing that Saving Grace does not have.

A touchdown for "College Football" comes from video giant EA Sports

By Marcelo Duran
Colorado State University

(U-WIRE) FORT COLLINS, Colo. – The rivals are set, and the crowd is roarin' for another season of the gridiron showdown. Fans of college football have something to cheer about with the latest revision of EA's popular sports football game, Relive Colorado State University's victory over the University of Colorado Buffs in exhibition mode or coach a team to glory in dynasty mode.

If you are a fan of Division I-AA teams, this game can accommodate you with a plethora of teams that are available. Almost every conceivable football statistic is kept during the season and dynasty modes.

New features that will leave any football super fan in pigskin nirvana is the new custom league setting that allows a person to control every aspect of a league. Schedules rivalries and the important championship game are at your fingertips.

Some past nuisances were tweaked for more convenience, like the last formation your offense or defense was last in or the last player you used, stays in memory.

In create-a-school mode, you have more detailed options ranging from the color of the jersey's inner-stripe to the number of people in your stadium.

The one drawback in the game is that the amount of memory it takes to save a dynasty takes up an entire memory card and does not leave room for user profiles and created teams. But besides that, College Football will leave any sports enthusiast excited that the fall is upon us.

Can race determine humor?

By Rasheed Newson
Georgetown University

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – Spike Lee's The Original Kings of Comedy has drawn primarily black audiences – leading some critics to suggest that the film resonates most powerfully in the black community. "Their humor is of course based on the African American experience," wrote L.A. Times movie critic Kevin Thomas.

The Guide asked two movie critics, one black and one white, to comment on the film and see how, or if, the different life experiences associated with race in America can shape a film's perceived success. Their comments are printed below.

Someday I'll be a father, and my children will ask me a question all parents dread: What color is comedy? Instinctively, my tongue will go dry, twist and stutter. I'll stall, but my kids will insist on answers. How come Harlem Nights isn't on the American Film Institute's list of 100 Funniest Movies? Does one have to be Jewish to dig a Woody Allen joint? What do Latinos think of Moonstruck? Is Good Morning, Vietnam a gut-busting good time to Vietnamese?

Honestly, I'd rather explain why the family goldfish is floating at the top of its tank.

It's difficult to articulate to kids that Charlie Chaplin's Modern Times and the Zucker Brothers' Airplane! are hilarious films, because they rely on physical clowning or slapstick, which are primitive and widely accessible forms of comedy, while, of course, Scary Movie pre-empoops that one has seen recent, teenage slasher flicks (and The Matrix) and 9 to 5 presumes one knows Jane Fonda is neither timid nor dowdy, assumptions which limit the appeal of these two comedies. It would be simpler to tell children that Santa Claus is a fictitious mat-kenny tool used shamelessly by the toy industry.

Comedy is a science of subtlety and subtext. Movement, light and sound tickle viewers without calling attention to their usage. There are hundreds of other such influences – and race is among them. Many people, however, believe race is a pillar of comedy. They feel that race and humor are circularly and irrevocably linked. A certain situation or joke is funny because one is black; one is black; therefore, they find a certain situation or joke funny. And so on and so on.

Follow such easy logic very far and the need for a shower arises. If comedy is colored, then Boom Cali, Friday and Don't Be a Menace to South Central While Drinking Your Juice in the Hood are funny movies for blacks. Any film starring Ben Stiller or directed by Mel Brooks is a laugh-in for the Jewish audience, and it goes without saying who Married to the Mob, Analyze This, Mafia and Mickey Blue Eyes are targeted at. Reggie White and John Rocker should be co-chairs of the Motion Picture Association of America ratings board. Humor is segregated, locked off from one to others.

Race does not breed comedy. Comedy is born out of shared experiences, outlooks and language. An audience connects with the convictions, concerns and actions flickering on a screen – entertainment flourishes and sometimes there is laughter. Desperate, struggling actors, for example, are likely to relate to the zany lengths taken in Tootsie. People who speak a Midwestern dialect are prone to find the dialogue in Fargo resonating as well as amusing. Ultimately, what's race got to do with it?

Very little, if you ask me. Although race can, indeed, shape perceptions and create slang, color is often times unrelated to the wit of the moment. Humor supercedes skin tone. That's what I'm telling my kids.

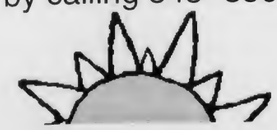
Free CD's and free movie tickets just for writing for Collegian Arts. What more could you want?

MAKE $ BEFORE BREAKFAST!

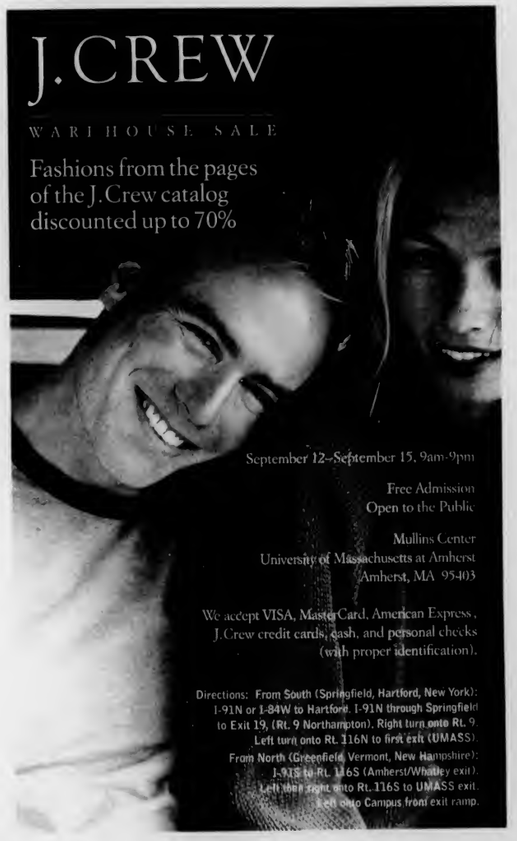
As a delivery driver or distribution manager for the UMass Daily Collegian you'll have all your work done before classes.

If you are interested & available in the mornings, please contact:

Shawn Ilinitch at the UMass Daily Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center or by calling 545 -3500.



J.CREW
WAREHOUSE SALE
Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%



September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm
Free Admission
Open to the Public
Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403
We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).
Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS). From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whatley exit). Left then right onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Then onto Campus front exit ramp.

Sydney set to host Olympics

By Bill Glauber
The Baltimore Sun

SYDNEY, Australia – The Olympics are flush with wealth and [illegible] scandal.

This is filled with wondrous athletic [illegible] troubled by potential [illegible].

Once the world's biggest multi-[illegible] party, and they're bursting at the seams. More than 10,000 athletes from up to 200 countries converge on Sydney for Friday's opening of the 2000 Summer Olympics, the world will watch a sporting institution that never seems so good – and never faced so many challenges.

The Olympics are bidding for a fresh start. Down Under, in an Australian sports setting seeking to reclaim innocence and mask its billions watch 17 days of carefully scripted pageantry and often unpredictable competition.

In modern sporting playgrounds, the world's best will aim for medals in 28 sports, ranging from traditional pursuits such as track and field and gymnastics to made-for-television spectacles such as beach volleyball and triathlon.

In these Games, Marion Jones will try to sprint and jump her way to five gold medals: a Columbia, Md., gymnast named Elise Ray will seek an all-around medal; and a 15-year-old swimmer from Baltimore named Michael Phelps will attempt to gain a medal in the 200-meter butterfly.

These are the Games of Australian national stars Ian Thorpe, a 17-year-old swimming sensation, and Cathy Freeman, a 400-meter sprinter whose triumphs raise spirits in the country's Aboriginal community.

And they're the Games for the old legends, like Russian wrestler Alexander Karelin, Turkish weightlifter Naim Suleymanoglu and British rower Steve Redgrave.

But mostly, they're shaping up as the Games that help the Olympics right themselves.

Over the past four years, the Olympics have been badly tarnished. From the Ulitch Games of Atlanta in 1996, when a bystander was killed by a bomb and the transportation system broke down, to latest revelations of penny-ante corruption and cronyism at the highest levels of the International Olympic Committee, a stodgy organization presided over by Spain's Juan Antonio Samaranch.

"The Olympics will always be the greatest sporting event in the history of the world," says U.S. swimmer Tom Dolan. "No matter what people say, I guarantee you those naysayers, when four years come around, they're glued to the TV."

Others aren't quite so certain of the Olympics' place as a centerpiece on the world's sporting, social and cultural calendar. They're big, expensive and, increasingly, unwieldy for all but the wealthiest countries to stage.

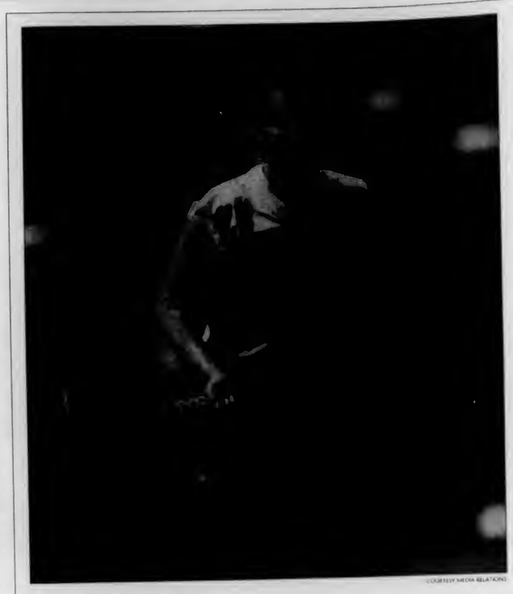
"It has lost its sense of purpose and ideals. It has become a bit grubby, less distinctive from pro sports generally," is how Richard Cashman, director of the Center for Olympic Studies at the University of New South Wales, sums up the way critics see the Olympics.

But Cashman quickly adds, "Despite all the corruption and doping, it still holds a place in the public imagination. People want to believe in something."

Even the revelations that Salt Lake City organizers spent $1 million securing votes of IOC members to stage the 2002 Winter Games didn't seem to dent the public's mood for the Games. Four IOC members were forced to resign, six others were ousted, and the organization issued new rules to clean up the bid process and bring in new blood to its membership.

"I don't look at the latest crisis and say, 'Oh, the Olympics are finished,'" says John Hoberman, a prominent Olympic historian and professor of Germanic studies at the University of Texas. "For better or worse, the Olympics established themselves as one of the authentic idealistic international institutions of the 20th century."

Since their rebirth in Athens, Greece, in 1896 under the stewardship of Baron Pierre de Coubertin of France, the Olympics have survived numerous crises, from the disruptions of two world wars to the murder of Israeli athletes in 1972 in Munich, Germany, from tit-for-tat superpower boycotts in 1980 and 1984 to a high-profile drug scandal in 1988.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bring on the champs

Kristen Schmidt and the Massachusetts field hockey team will take on the National champ, Maryland, on Saturday afternoon in College Park.

CAMPUS RECREATION

Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Volleyball & Ice Hockey

Clinics: Football, Soccer- Sept. 12.13.14.15
Co-ed Softball- Sept. 18, 19 Field Hockey- Sept. 18
Volleyball- Oct. 3, 4, 10, 11 Ice Hockey- Sept. 27

Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693

Amherst Deli

Pete's Stacked Sandwiches
• All served with potato chips and pickle on your choice of White, Light Rye, Pumpernickel, Whole Wheat, Bulky Roll, or Bagel.
• Lettuce, Tomato, Onions, Carrots and Sprouts.
• Cheeses: Swiss, Muenster, Provolone, Cheddar, Smoked Brie, and American

Roast Beef	4.95
Pepper Roast Beef	4.95
Turkey	4.95
Smoked Turkey	4.95
Honey Turkey	4.95
Salsa Turkey	4.95
Pepper Smoked Turkey	4.95
Imported Ham	4.95
Black Forest Ham	4.95
Chicken Breast	4.95
Bologna	4.50
Salami (Genoa)	4.95
Liverwurst	4.50
Corned Beef	4.95
Pastrami	4.95
Turkey Pastrami	4.95
Tuna Salad	4.95
Chicken Salad	4.95
Cheese	4.25
B.L.T.	4.95

Additional Elements

Active Ingredients: Mayo, Pesto Mayo, Mustard, Honey Mustard, Spicy Mustard, Russian Dressing

Toppers: Cole Slaw 25¢, Sauerkraut 50¢, Mushrooms 25¢, Bacon 75¢, Spinach 25¢, Olives 25¢, Peppers 25¢, Roasted Red Peppers 50¢, Pepperocini 25¢, Cranberry Sauce 25¢

Deli

Deliboard Specials

Lizzie's Special – Pepper Smoked Turkey on a Cajun Bagel w/ honey mustard, Dill Havarti, all vegies and roasted red peppers 4.95

Cold Cut Combo – Bologna, Ham, Genoa Salami on a Roll with all vegies, oil and vinegar. 4.95

Deli Club – Turkey, Roast Beef, Ham, lettuce, tomato, and crisp bacon. Served with potato Salad or Cole Slaw. 5.95

1/2 Sandwich & Cup o' Soup – Choose from any of Pete's Stacked Sandwiches 4.95

Rueben with a Twist – Turkey Pastrami with Swiss Cheese, Cole Slaw on Rye Bread with a side of Potato Salad or Slaw. 5.95

Reuben – Grilled Corned Beef, Swiss, kraut or Slaw and Russian Dressing on Pumpernickel Served with Potato Salad or Cole Slaw. 5.95

Fried Eggs-and-Which – Two Fried Eggs with cheese and Bacon or Ham on a Bagel. 3.50

Dee-Lite – Lettuce, Tomato, Onion, Carrots, Sprouts, Roasted Red Peppers with House Vinaigrette and your choice of cheese and bread. 4.25

Deli

Salads
• Your choice of Oil & Vinegar, Blue Cheese, Raspberry Vinaigrette, 1000 Island, Parmesan, Peppercorn or Ranch dressing.

Tossed Salad	4.00
Chef's Salad – Roast Beef, Ham, Turkey, Egg, Pickle	6.25
Antipasto Salad – Ham, Turkey, Salami, Provolone, Roasted Red Peppers, Hot Peppers, Marinated Mushrooms, and Olives.	6.95
Fruit Salad (In Season)	5.25
w/ cottage cheese	5.50
Chicken Salad Plate	5.50
w/ cottage cheese or cole slaw
Tuna Salad Plate	5.50
w/ cottage cheese or cole slaw

Welcome to The Amherst Delicatessen!

The Deli is located downtown in the Carriage Shops (adjacent to the Pub). Established in 1975, the Deli has built a reputation for quality food and friendly service. On your next trip uptown, stop by and join us.

There will be a mandatory sports staff meeting Tuesday, September 12th at 6:00PM in the Newsroom. New writers welcome. For more information call Bryan or Mike at 545-0719 or 546-1749

Affordable

Happy B'day Cards, Rings, Bracelets, Chains, Candles, Incense, Earrings, Great Clothing, Posters, And Gifts, Baskets, Paper Lampshades, India Print Bedspreads, Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing, Area Rugs, Chinese Shoes, Bead Curtains, Mugs

The GreatGifts Mercantile
Visa / MC
Th.Fri.9PM
Sun 12-5:30
Daily 10-6
Amherst-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

Sponsored by University Health Services

Fall 2000 Eating Disorder Programs

• Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals - with Nutritionists, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. - - Confidentiality Assured. Call 577-5314, General Medicine 2

• Eating Disorder Informational Sessions
Facilitated by a UHS Nutritionist, these drop in sessions will include a video and discussion about eating disorders, where to go for help and learn how to help a friend. Registration is not required for these sessions that will meet 4:00 - 5:30 P.M. on Sept. 13, Oct. 16, Nov. 15, and Dec. 11 in room 302 at University Health Services.

• Residence Hall Workshops
Body Image and Understanding Eating Disorders Workshops are available upon request. Contact your Resident Assistant to schedule a workshop.

IN SHAPE NUTRITION

NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER

GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale

Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!
Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements
Also check out our online store at...
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM
65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

Helton shooting for place in history

His team may not be in playoff contention, but Todd Helton has the chance to make history. The first baseman for the Colorado Rockies could accomplish the very thing that has eluded the greatest hitters in the game for 59 years. He has a legitimate shot to become the first man to hit .400 since Ted Williams batted .406 in 1941.

Tehani Schneider

On Major League Baseball

Four hundred. Three simple digits that is seemingly unfathomable. A magic number that designates an unreachable plateau. The significance of achieving four hits every 10 at bats in 162 games is unparalleled.

It would be unheard of today, in this era dominated by stronger, faster and better-conditioned players. Players who hit 30-plus home runs are a dime a dozen. However, these are also the same guys who lead the league in strikeouts. Over the past few years, our national pastime has seen an influx of watered down pitching and players who hit for power, rather than average.

Sliced balls in overall smaller ballparks equal countless players hitting an absurd number of dingers. It's no wonder that players who seem more inclined to be pro linebackers in football play shortstop and third base.

Yet few can still hit for average. The league may be filled with subordinate starting pitching but with the advent of relief specialists, a more rigorous schedule and slightly superior defensive prowess at all positions, especially the outfield, Helton's pursuit seems impossible. Hit .400? Can he do it? Can it still be done?

History is his greatest obstacle. Only nine players have ever achieved the feat. But Helton's stats this year speak for themselves. It has been said that if he does hit .400, it must be marked with an asterisk, that his incredible achievement will be forever tainted because of his home field advantage.

Sure, he may play in Coors Field, the most beneficial park for hitters, but his ability should not be denigrated by that fact. His road stats are almost equally as impressive as his home numbers, and that's no small feat.

As it stands right now, at the beginning of September, Helton, who hits left-handed, has a .390 average in 134 games with 485 at bats. He is batting .425 at home and .367 on the road, with an on base percentage of .485, a slugging percentage of .719, 33 home runs, 189 hits, and 121 runs batted in and 87 walks. He also leads the league in opposite field hits and doubles with 53. And he rarely strikes out (he has 43) which is one of the main reasons his chance to reach the milestone is so great.

So much for inflated statistics. .400 or not, any way you look at it, Helton is a pure, disciplined hitter who will win the National League batting title without rival.

This month, the Rockies will play 19 of their last 29 games at Coors. The two teams on the schedule whom Helton has struggled the most against are the Cubs and the Dodgers – he is batting .091 and .158 in six games each against the two teams, respectively. And even if he falls short, he will join the ranks of great hitters like George Brett, who narrowly missed 400 in 1980 when he batted .390. Not a shabby club to in which to become a member.

But the odds are in his favor to do it. It would be something beyond extraordinary in modern day Major League Baseball; it would be something we might never see again in our lifetime.

Todd Helton – the first player of the new millennium to join the exclusivity of the Splendid Splinter and the eight others who came before him. I forget the pennant races, this guy's got a shot at history.

Tehani Schneider is a Collegian Correspondent.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Taming the Black Bears

John Lytton played a part in the men's soccer team's "hair-raising" win over Maine on Saturday afternoon.

Orioles' future looks dim

By Thomas Boswell
The Washington Post

All of us have some pet subject that drives us crazy. Mine is the notion – the mere idea, no matter how distant – that Cal Ripken might play for some team other than the Orioles next season. For me, that would be the last straw.

Sometimes, the absolutely unthinkable is actually possible. After all, in just the past few mean-spirited years, the Orioles have driven off, alienated, fired or traded Jon Miller, Pat Gillick, Frank Wren, Kevin Malone, Davey Johnson, Rafael Palmeiro, Robby Alomar, Armando Benitez, Jeffrey Hammonds, Eric Davis, Mike Bordick, B.J. Surhoff, Charles Johnson, Harold Baines and Will Clark.

This list is a kind of creme de la creme of competence and character in baseball. It's hard to find a team in any pennant race that doesn't rely on the ex-Oriole factor to keep it afloat. Someday, beside the Cy Yuong or most valuable player awards, perhaps players will cite as one of their distinctions: "Ousted From Baltimore."

The trend is getting worse, not better. Few in baseball think Mike Mussina will re-sign with Baltimore (in fact, on Friday he rejected a six-year, $72 million contract offer from the Orioles). If he comes back, fans should grasp what he has done for them and his teammates, and probably against his own self-interest. Of course, the Orioles don't get rid of everybody. They did keep Scott Erickson, who promptly blew out his elbow and had Tommy John surgery, and Albert Belle, the rapidly aging Dorian Gray of sluggers, who may be the game's most overpaid player.

Against this background, it's clear the Orioles are perfectly capable of driving Ripken away from home, though he says he wants to re-sign. Hard as it is to fathom, there have been no indications the team is close to making him a contract offer.

The correct stance is simple. The Orioles should say that, if Ripken feels he can play most seasons and wants to be an Oriole, then nothing in heaven or earth will prevent it. See how simple that is.

No contractual obligation. You just put your reputation on the line. In light of recent developments, the Orioles would run a great risk for about two cents.

In the last [illegible] week of this season, [illegible] baseball will be more poignant, worrisome and perhaps inspiring than will Ripken's final act in the [illegible] saga until his [illegible] elbow gives out, his wife leaves him, Ripken finds out he has [illegible] or one of his sons gets [illegible] or Ripken finds himself [illegible] two more months on the disabled list. In previous [illegible] Ripken assumed all would be [illegible].

"I'm not [illegible] to happen," he said. "It does not [illegible] but only hope."

When [illegible] he doesn't look [illegible] 40 years old [illegible] he's 30 again.

There will be a sports staff meeting immediately following the All-Staff meeting on Thursday at 6 p.m. in room 113 of the Campus Center Basement. All current staffers, and anyone else who "wants in" should drag their butts down to the shop, yo.

uhs EYE CARE SERVICES
Convenient Hours & Campus Location
Call 577-5244

I invite you to use the Eye Care Services at UHS.

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

My name is Frederick Bloom. I graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1971 and the New England College of Optometry in 1975. I am very proud of the University Health Service Eye Care Services and the high quality of eye care delivered to more than 80,000 individuals over the last 25 years.

I have been on the teaching faculty of the New England College of Optometry and co-authored an article with Dr. Abel, a UHS physician, that was published in a national optometry journal. In addition, I am credentialed in diagnostic and therapeutic ocular pharmaceuticals by the Massachusetts Board of Optometry.

Eye Care Services Include:
- Routine eye examinations
- A new onsite eye glass service
- Emergency eye care
- Full service contact lens care
- Co-management of laser refractive surgery

Our staff takes great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Services over the years has been consistently excellent.

UMASS University Health Services,
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
577-5000

One Hop On The PVTA Could Put You On The Seat Of A Cannondale H300 Bike

To celebrate Try Transit Week, board a PVTA bus between Monday, September 11 and Thursday, September 14, 2000 and give the driver this coupon. It will be entered in a raffle for a brand-new Cannondale H300 donated in part by Valley Bicycles of Amherst and Hadley.

The raffle is part of Try Transit Week, an annual campaign sponsored by the American Public Transportation Association to highlight the benefits of mass transit. The drawing also aims to promote a cleaner environment and the "rack and roll" bike-transport program offered by the PVTA.

Northampton Mayor Clare Higgins will draw the name of the lucky winner on Friday, September 15, 2000.

PVTA OUT OF THIS WORLD SERVICE
781-PVTA www.pvta.com

Try the Bus, Win a Bike
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11 - THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2000

NAME
STREET
CITY/TOWN ZIP
TELEPHONE

Contest rules and eligibility. Employees of PVTA, its contractors operating transit service, and members of their immediate family are not eligible to win. Limit one coupon per person. No purchase necessary.

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Dodge Colt Wagon 143k runs fine. $800 549-5448

1990 Subaru Legacy Wagon. Original owner. New engine 90,000k asking $1800 548-9283

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

96Mercury Station Wagon excellent condition. 117k miles/ac $2000 413-467-3938

CHILDCARE

Parents Helper 2 great children. Mix of after-school, evenings & weekends. 4-15hr/week. 549-5448

Childcare for 2 1/2yr girl with medical needs at home in Montague. Car a must! CPR/First Aid req. MWTH eves. $6.50 hr. Call Darci 367-9129

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50. Housework, car references experience. 413-247-5800

COMPUTERS

Laptop P-166, 1.4GB, 64MB, 28.8KB, Win95. $400 o/b/o 256-4150

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 for Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domino's Pzza. 256-8911

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Care Attendent for male quad evenings and weekend $9.50 per hour. Call 546-0666

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

TUTORS/TRANSLATERS Bilingual/for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Amharic, Chinese, Japanese, Khmer, Korean, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Vietnamese. Call ESL Office at 413-549-9857 Amherst Public Schools An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

EMPLOYMENT

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping the Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center. BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Personal Assistant Wanted Car a plus. 8:00am - 11pm - pm hours vary. Many shifts available. Call Martina 413-323-9633 or 413-323-7802

Paid Internship Seeking creative & responsible students to work for an e-commerce company on campus 30hrs/semester. Call 256-4560

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk. $7.50-8 depending on experience. Car essential. 549-1578

EMPLOYMENT

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle. $7-14/hr. 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Make Money & Do Good Stuff Earn good money while saving the earth. Flexible hours, paid training, students welcome. ($7.30 - $9.00/hr) Call Clean Water Action 413-584-9830

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE. Contact Ellen 585-5133

Deli Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

EMPLOYMENT

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week.

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Recreation Leader - After School Program The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring councilers. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Lockers for Rent: $10 for the year. Cheap! Come to rm 428 Student Union.

FOR SALE

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSDNS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Cozy Quite 1.5miles to UMass. Laundry, parking, vegetarian, kosher kitchen. Non-smoking $350 per month 549-4853

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roomate needed to share two BR apt ASAP $200/mo on bus route 256-3772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

STEREO EQUIPMENT

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free! Lowest Rates to Jamaica, Cancun, Florida & Mardi Gras. Call for a free brochure or visit our website 1-800-426-7710 www.leisuretours.com

Need to Advertise? Call 545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

BOOKBUCKS™ From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card. When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Govel to Govel
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WOCH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven		35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

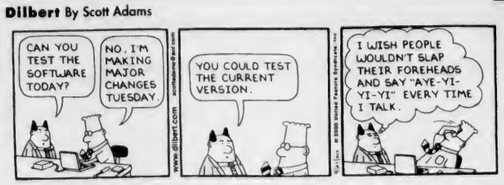
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(13) Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Going Places "Sydney"		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Wall for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	(3) News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother 2	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	(4) News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother 2	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	(5) News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Varished		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Chick Flick"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		(6) Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		(30) News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	(61) Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	s'a's "Dead Presidents" (1995, Drama) Larenz Tate. (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	(22) News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	(57) World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		The Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	(40) News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Varished		News	Nightline
WSBK	11	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager "Initiations"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	42	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball	Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves (Live)						Ent. "Last Man Standing" (1996)	Movie Imits.
A&E	45	L.A. Law		Law & Order "Mad Dog"		Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Cause Mortis"
CNN	29	(23) Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	46	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Canned Ham	s'a "Pre-Said, She-Said" (1991, Comedy) Kevin Bacon.				Stein's Money	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	48	Your New House		Wild Discovery	Tiger	On the Inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries		Mysteries of the Unexplained		On the Inside "Real LAPD"
ESPN	49	Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		s'a "The Wrong Woman" (1995, Drama) Nancy McKeon.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	51	Ani. Uncensrd	Video Music Awards	Opening Act (In Stereo)		MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)						Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK	52	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponge	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	53	Sliders "The Weaker Sex"		s'a "Alien Nation: Dark Horizon"		(Cont) Gary Graham.		Invasion Earth (Part 3 of 3)				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	54	(21) Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies IV		Welcome to Armageddon (N)		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT	55	ER "Welcome Back, Carter"		Pretender "Fyer" (In Stereo)		s'a s "Dead Calm" (1989, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.				s'a s "Dead Calm" (1989, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.
USA	56	Walker, Texas Ranger		Strip Poker		U.S. Open Tennis		Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)				Strip Poker	Texas Ranger
HBO	60	(3:00)	4 "Simon Sez" (1999, Comedy) Dennis Rodman, PG-13			Inside the NFL (N)		s'a "Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock. PG-13				G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	400	(3:35) s'a "A Perfect World" (1993) Kevin Costner. PG-13				s'a s "Phantom" (1947) Arnold Schwarzenegger.		Fetch (N)		s'a s "The Dentist II" (1998, Action Suspense)			101 Rent Boys
SHOW	400	(3:45) s'a "Short Circuit 2" (1988, Comedy) Fisher Stevens. PG				s'a "Wanda Hawley" (1999) Drew Barrymore.		Outer Limits		Rude Awakens (In Stereo)		"Nothing" (1999, Black Comedy)

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

AMERICAN INDIANS KNEW THAT PLANTING CORN WITH DEAD FISH PRODUCED MORE ROBUST CROPS. I FIND THAT A-MAIZE-ING.
GET IT?
dear diary, Just once, I'd like to make love in a kayak. They only have those little holes on top for your waist...now that's intimacy.

Dilbert By Scott Adams



CAN YOU TEST THE SOFTWARE TODAY?
NO, I'M MAKING MAJOR CHANGES TUESDAY.
YOU COULD TEST THE CURRENT VERSION.
I WISH PEOPLE WOULDN'T SLAP THEIR FOREHEADS AND SAY "AYE-YI-YI-YI" EVERY TIME I TALK.

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Over theHedge By Fry Lewis

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

I bought all my textbooks online this semester.
Really? Are they exactly the same?
Well, mostly .. except these have porn ads at the bottom of every other page.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SMELL THAT? ONE OF THESE TUBES OF GLUE IS LEAKING YOUR JOB IS TO FIND OUT WHICH ONE AND REMOVE IT FROM THE BIN.
45 MINUTES LATER
SO, ANY LUCK WITH ?
SNIFF SNIFF SNIFF
THE HILLS ARE ALIVE WITH THE SOUND OF MU-SIC?
TRU-BOND EPOXY

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Dilbert By Scott Adams

FROM NOW ON, THIS IS GOING TO BE A FUN ORGANIZATION.
WHEN ARE YOU LEAVING?
I HAD NO IDEA THAT A RUBBER CHICKEN COULD HURT SO MUCH.

Adam and Eric By Rose Burch

SO, HOW LONG HAVE YOU GUYS BEEN SMELLING THIS GAS?
ABOUT A WEEK
IS THIS DANGEROUS?
WELL, THE BIGGEST DANGER IS IN THREAT ENOUGH OF IT COULD DIE OF INTOXICATION
OH, BUT NOT TO WORRY, THE HOUSE WILL BLOW UP LONG BEFORE THAT

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

Horoscopes

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
You may be planning something that is not right for you. Take care that your pride isn't driving you into something potentially hazardous. Like nuclear waste.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct 22)
You will get some new clothes today. But they will be defective, and you will have to return them to WalMart only to realize that there are no refunds on sale items.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
It may be slow going today, but it is important to remember that how you get there is just as important as when. Unless you're in a race against time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 -Dec21) - Set your self a goal today and be faithful to it; with a little effort you can achieve more than expected Engage a partner. (In bed)

CAPRICORN (Dec 22-Jan 19) An argument is likely to arise today over what is fair. You will soon realize that is all a matter of interpretation And a baseball bat to the dome.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb.18)
There is no reason to think that this day will progress in any way other than planned, unless you've been keeping something from yourself A dirty little secret perhaps?

PISCES (Feb 19-Mar.20)
Concentration and focus must not be allowed to wax and wane today. In fact, you should wax your wane with concentration and focus.

ARIES (Mar 21 Apr.19)
Others may wonder what is driving you, but your motives at this time are no one's business but your own. So tell those nosey traffic cops to buzz off!

TAURUS (Apr 20-May 20)
Details you encounter today will affect how you interpret the overall situation. You may feel as though one piece of the puzzle is misplaced. Or lost. Or stolen

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
You have been overlooking one or two things lately that may make all the difference between satisfaction and disappointment in the end Vague enough?

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
No one is trying to get in your way, and yet you continue to feel crowded. You may be presently ing yourself with self created obstacles. You're most likely mentally ill.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22)
You can trust that nature and the stars will play by your rules today, but only for a short time. Take and vantage of that which you can not controll, and try to take over the world

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 79 LOW: 55	HIGH: 79 LOW: 52	HIGH:75 LOW: 51

Quote of the Day

"Hard work never killed anyone, but I don't want to take any chances."

–Ronald Reagan

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

SANTA FE CHICKEN SANDWICH

TERIYAKI BEEF

TOFU WITH SNOW PEAS (VEGAN)

VEGETABLE POT PIE (BERKSHIRE & WORCESTER)

Dinner

ROAST TURKEY

FRIED SHRIMP

RATATOUILLE POLENTA PIE (VEGAN)

CHEESE RAVIOLI (WORCESTER ONLY)

ACROSS
1 Handle
5 "Road" film destination
8 Flower holder
13 Sound
14 Assessed
15 Curling —
16 Imitated
17 Hard metal
18 Detective Wolfe
19 Bahamas capital
21 — jump
22 Feasts
23 Gutter Woosnam and namesakes
25 Obstacle
27 Construction workers
31 Honored
35 Yves' girl
36 Invent
38 Hunger for 39 Chignon
40 Baghdad native
42 Bite
43 Distribute 46 Amaze
47 By oneself
48 Swarmed
50 Most ancient
51 Dull
54 Bakery buy
55 Angou, e.g.
58 Panhandle
60 Nautical direction
64 Prima donna Gluck
65 Wide
67 Fencing weapon
68 Trudge
69 Lounges about
70 Umbrella parts
71 Capture
72 Boundaries
73 Command to kitty

DOWN
1 Genghis —
2 California valley
3 Cheers for a matador
4 Doctor's — manner
5 Night flyer
6 Wood choppers
7 Onions kin
8 Loafing
9 Pickle
10 Food preservative
11 Expense
11 Classify
12 Basketballer Slaughter
14 Tidal wave
20 "That was yummy!"
24 Harrison Ford and Tom Cruise
26 Curve
27 Nun's garb
28 Evoke laughter
29 Wash cycle
30 Use the rink
32 Water craft
33 Misfortunes
34 Tenorial
37 Tell
41 Eroosachments
44 Resentment
45 Electric —
47 Bakers needs
49 Butter
51 — Palmas
53 Long legged bird
56 Days gone by
57 Jazz Fitzgerald
59 Go away
59 Kind of dust
61 Hero's fate
62 McEntire of country music
63 Robin's home
66 Hirt and Gore

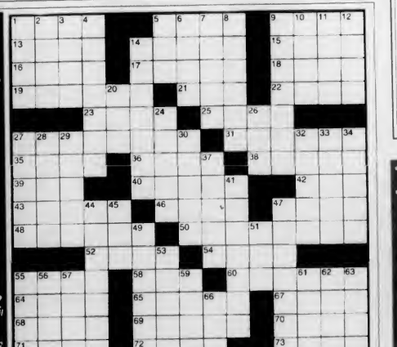
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

PATRIOTS JETS BEER WINGS TONIGHT

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Jarett Barr
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zakashanky, Soren Nash

Read our own Tehani Schneider's take on Todd Helton's quest for .400 on pg.9

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, September 11, 2000 | 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegiansports@yahoo.com

UMass opens fire on Blackbirds

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Freshman Erin Lilly scored her team-leading fourth goal of the season in yesterday's win.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Kara Ciocca had a goal and an assist for the Massachusetts women's soccer team in its 6-0 win over Long Island University yesterday afternoon.

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team was at a crossroads heading into yesterday's game with Long Island University in day two of the UMass Classic.

The most recent memory for the Minutewomen was one that they wanted to forget, a 3-1 loss to Georgia on Friday that dropped the Maroon and White to 2-2 on the season. However, the foe looming ahead on Wednesday turned out to be none other than regional rival Connecticut, one of the toughest squads on the schedule for UMass.

Nevertheless, the Minutewomen needed to get back on track with a good showing against the Blackbirds. And thanks to a goal and two assists from Anna Morozuk and a goal and an assist from Kara Ciocca, UMass cruised to a 6-0 win over LIU.

It was a contest that was just what the doctored ordered. The Minutewomen dictated play for the entire 90 minutes and came away with a renewed sense of confidence heading into Wednesday's matchup in Storrs.

"Against Georgia, we lost, but they were also outhustling us," said Morozuk whose first career goal came with just under 10 minutes remaining. "If we had won today, but didn't play well, then the win wouldn't have meant anything. This was a big ego booster. Now we're ready for UConn."

UMass [3-2] jumped out to a 2-0 lead after the first 45 minutes, and then tacked on four second-half goals for good measure. Kara Green scored her second of the season only 5:32 into the game off a feed from Brooke Bartlett. Kat Machamer then netted her second of the season later in the half, with assists going to Morozuk and Ciocca.

"This was one of those games that you worry about, especially with UConn coming up," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "This team [LIU] upset Fairfield the other day, and we didn't want that to happen again. We wanted to play well early, and we did."

Leading by two goals after the opening stanza, UMass could have sat back and relaxed in the second half. Instead, the Minutewomen implemented relentless pressure on the Blackbirds and managed to score four more goals.

"I reminded them at halftime that we wanted to play two good halves, not just one," Rudy said. "We wanted to win both halves, and I think that we responded pretty well."

Ciocca would record her third goal of the season off a side winding kick early in the second half. Freshman Erin Lilly then made it 4-0 when she gathered the rebound of Morozuk's original shot that caromed off the left post.

Freshman Amy Mink tallied her first collegiate goal off a header with just over 15 minutes to go in the game. Kristin Mena assisted on Mink's goal. Morozuk then closed out the scoring off a pass from Andrea Trujillo later in the half. The junior forward appeared to have another goal in the game's final five minutes, but it was negated because of an offside call.

"Even from just watching the game in the first half, I could see that even if someone messed up, someone else was picking that person up right away," Morozuk said. "We had a lot of team chemistry. This was a game that we were waiting to play because we knew that we could play together."

On Friday afternoon, Georgia scored two goals in the first 4:21 en route to a 3-1 win over the Minutewomen. The game marked the return of former UMass great Sue [Montagne] Patberg, who starred in Amherst from 1985-88.

"I wanted for us to win, but playing against your former coach, you also want your team to look well-coached," Patberg said. "You want to show him that you learned a lot from him as a player. As a coach, that's your job – to win."

Georgia sophomore midfielder Nicole Greathead opened the scoring only 67 seconds into the match, capitalizing off a UMass turnover in the midfield. Then, a little over three minutes later, sophomore Shannon Murray sent a cross into the box from the right flank that was headed home by Ashley King.

Bartlett cut the deficit in half with a goal at the 13:06 mark, but the Minutewomen failed to net the equalizer. Despite numerous chances in the second half, UMass fell short. Jessica Winters's goal with 25 minutes left then all but sealed the fate of the Minutewomen in a two-goal setback.

"Getting a few quick goals was something that we wanted to do," Rudy said. "But instead, they were the ones who got the early lead. We had their attention in the second half, and we got the two big chances. Martha [Conover] could have had one, and Kara [Ciocca] had the chance of the game on the other. If we had gotten those goals, we still we be playing right now."

UMass will take to the pitch against on Wednesday night at 7 p.m. when it will face UConn at Joseph Morrone Stadium in Storrs, CT.

UMass victorious; Wolf nets winner

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

It was not an accordion but instead the Minutemen who kept the Black Bears dancing this past weekend, as the Massachusetts men's soccer team waltzed away with an overtime victory against the University of Maine on Saturday.

Not able to keep step with UMass, the Black Bears fell with nearly seven minutes remaining in the first overtime period. The game-ending goal was delivered by junior Max Wolf to give the Maroon and White a 2-1 lead and their first win of the regular season.

Wolf got some help from freshman teammate Ptah Myers on the goal, as Myers recorded his second assist on the day with an on target cross that allowed for Wolf's volley shot. The goal was Wolf's first of the season and sealed the game for the Minutemen.

UMass led the Black Bears from very early in the contest as junior Fred Kinateder found the back of the University of Maine net fifteen minutes after kickoff.

Kinateder's goal, coming off a rebound, opened the scoring and gave the Minutemen the lead in a game for the first time this season. It also snapped a two game streak of games in which UMass has had to play a game of catch-up with the opposition. Myers was also awarded the assist for the goal.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team's lead would then stand until there were almost five minutes left in regulation play. Maine player, Russell Hutchinson, found an opening and tied the game for the Black Bears, sending the match into overtime where UMass eventually picked up the victory.

The game was an important one for the UMass squad, as the win marked the first time they prevailed this season. It also snapped a two game losing streak in which the Maroon and White came up just short in games against South Carolina and the University of Hartford.

However, what separated the Minutemen's performance against the Black Bears from their previous losses would be the fact that they were able to create more opportunities for goals. The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team out shot the UMaine squad 21-6, which is just shy of the number of shots the Minutemen had in their first two games this season combined.

The Minutemen will now prepare to do battle with Boston University, a team they will meet next Monday night at 7:00 p.m. at B.U.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Benny Hoffman and the Massachusetts men's soccer team downed Maine 2-1 on Saturday afternoon to earn their first win of the season.

Volleyball team wins one of three; Hasson earns All-Tourney honors

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Before heading to Hempstead, NY this week end to play in the Hofstra Tournament, Massachusetts volleyball coach Bonnie Kenny knew that her team would have its hands full.

The weekend tourney featured a battle against host Hofstra, a regional rival that Kenny knew would be tough, as well as matches against Illinois-Chicago and Cal-State Northridge.

Hofstra, the main event of the tourney for the Minutewomen, dampened Massachusetts' weekend with a three-match sweep, but the weekend wasn't a total wash. Senior Rebecca Hasson set a personal record of 22 kills in the victory against Cal-State Northridge, only to break that record with 31 kills in the loss to Illinois-Chicago. For her efforts, the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year candidate was named to the All-Tournament team.

The weekend also featured two strong performances from freshmen Nitia Small and Kuulei Kamanao.

Against the host Dutchwomen, UMass was swept, 15-7, 16-14 and 15-5. Junior Lymarie Llovet led the team with nine kills and eight digs. Senior Jennifer Drennan posted 12 digs while sophomore Jen Davis finished up a fine personal weekend with four aces.

The Minutewomen were able to keep the second game close, only losing by two, but lost by a combined eighteen points in the first and last matches. It was Hofstra's second victory of the season.

The weekend got off to a good start with a big victory over Cal-State Northridge. The UMass program, which had never notched a victory over a California team, was able to defeat their West Coast victim in four games.

Hasson added 10 blocks to her 22 kills while Drennan led the team with 13 digs. Davis put forth a double-double with 11 kills and 10 digs.

The loss was the first of the season for the Metadors. Illinois-Chicago proved to be the heartbreaking loss of the weekend for UMass. The ladies played all five games in the series, only to lose by five in the final match.

UMass began the series strong, pulling out a close 17-15 debut, but the Flames would come back strong in the second match to pull out a 15-9 win. However, the Minutewomen kept their heads up and once again pulled out of another nail-biter with a win, 16-14, in the third set. The Maroon and White could have taken the series in the fourth match, but the Flames from the Midwest thought otherwise, coming back strong with a 15-11 win.

In the final, Illinois-Chicago proved to be too much for UMass, as the Minutewomen could only post 10 points in the loss.

Kamanao led the match with 19 digs, while posting a personal record for herself in her young career. Llovet and Davis combined for 26 digs while Small posted 10 digs and nine kills. But not enough offense was generated to pull out a favorable UMass decision.

Kenny's squad now holds a 3-3 record on the season, but hopes to add to their win total when they fly out to Fort Collins, Colorado to partake in the Coors Classic on Sept. 15.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Rebecca Hasson earned All-Tournament team honors over the weekend as the Massachusetts volleyball team went 1-2.

Minutewomen storm Midwest, gun down Cardinals, Red Hawks

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

On a rather stormy night back in June of 1752, a moderately plump old chap watched a bolt of lightning strike a key that had been tied to the kite he was flying. And it was the electrification of this legendary key that led him to develop many of the terms that we still use today when we talk about electricity. Well here's a new one, Ben: the spark that is produced after a Massachusetts field hockey team loses.

After it's September 3 loss to Northeastern that dropped the Minutewomen to 2-1, simply stated, UMass just hasn't been the same. This weekend gave definitive proof of that.

The Minutewomen spent the past two days in Munice, Indiana playing back-to-back games on Ball State's Turf Field. The weekend would prove to be successful, as UMass took both games from Ball State and Miami of Ohio, 3-1 and 2-1, respectively. The Maroon and White now stands at 5-1 on the year.

Yesterday, it was the Minutewomen who drew first blood as junior Anke Brummer smashed in a goal off a penalty corner, giving her team a 1-0 lead at the 13:08 mark in the first half. Seniors Patty Robinson and Lucy Koch assisted on the goal.

Despite Breummer's score, Miami goalkeeper Marie Vaughn put in a good effort to keep the game close, stopping three shots in the first half. However, at the 18:53 mark in the second half, Kristen Schmidt slid the eventual game winner past Vaughn and into the net, upping the score to 2-0. Robinson and Koch assisted on the goal yet again.

Beth Young would put a shot by UMass goalie Zowie Tucker late in the game but the Red Hawks would fail to inch any closer, dropping their fourth decision of the year.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen racked up their fourth win of the season when both Breummer and Koch scored to send UMass to a 3-1 victory over host Ball State.

All of the goals scored were tallied during the first half of play.

The Cardinals struck early when State freshman Shanna Fritz scored at 16:29 in the first half. A scramble in front of the goalie cage after a Ball State penalty corner resulted in the score.

Two minutes later, Breummer tied the game when she converted on a penalty corner, sending the ball into the back of the cage to knot the game at 1-1. Once again, Koch and Robinson assisted on the goal.

With just about four minutes left in the half, Koch scored the eventual game winner, deflecting Bruemmer's direct corner shot between the pipes for the 2-1 lead.

With about a minute remaining before the halfway mark, Kristen Schmidt added an insurance goal off a pass from Stacey Blue, to bring the score to its final 3-1 standing.

"We came out slow," said coach Patty Shea. "It took the goal by Ball State to get us going. I am just glad we got the win."

UMass goalie Zowie Tucker had five saves in the victory.

After such an action filled weekend, the Minutewomen take a much-needed week off before heading down to College Park in order to take on this year's defending National Champions, the University of Maryland.

Eleven starters, all of whom play for national teams, return from Maryland's 1999 squad, promising that the Terrapins will be the stiffest competition that UMass will have to face this season.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kerry Ann Jaggasar and the Massachusetts field hockey team won twice over the weekend to improve to 5-1 on the season.

Popular sitcom "Will & Grace" dominated the stage at Sunday's Emmy Awards. "The West Wing" captures coveted award.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

UMass water polo sank the competition at this past weekend's Harvard Invitational, going a perfect 4-0.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 5 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, September 12, 2000

Much needed renovations complete

By Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

Last week University of Massachusetts students and faculty returned to a renovated version of the campus they left last spring.

"We always have an aggressive summer program," said Earl Smith, Physical Plant Director. This, however, was a particularly busy summer.

This past summer's renovations were more scattered than in previous years, said Assistant Director for Building Maintenance Eric Ness. "In past years the work was more centralized."

Four auditoriums renovated this summer were Thompson, Public Health, Goessman and Federle Graduate Research Center [LGRC], said Ness. "The renovations in the four auditoriums has a dramatic impact by making it a better environment in which to work."

Speaker of the Senate, Jim Eltringham agreed that the quality of the classroom does affect learning. He stressed the connection between the classroom's environment and its content. "If you're taking a class in a dilapidated room, it's going to affect your concentration."

Auditoriums in Hasbrouck were a priority for renovations, but lost out to substantial changes in LGRC, commented Ness. For instance, some computer lab spaces were transformed into office space. Also, four new classrooms were built in LGRC.

Some noticeable changes around campus include additional lighting, improved signage, repainted crosswalks, new plantings, renovated auditoriums and additional Ethernet access.

As for safety, all of the crosswalks were repainted, according to Ness. "That should make drivers and pedestrians more aware. They [the crosswalks] have a dramatic visual effect to the driver."

The annual "Walk for Light" prompted additional lighting and pruning. "We've done an extensive amount of pruning to improve for safety on campus this summer," said Marc Fournier, Assistant Director for Grounds Management.

Eltringham stated that the safety improvements made on campus were essential. He sited "the additional call boxes and the row of rights by the Library Lawn" as visible progress. "Safety has become a campus issue which is very much in everyone's consciousness."

Another major project over the summer involved the improvement of signage at the campus gateways. The expenditure of $140,000 on signs is the topic of controversy among campus organizations.

"The new signage is simply an upgrading to make the university look better," commented Ness.

Eltringham agrees that the signs are an important addition to the campus. "I think that they are part of UMass pride."

"If you get the feeling that this place is being held together by chewing gum and duct tape, you don't have as much of sense of pride. I think what the money was spent on was a significant campus improvement that will pay off in the long run," stated Eltringham.

Peter Tamas, President of the Graduate Employee Organization [GEO], on the other hand, feels that monies should have gone elsewhere. "Quality happens in the classroom, not on the signpost." He commented that the University's priority should be in hiring faculty and teaching assistants.

"Much of the work over the summer was spent on beautification projects, such as the additional plantings and path behind Thatcher Residence Hall. "We're trying to create a park like atmosphere on campus," said Fournier.

The new plantings around campus are due, in part, to support from individuals. In partnership with the Campus Beautification Committee, Grounds Management established the Adopt-a-Planter Program. Not only are the flowers attractive, but the planters are environmentally friendly as they are made of recycled plastic lumber, noted Fournier.

We also have been installing more picnic tables, park benches, and bike racks all over campus," said Fournier.

New gardens were planted at the Conte National Center for Polymer Research and the south end of Van Meter. "We've had a lot of plants donated by Eleanor Lachman, whose husband Bill Lachman taught at UMass for 40 years," commented Fournier.

Another garden was planted in memory of a UMass faculty member. The sitting garden outside Draper Hall is a memorial to Jean Hosmer, who was murdered by her ex-husband last year.

Thanks to a grant from the federal government, improvements will be seen at some bus stops, said Fournier. "Within the next two months, five bus stops on campus will have new seating areas that include bike racks, park benches, planters, and recycling and trash containers."

"We hope to make the campus a much more enjoyable and pleasant place for people to work and play. We're trying to make the campus look like a park again," said Fournier.

Subtler improvements can be seen in many other areas of campus. On the south side of campus, roofs were renovated on Kennedy, Coolidge, Washington and Melville residence halls. Mullins Center upgrades total at approximately $200,000. An elevator is being installed in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. In the central area of campus, Baker, Moore and Pierpont received carpet and tile replacements. Also, the steam line that services Orchard Hill and the steam line along Infirmary Way were replaced. As for paving, repairs were done to the drive outside the Campus Garage.

"Hopefully people won't hear their cars rattle as much when driving [to and from] the garage," said Smith.

A continuing project can be seen in the Hillside dining room in the Worcester Dining Common, which will be closed until Sept. 27.

JAMES BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Scaffolding outside Thompson Hall is just one of the many renovations that is being done on campus.

Delivery person appalled by SW 'cat football'

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police responded to a call Sunday morning describing an incident in Southwest involving a group of students playing football with a cat.

The call was made at approximately 2 a.m. by a Dominos Pizza delivery person informing police that a group of students were throwing a cat around like a football near the Washington residence hall.

The delivery person was not available for comment. John Gesualdi, owner of Dominos Pizza in Hadley described the situation from what he had heard as being acts of "definitely sick individuals."

"He was shaken and very upset," Gesualdi said. "He came in and told us people had thrown a dead cat on his car. We've never had incidents like this, but they were throwing the cat all over the place, on people's cars. He was at the wrong place at the wrong time."

According to Gesualdi, the students were whipping the cat around by its tail. Dominos employees described hearing that the cat was thrown against the window of the Dominos delivery car.

The driver, a 35 year-old man from Springfield, was working in his first night as a delivery person, Gesualdi described him as being a "cat-lover" and said the situation had apparently "shaken him up."

"He was a nice gentleman and he needed a really good job and I was talking to him about being a manager," Gesualdi said. "It [incident] just really freaked him out."

According to Gesualdi, the man hasn't called him back since the incident occurred. He said he has never heard of such an incident occurring to any of his employees and believes that the man may not return to work in Hadley.

"You have to deal with the typical college student being a little difficult, but no one has ever had any problems," Gesualdi said. "It's a total non-respect for life. Whether the cat is dead or not, it's a living being and it should have had the respect you give other living things."

According to Jim Lyons, police spokesperson, the cat survived the incident and was taken back to the police station with no reported injuries. Lyons said that the perpetrators fled the incident before police arrived.

Daphna Nachminovitch, a senior case worker at People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA), said she'd be concerned if she was living in the same residence hall as the perpetrators.

"Anybody who can treat an animal that callously is surely capable of treating others of am species in a disrespectful manner," Nachminovitch said.

According to her, she has been working on a similar case at Middle Tennessee State University involving a fraternity torturing an opossum. She said the five males were intoxicated and were charged for animal cruelty.

Nachminovitch said it's important for the delivery person to file a written statement so that possible charges can be brought against the perpetrators.

"It's very important that a case like this is not dismissed as a 'boys will be boys' prank because it is exactly that kind of casual attitude that can lead to violent crimes against humans and fellow students," she said. "Ignoring a crime like this is ignoring a time bomb."

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Working out?

Junior animal science majors David Cater and Christine Lima walk lambs at Hadley Farm to exercise them for the Eastern States Exhibition. The lambs, however, were often uncooperative about the prospect of getting in shape!

Labor problems ongoing

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

United Airlines, the nation's largest airline, may have solved this summer's labor problem, but the company's troubles are far from over, says John Kaiser, an assistant professor in the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel department at UMass.

The airline, which has been in the news after contract negotiations between the airline and its pilots turned sour, suffered from a number of business woes this summer, including the worst on-time record in the airline's history.

According to Kaiser, though the airline blamed its poor performance record on bad weather and increased air traffic, the problem was mainly caused by pilots refusing to work overtime while contract negotiations were in progress.

"Airlines do rely on overtime labor, and in the absence of that the airlines have a difficult time staffing flights," Kaiser said.

The overtime is a common expectation in the airline industry, and flying over schedule does not mean pilots violate FAA safety restrictions on the number of hours flown. Pilot fatigue, says Kaiser, is not the issue here; rather, employees refusing to work overtime is "a good way of putting pressure on management" during contract disputes.

The contract dispute in question, Kaiser says, had to do with the Employee Stock Option Plan, or ESOP, which was adopted eight years ago. The plan, in which employees were given shares of stock in the company, was thought of as ingenious when first conceived. Kaiser explained that it came as a shock to many that a major company would sell half of its stock to its employees. It was predicted that as a result of ESOP, management and employees would at last share similar interests.

"People thought, wow, they'll never have problems again," Kaiser said.

This summer's contract difficulties have proven otherwise. The problem, says Kaiser, was that ESOP was offered to employees in lieu of certain benefits and wages, and that employees are now seeking to regain wages and benefits without compromising the ESOP option.

Behind closed doors, United Airlines and its pilots have come to a shaky agreement. Still, the dispute caused severe disruption in the airline industry, repercussions of the dispute were felt on Wall Street, as UAL's stock plummeted, and stock in related industries, including car rental companies such as Hertz, fell as well. The labor disputes also came at an inopportune time, as bad weather and high airline traffic also contributed to poor on-time performance across the industry.

Kaiser commented, "It has been a very frustrating summer for the consumer."

Meanwhile, labor problems within United continue. The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers recently began contract negotiations with United, and these negotiations have also begun to involve the ability of the delivery person to file a written statement so that possible charges can be brought against the perpetrators.

"It's very important that a case like this is not dismissed as a 'boys will be boys' prank because it is exactly that kind of casual attitude that can lead to violent crimes against humans and fellow students," she said. "Ignoring a crime like this is ignoring a time bomb."

Smokey to visit campy

MassPIRG, the leading environmental group on campus, will bring Smokey the Bear to the University of Massachusetts tomorrow in an effort to promote forest preservation. A 15-foot version of the iconic bear will be on hand tomorrow in front of the Student Union between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.

MassPIRG will be asking students to sign petitions that would potentially protect remaining areas in our National Forests. To date, logging has destroyed 31 percent of the national forests. Tomorrow's event is in support of the Heritage Forest Campaign, which calls for President Clinton to protect the remaining 60 million

Turn to SMOKEY, page 3

IU students rally as Knight's reign over as coach

By Marie Harf, Rachel Kipp, Stacey Palevsky, Cory Schouten, & Jennifer Wagner
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, IN - Sunday began with chants of "We want Bobby," continued with broken lamp posts, burning public figures in effigy and police in riot gear, and ended after midnight with former Indiana University men's basketball coach Bob Knight telling Assembly Hall protestors to go home.

Pandemonium for campus almost immediately after the 3:15 p.m. press conference when IU announced the decision to fire Knight. It only snowballed as the night progressed until Knight sent protestors home with a promise he'd address the issue in person at 9:30 a.m. the next day.

"I think you'll be very interested in hearing [...] he told the crowd.

Bob Knight supporters and critics turned out early for a rally that started at Assembly Hall. The protest moved down Fee Lane toward the Bryan House. IU President Myles Brand's residence. Brand was still in Indianapolis at the time. The rally grew as word of mouth spread throughout campus.

"I think this is total bullshit," Pete Wesson, a 1998 graduate, said. "I think the 'zero tolerance' policy they put on him doesn't allow him to be a basketball coach. I think he has done a lot more for this University then he has done wrong."

The mass of people assembled peacefully at Bryan House, with police standing guard in front. The protesters then returned to Assembly Hall for a previously scheduled gathering at 6 p.m.

At that rally, George Leach, a redshirt freshman forward for the basketball team, said he was disappointed with the decision.

"I'm here for the same reason everyone is here - to support coach Knight," Leach said. "Brand just blew us off for a whole year without talking to us, so we were just left in the dark about the whole situation."

Alumni, students, faculty and community members came with signs, bullhorns and homemade T-shirts to show their support.

"They absolutely fired the wrong man," said Val Meek, a Bloomington resident for 20 years. "The person who brought people through these doors was not Brand - it was Mr. Knight."

But the night then took a violent turn.

During the second march to Bryan House, thousands of protesters became destructive. It started with tearing down tree limbs, stealing signs and burning an effigy of Brand. Police countered with riot gear, dogs and emergency vehicles.

"The way they are treating us... is inviting problems," sophomore Luke Williams said. "We're not criminals."

As night fell, the tension escalated. The darkness impaired protesters' vision as police pushed back the crowd with helmets and shields. Dean of Students Richard McKaig attempted to subdue the melee with a request to disperse.

"I would appreciate it if you would follow us over to Dunn Meadow," McKaig said from a fire truck. "So that no one gets hurt."

Sophomore Zach Kosenka was handcuffed on the front of a black Jeep in Brand's driveway.

"I feel violated," he said as he was forced into a police car.

Lt. Jerry Minger said he thought three arrests were made, two for disorderly conduct and one for an alcohol violation. Later in the evening, Jim Kennedy, assistant to the vice presidents for administration, said that four to five arrests had been made.

"When we were trying to move people back because of the pushing and shoving and trying to get people to leave the front of the house, the people arrested) started pushing back," Minger said. "This is no longer a peaceful demonstration, and it's also trespassing."

No IU Police Department officers used any type of mace or tear gas to control the crowd, Minger said. Officers from the Bloomington Police Department and the Indiana State Police were also on the scene.

"I saw no chemical weapons or any kind of tear gas being used at all," Minger said. "There were officers from other agencies there, but I didn't see any of them using any kind of mace or tear gas."

Some students claimed otherwise.

John Moore, a sophomore, came out of the crowd with a red face and watery eyes.

"We were doing chants, then they were backing us up," Moore said. "Then they got out the shields and mace. I was walking backwards. You can only go as fast as people behind you."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Executive Board
Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Mattignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Don Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappus Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargana Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

TEXTBOOKS.
FREE SHIPPING*
*WHEN YOU BUY BOOKS AND ANY GEAR ITEM THROUGH 10/15/00

USE BIG WORDS.
bigwords.com™
TEXTBOOKS GEAR MUSIC & MORE
© 2000 BIGWORDS, Inc

Made in USA
CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
Stencil www.stencil.com #15
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

RELIEF resources
We've got you covered
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

haircuts★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
perms★ tanning★facial waxing

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER
GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale
Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!
Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements
Also check out our online store at ..
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM
65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

New Iowa State U. club explores real meaning, practice of bondage

By Valerie Dennis
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, IA - Bondage, discipline, submission and masochism – these are four of the principles an Iowa State University club was established to explore.

Cuffs is a new ISU club focusing on alternate-sexuality discussions, fetishes and BDSM.

John Dorsey, senior in electrical engineering and president of the club, said he wanted to give Iowa State something dramatically different from anything ever offered before. Dorsey said he has been interested in these issues for quite a while, but he became much more interested this past summer while on an internship in San Francisco.

"I wanted to introduce these issues to the ISU community," he said.

Laura Bestler-Wilcox, assistant director of student activities, said she is happy any time students are interested in starting a new group on campus.

"(Cuffs) represents a group of students on campus who normally don't have an organization representing them," Bestler-Wilcox said. "The club is a place for students to learn about a lifestyle they may be, or are already, interested in."

Dorsey said he expects Cuffs to be controversial.

"Because this is a new subject to many at ISU and not well-known in Iowa, a typical first reaction is lack of understanding," Dorsey said. "I hope that through education people will become more comfortable with the ideas that Cuffs promotes."

If people are not educated about BDSM, Bestler-Wilcox said they shouldn't judge it.

"A lot of people are curious about this type of lifestyle because it's usually portrayed on television and computers and not in real life," she said.

Dorsey said BDSM isn't just about sex.

"It's a very personal and intimate experience," he said. "There is a difference between a play partner and a lover. There is a lot of sexual energy in BDSM, but it doesn't always end with the actual act of sex."

Bestler-Wilcox also pointed out that this type of lifestyle is more about safe trust and loyalty, not abuse, and it's very safe.

Dorsey said Cuffs has three missions – to educate people about the issues the club presents, to educate community members and leaders through outreach, and to provide a safe meeting place for the BDSM community.

This community includes anyone with enough interest in BDSM to make it an important part of his or her life, and cautions those who are interested in experimenting with BDSM because there is "a lot of trust involved with this kind of behavior."

Although the club is not currently funded by student fees through the Government of the Student Body, Dorsey said Cuffs plans to apply in the near future.

"I hope for assistance from GSB to print flyers," Dorsey said. "Since some of our main goals are to educate and promote safety, I would hope we have a good chance of getting funding."

Steve Medanic, GSB finance director and senior in physics and math, said Cuffs is eligible to apply for funding.

Dorsey said he hopes students will support funding the club, even those who are opposed to BDSM, because the group has a good cause.

"I have gotten a very good response at Club Fest from students," Dorsey said. "I think some people are seeing BDSM for the first time. I have gotten a lot of raised eyebrows and curiosity about the club."

Dorsey said he is pretty sure that a club of this nature hasn't existed at Iowa State before, but this is an appropriate time to introduce it.

"BDSM is getting to the point where it can survive in the mainstream," Dorsey said.

Dorsey said he is willing to answer any serious inquiries through e-mail at cuffs@iastate.edu, or visit the Web site at www.stuorg.iastate.edu/cuffs.

■ smokey

continued from page 1

roadless acres from not only road construction, but also logging, mining, oil and gas extraction.

The National Audubon Society is one of the largest organizations supporting the Heritage Forest effort. The Society hopes to work with the Clinton-Gore administration to extend the regulations levied by a recent moratorium on road-building in unprotected wilderness areas. This moratorium will last 18 months, but excludes crucial parts of the National Forest in Alaska, California, Colorado, Idaho, the Pacific Northwest, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas and Virginia.

Anyone interested in helping to preserve the forests can contact the Forest Service at: 14th and Independence Ave. SW, Washington D.C. 20501 or write to Vice President Gore at: Old Executive Office Building, Washington D.C. 20501.

-Collegian Staff

HEY!
All-Staff Meeting
Thursday, September 14th
6:00 p.m.
Campus Center Room 177

Red Zone equals rape zone

By Michelle Weston
The Utah Statesman (Utah State U.)

(U-WIRE) LOGAN, UT - The trees are changing colors, but the color red will remain constant for college campuses across the nation until Thanksgiving Break.

The Red Zone is a national title for the period of time between when students first arrive at college until the first school break in November. Every year during this time period, college campuses are hit with rapes.

Part of why this period becomes a real danger is people are trying to fit in and figure out their environment, said JoAnn Autry, director of Student Wellness at Utah State University.

"Students who have just moved away from home are setting their own rules and boundaries," she said. "They want to be adults."

The need for heightened awareness during the Red Zone applies to everyone, but especially new students and freshmen who are expanding horizons and trying to find themselves, said Sgt. Steve Milne with Utah State University Police.

He said in most cases new students or freshmen meet someone popular or well-known and try to do all they can to be noticed.

Rape is defined as the performance of sexual intercourse without consent of one person, whether the victim is forced, threatened, unconscious or otherwise unable to physically communicate consent.

The perpetrator isn't always a stranger in a dark alley with a knife or hiding behind a bush with a gun.

Already this school year, a rape that occurred in a USU housing facility was reported. The victim said the rapist was an acquaintance.

Statistics show in three out of four cases the rapist is an acquaintance of the victim. One in 15 men rape, according to a research study reported in Mademoiselle magazine. That isn't many men, Autry said, but those few cause a lot of damage. She said the other 14 need to speak up when they hear other men degrading women.

"Some men are appalled when they hear stories of men who rape girls, but they never say anything," Autry said. "They need to share their voice."

Milne said one of the best ways a girl can protect herself from rape is knowing her sexual boundaries and communicating them clearly.

"The biggest thing is to be the one to know her limits," he said. "She has to know how to say no."

Many rape victims don't speak up difficult because they blame themselves, he said. In some cases, female victims ask themselves, "Why did I go with this guy? I should've known," he said.

Only one in 11 cases involving being raped, Milne said, [illegible] to struggle with depression [illegible] from friends and [illegible] difficulty keeping up [illegible] work.

"Theoretically I should be able to fly"

1st year Engineering grad student Rob Lombardi practices paragliding, a sport only 200 to 300 people wide participate in. After practicing these ground maneuvers, he will eventually attach a motor to the setup and fly thousands of feet in the sky

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?
The TIAA-CREF Advantage.
Call us for a free information package
Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:
• Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
• A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
• A strong commitment to low expenses
• Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options
For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.
Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader: TIAA-CREF.
THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance
TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™
1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842-2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB
Free HFC T-Shirt
The Areas's Most Complete Club • 256-6446
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
• PVTA bus route to Rolling Green •
• Pool •
• Aerobics •
• Aqua-aerobics •
• Steps •
• Nautilus Circuit •
• Racquetball •
• Free Weights •
• Jacuzzi •
• Yoga •
• Kickboxing •
• Saunas •
• Massage •
• Bikes •
• Indoor tennis & Basketball •
• Rowers •
• Treadmills •
MasterCard VISA
90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt.9 2 miles East of Town Center
Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($169) & get a free HFC T-shirt

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Poster children for pollution

The topic of pollution is not new to the editorial forums of this country. Seemingly every week, environmentally aware people take up arms against such eco-threats as automobile emissions, wastewater management and national resources conservation.

But while these audacities receive a fair amount of publicity, there exists another equally dangerous threat to the environment that has, until now, slipped through the proverbial cracks of controversy.

But with the release of a report on Thursday entitled Polluting Our Future: Chemical Emissions in the U.S. that Affect Child Development and Learning, the National Environmental Trust has thrust the issue of industrial emissions pollution into the national spotlight.

We at the Collegian feel that the examination of this eco-threat and subsequent measures to curb its effects are long overdue but that by accentuating the toxins' effects on children, the NET is simply playing a card that it knows will hit home with most Americans.

The report (compiled jointly by the NET with the Physicians for Social Responsibility and the Learning Disabilities Association) states that every year, industries in the U.S. release upwards of 24 billion pounds of toxins that the publishers claim cause developmental and neurological disorders in children.

The most alarming fact surrounding these toxins, however, is that the U.S. government currently enforces not a single emissions standard in regards to their release. Despite the frequent and adamant claims of many supposedly Earth friendly politicians about making environmental protection a priority, there have been startlingly few measures acted or even proposed to regulate (or study, for that matter) the release of chemical emissions in this country.

That will most likely change now that the NET has shifted the focus toward American children and developmental disorders that are supposedly caused by pollution. Polluting our Future... asserts that nearly one in every six, or about 12 million, children in the United States suffers from at least one developmental, learning or behavioral disability such as mental retardation, birth defects, autism or attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. Those numbers are misleading, however, in that only about three percent of those cases, or about 360,000 total cases (or one in every 200 American children) live with developmental or neurological disabilities caused by exposure to toxic substances. Again, the NET is using raw statistical snapshots of suffering children to make an emotional plea to otherwise oblivious readers.

Polluting our Future also reports that African Americans are disproportionately affected by the release of developmental and neurological toxins. In 14 out of the 25 counties across the nation found to emit the most of these chemicals, African American populations exceed the U.S. average. But once again, this statistic is misleading in that there are more than likely serious socio-economic factors at play in the ethnic makeup of these high pollution areas.

Aside from informing the American populace about the dangers of chemical emissions pollution, the NET's report is valuable in that it outlines policies that could be instituted to lower the health risk for youths from neurological and developmental toxins. Some of these are pre-market screening of new chemicals, stringent testing of substances already on the market, labeling, better pollution reporting, more controls for emissions from electric power plants and exposure and disease monitoring. These are all measures that should already be in place, had the American public been better informed.

It's just a shame that it took the NET turning America's developmentally challenged youths into poster children to accomplish that.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

There will be a meeting for all interested and returning Ed/Op writers in the Collegian office following the all-staff meeting on Thursday. All interested please attend or see Rob, Brian, or Boo for details.

HERA, drugs, or your money?

College students filling out their financial aid forms had to reveal, for the first time this year, whether they have ever been convicted for the possession and/or sales of illicit drugs. Many students are just finding out about question 28 on the FAFSA which asks: "If you have never been convicted of any illegal drug offense, enter 'I' in the box and go to question 29." And to prevent any perjury, the FAFSA threatens the student with: "If you purposely give false and misleading information, you may be fined $10,000, sent to prison, or both."

This disclosure could decide whether or not students would be able to receive financial aid in the form of loans, grants, or work-study. This law is part of President Bill Clinton's commitment to education. On October 7th, 1998, Clinton signed into law the Higher Education Reauthorization Act (HERA). This act was originally created in 1965 to institutionalize federal and state financial assistance and is reauthorized every six years. Hidden deep inside Clinton's 1998 reauthorization was an amendment (H.R. 6 in Section 484, Subsection "R") that links drug convictions with federal (student) financial aid eligibility. This law takes effect for the 2000-2001 school year.

H.R. 6 demands the loss of federal financial aid for any state or federal drug conviction, including the possession of marijuana. The penalty for the first, second, and third account(s) of possession is, respectively, one year, two year, and permanent ineligibility. The punishment is even higher for a distribution conviction. The first offense is a two-year ineligibility and the second offense is permanent ineligibility. The only way to regain aid eligibility, that is unless you have three strikes for possession or two strikes for distribution, is to complete a drug treatment program and pass two mandatory drug tests. However, the Department of Education dictates the guidelines for acceptable treatment, and their requirements do not come out until Nov. 1.

So where did this policy originate? Gerald Solomon, a now retired Republican congressman, created the provision linking drug convictions to federal financial aid. His amendment passed in the House and the Senate, but was eventually eradicated from the 1992 Higher Education Reauthorization Act. In 1998, however, Mark Souder, a Republican representative from Indiana, re-introduced the provision, and H.R. 6 passed in Congress with a vote of 414 - 4. Souder boasts the political benefits of the law stating, "Taxpayers have a right to know that students who have a drug abuse problem aren't using tax dollars to go through school."

Judy Schneider, assistant vice president and director of Student Financial Aid at the University of Texas at Arlington, voices opposition to the law. "We are somewhat hopeful that Congress will address some of the questions and actually reverse its position and not tie financial aid to the issue... we do not feel like it's an issue that should be tied to receiving financial aid." Also, a repeal campaign mounted by Massachusetts Democrat Barney Frank, along with support from numerous student organizations and drug reformers, is gathering momentum. Frank's repeal (H.R.1053) would remove the part of the HERA that denies federal financial aid to students who have been found guilty of drug offenses. Frank argues that before H.R.6, sentencing courts already had the power at their discretion to deny federal financial aid to those convicted of drug crimes. H.R.6 will take away the power of juridical discretion, similar to the judicial impotence propagated by mandatory minimums and three-strike laws.

JON E. ZIBBEL

So who is going to be affected by this new law? Adam Smith, the associate director of the Drug Reform Coordination Network, is concerned because "given the racial disparity in drug law enforcement, this will inevitably have a discriminatory impact." For example, in 1989 (and things since have gotten worse) African American arrest rates were five times higher than arrests for whites, even though whites and African Americans were using drugs at the same rate (all statistics are from Donziger's The Real War on Crime: 1996). "African Americans make up 12 percent of the US population, represent 13 percent of all monthly drug users, but make up 35 percent of all arrests for possession, 55 percent for drug convictions, and 74 percent of those sent to prison" (for possession!). In fact, surveys conducted by the National Institute of Drug Abuse "consistently found that arrest rates bear no relation to drug use."

In addition, no one with the money to hire an attorney gets charged for possession. They plea-bargain out of court, receive a "continued without a finding," or receive a suspended sentence. Let us keep in mind that whites and people of color are using drugs at approximately the same rate. However, "in New York City, 92 percent of drug arrests were African Americans or Hispanics. In St. Paul, African Americans were 26 times more likely to be arrested on drug charges than whites. And USA Today found that in some cities African Americans were arrested at as much as 50 times the rate of whites from drug offenses."

These atrocities resulting from "the war on drugs" have disproportionately affected people of color and poor whites, therefore it is likely that a similar disparity will result from Clinton's draconian reauthorization act. "It will deny education to those for whom its most vital," says Adam Smith. "The poor, the non-white and non-violent youngster who have had previous contact with the criminal justice system and who are trying to turn their lives around." Also, no other class of criminal offense – rape, murder, assault, etc. – invokes this extra-judicial penalty imposed on top of existing criminal justice penalties.

I signed a petition against H.R.6 that was sent to the Massachusetts legislature, to which I receive a template letter from Senator John Kerry stating his position on the petition. His letter was filled with "drug war" propaganda, false portrayals of drug use, and the incessant desire to punish. He stated that a recent report from the National Institute of Drug Abuse "showed that nearly one-quarter of American college students have tried marijuana in the last year." He then proceeded to link marijuana use to high-risk behavior such as "other drug use, having unprotective sex with multiple partners and binge drinking." I have looked everywhere for that study, and to no avail, found no data even resembling Kerry's claims. He stated that he was "very concerned about the prevalence of illegal drugs on college campuses today" but instead of providing education about drugs, he wants to punish and stipulate. By stipulating treatment to all convicted drug users, he is claiming that everyone who is convicted for possession or sales of an illegal substance has a "substance abuse problem." He does not even distinguish between responsible and irresponsible drug use. Instead, he endorses zero-tolerance ideology, insisting that "chronic drug offenders [should be] permanently barred from receiving federal financial aid."

In fact, HERA could be considered a malicious form of double jeopardy. Loretta Webb, president of the student senate at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, said that students who already received a punishment in the courts are facing another punishment by education administrators for the same conviction. Webb said, "These people are trying to go to school now to do something different with their lives. This new law is taking away an honest way for them to better themselves. You might end up backing them into the same corner they were in before." This might be true for someone who is a self-proclaimed "addict," but the reality is that drug convictions do not correspond to someone having a drug "problem." In addition, with drug treatment currently overfilled, this legislation – with its drug treatment stipulation for re-eligibility – will make it even more difficult for self-proclaimed addicts to get help.

This law is not just affecting aid at the federal level, but many state programs operate under the same requirements. Claintha Carrigan McCurdy, director of the Massachusetts Office of Student Financial Assistance, says that her office gets a "matching federal grant for out of state programs, so we adhere to the same regulations." So this means "a student applying for a Massachusetts grant program must be in compliance with fed regulations in order to receive a grant."

However, verification of a student's legal record is not simple. There is currently no Orwellian central database to administer a national background check, similar to the national arrest warrant database (NCAC). Thus, there is no way to find out if a student's answer to question 28 is correct. The only way to hold someone accountable to the new law is relying on them to honestly answer the question. If a student answers the question in the affirmative, a flag goes up in processing the application and the student's application is put on hold. But who would answer yes to that question if they knew it meant giving up a year or more of their education.

The proposed regulations are readily available for public comment through www.ifap.ed.gov/csbhtml/fedreg.ht m until September 14th and then the Department of Education will vote on the outcome. If you are an educator and want to endorse a letter to congress please write to hearreform@drcnet.org. To join the growing number of student governments against this provision, or to create a student campaign, visit www.u-net.org. You can also call Steven Silverman (202)293-8340 or email silverman@drcnet.org to help organize a student campaign on your campus. There is an on-line petition at www.raiseyourvoice.com that you can sign to demand that the 106th United States Congress immediately overturn that section of the Higher Education Act of 1998 that denies or delays access to financial aid based upon convictions for drug-related offenses. Add your voice to the growing list of people who are organizing against this "backwards way" of dealing with America's drug "problem."

Jon E. Zibbel is a UMass grad student.

A cause divided

SAM WILKINSON

"Time, to eat all your words, swallow your pride,
and open your eyes."
-Tears for Fears 'Sowing the Seeds of Love'

In Philadelphia last summer, I sat on a train heading downtown, and ahead of me were seven women; some of them young girls, some of them middle aged. They talked excitedly, occasionally dropping hints about the reason for their journey.

"To be at the protests," a woman said, not blinking or waiting for my response. She had a convention to disrupt. She was part of it all.

The movement was catching on. It was in the air, in the terse replies given by Republican spokesman Ands Card at the convention, the police response and in the news coverage. Something, just a whiff, a hint, a slight taste perhaps, was on.

But just as it started to show signs of life, signs of real connectedness, it came apart at the seams. If there were even seams in the first place, and at second glance, one wonders if there were.

In Seattle, this "movement" burst out onto the scene. Who? Lacking a great leader, a speaker in front of everyone gathered to protest, or some group title to put on everyone, the assemblage was a patchwork quilt of the American left.

People with agendas against everything from Globalism to the means to help small economies get together, spreading their gospel as best they could. Facing off against the World Trade Organization and the World Bank, major statements were undermined by less than intelligent participants. Some relatively inarticulate anarchists, who brought their ability to wreak havoc, ran headlong into police who had arrived with their ability to wreak havoc. The messages of the protestors were forgotten. Broken Starbucks windows and tear gas; those are the memories of Seattle.

But they got on the front page; regardless of why, protestors got on the front page, and while most wrote them off as crazy hippies and foolish idealists, some got the message out there.

And, if nothing else, a second chance: Washington D.C., months later. Lo and behold, the buildup was intense. The preparation and media coverage went well to the point of saturation, and as a result, the protests came off as campfires compared with the expected conflagration.

Truth told, both sets of protests could really only do minimal good; protesting organizations isn't going to get anybody very far. People protest all kinds of organizations for financial reasons, but they don't get anywhere. If they do, it's only because they found a way to affect the movement of money.

And that's why this summer was the key to the burgeoning movement. Political conventions; that's the place where wreaking a little havoc can have a great effect.

Philadelphia and Los Angeles could have been the grounds for such protests. Maybe not the violence, and in fact at the time the feeling was hopefully not the violence, but the hope that a message would be delivered to some of the people that could hypothetically do something about it.

But instead of delivering, everything simply fell apart. It became painfully clear that a movement which had the ability to reach out to regular mothers and their daughters alike, to encourage people enough to wake up early, to get downtown to risk being arrested for stating their position, was woefully unorganized.

Protestors showed up with puppets, undermining the ability of others to take them seriously, and instead of attempting to get anywhere near the sight of the convention hall itself, felt it necessary only to challenge delegates at their hotels, as if somehow Idaho delegates would take the messages of puppet-wavers to the convention floor.

Ideological gatherings withered into petty sniping contests with the police: the guys with the shiny boots and the right to arrest always, always, win out over dread-locked anybody. Simple obvious realities were patently ignored, as if by the 6,000th complaint of police brutality, the streets would fill with the enraged.

The enraged were already there; it was the un-enraged that needed to be there, and the only way to encourage their representation was to stick to the issues that brought mothers and daughters and angry Republican response there in the first place.

I realized the final nail in the coffin had been hammered, talking to a girl from Ithaca, New York. She said she'd come down to protest, I pressed her for information. What, I asked, did she hope to accomplish?

I was interested. For a split second, I had started to believe that maybe, just maybe, they might make a difference.

She looked at me and told me she didn't feel comfortable discussing the politics; she'd been told of infiltrators and warned against speaking to strangers about the cause.

Best not to let in the interested riff-raff apparently, and if nothing else killed a movement, if puppets and whining and poor planning weren't to blame, then certainly this young woman's comments were.

One doesn't get anywhere with a movement by teaching those involved to scare off those interested. Those movements die, like this movement has died. They'd tell us otherwise, explaining that their ability to get shot at by police armed with rubber bullet dispensers proves that they're on the right track, but they're wrong. They've only proved they can get shot.

Anyone can get shot at. It takes something else entirely to bring a unified group of wildly different people together and then effectively deliver a message.

This past summer, protestors proved they could do none of that, instead choosing to ineptly end a movement that showed signs of life in today's stagnant political culture.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Time to take a stand

Fall has returned to Amherst, and once again, our campus is coming to life for another semester. Students and autumn scenery aren't the only things back for another year, however; the litany of problems that plagued our university last semester will return with us. Housing shortages, budget cuts, privatization and problems with health services are just some of the problems facing us as a student body before we even set foot in a classroom this fall. There will be students moving into lounges which contain more people than electrical outlets; the phone registration lady will be cheerfully telling scores of students that their class is oversubscribed; lines and boycott complications will abound at the textbook annex and the Blue Wall; and students will no longer have access to dental care. The saddest part of all this however is that we, the undergraduate student body, have brought these problems on ourselves.

ELIZABETH PARISEAU

Don't get me wrong. Last semester, as Health Services Employees protested the closing of the dental clinic, it wasn't our fault they were being mismanaged. When a veritable bulldozer of privatization steamed its way across campus businesses last semester it wasn't our fault either. We didn't cause the budget problems, and it wasn't our fault classes were cut. Nor was it our fault that students have to live in lounges. But as last semester drew to a close, with little or no action from undergraduates concerning their situations, we took on a share of the blame for what went wrong.

Here's an example from last semester of how undergraduate inaction made everything worse for all of us. Last year, after one hundred students took it upon themselves to picket his office, Chancellor David K. Scott finally agreed to speak to students about the proposed (and at this point enacted) budget cuts to all academic departments. The undergraduate turnout for the meeting was comprised of a few concerned students like me, a handful of student government representatives, and a whole lot of empty seats, despite the near-wallpapering of campus with flyers advertising this hard-won meeting. I still wonder how there could have been empty seats that night – our university administration over-enrolls freshmen, two years in a row, while cutting the number of available classes. You do the math.

Then wonder with me why a meeting addressing so serious of a problem ended up being contained, with room to spare, at Mahar Auditorium. They should've had to hold it at the Mullins center.

But all of that's over now. Congratulations, UMass undergrads. In addition to being short some desperately needed TAs, and class sections, this semester, you now have the distinction of being about 18,000 young energetic, promising people, who have allowed themselves to be ruled – and screwed – by a handful of middle-aged administrators. Furthermore, the administration got the same message from our behavior that it appears to have been getting for years now: that they can do whatever they want, whenever they want, because students just don't care.

Of course, the students I've asked about last semester's apathy have a few reasons why such a thing that could happen. I think if I had a dime for every time I've heard, "I was too busy," as an excuse for last semester's collective inaction, I'd have enough money to solve the budget difficulties altogether. It's not that I don't understand this – day in and day out, a million thoughts and worries are stampeding through the mind of a student. But the challenge, and beauty of a large university is that we must develop an awareness of every issue affecting our community. If we want our individual lives to run smoothly. So if you dismiss what some administrator is doing in his office across campus or what some TA is worried about in a classroom somewhere as not being of concern to you, you are lying to yourself. It may be hard to respond to campus issues while we're agonizing over the issues of our daily lives, but we simply must.

I have to admit that I'm frustrated, with our campus, with our administration, and with our student body. Time after time last semester I stood at yet another unattended student meeting or event, wondering why I even bothered to be there. Now I just wonder why no one else bothered to show up. I still can't really come up with a good answer to that, so I guess all I can do at this point is hope that something happens this semester that's drastic enough to finally dispel the general student apathy here. If last semester's events weren't enough to break through the laziness, however, I'm beginning to wonder what will.

Elizabeth Pariseau is a UMass student.

Hed breaks deep beneath the surface of Planet Earth

"The Meadow" by (hed) Planet Earth
Written by J. Shaine, C. Benekos, W. Geer
From the album Broke

"I don't ask why, I just fall into the meadow
I close my eyes and wait to die
Yes, I am a liar
Yes, I am a sinner
Please forgive my broken soul

But I've got no where else to go
They made this world so hard
If I had somewhere else to go
I would be a star like you
Special like you
A star like you
Special like you

And all those picture frames surround you
I saw you in France
All those busters hang around you
I asked you to dance
I can't take you home tonight
No, I can't be your man
I know why you here tonight
You in a fight with your mom

But I've got no where else to go..."

Analysis by Aristotle Salidovich, sophomore
(Pre) Psychology Major
Questions by Michael Delano

What is the mindset of the vocalist (Jahred, a.k.a. M.C.U.D.) during the song?

Aristotle: In listening to the song "The Meadow" more and more, I became more aware that it is a love song more than anything else. The vocalist sounds almost depressed because he doesn't think he is good enough to be with the woman he is singing about. Possibly the woman talking at the end of the piece. He also sounds angry with himself. Maybe he betrayed this woman. He says, "yes I am a liar, yes I am a sinner." He regrets what he did and says he wants to be "special like you" and had been faithful. Or, it could just be that he was so moved by the telling of the elephant story at the end that he wrote this song about it.

Rhyme & Reason

What do you feel the music alone communicates in this song?

The music is very repetitive and kind of depressing which fits the lyrics in the chorus where he says "I've got no where else to go". The music has nowhere else to go so it repeats itself. The music makes the song more realistic to the listener. It makes them realize how futile his efforts are to resolve his problems.

This song is an introspective track among an album full of hip-hop-style boasting. Do you think it is genuine?

If this song is among an album of hip-hop-style songs, then yes, of course it is genuine. Maybe he was having an issue at the time he wrote this song. Or maybe he wrote the song after hearing the telling of the story at the end because it was so beautiful. He was so moved to change his general style of writing.

Jahred has said that the vocal sample at the end of the song is a female friend explaining to him the spiritual nature of elephants in African society, and he thought her telling was so beautiful he wanted to record and add it to the song. Why do you think he did so?

I have two views on this. One, he could be writing about the woman telling the story. Maybe he had a falling out with this woman who could so beautifully tell this story. My other theory is that the telling of the story inspired him to write the song. The story is about two lovers from different tribes who were to be sacrificed. God turned them into elephants, which were believed to be immortal. His romantic legend could have given him the idea for this song.

What do you think "The Meadow" is? Real? A metaphor?

I think the meadow could actually be real. I can actually picture this guy giving up on his endeavors and ending up in a meadow. A meadow full of tall grass and flowers where he has given up, all hope and just closes his eyes and wants to die.

The vocalist has many freaky piercings and wears wacky colored contacts in his eyes. Could "The Meadow" possibly be a place where freaks like him can roam free, similar to UMass?

The meadow could also be a place to escape. Maybe he was rejected by the woman he is singing about because of his freakish look. That would also explain why he wishes he could be like you, throughout the entire song. The meadow is his escape as well as an escape for others who are not accepted as a result of this "stars" who dress normally and are accepted.

Vlad Dolmatov is a Collegian columnist.

Girlfriends: UPN's spin on city sex

By Chanel Rabouin
Collegian Staff

"Girlfriends" affirms that Democratic vice presidential candidate Joseph I. Lieberman is right about much of television being exceptionally raunchy. In fact, Monday night that bar was raised even higher (or lowered, depending on your view). The eye of the beholder will determine whether UPN's new comedy is as funny as it is raw.

This beholder says no.

"Girlfriends" is about four good-looking, skinny women in Los Angeles: all of them single and black. The obvious comparison is HBO's "Sex and the City," a much more graphically libidinous comedy about a swell-looking female foursome with roving eyes for men in New York City. Besides locale, a difference is that "Sex and the City" is as white as "Girlfriends" is black.

COURTESY UPN / PHOTO BY

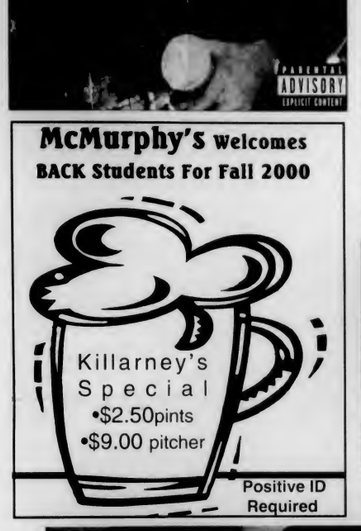
Tracee Ellis Ross stars in UPN's attempt to bring raunchy sex to primetime with Girlfriend's.

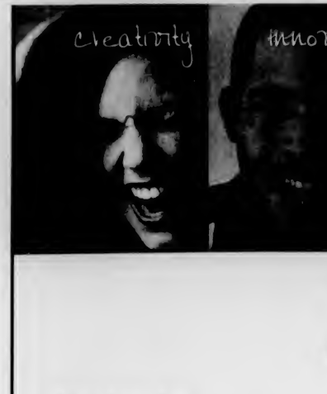
It's also infinitely more sophisticated and wittier than the intrusively laugh-tracked UPN series whose characters haggle noisily and crack juvenile sexual jokes one after the other. Next week, the ribald one-liners become sight gags.

As for sexual content, you won't watch cable's "Sex and the City" without paying a monthly fee to receive HBO, but "Girlfriends" is available to anyone, including kids, with access to a TV set. It airs at 9:30 p.m. on the West Coast, 8:30 in some areas of the United States.

If you don't want it, though, you have permission to turn it off. That's

McMurphy's Welcomes BACK Students For Fall 2000





Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS 201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

There will be a Collegian All-Staff Meeting this Thursday at 6 p.m. in Campus Center room # 177.

Will and Grace sweep Emmy's

By [illegible] Pizzolato
[illegible] Correspondent

The stars of our favorite TV shows appeared en masse on Sunday night to honor and celebrate each other with the 52nd Emmy awards broadcast live from Los Angeles. Hosted by comedian/writer/actor Garry Shandling, the Emmy's boasted its peaking fun at one of the summers most popular TV shows, "Survivor" in which homebodies voted for whom should host the show. Starring Shandling in this skit were Andy Richter (who stated that he should have never left Conan's show), ex-talk show host Arsenio Hall and Cher. Out doing a hysterical take on Survivor Sucs hate-filled monologue tossed belly on the final episode.

The evening kicked off with the award for best supporting actress in a comedy series going to Megan Mullally from NBC's "Will & Grace." "Will & Grace" had a fantastic night pulling in not only best supporting actor in a comedy series with Sean Hayes, but also pulling a huge upset over academy favorite "Frasier" and "Sex and the City."

The other surprise of the evening went to another NBC show. "The West Wing," which pulled in nine awards including best supporting actor (Richard Schiff), supporting actress (Allison Janney), outstanding writing, outstanding director and the best drama series beating such favorites such as "ER" and "The Practice" and the critically acclaimed "The Sopranos." I have never seen the show for two main reasons; one, Rob Lowe and two, it looked ridiculous. But now after such a strong showing it will be interesting to see if "The West Wing" can stay not only popular but also well produced by the creators.

The best supporting actor, best actor and the best made for TV movie went to Oprah Winfrey's book club selection "Tuesdays with Morrie." The supporting actor was Hank Azaria who had won an Emmy earlier in his career for his voice-overs in "The Simpsons" and the best actor went to film icon Jack Lemmon. Best actress went to Halle Berry for the HBO film "Introducing Dorothy Dandridge" and best supporting actress went to Lynn Redgrave for "If these Walls could Talk 2."

The best director, writing and mini-series went to the HBO show "The Corner" which is based on the book by the same name. Film and television celebrity Charles S. Dutton won for best Director, and the writers David Simon and David Wells won for best writing. Their script was based on the book by Simon and Edward Burns who also wrote the book Homicide: A Year on the Killing Streets which inspired the Emmy winning show Homicide: Life on the Streets. Another HBO show also won for best writing and individual performance for the comedy special "Dress to Kill-With Eddie Izzard."

James Gandolfini won for his character Tony Soprano from "The Sopranos" and Sela Ward won for the ABC show "Once and Again." The best lead actress in a comedy was awarded to Patricia Heaton for "Everybody Loves Raymond." One of the most touching moments of the awards show was when Michael J. Fox won for best actor in a comedy series, his first for "Spin City," which he recently left to fight his battle against Parkinson's disease. He was visibly touched and although he was rushed due to time constraints, his sentiment and message broke through and moved the audience.

Despite other years in which the more well-known shows have swept these categories, this year was the year of the upsets, leaving the staff of these newly award winning shows in a position not only to meet the standards that they have now set but also to surpass those standards.

COURTESY OFFICIAL EMMYS SITE

The cast of Will and Grace in a celebratory group hug after the Emmy's.

COURTESY NEW WORLD THEATER

Ratan-tan-tan

Ratan Thiyam's Chorus Repertory Theater in Utter-Priayadarshi: The Final Beautitude. The group visits UMass on September 28 at 7:30 p.m. Call 545-2511 for more information.

Amherst Deli

Pete's Stacked Sandwiches

*All served with potato chips and pickle on your choice of White, Light Rye, Pumpernickel, Whole Wheat, Italty Roll, or Bagel.

*Lettuce, Tomato, Onions, Carrots and Sprouts

*Cheeses: Swiss, Muenster, Provolone, Cheddar, Smoked Havarti, and American

Roast Beef	4.95
Pepper Roast Beef	4.95
Turkey	4.95
Smoked Turkey	4.95
Honey Turkey	4.95
Salsa Turkey	4.95
Pepper Smoked Turkey	4.95
Imported Ham	4.95
Black Forest Ham	4.95
Chicken Breast	4.95
Bologna	4.50
Salami (Genoa)	4.95
Liverwurst	4.50
Corned Beef	4.95
Pastrami	4.95
Turkey Pastrami	4.95
Tuna Salad	4.95
Chicken Salad	4.95
Cheese	4.25
B.L.T.	4.95

Additional Elements

Active Ingredients: Mayo, Pesto Mayo, Mustard, Honey Mustard, Spicy Mustard, Russian Dressing

Toppers: Cole Slaw 25¢, Sauerkraut 50¢, Mushrooms 25¢, Bacon 75¢, Spinach 25¢, Olives 25¢, Peppers 25¢, Roasted Red Peppers 50¢, Pepperocini 25¢, Cranberry Sauce 25¢

Deli

Deliboard Specials

Lizzie's Special — Pepper Smoked Turkey on a Cajun Bagel w/ honey mustard, Dill Havarti, all vegies and roasted red peppers 4.95

Cold Cut Combo — Bologna, Ham, Genoa Salami on a Roll with all vegies, oil and vinegar. 4.95

Deli Club — Turkey, Roast Beef, Ham, lettuce, tomato, and crisp bacon. Served with potato Salad or Cole Slaw. 5.95

1/2 Sandwich & Cup o' Soup — Choose from any of Pete's Stacked Sandwiches 4.95

Rueben with a Twist — Turkey Pastrami with Swiss Cheese, Cole Slaw on Rye Bread with a side of Potato Salad or Slaw. 5.95

Reuben — Grilled Corned Beef, Swiss, kraut or Slaw and Russian Dressing on Pumpernickel Served with Potato Salad or Cole Slaw. 5.95

Fried Eggs-and-Which — Two Fried Eggs with cheese and Bacon or Ham on a Bagel. 3.50

Dee-Lite — Lettuce, Tomato, Onion, Carrots, Sprouts, Roasted Red Peppers with House Vinaigrette and your choice of cheese and bread. 4.25

Deli

Salads

*Your choice of Oil & Vinegar, Blue Cheese, Raspberry Vinaigrette, 1000 Island, Parmesan, Peppercorn or Ranch dressing

Tossed Salad	4.00
Chef's Salad — Roast Beef, Ham, Turkey, Egg, Pickle	6.25
Antipasto Salad — Ham, Turkey, Salami, Provolone, Roasted Red Peppers, Hot Peppers, Marinated Mushrooms, and Olives	6.95
Fruit Salad (In Season)	5.25
w/ cottage cheese
Chicken Salad Plate	5.50
w/ cottage cheese or cole slaw
Tuna Salad Plate	5.50
w/ cottage cheese or cole slaw

Welcome to The Amherst Delicatessen!

The Deli is located downtown in the Carriage Shops (adjacent to the Pub). Established in 1975, the Deli has built a reputation for quality food and friendly service. On your next trip uptown, stop by and join us.

There will be a meeting for those interested in writing for Arts immediately after the All-Staff Meeting on Thursday.

Hey! Need a Job!?

Why not be a bartender?

- Only professional school in Western MA
- Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
- National certification in alcohol awareness
- Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
- Special UMass student discount
- Conveniently located in West Springfield

Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Breakaway Sports & Fitness

Student Membership
$249/year
$139/semester

Free Weights | Batting Cages | Aerobics | Indoor Soccer League

549-3638

Route 116, near campus on bus line

after this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of [cake].

In the course of facing challenges like this, you'll learn how to think on your feet. Stay cool under pressure. Take charge. Talk to an Army ROTC rep. You'll find there's nothing like a little climbing to help prepare you for getting to the top.

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

5 4 5 - 2 3 2 1

Lasorda adds red and white to his resume

USA baseball to represent country 'with the highest degree of dignity'

By Bill Dwyre
Los Angeles Times

The man who made Dodger Blue a rallying cry is changing colors this month. Tommy Lasorda will be adding red and white to his mix.

As manager of the U.S. Olympic baseball team, and of the first such team to field pro players - in this case, all minor leaguers - Lasorda will be more star-spangled than Francis Scott Key.

This is a man who believes the rallying cry comes before the rally, a man who has sold the concept to fans and players alike - that talking Dodger Blue, swearing allegiance to it and hating all that isn't part of it will somehow produce game-winning singles in the ninth inning.

Australia has been hit by plenty of powerful storms over the years, but it may not be quite ready for Hurricane Tommy and his All-American gang.

"I've never been to Australia before," Lasorda said. "Been invited about eight times, but I never went. It was just too far. But when my country asks me, that's a whole different story. I'd fly to the moon for my country."

Lasorda will even miss celebrating his 73rd birthday at home, but he will make that day, Sept. 22, into a customized celebration of the Stars and Stripes.

"We play Italy that day," Lasorda said. "Isn't that ironic. The country that gave my father life. The father that brought me and my four brothers into this world and sat around at the kitchen table and told us, in his broken English, how proud we boys should be of being here and of being American. We'll give Italy a present that night, for my birthday. We'll score 20 runs on 'em."

Lasorda is much more than just gusto. He managed the Los Angeles Dodgers for 20 years, and in those 20 years won two World Series championships, four National League pennants and eight division titles. In his 51st year with the Dodger organization, the team's senior vice president is a member of the Baseball Hall of Fame and is a nationally renowned public speaker and fund-raiser. Three universities have awarded him honorary degrees and there is a street named after him in Vero Beach, Fla., home of the Dodgers' spring training complex.

He retired as Dodger manager in the middle of the last Summer Olympics, July 29, 1996, and those Dodger fans who were detractors then can now, in light of what has happened since, look back on the Lasorda years as the good old days.

Lasorda has filled his life since that midsummer departure in '96 with player-personnel duties, scouting and instructional league work and every sort of public relations opportunity imaginable. But this Olympic chance has really got him back in stride, not to mention back on the field, which he still loves best.

"So much of this is going to be a surprise to me," he said during a recent interview. "I couldn't tell you the starters now. I'm gonna have a hell of a time just learning all their names. But I'll tell you this: The committee (USA Baseball) picked players that can play now. I don't have any time to develop people. We have to win now.

"I'll tell you another thing: This team isn't gonna be like those hockey players. We will represent this country with the highest degree of dignity."

Some members of the U.S. hockey team, individuals who remain unnamed today, tore up portions of their living quarters after a loss at the '98 Winter Games in Nagano, Japan. That became an international incident, still not totally healed, for USA Hockey and the NHL.

Hockey was conducting a similar Olympic experiment, allowing pro players in a team sport that had long been cornered by amateurs. The NHL actually shut down a portion of its season so its players could compete for their countries, then took a big public relations hit when the U.S. team acted more like amateurs than the real amateurs.

Major league baseball is less likely to do anything as drastic to its season, but it also likes playing a role in the Olympics, and that made the selection of the popular Lasorda a natural step. Others reportedly in the running were all former major league managers: Terry Collins, only one season removed from the Angels, plus Ray Miller and Jim Lefebvre. Lasorda's Hall of Fame credentials, as well as a long-standing commitment to the international baseball movement by former Dodger owner Peter O'Malley, made the choice by major league baseball's Sandy Alderson, Bob Watson and Bill Bavasi a fairly logical, easy one.

Until recently, the Olympic movement never quite knew what it wanted to do with baseball. For eight Olympics, the game was a demonstration sport. That ended in 1936 at Melbourne, Australia, and baseball was left out of the Games until O'Malley and others began a heavy push for it since the '84 Olympics were awarded to Los Angeles. It was a demonstration sport then and was again in '88 at Seoul, before finally becoming a full medal sport in '92 at Barcelona, Spain. But the United States and other countries sent teams of college and baseball players to Barcelona and Atlanta in '96.

Now, the Olympic movement, apparently in the final stages of opening the doors to all categories of athletes, could eventually play host to the New York Yankees or all their rivals. That would be within Olympic rules if it certainly not within the comfort zones of Juan Seiz and George Steinbrenner.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Dig this!

Jenni Drennan and the UMass volleyball team will travel to west later this week for the Colorado Coors State Classic.

There will be a Sports staff meeting tonight at 6:00 p.m. in the Newsroom. New writers welcome. Any questions, call Bryan or Mike at 545-0719 or 545-1749.

horn

continued from page 10

the fiddle core of Joe Thornton, Anson Carter and Sergei Samsonov this team could be headed for the playoffs, and could even make some noise when they arrive there. If they fail to sign, it will be another miserable season for Bruins fans.

The Columbus Blue Jackets will begin their inaugural season this year. The only question is: does anybody care?

The NASCAR season is coming around turn four, and it should be a dogfight to the finish line. Defending champion Dale Jarrett is in third place in the points race, with seven time Winston Cup champ Dale Earnhardt six point ahead of him in second place.

But standing between the Dale and Dale show and another championship is Bobby Labonte, a long time veteran who has yet to win a Winston Cup title.

Despite the fact that he's been such a championship Labonte is also experienced racer who has 53 Winston cup wins over Earnhardt with 40 more wins remaining on the 2000 schedule. Though he's had a hotter car and two hungrier Dales behind him, one of which is going for his record breaking eighth championship, it is only a matter of months before Labonte

Matt Bradley is a Collegian columnist.

Matt Dempsey is a Collegian columnist.

baseball

continued from page 10

After Saturday, Martinez has lost five games this season, and in those five contests, the Sox have scored a grand total of six runs. SIX RUNS!!!!! With the low earned run average that Martinez has, he should have no losses. He has every right to complain about the offensive non-support that he gets.

However, he did not. Pitching is my main baseball [illegible] support, he has to win those games. On Saturday, for one of the rare times since coming to Boston, he didn't

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

FREE MOVIE

IF YOU'RE LOOKING FOR THE FINE PRINT IN THIS AD YOU WON'T FIND ANY. WHY? BECAUSE IT'S FREE. FOR REAL. IT'S CALLED THE MAJOR MOTION PICTURE SHOW AND IT'S COMING SOON. OH, AND IT'S FREE.

Major Motion Picture

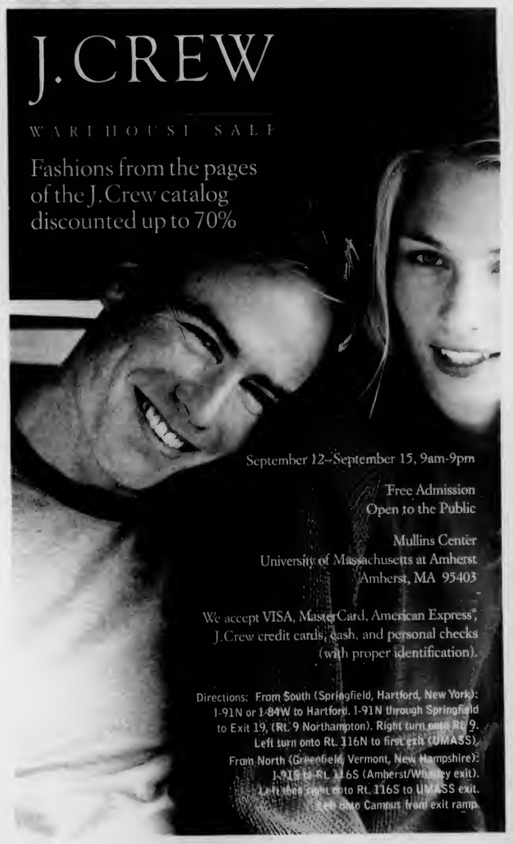
Drivers wanted

©2000 Volkswagen 1-800-DRIVE-VW or VW.com

J.CREW

WAREHOUSE SALE

Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%



September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm

Free Admission
Open to the Public

Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403

We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express®, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).

Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS). From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whately exit). Left then right on to Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Left onto Campus front exit ramp.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 5-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst welcomes you and returning Batu'st students to the Feast of Ifizat Night Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions

Participants Needed for a 6 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Electives offered Race and Ethnicity Psychology Men and Women Dialogue Runs 9/18-2000 at 159 Hicks South For more information call Adrienne 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments Have Heat, HOT WATER, Refrigerator and kitchen, shower/tub bath On MTA routine Call 665-3856

AUTO FOR SALE

1981Mazda 626 loaded needs engine $750 and 1988 Nissan Sentra $350 Both Must Sell 256-1708

1989 Dodge Colt Wagon 143k many new $800 549-5448

1990 Subaru Legacy Wagon Original owner New engine 90,000k asking $1000 548-9783

96Mercury Station Wagon Excellent condition 117k miles ex $9000 413 467-7939

CHILDCARE

Parents Helper 2 great children Mix of after-school evenings & weekends 4-15hr/week 549-5448

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50 Housework, car refer-ences experience 413 247-5800

COMPUTERS

Scanner for Mac HPscanjet 11c $50 or bo 253-9140

Laptop P-166, 14GB 64MB, 28.8KB, Win95 $400 o/b/o 256-4150

Pentium Computer $99. Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT
Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland
This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays
Sugarloaf Estates
665-3856

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc Aquaculture Department Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 for Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour Flexible hours The best place to work Real cool crew Call Domnio's Pizza 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM
Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping the Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome
If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175 or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant Wanted Car a plus. 8:00am - 11pm - pm hours vary. Many shifts available. Call Martina 413-323-9633 or 413-323-7802

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

TUTORS/TRANSLATERS
Bilingual/for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Amharic, Chinese, Japanese, Khmer, Korean, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Vietnamese. Call ESL Office at 413-549-9857 Amherst Public Schools
An Affirmative Action/ Equal Opportunity Employer

Personal Care Attendent for male quad evenings and weekend $9.50 per hour. Call 546-0666

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle: $7-14/hr; 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Make Money & Do Good Stuff Earn good money while saving the earth. Flexible hours, paid training, students welcome. ($7.30 - $9.00/hr) Call Clean Water Action 413-584-9830

Paid Internship Seeking creative & responsible students to work for an e-commerce company on campus 30hrs/semester. Call 256-4560

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk $7.50-8 depending on experience. Car essential. 549-1578

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE. Contact Ellen 585-5133

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, gradeschool, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Baker
Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted
Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

EMPLOYMENT

Recreation Leader - After School Program
The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr, 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Daliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week. 259-1227

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring councilers. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply with-in After 5:00pm 586-2774

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558 is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

DP DOUGH

FOR SALE

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

FURNITURE

Matching couch, coffee table, lamp, excellent condition $100 or B/O 549-0432

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher
Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Black beaded Bracelet Friday 9/8/00 between Campus Center and the Library. If found please call 546-7467

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Cozy Quite 1.5miles to UMass. Laundry, parking, vegetarian, kosher kitchen. Non-smoking $350 per month 549-4853

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roomate needed to share two DR apt ASAP $200/mo on bus route 256-3772

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

STEREO EQUIPMENT

TRAVEL

SPRINGBREAK 2001
Hiring On-Campus Reps
SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!!
Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849
www.gospringbreak.com

SPRING BREAK 2001
Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free!
Campus Reps/Group Organizers Wanted
1-800-426-7710
www.SpringBreakTours.com

WANTED

WANTED!!
30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 30LBS IN 30 DAYS
FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO MassMunchkins.com

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/4 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UNC-TV/19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gavel to Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 8, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Journal		The Grand (In Stereo)		Ayers Rock: Naked Planet
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Candid C.	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Candid C.	JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Making-Band	Making-Band	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Baby Blues (In Stereo)		Popular "We Are Family"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Divorca Court	Divorca Court	Major League Baseball: New York Yankees at Boston Red Sox. (Live)								News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Friends	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Teen Choice Awards (In Stereo)				News		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News		Friends	Frasier
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)		Making-Band	Making-Band	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier		The Strip "We Will Rock You"		Secret Agent Man (In Stereo)		Star Trak: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Montreal Expos at Atlanta Braves. (Live)							★★★ "It Could Happen to You" (1994)
A&E	40	L.A. Law		Law & Order "Savior"		Biography: McDowall		Poirot "Problem at Sea"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Blood Libel"
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live
DISC	23	Your New House		Wild Discovery "Ocean Peril"		On the Inside "K-9 Teams" (N)		Science-Summer Olympics		Storm Warning		On the Inside "K-9 Teams"
ESPN	51	Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Double Jeopardy" (1996, Drama) Joe Penny, Teri Garr.				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	53	(5:30) To Be Announced			TRL (In Stereo)			Best of Say What? Karaoke		NSYNC's Dedications		Fashionably	Dream Date
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	U Pick Nicktoons (In Stereo)		Facts of Life		Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	45	Sliders "Eggheads" (In Stereo)		Quantum Leap (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Reunion" (N)		Farscape "The Ugly Truth"		Lexx: The Series "Gamelown"		Invisible Man "Reunion"
TLC	27	28 Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Nowhere to Hide"		Dangerous Pursuits		Death Defying Stunts		Motorcycles – Born to Be Wild		Dangerous Pursuits
TNT	50	ER "John Carter, M.D."		Pretender "Curious Jarod"		★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman.						★★ "Fallen" (1997)
USA	52	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Jinx" (In Stereo)		★★ "Seven Years in Tibet" (1997, Drama) Brad Pitt, David Thewlis. (In Stereo)						Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	53	(5:15) "Three Men and a Baby"		Inside the NFL		★★ "Lethal Weapon 4" (1998, Action) Mel Gibson.				½ "Devil in the Flesh" (1997, Suspense)		Rose McGowan.
MAX	43	(5:45) ★★½ "Wolf" (1994, Horror) Jack Nicholson.				★½ "Milk Money" (1994, Comedy) Melanie Griffith.				★★½ "The Thirteenth Floor" (1999) Craig Bierko,		Pleasure Zone
SHOW	39	★★ "Sliding Doors" (1998, Comedy) Gwyneth Paltrow.				★★★ "The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan.				Stargate SG-1		Outer Limits "The Final Appeal"

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

GOING INSANE HAVING TROUBLE BREATHING!
MUST... FIND... LIGHT... SWITCH!!
AND HOW DO YOU SUPPOSE I PLAY FLASHLIGHT TAG WITH THE LIGHTS ON?!
CLICK AND YOU ARE?

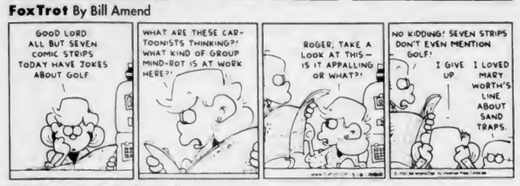
Dilbert By Scott Adams

THIS TO-DO LIST WILL MAKE ME MORE EFFICIENT
I HAVE THREE FAKE EMERGENCIES, TWO DOOMED PROJECTS, FOUR UNNECESSARY MEETINGS...
I FIGURED OUT WHY YOU NEVER ASK ME HOW MY DAY WENT.
OFF YOU GO.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MY CONSULTANT THINKS YOU SHOULD BE FEATURED IN OUR AD CAMPAIGN
IS THAT BECAUSE I'M YOUR NEW CEO AND THE MOST POWERFUL WOMAN IN OUR INDUSTRY?
UM... YES. THAT'S WHY
REMEMBER TO ASK ABOUT TAN LINES.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

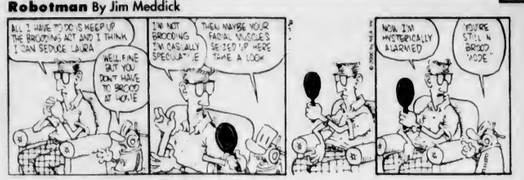


GOOD LORD! ALL BUT SEVEN COMIC STRIPS TODAY HAVE JOKES ABOUT GOLF.
WHAT ARE THESE CARTOONISTS THINKING?! WHAT KIND OF GROUP MIND-ROT IS AT WORK HERE?!
ROGER, TAKE A LOOK AT THIS— IS IT APPALLING OR WHAT?!
NO KIDDING! SEVEN STRIPS DON'T EVEN MENTION GOLF!
I GIVE I LOVED UP. MARY WORTH'S LINE ABOUT SAND TRAPS.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT ARE YOU WATCHING?
YOU KNOW WHAT THAT IS? IT'S A TV.
AW, JEEZ. IT'S A MYSTIC LINE INFOMERCIAL. THIS IS ALL JUST LIES BURNT.
NO, NO, NO. IT SAYS "FOR ENTERTAINMENT PURPOSES RIGHT THERE AT THE BOTTOM AND GETTING LIED TO ISN'T VERY ENTERTAINING. NOW IS IT?

Robotman By Jim Meddick



ALL I HAVE TO DO IS KEEP UP THE BROODING ACT AND I THINK I CAN SERVICE LAURA WELL FINE BUT YOU DON'T HAVE TO BROOD AT HOME
I'M NOT BROODING I'M CASUALLY SPECULATIVE
THEN MAYBE YOUR FACIAL MUSCLES SHOULD SEE A SHRINK HERE TAKE A LOOK
NOW I'M HISTORICALLY ALARMED
YOU'RE STILL IN BROOD MODE

Robotman By Jim Meddick

I'VE BEEN MASSAGING MY FACIAL MUSCLES BUT THEY'RE SO STUCK IN BROOD MODE
AS A THERAPIST I'D SAY THERE'S A CLEAR NEURAL PATH TO THIS STORY
LEARN TO BE MORE FLEXIBLE AND YOU CAN END UP WITH A FREAK OF DISTORTED FACE
I GUESS THAT'S THE MORAL. BUT I'M NOT SURE HOW WIDELY APPLICABLE IT IS TELL THAT TO MICHAEL JACKSON AND HIS TEAM OF CLOSE-UP SURGEONS

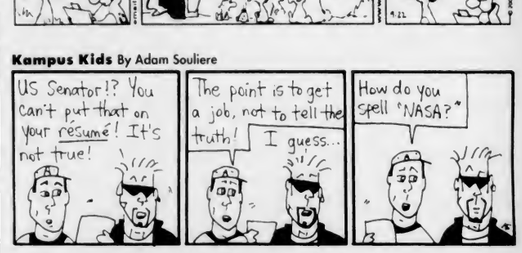
Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 4
THE MARATHON
"CONTINUOUS REPLAYS OF CHARLIE'S ANGELS"
I CAN'T STAND IT ANYMORE! WHO IS CHARLIE?!...
AYYEEEEE!!!
HE'S HIT THE WALL.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere



US Senator!? You can't put that on your resumé! It's not true!
The point is to get a job, not to tell the truth!
I guess...
How do you spell "NASA?"

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
By now, you have probably set a number of the projects in your most comfortable areas. Now it's time to step out of your comfort zone. You may feel that you're carrying the burden without much financial help from anyone else. Take charge and be aware of how competent you are.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Deadlines may creep up and cause you to feel overpressured. If you feel under the gun, good results from your efforts to promote or publicize someone or something, avoid making premature judgments, especially right now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)
You may inadvertently put up some walls that keep you from sensing the needs of others. If you have the weight of the world on your shoulders, it could be hard to imagine how you could possibly take on more responsibility. This may be the time to delegate some daily routines to someone who can help you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)
Excitement could permeate your existence. Even though you feel some inner doubts, and hesitations. You may not be happy in your present environment, but you'll have an outlook for some social inconveniences or if you focus on the challenges, new plans, and the expansion of your life choices.

LEO (July 23-August 22)
Unexpected funds from partnership situations could make this an exciting day. You may still have some unpalatable views of what other people feel or accomplish. You're better off if you count on yourself and know that you're an accomplished lover.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22)
You may be in a position to answer many questions about your future or plans, but it could be impossible to keep information to yourself for now. Show your excellent strengths and visualize what you want to accomplish with your work. Your participation in any social activity can be the things you enjoy!

LIBRA (September 23-October 23)
You can be details-oriented for quite profound. Pay attention to your instinctive reactions as well as your powers of observation. If you can combine your sensitivity with an ability to handle the mundane, you will be on the road to special success.

SCORPIO (October 24-November 22)
You may encounter difficulties dealing with someone that is moved over. If a partner or mate is under special pressure that may affect your life as well. Don't make any assumptions about the constancy of love from someone else.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21)
The letdown that comes from expecting too much could cause tremendous depletion of energy for you. Try to avoid disappointments at all all possible. Keep your own hours, walk on your own path, and remain above the fray.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19)
You may be tempted to keep a situation artificial. Your best bet is to take a step backward and let events unfold by themselves. Your feelings relate to the tension with a partner, mate, or significant other. If you feel that someone else is trying to force you into a mold, you need to struggle to get out of it forever.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18)
You may have to keep hold of them. Pressures with land, real estate, or property arise from your present locale; you require your attention. You could feel somewhat overwhelmed by differences. Take a break from wrestling with problems that are hard to resolve.

PISCES (February 19-March 20)
Reach out to resolve situations that seem unfair. You may think you have to put on an insulated suites, but that won't help anything. You are especially sensitive and vulnerable at the moment. Try to get past feelings of being unloved or snappish at all in family members.

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 77 LOW: 64	HIGH: 76 LOW: 50	HIGH: 72 LOW: 52

Quote of the Day

"You'll find life to be rather curious as you pass through it. I just hope you don't find it too disappointing."

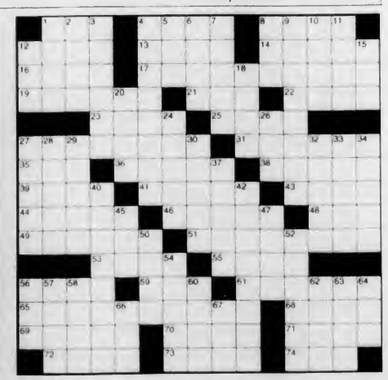
–Prof. Bevilacqua
Dept. of Communications

ACROSS
1 Air-rifle ammo
4 Hindu sacred text
8 Nepal's place
12 Wallop
13 Rainbow goddess
14 Combine
16 Coyote sound
17 Outdoorsy type
19 Bakery treat
21 Parrot
22 Employs
23 Herring cousin
25 Designer Christian
27 Forceful
31 Experienced REM sleep
35 Icky stuff
36 Ballerina pianter
38 Canadian doctor
39 Rock's partner?
41 Becomes a dad
43 Carryall
44 Actress Barkin
46 Rich cake
48 Saute
49 Sampled
51 Fried tortillas
53 Errand Gl's status
55 Wis. neighbor
56 Ember
59 Put on
61 Flee
65 Ford product
66 S-shaped molding
69 Male bee
70 Dash
71 Bean for sprouting
72 Erupt
73 Eat! mo
74 — de cologne

DOWN
1 Alliance
2 Cry like a baby
3 Make ripples
4 Quivers
5 Pitcher's stat
6 Actor Van Dyke
7 Requested
8 Physician's org.
9 Most reliable
10 Vexes
11 Film-script writer James
12 The lady
15 Lim.'s cousins
18 Settled up
20 — no idea!
24 Toe
26 Gold Sp.
27 Heron
28 Bo-re-m
29 Does Roger's job
30 Chocolate substitute
32 Soaring
33 Montreal subway
34 Low cards
37 Antitoxin
40 Not interfere
42 Raucous
45 Just out
47 Fish-eating eagle
50 Nonflying bird
52 Revenue
54 Ear parts
56 Rascal
57 Yours and mine
58 At the peak of
60 Cleopatra's river
62 Water in Baja
63 Restaurant offering
64 Margaret's nickname
66 Kilen comment
67 The — of luxury

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

WHAT'S BLACK & WHITE & COSTS $2 FIND OUT SATURDAY
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Reuben Sandwich

Pizza Casserole

Carrot & Onion Schine (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Dinner

Sicilian Stuffed Shells

Pork Chops

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan)

Today's Staff

Bryan Smith
Brian McDermott
Matt Despres
Alan Basque
Elana Premack
Michael Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Tuesday, September 12, 2000 10
Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass ends skid with tourney sweep

The UMass men's water polo team ended a two-game skid by taking four wins in the Harvard Invitational.
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

It's an age-old argument. Brains versus blue collars. Money versus work ethic. The spoon-fed versus the common folk.

The Massachusetts men's water polo team struck a blow for the state's public school system at the Harvard Invitational this past weekend, trouncing a quintet of private institutions en route to the tourney title. The No. 14 Minutemen downed Boston College (15-3), the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (12-2), No. 19 Brown (11-6) and the No. 20 Crimson to run their record to 6-2 on the season.

The Maroon and White's domination of the Eagles in tourney-opening action featured a double-barreled UMass attack of offense and defense. The team's scoring assault came largely from sophomore Chad Arnold and junior Mike Foley, who each socked home three goals.

On the other end of the pool, junior goalkeeper J.R. VanderWall kept BC in the clutches of frustration with a trio of saves.

Saturday's game two demolishing of the MIT Engineers, junior Evan Lutz stepped up and found the opposing net three times, while junior Adam Moore put away two scores of his own.

VanderWall again proved an impenetrable force between the poles for UMass, shunning eight Engineer shots.

Game three pitted the Minutemen against their first ranked opponent of the weekend, and they elevated their game even further in burying the Bears. Junior Greg Trayer joined Arnold as the heavy artillery for UMass against Brown, as the pair combined for five goals and practically equaled Brown's six-goal showing themselves.

UMass	15
BC	3
UMass	12
M.I.T.	2
UMass	11
Brown	6
UMass	6
Harvard	2

UMass coach Russ Yarworth used the Brown melee to see some extensive action from his entire arsenal of goalkeepers, as VanderWall teamed with sophomore Rafael Santana and freshman Rodrigo Gonzalez to tally a whopping 15 saves for the Maroon and White.

In the fourth and final showdown of the day, Moore went absolutely ballistic on the host Crimson to the tune of four goals. The team's otherworldly depth was again evident, as junior Carlos Ramos got his name onto the stat sheet by putting a pair of dents in the Harvard net.

Michigan native VanderWall put an exclamation point on his stellar weekend with another jaw-dropping performance, denying nine Crimson shots to run his tourney total to 28.

The four wins were especially timely for UMass, which had dropped two in a row at the Navy Invitational prior to hitting the water at Harvard. The team has now racked up a half-dozen victories and totaled an impressive 112 goals thus far in the 2000 slate.

Yarworth's troops will now gear up for a rematch with Brown, set to unfold on Saturday, Sept. 16 in Providence, RI.

Men's and women's XC open 2000 campaign with strong showings at UNH

By Regan McKendry
Collegian Staff

As students return for another semester, preparing to hit the books for their classes, fall competitors once again get ready for the grind that is the life of an athlete.

With little time for themselves, athletes rarely can enjoy the simple pleasures of life, whether it be a stroll through the park with a crisp autumn breeze, attending the local country fair, or watching the fall leaves change from green into a patchwork blanket full or color.

For the Massachusetts men's and women's cross-country Teams, they were given a chance to observe the change of autumn, while taking part in their opening meet of the season.

This past weekend the Maroon and White took part in the inaugural race of the year in Durham, New Hampshire.

With challenges from fellow New England schools Boston College, Brown University, UConn and host school New Hampshire, the men's team escaped with a second place tie with the arch-rival Huskies, while the Women's team earned a solid third-place finish.

Leading the way for the Minutemen were seniors Mike Pieck and Kevin Somers.

Pieck traversed the 8000-meter course in a time of 25:14, with local Monson native Somers just behind at 25:27.

Rounding out the top five for UMass were three teammates from the Empire State – New Yorkers Ryan Corbett and Salvatore Sastasi crossed the line one second apart from each other in 16th and 17th place, respectively.

Brendan Sullivan rounded out the top five with a time of 26:36, good enough for 24th overall.

In the women's race, the Minutewomen were shut out of the top ten due to a sweep of the top nine positions by the Lady Eagles of Boston College. However, after the BC onslaught.

UMass teammates started to break the tape. First on the Maroon and White's scorecard was junior Granite State native Kristin Ciswoski, finishing the 5000-meter course at 19:23.

Two tandems of Minutewomen made up the rest of UMass' top five. Freshman Molli Ketschek and senior Melissa Henderson crossed the line five seconds apart, logging in places of 17th and 18th, respectively.

The other pair for UMass were Bay Staters Katherine Blais in 24th and Rebecca Aldrich in the 25th position.

Another New England five-set is set to take place this Saturday back home in the friendly confines of Amherst.

The men's and women's teams return to action on Sept. 16th, playing host to Boston University, Central Connecticut, Maine and Vermont.

Offensive struggles continue for UMass

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Thus far, goals have been at a premium for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. Last night beneath the bright lights of Nickerson Field the Minutemen found out just how hard it was to attain a premium.

Boston University's Kirk Miller scored on a penalty kick at the 24:49 mark for the game's lone goal and along with it picked up a win.

UMass	1
BU	0

Miller's goal proved to be too much for UMass to overcome as it was unable to beat Terrier goalkeeper Michael Cardenas. The Minutemen peppered the sophomore with 13 shots, but the Framingham native turned aside six en route to the shutout.

UMass goalie Bryan O'Quinn saved four of 11 Terrier shots in the loss.

The Maroon and White have been struggling to find the back of the net early in the season posting a meager four goals in four contests. With as little offensive output that UMass (1-3) has been mustering one might think that it has been out of its games. This is simply not the case. The Minuteman defense has put the clamps on opposing offenses allowing only six goals.

The shutout by BU (2-2) was the second consecutive time that a Minuteman squad was unable to notch a goal against the Terriers. Last year's contest was in the Loundonville, NY for a matchup with the Siena College. This will be the second consecutive year that the Minutemen will meet the Saints after a loss to BU. Last year the Maroon and White were able to blank Siena by a score of 3-0 in Amherst.

The UMass men's soccer dropped a tough game, 1-0, to Boston University last night at Nickerson Field.
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sox-Yanks renew rivalry with playoff implications

Hit and Run with David Rose

New century, same old story.

The Boston Red Sox and the New York Yankees met at Fenway Park this past weekend with the American League East with all intent and purposes, on the line. While the Yankees came into the weekend as division leaders, the Red Sox had played them tougher than any team over the past two seasons.

That was, until this weekend.

The Yanks dominated all three games at Fenway, putting away any hopes of the Sox catching them for the A.L. East title, as they have built up a nine game lead with 22 games to play.

The Red Sox problems started on Friday when the "Rocket," Roger Clemens, came back to his old stomping grounds to pitch 8 shutout innings. While the Sox got a great performance out of Tomo Ohka, the Red Sox offense was a no show against a future Hall-of-Famer.

The Yankees got all the offense that they needed from David Justice, who drove in the first two runs of the game, including a home run in the seventh off of Ohka to give the Yanks a 2-0 lead.

Though the game was well played, it will be remembered more for one of the most frightening sights that I have ever seen. Red Sox reliever Bryce Florie came into the game in the ninth inning and promptly gave up a two run single to Derek Jeter. On the next pitch, Ryan Thompson hit a line drive that hit Florie straight in the face. The sound of the ball hitting flesh has got to be one of the nastiest sounds I have ever heard, or was a witness to. As Florie rolled around on the ground, the question was how badly had he been hurt? Did he get his glove up in time to get a piece of the baseball, or had it hit him square in the face? The answer was that he had not gotten his glove up in time and took a direct shot to the face.

The most unbelievable thing then happened: Florie got up and never lost consciousness. He suffered a broken nose, a fractured cheekbone, and a broken orbital bone in his eye. Through all of that, Florie can consider himself very lucky, because after the shot that he took, it could have been a lot worse than it turned out.

Then to add insult to injury, the visitors from the Bronx beat the Red Sox ace, Pedro Martinez on Saturday afternoon.

It was another case of Martinez getting no run support from his offense. He had to be perfect to win on Saturdays and almost was, with the key word being almost. In the seventh inning, Scott Brosius, the 1998 World Series MVP, drove the stake through the hearts of Red Sox fans by taking Pedro deep for a three run homer over the Green Monster.

Yankee ace Andy Pettite supplied the coup de gras by pitching eight wonderful innings while collecting his 18th win of the season. He gave up six hits and struck out six. Although closer Mariano Rivera gave up two runs in the bottom of the ninth, the Sox fell eight games back in the division.

Turn to BASEBALL page 7

Rams, Devils defense at different levels

AROUND THE HORN
MATT BRADY

After just two weeks of play in the 2000 NFL season, it appears that there may be several surprises in the playoff race.

The St. Louis Rams, though their renowned offense is cruising, are having major issues with their defense. The secret strength of last year's team has allowed an average of 35 points per game in games against rather weak offenses in Denver and Seattle.

As for last year's AFC champs, the Tennessee Titans are 1-1, their lone win being an overtime success over the Kansas City Chiefs. In what was supposed to be a breakthrough season for Steve McNair, he has proven to be somewhat ineffective, posting a QB rating of 45.0, better than only the woeful duo of Akili Smith and Ryan Leaf.

The Washington Redskins, deemed by most to be untouchable in the NFL ranks this season, dropped a crucial contest to the Lions this past week. In the 15-10 victory, the Skins defense was strong, holding the Lions without a touchdown and allowing only five Jason Hanson field goals in the contest.

On the other side of the ball, Brad Johnson had one of his worst outings as a member of the Redskins, tossing four interceptions and only one touchdown. Stephen Davis also had a tough day, running for only 59 yards on 17 carries.

Of course, we're only two weeks into the season, so it's still anybody's ballgame.

* * *

Though it's only September, the NHL season is just one month away from starting.

It looks as though the Stanley Cup Champion New Jersey Devils will still be the team to beat, as they only lost sixth defenseman Vlad Malakhov and team leader Claude Lemieux. Though the team will miss the experience that Lemieux provides in the locker room, they picked up Turner Stevenson in the off-season to pick up his physical load.

Simply put, the Devils have their key pieces in place. Head coach Larry Robinson single-handedly lifted this team past each round of the playoffs by getting the most out of all of his players, veterans and rookies alike, and should follow a similar route in the coming season.

Speaking of rookies, the Devils had four who all played gargantuan roles in the team's run toward glory. Assuming that Scott Gomez, Brian Rafalski, Colin White and John Madden don't suffer from injuries or sophomore slumps, these youngsters now have the experience to carry this team throughout an 82-game schedule.

Not to mention that the Devils, regarded as one of the finest defensive teams in the game, now have what is possibly the most feared front line in the NHL in Patrik Elias, Petr Sykora and Jason Arnott.

The Boston Bruins, on the other hand, did little to help their suffering cause. The Boston Brass has contractually neglected its young talent, and instead set its sights on... Paul Coffey.

Ah yes, the 'Human Sieve' was signed in the off-season, adding an experienced yet aging defenseman on the blue line that will help soften the blow of losing Raymond Bourque. Unfortunately for Bruins fans, his complete lack of defensive ability will forever overshadow what little offensive punch he has left in the tank.

If the B's finally back down and sign

Turn to HORN, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
Volume CVII Issue 6 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, September 13, 2000

Marissa Tomei's new film The Watcher failed to impress, let alone scare. Read the review.
ARTS p. 5

Brooke Bartlett and the UMass women's soccer tonight take on UConn tonight in Storrs, CT.
SPORTS p. 10

Bus shortage delays campus

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA), an operation including UMass Transit, has reduced the number of buses operating in response to a driver shortage, causing fewer buses to be on schedule, more to be filled to capacity and feelings of frustration resulting from the unreliability.

According to Al Byam, manager of UMass Transit, instead of buses running every 15 minutes, students should now expect buses to run every 30 minutes.

The bus shortage resulted when approximately 21 drivers unexpectedly resigned from the position within the last few weeks.

"We expected about 105 drivers back this fall which is about minimal of what we need," Byam said. "The week before school [started], we had about half dozen of our hourly drivers get jobs in their careers, and they left. And then we had about 15 drivers who said they were going to come back and didn't."

In one of the PVTA's "severest" shortages ever, some of the 85 drivers are now working as many as 70 hours a week, UMass Transit and Byam are attempting to hire new drivers; however, the process of getting drivers trained for a bus license is no easy task.

"We've had a lot of recruitment; [we] recruit all year long, but it's been hard to keep up," Byam said. "Getting through the licensing process takes time."

The process involves training new drivers on school buses that are specifically used only for that purpose.

Student drivers are required to learn how to drive with these buses that are operated by standard transmission compared to the PVTA buses that are automatic transmission.

State law requires that new drivers go through at least 35 hours worth of driving training prior to taking a test – an amount of time that can take between three weeks to an entire semester to complete.

According to Byam, however, they are looking to drive students through the recruitment and training process at a much faster rate in efforts to assuage the transportation shortage.

"We're going to be asking people for patience while we go out with another heavy recruitment and push drivers through the recruitment program," Byam said. "We hope to do it in the next six to eight weeks."

He went on to explain that UMass isn't the only place experiencing a transportation problem. In fact, according to him all of Hampshire County is winding up short.

"The economy is so good that there's so many jobs out there," Byam said. "Unemployment in Amherst is around one percent or less. Everybody's looking for help so it's very competitive."

While there are jobs aplenty, Byam said bus driving is a very marketable skill and the benefits that come with a Class B license can help students get jobs with other companies. But the turnover rate at PVTA has always been high and many students are skeptical of the reliability of it service in times of dire need.

"This morning, I was late for my 9:30 [a.m.]," Alene Santoro, junior education and history major, said. "I was supposed to get an 8:55 [bus], but it didn't come till 9:20. I think they need to do something fast. I'm sick of getting looks from my professors.

When you come in late, you look like an idiot."

Students like Jen Dougherty, a senior majoring in communications, echoed the same feelings of discontent toward the reduced PVTA service.

"This morning, I had an 8:00 [a.m.] class, so I got up at six so I would be on time," Dougherty said. "The 7:15 and 7:30 buses never showed, so I was 15 minutes late for a class that I got up so early for."

While UMass Transit attempts to resolve the problem, Byam said students should take alternative methods of transportation or plan ahead.

"There seems to be a heck of a lot of traffic out there and I feel badly about having to do this, but we have no choice," Byam said. "I want to encourage students to take an earlier bus than they normally would because there's going to be overcrowding and fewer buses running than normal."

Starting today, UMass Transit will be distributing new bus schedules for all on-campus and off-campus routes in attempts to become more "reliable" during their shortfall.

For information about PVTA bus schedules or to obtain an application, call UMass Transit at 545-0056.

> "We're going to be asking people for patience while we go out with another heavy recruitment and push drivers through the recruitment program. We hope to do it in the next six to eight weeks."
> -Al Byman, UMass transit manager

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN STAFF
Anxious students wait for a bus to arrive on North Pleasant St. Because of a driver shortage, PVTA has been forced to cut its bus schedule.

RAs speak on policy enforcement

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

In lieu of "striving for excellence," the University of Massachusetts Residential Life's new motto, resident assistants are concentrating on the implementation of new regulations this semester despite a lack of adequate enforcement in regards to a number of older policies.

One of the main rules implemented into housing last year was a stricter drinking policy in residence halls. This includes an automatic expulsion from the campus and parental notification for any student that is caught possessing a keg in the dormitories.

According to the Rights and Responsibilities handbook, "kegs and other large volume containers are not permitted in areas under University jurisdiction except at duly authorized/licensed events and must comply with local town regulations where applicable."

Tayna Herron, a senior Resident Assistant (RA) in the Van Meter/ Butterfield cluster, explained that the alcohol policies regarding both consumption of alcohol and its sale and transportation were strict but difficult to enforce at times.

"If I don't see it, it's not there," she explained, mentioning that RAs could not write up residents unless they actually witness a policy violation.

Justin Meszaros, a sophomore resident assistant in the Central living area commented that the new rules which had been implemented were important for the safety of the students on campus. "I believe that the rules are important; it should be a safe environment since students are paying to attend school here," he said. "I don't think these rules are going to be easy to enforce, but we have to do our jobs."

The problem with policy enforcement is that it often relies on the Area Resident Directors and their personal preferences; according to some resident assistants. Michael Phillips, a senior art major and Resident Assistant in Van Meter explained that some staff members take certain housing violations more seriously, such as alcohol or noise violations.

"A lot of times policy enforcement has to do with the senior staff that you have," he commented. "This cluster seems to be the strictest I have seen so far; things are pretty much by the book."

Another policy that is being strictly enforced in dormitories on campus deals with marijuana. This semester Resident Assistants are required to call the police if they smell marijuana in their residence halls. This puts a strain on RAs who often feel that their first loyalty is to their residents.

"We don't want to kick anybody out [of housing]," Meszaros said. "We are here for the residents."

According to Herron, another rule that is now on the books to be enforced in housing is one that requires students to treat their residential assistants with respect and courtesy, or they will be written up. She explained that disrespect from students has consistently been a problem for RAs, albeit one that the assistants themselves accept as par for the course.

"You move behind that door and you have automatic problems from the get-go, you know that," she said.

Along with all of the rules that resident assistants enforce there are many that are left at the wayside. For example, there are rules in the handbook that dictate policy for student security and cooperation with safety policies on campus.

According to the Residence Hall Manual distributed to students in dormitories on campus, students who enter a residence hall before security hours must register at the security desk as soon as security staff goes on duty. In addition, any students must wait at least 14 days before visiting the same room or residence hall if they are staying overnight.

The book also states that, "only overnight nonresident guests may be admitted to residence halls between 1:00 a.m. and 7:00 a.m."

Often times these rules are not enforced by student security, resident assistants, or followed by students. Another issue relating to safety on campus is the lack of alarms on side doors in particular building on campus.

According to Herron, the side doors of Van Meter not alarmed for safety. She explained that students had chosen for the doors to remain unalarmed due to the fact that alarms are expensive to replace and cost roughly $150.

"We un-prop doors when we are on duty, but the doors were basically chosen not be reinstalled," she said. "I had nothing to do with that decision."

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN STAFF
Resident assistants are on the look out for students violating stricter housing policies on campus. Chief among these is the University's new alcohol policy, which can lead to expulsion.

Rising gas prices spiking at wrong time for UMass

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

It's 4:00 p.m. on a Friday afternoon on Route 9 West, heading into Northampton. Another traffic jam, another crowded thoroughfare in Massachusetts. By looking at the line of cars creeping from every avenue and driveway, it is obvious that despite the escalating price of gas, hardly anyone seems to be affected enough to take their cars off the road.

Two years ago at this time, the average cost of a gallon of gas was 95 cents. Today, drivers pay up to $1.93 for a gallon of premium and up to $1.73 for a gallon of regular unleaded.

The prices began to spike at the beginning of this summer leading consumers to wonder why this was occurring and what they could do about it. Residents in Chicago, Illinois were forced to storm city hall after their gas peaked at $2.13 a gallon.

The causes of the hike are twofold. The first reason is taxes. With the economy so good and so many people driving and buying new cars, the state and local governments noticed that gas stations were making enormous amounts of money off the sale of gas. Soon, the taxes on gas started to rise.

Today, 35 percent of the cost of each gallon is taxed in the United States. Most of the taxes go to local governments. In Chicago, for example, the revenue generated from the summer tax hike was fed into highway repair. However, the drivers in Illinois didn't particularly agree with the extra tax and sent their representative to Washington to take action.

Taxes are also high because of special interest groups that put pressure on the government. Environmental groups like Friends of the Earth believe that increasing prices discourage the wasteful use of a limited resource and possibly reduce the emission of greenhouse gases.

Although the taxes may seem overwhelming, so far they have been relatively reasonable. In the United Kingdom, 75 percent of the cost of a litre of unleaded goes to taxes, and their supplies are running out quickly causing mad rushes to gas stations. Elsewhere in Europe, such as France and Brussels, drivers are protesting the price inflation.

Another important factor in the tax increase is the exchange rates. These rates are calculated from the cost of barrels of oil and filter down through the refineries and into the gas tank.

The other cause of the rising gas prices in the last couple of months is the price of oil and the suppliers of oil. OPEC, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, has control of over 40 percent of the world's oil and therefore dictates the price and quantities available to the commercial market.

The leaders of OPEC recently met in Vienna to discuss the rising costs after the price of crude oil skyrocketed to its highest levels since the Gulf War. Their main goal was to reduce the cost of a barrel of oil from $33 to below $30, preferably somewhere between $22 and $28.

The answer to lowering costs is raising production. Therefore, the leaders decided to raise the production ceiling by 3 percent, or 800,000 barrels a day. This increase is scheduled to take effect on October first. The current daily production is 25.4 million barrels.

Countries claim to already be pumping oil at their capacity. Only Arab countries can really stand to increase production. Saudi Arabia, for example, is already producing more than its quota, and Iraq is also producing and selling more than it is allowed by UN sanctions.

OPEC leaders will be meeting in Caracas, Venezuela on November 12 to discuss the economic impact of price increases on oil producing countries. The leaders are keenly aware of the fact that higher prices lead to declines in economic growth, and for countries like Venezuela, whose economy is almost entirely based on oil production, the decrease in revenues spells disaster.

Back in the United States, the price of crude oil has increased partly because of the short supply in comparison to previous years. Some officials say that the demand in the summer is increasing; therefore, the supply is getting smaller.

As the price of oil and gas increases, the effects are felt not only nationwide, but locally as well. Already in Amherst there are concerns over drastic price increases in heating oil this winter. Many students living in off-campus housing may end up facing large heating bill- due solely to the cost of oil.

Turn to GAS, page 2

gas

Continued from page 1

On campus, the price increase is costing the University big bucks. According to Pat Daily, the Associate Director of Utilities, the high prices of gas are adversely affecting the school by over a million dollars.

The University of Massachusetts is heated by a large boiler located in the center of campus- trademarked by three large smokestacks behind the Campus Center.

The power plant runs 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year. The central boiler sends steam to all the buildings on campus as well as the residence halls, which constitute about 48 percent of the space heated on campus.

The boiler uses both coal and oil to produce heat. Daily said that the university uses 350,000 gallons of oil annually. That's equal to 8, 333 barrels of oil per day.

Last year, the cost of oil was 70 cents per gallon. This year, the price rose to $1.09 per gallon. The increase in price will cost the University an extra $70,000.

Besides the heating and utilities department, the University also has a fleet of cars and trucks, which presumably use a large amount of gas and oil every year.

Along with heating and moving trucks, the University also supplies gas and diesel fuel to the PVTA busses. The PVTA uses an average of 210,000 gallons of gas every year, according to Al Byam, the PVTA manager.

Last year, the cost of gas for the buses was 37 cents and the PVTA was locked into a contract to always get the lowest price. Such a contract could not be negotiated this year, forcing the organization to buy gas on the market at 87 cents.

In 1999 the PVTA's cost of gas was $160,000. The PVTA budgeted to spend $189,000 in the year 2000.

Although the cost of running the buses has increased, Byam said that so far there has been no adverse affect.

While the University spends thousands of dollars on gas to run the assorted trucks, machines, buses and boilers, there is an even bigger component to the school that is spending an equally large amount of money on gas: the students themselves.

With more students attending the school and bringing their cars onto campus, the student body is spending thousands of dollars on gas. Although Parking Services Manager Michael Brennan was unavailable for comment, it is reasonable to estimate that there are thousands of cars on campus, whether they be student or faculty, and the more cars, the higher the demand for gas.

Despite pressure on OPEC by the west, the price of oil and gas will most likely continue to rise. This means that UMass students should prepare for an expensive winter.

MassPIRG brought Smokey the Bear to campus yesterday in order to promote their campaign to save National Forests from future road building.

Don't just READ the paper -

YOU

CAN BE A PART OF THE

These positions with great experience, fun and an on-campus location are available:

- Graphic Designers > see Sage Brousseau
- Photo Technitians
- Photographers > see Jaret Barr
- Distribution Manager
- Delivery Drivers > see Shawn Ilinitch

Stop by room 113 in the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500 if you're interested.

PIZZA PAPA JOHN'S

UMASS/HAMPSHIRE/AMHERST COLLEGE SPECIAL

Now Hiring Delivery Drivers
Earn $12+ Per Hour

OCMP

One 14" Large One Topping Pizza $6.99

One 14" Large Pizza With One Topping, Breadsticks & A 2-Liter of Coca-Cola $12.99

3 Large 1 Topping Pizzas $19.99

Call 586-7272 For Fast, Free Delivery!

Open Until 1am Sunday-Thursday & 3am Friday & Saturday

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Thurs @ 5:30
Fri @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Made in USA
CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
Stencil #15 www.stencil.com
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?

Bragging rights.

The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.

NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports

We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

IN SHAPE NUTRITION
NUTRITION SUPPLEMENT DISCOUNTER
GET IN SHAPE!
Back To School Sale
Great Products, Great Prices, Great Service!
Your #1 Choice For High Quality Nutrition Supplements
Also check out our online store at...
WWW.INSHAPEONLINE.COM
65 University Drive Amherst, MA 549-7434

Coping with the ancient sins of the fathers

By Renee Tawa
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES – Well, yes, his grandfather served in the German army during World War II.

Dominik Zotti, 21, doesn't find it hard to talk about this, as he leads tours through Holocaust exhibits at the Simon Wiesenthal Center Museum of Tolerance. Not that he tells every group. But if there is time, if Zotti senses that visitors need a nudge, he talks about his grandfather to underscore a point: Zotti's generation is the first to emphasize, rather than downplay, its country's share of responsibility for the Holocaust.

Since November, Zotti has been on a 14-month assignment at the Wiesenthal center for an independent organization called Gedenkdienst, or Commemorative Service Program. Worldwide, 22 Gedenkdienst interns are assigned to Holocaust-related institutions in lieu of Austria's eight-month compulsory military service for young men.

The interns are challenging their country's traditional notion of its wartime victimization – that Austria simply fell prey to Nazi aggression. In fact, thousands of Austrians acted as Nazi collaborators and likely committed war crimes against Jews. More than 50,000 Jews were killed in Austria during the Holocaust, mostly in concentration camps.

Their message is one of hyper-vigilance and reconciliation – but the interns, who are paid by the government, are trying to do their jobs at a politically tense time. In February, Austria included the "extreme-right" Freedom Party in its new coalition government, provoking international condemnation. Much of the outrage has been aimed at the party's firebrand, Joerg Haider, 50, who has minimized Nazi atrocities during World War II.

Under this storm cloud, Gedenkdienst interns are distancing themselves from Haider, who once described Hitler's concentration camps as "punishment camps." Haider has apologized repeatedly for that statement, and other incendiary remarks.

At the Wiesenthal center, Zotti – along with fellow interns Alexander Zlamal, 27, and Peter Mangel, 28 – field worried questions about Haider. They tell people, no, they don't think Jews have to worry about a surge of Anti-Semitism in Austria, and no, neo-Nazis are not taking over their country.

In an interview, Zotti's rapid speech stumbles when talk turns to Haider. He fidgets, purses his lips. His usual smile is gone. His voice goes flat. Ask him privately, he says, and he's happy to say what he thinks about Haider. But in the newspaper? No. He, along with the center's other interns, feels awkward about speaking for or against a government that pays their salaries.

Otherwise, none of the interns shows a bit of self-consciousness on the job. At work, they have no problem with even the most ignorant questions: "Were you part of the Holocaust?" Or, "When did it happen – in the 18th century?"

The 7-year-old West Los Angeles museum is internationally acclaimed for its high-tech exhibits, for pushing ideas instead of artifacts. The place is dark and windowless with a concrete bunker kind of feel, lit by flashes from a 16-screen video wall featuring images of civil rights struggles and a blinking list of words: Retard. Spic. Queen.

On a recent morning, Zotti leads a group of a dozen teen-age boys on a three-hour tour. The boys wear mostly baggy shorts, T-shirts and tennis shoes; he's in a dark gray pinstripe suit and wingtips. Otherwise, he looks like a peer; and if it weren't for his accent, he would sound like them, too.

"Guys!" he yells to his tour group. He introduces himself, says he's from Austria and asks them not to clown around in the museum. The boys, talking and joking, fall silent.

The tour starts through two doors. One says "Prejudiced"; the other, "Unprejudiced."

This is how Zotti gauges his groups, their self-awareness.

Only two boys head for the "Unprejudiced" door. Good group, he thinks.

Without trepidation, Zotti leads them past a faded American flag made from scraps by inmates anticipating their liberation at Austria's Mauthausen concentration camp. He stands by as the group watches film footage that shows thousands of cheering Austrians in what looks like a street fair, welcoming Hitler's troops to Vienna in 1938.

At the end, Zotti throws out questions.

Who was responsible for the Holocaust?

Hitler? someone offers. The Nazis? asks another.

So who were the Nazis? he asks.

Silence.

"A lot of Germans, a lot of Austrians, supported Hitler," Zotti says. "And everybody was responsible who didn't do anything, who had a chance but didn't use it, who didn't speak out or didn't help in Germany and other countries."

Heads nod.

This group doesn't need prodding. With other groups, Zotti sometimes talks about his grandfather, who was drafted into Germany's Wehrmacht, or armed services.

Although the role of the regular German army in the Holocaust has been a subject of recent debate, Zotti explains that his grandfather was stationed near Stalingrad during the war and spent most of his time trying to survive the cold of Eastern Europe. He was not a member of the Nazi Party. He did not serve in the Gestapo, SS or as a concentration camp guard. And after the war, his grandfather, now deceased, worked as a local judge, helping Jewish residents reclaim their homes.

"I can say, 'Not everyone was like this,' " Zotti says. "I think it puts a good perspective on how to stereotype people or how to be prejudiced.

Then I say, 'You have to make a distinction between the individual in this case and the whole country, and what each stands for.' "

After the tour, kids in Zotti's group say they admired him for coming from Austria to talk about his country's horrors. "I think that's very mature – taking responsibility," says a 15-year-old. "You have to be kind of brave, you know what I mean? To show people that he's sorry for what his country has done."

Zotti says he does not speak out of guilt; only responsibility.

"I want to tell (people) that I acknowledge it," Zotti says. "It's important for me. It's my country. It's my roots. I want to put it in the light of what it is."

Univ. Tennessee- Chattanooga Email policy raises privacy issues

By Nick Roark
The University Echo (U. Tennessee Chattanooga)

(U WIRE) CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. – The University of Tennessee-Chattanooga's new e-mail monitoring policy has received scrutiny from some critics as an invasion of privacy, while others argue it is simply business as usual.

The policy is described in a memorandum issued from the University of Tennessee- Office of Business and Finance. It states that the university "reserves the right to preserve or inspect for business reasons any information transmitted through or stored on its computers." The memo echoes the idea established in the university's local policy that the use of University information technology resources is not a right, but a privilege.

"It certainly affects all employee e-mail," said Richard Gambrell, UTC's senior information technology consultant. The only uncertainty would be mail stored on a university owned machine. The exact procedures and policy are still under development. Right now, it is a kind of in a limbo state.

"Everyone needs to remember that we are at a public university," he said. "With the Freedom of Information Act, practically everything anyone does as an employee is subject to review through public records."

Gambrell explained that the university's current procedure does not involve the storage of copies of e-mail messages.

"Nothing gets archived," Gambrell said. "There is a log about the transfer of the message that does have in it the date and whom it is from and whom it is to. We use this to help know how much traffic is going through the system. The actual content of the message is not included at all in the log."

Student e-mail sent through Moccasin or Cecasun accounts would not be public record and open to university review, according to Gambrell.

"That should be protected. We have an obligation under the Federal Communications Act to protect the privacy of e-mail. We would only review an e-mail, when business reasons including any suspicion of a violation of university policy give us reason to."

According to Gambrell, privacy concerns must be weighed against protecting the integrity of UTC's network from SPAM e-mail, computer viruses and hacker attacks.

"It gives us some policy to fall back on in taking action to protect the network and our servers," Gambrell said. "That is our main concern: keeping the mail system operational."

The university is within its rights to monitor the electronic communications of employees as well, in order to ensure worker productivity and protect UTC's interests, according to Gambrell.

"This policy helps in reminding people that university equipment should be used for legitimate business purposes to fulfill the mission of the university. E-mail is no different than an old-fashioned typewriter where a typed memo is sent to someone. The memo would be a university document that the law would allow people to see. Sending e-mail is the same thing."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592 • http://www.dailycollegian.com

Adam White Editor-in-Chief Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Marc Mensibel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

SGA nominations underway

Nominations for the Student Government Association Senate elections open today and close on Wednesday, September 20 at 5:00 p.m. Elections will be held the following Tuesday, September 26.

Senators are elected from each residential area on campus. In addition, a commuter Senator is elected by commuter students. All together, the Senate is comprised of almost 100 students.

"The Senate is a great way to get involved," said Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate. He asserts that SGA Senate is not necessarily about politics. Rather, it's about making changes and "[shaping] your world."

Information sessions within the residence halls will begin this evening.

Senate meetings take place every Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. The first meeting of the year will be on Wednesday, October 4, in the Commonwealth Room in the Student Union.

Interested parties should sign out nomination papers from the SGA office at room 420 in the Student Union. Candidates must collect 25 signatures from the community they wish to represent.

Any questions should be directed to Jeremy Rouille, Chancellor of Elections, at 545-0592.

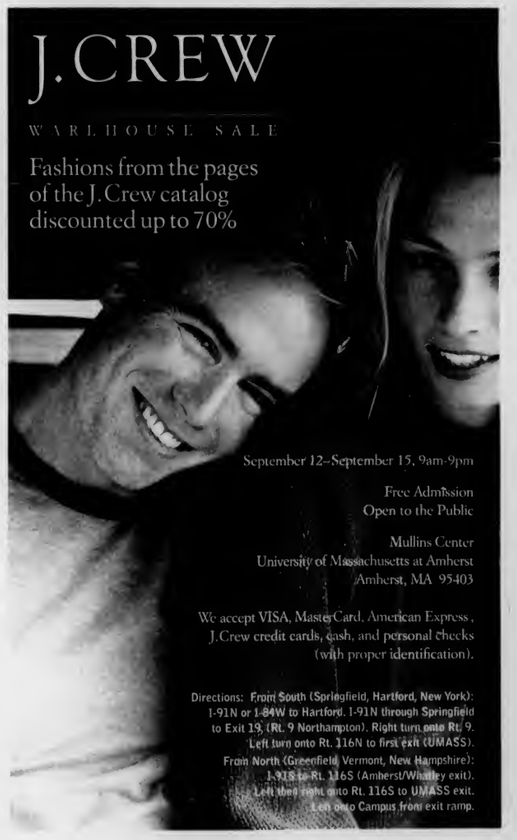
-Michal Lunsden

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

Naturally, the country's premiere leadership school offers only the finest classrooms.

Marines
The Few. The Proud.

J.CREW
WAREHOUSE SALE
Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%



September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm

Free Admission
Open to the Public

Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403

We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).

Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS). From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whately exit). Left then right onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Left onto Campus from exit ramp.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

PVTA silence
No solution in sight

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority is short on drivers; of that there is no question. Instead of busses running all the time, as many as four scheduled busses will not show up, leaving students to wait around and do ... nothing.

Apparently, there aren't enough drivers.

And students are suffering.

More importantly, they aren't getting to class.

What - the problem?

The PVTA won't say, for some reason, refusing to talk to Collegian reporters, insisting that they're simply being annoyed by queries from interested student groups. But doesn't the Pioneer Valley, and more importantly, the students of this campus who rely almost entirely on the busses to get them to classes deserve if nothing else, an answer?

Students who miss classes are missing out on valuable in-class time. Students waiting for scheduled busses to appear that never do are students wasting their time. Yet, from the PVTA, nothing.

No words of remorse, no apologies, and most discouraging, no explanations for their problems or a promise to fix the problem.

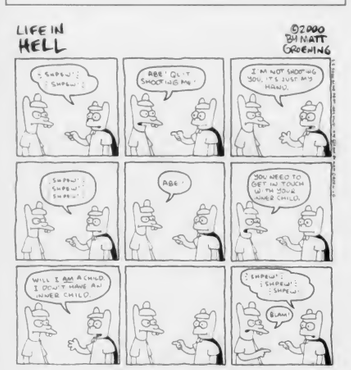
Admitting there is a problem isn't risking the quality of PVTA. It isn't risking the face of PVTA. It's simply hoping that by denying that a problem exists the problem will somehow go away - as if it will be solved by silence and a lack of acknowledgement.

So problem goes away without work and acknowledgement, the PVTA gives us silence and one can only assume a lack of a tangible attempt to find solutions to the current problem. That sort of attitude towards the needs of students is embarrassing and does not get people to class.

Nothing gets people to class other than a solution to the problem of fewer drivers. And the PVTA has indicated no interest, at least to all of us, that they are interested in solving any of the problems before them, only that they are interested in saving community face. What PVTA seems ignorant of is the fact that, every second that busses aren't where they're supposed to be, every minute that passes for people at bus stops, and every class that is missed is the PVTA losing face.

Not responding only adds to PVTA's problems, it doesn't make them go away. If anything, it makes them worse.

The Daily Collegian can only hope that the higher-ups at the bus garage mature enough to understand that people need explanations; not silence. We need solutions, not quiet. This campus figured that out long ago; why can't the PVTA?



LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
I SWEAR I'LL STOP SMOKING!
ABE! QUIT SHOOTING BB'S!
I AM NOT SHOOTING YOU, IT'S JUST MY HAND.
I SWEAR I'LL STOP SMOKING!
ABE.
YOU NEED TO GET IN TOUCH WITH YOUR INNER CHILD.
WELL I AM A CHILD. I DON'T HAVE AN INNER CHILD.
I SWEAR! I SWEAR! I'LL STOP...
BLAM.

Tales from the table

LAURA SICILIANO

I was a waitress this summer, as many of you were. To anyone that waits tables year round, I respect you deeply. I have waitressed for the last three summers, during semester break, and here and there on random weekends. That is more than enough of the restaurant business for me. I have so much respect for people who wait tables throughout the year, because I believe that I would possibly need to be sent away in a straightjacket if I was a waitress year round.

Why, you ask, does being a waitress drive me slightly insane? The money is great, I did not have to wake up early, and I did not have the responsibility that I will once I graduate and get a "real" job. What is the big deal, right? Do I have a problem with working hard? No. Do I think I am "better" than waiting tables? No. Did I work at a horrible, miserable restaurant, with awful people? No, in fact, I really liked the restaurant where I worked and my co-workers were great.

The problem lies in a simple fact. Anyone who has worked in a service-oriented job knows this fact. There are a lot of stupid, annoying, and rude people in this world. And when those people sit at your table, come to your register, stay in your hotel, or golf at your course, they can turn your day around, and head it straight on a crash course towards bad.

Anybody who has ever waited tables has the stories about the outrageous customers. For those of you who have never had the distinct pleasure of being someone's server, I will share some of my better tales. Lets start with the "stupid" people category. My favorite is when people order things like cheeseburgers without cheese. Last time I checked, taking the cheese off a cheeseburger doesn't make it much of a cheeseburger, but I could be mistaken. Another classic was the time that someone ordered a salad without tomatoes, onions, cucumbers, olives, or dressing. I simply said, "So you would like a plate of lettuce?" They said no, "I want a salad." I just smiled and walked away.

However, the award goes to the people who, after hearing all of the kinds of salad dressing and being asked what kind of dressing they would like reply with, "Yes". As tasty as "Yes" dressing might be, I really want to know If they want Italian, ranch or bleu cheese.

The next category of customers is the annoying ones. These are the people who tug on my arm and ask for ketchup when it is sitting right in front of them or the guy who said he can't drink his water unless it has six lemon wedges in it. Not five, not seven, but six slices of lemon. He couldn't fit his straw in his glass, but he got his six pieces of lemon. This same category of people includes those who believe that waving their hands wildly in the air will make me get to their table faster. If I have four other tables, I will get to your table as soon as I can, but you might have to wait. The annoying customers are those people who do not listen as well. I go to their table and ask if anyone wants anything to drink. Everyone says no, so I walk away. Then, as I am leaving, they yell, "Can I have another coke?" I want to say, I would love to get you another Coke, but why didn't you want one two minutes ago?

The rude people, however, are the ones that make me dislike my job. Anyone who works with people has to deal with them. These are the people that you look at and think how can you be so rude? What makes you tick? Didn't your parents teach you anything? I have had people call me brain dead to my face. I have politely approached a table, introduced myself and asked them I could get them anything, and people have turned their heads and completely, blatantly ignore me. I have been a really good waitress to a table, and have been left a 60-cent tip on a $60 check. And, as you may have heard, waitresses only make $2.65 an hour, so when that happens, it hurts right in the wallet. One of the rudest things that happened this summer was when one of my tables asked me how tall I was. I'm 5'10, so I get that question a lot. I don't like it, because my belief is that I wouldn't ask you how much you weigh, or if your breasts are real, so why ask me about my appearance? Anyway, after I answered, two men at another table across the restaurant who had overheard the discussion hollered across the dining room, "No way! You must be at least 6'2 or 6'3". These were not even my customers! The men proceeded to start laughing. At this point, everyone in the restaurant was staring. As Stephanie on Full House used to say, "How rude!"

I lived through it, though. My summer was fine overall. I had a lot of really great customers that made my job more than bearable. I still do not want to waitress year round, but part of that is just because I like to come home from work sometimes not smelling like onions, fish, and steak. I guess, though, that there are many jobs that are a lot harder, so I really should not complain. And besides that, I have a deep, underlying reason for being a waitress, a reason that can keep me going through the dark hours...the money!

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Quiet Guy

BRIAN LOHNES

Verizon has screwed with the wrong guy. Roughly a week before I moved into my off campus apartment, I looked over my choices for phone service. Looking at all my options (read: 1), I decided to call Verizon to set up the phone service at our place. I spoke with a delightfully cheerful woman who went through all my calling options and explained them to me as if she had a degree in phone option selling science.

She talked like a chimpanzee on speed, spewing numbers and service benefits very quickly until she reached the expensive stuff, which she explained in a very hypnotic tone. My parents warned me that they would try to sell me a bunch of stuff I didn't need and wouldn't want to pay for. So after literally eight seconds of consideration, I settled on a calling plan that allows me and my roommates to have a direct line to the White House and the yet-to-be-completed "International Space Station". All this for the low sum of several hundred dollars per month, and for an additional price we can add the service plan.

Next up was settling on the phone number. She gave me three options and apologized for the crappiness of all three. It was at this time that I mentioned she may want to apologize for the price of service rather then the numbers randomly generated by her computer.

"Jeez, I am really sorry about these numbers" should have sounded like, "Jeez I am really sorry that you are paying out your ass every month to use the friggin phone." After I told her that the numbers were acceptable and that she should not throw herself out the office window like she was threatening to do, the saleswoman voice tone reappeared. "Now we need to go over what options you are looking for," she said. I said and I quote, "ringing." I thought that was a witty line, apparently she didn't because I didn't get so much as a giggle out of her.

Then the best part of the whole conversation happened, "Okay, let's set you up an installation date!" "Oh wow the schedule isn't looking too good sir, the earliest we will be out your way is the twelfth of September." I then broke into tears. Well okay, I was a little misty eyed, but not actually crying. I tried everything in my power to have the appointment moved up which included asking once in passing, "Could we have that done sooner?" I was just about to threaten calling the other phone company, but well, THERE ISN'T ONE.

The epilogue to the whole story is that during the second day we moved into this lovely apartment complex, there were Verizon trucks everywhere. My more enterprising roommates called up and really gave the phone company hell for making us wait this long, when several of our neighbors called up and had their phones activated the same day. The best part of it was that they continued saying that there were no trucks in our area, when on the other side of the wall one of their dedicated employees was fixing my next-door neighbors' phone!

So now we are going on over a week of having no phone except two of the guys' cell phones. Having to live without a phone or the Internet, and basically without any outside contact is worse than I could have ever expected. I think I owe one of my roommates' several thousand dollars for cell phone calls made to home or to my girlfriend's place. The other great thing is having to go to your neighbors' house if the other guys aren't home.

Finally when they do get the thing turned on, there will be an army of tele-marketers just waiting to pounce on us so we can switch long distance carriers (because we don't even have long distance now) and sell us tickets for the Australian lottery.

So for now, life is quiet here in this unnamed apartment complex, we remember the simpler times when no one had phones, and we wonder why many more people weren't killed by angry housemates because of it. Safe to say, I have a great respect for the Amish now. Actually forget that, I heard they were jerks anyway. So that's the Verizon horror show, buyer beware. I have to run anyway, I heard they are activating the phone on the space station right before ours.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

A sign of the times

BRIAN SANDBERG

There they are. Everywhere you look. Bush and Gore. The front page of every newspaper. The lead story on all the broadcast news channels. Unfortunately the coverage is more an accounting of the "campaign strategy" than an analysis of who will be the better president and why. The coverage of the campaigns leads us to believe that the entire process is about whom can manipulate public opinion enough to be the most popular, not who can lead a country.

A quick perusal of the day's lead stories makes you think that they are describing some kind of two man survivor show rather then reporting on issues that effect the American people. Let's take a look at the campaign coverage of one of the leading papers in the country, The New York Times. I counted ten articles on the presidential race in the New York Times on September 8th. Of those ten articles only one even attempted to detail an issue that may prove important to our country. The lone article offered a brief detail of the candidates' respective Medicare plans and how people from Baltimore were reacting to these. This is what the other eight articles told me:

-Governor Bush is going to switch his campaign focus on "real people". His campaign has come up with another catch phrase to catalog next to "compassionate conservatism". I applaud the Governor's change in strategy; I don't think that "fake" people have a very high voter turnout.

-The bickering has continued over the debates. Governor Bush felt some public opinion repercussions from offering his own debate schedule and has decided that he could in fact be a little flexible.

-Bush's campaign in Austin and the party chiefs in D.C. are having a power struggle over the direction of their campaign. Mind you that the disagreement is not over how best to serve the American people but rather how best to win the race.

-Vice-President Al Gore is supported and works closely with the rest of Clinton's cabinet. An important observation as far as anticipating what kind of President Gore will be, unfortunately the subject was discussed in the context of strategy for winning the Presidency, not repercussions for the American people.

-The Teamsters, after a long hold out, have decided to endorse the Vice President. Arguably an important note for working folks if the Times had mentioned why they held out and offered an analysis of the labor records of the two candidates. Without that discussion the news becomes another example of the Vice-President securing the party base.

-Senator Lieberman has fit into the historic role as a Vice Presidential candidate by taking the lead in criticizing his opponent. The Times also reported he has gotten into some awkward situations when discussing his religion, he is very courageous for risking political suicide and looking slightly foolish by donning a motorcycle helmet, and that he has on occasion mentioned the Vietnam War.

-There was a fascinating report that Dick Cheney avoided putting on a military helmet out of fear that he would look foolish. Helmets and looking foolish are important issues as we enter the 21st century.

-Mr. Gore has maintained his momentum after the party's convention through Labor Day. One poll has him up by four points or down by four points. The other poll has him up by seven points or down by one point. A covert team of meteorologists has apparently been employed to do the polling.

-The final piece of news was that Mr. Lieberman was campaigning in Texas. Using Governor Bush's home state as a good place to launch criticism. Criticism of what? Perhaps Governor Bush's plan for children's health, perhaps not, we are not sure. He is in Texas and raising money, that much we do know.

This is more than an example of soft journalism. This is a distraction. Instead of focusing on improving our collective quality of life, we are concerned with how likable a candidate is. Is Gore too stiff? Can Bush convince us he is just a regular guy fed up with D.C. shenanigans? We are supposed to believe that these things are important. In recent history we are told that Oval Office improprieties were a national emergency, that Elian is the most important boy in the world, and that it matters to all of us whether O.J. did it or not.

We are being distracted. From O.J., Monica, and Elian, to this example of coverage in the New York Times, we are distracted from attacking issues that affect our lives. I don't care who slept with whom at the White House, nor am I too concerned about what happens to one Cuban boy. I certainly don't care if Lieberman or Cheney looks foolish in a helmet. I do care that 20-25% of our children grow up in poverty.

I do care that 44 million Americans are uninsured. I do care that corporate power is abusing our political system. I do care that violence is destroying our communities. I do want to find a less draconian and more effective crime control policy. I do care that we are the most environmentally destructive nation in the world. I do care that our foreign policy is all too often less concerned with peace keeping than profit keeping. Why don't they care about these things? That isn't news?

As uncomfortable as it makes us, we are to blame. The Constitution places sovereignty in the hands of the people. Nothing can take that away but our own apathy. Not only are all of our leaders ultimately accountable to us but also we are to control national dialog. We should decide what are issues and what is fluff. We are failing.

Let's change the discussion. No longer will we waste our precious time and energy haggling over who might have used cocaine in the past, who is sleeping with whom, or who is most charismatic.

Ignore those well crafted speeches chock full of vague references to democracy, values, leadership, and prosperity. Demand articulated solutions and ignore pompous pandering. No, we will not let our national conversation be a place for soap operas and false advertisements. Not when there is this much work to be done and so many ways to improve our lives.

Brian Sandberg is a UMass student.

Your Opinion
An Avakian Apology

I am sorry that there is no ATM in Southwest this fall. I remember what it was like walking to the Newman Center in the rain, and I am still working on trying to fix the problems we have been having in attempting to have an ATM installed.

First, when we said that an ATM was planned, we weren't B.S.-ing you for votes. I had several conversations with people in the treasurer's office and at that time FleetBank agreed to install an ATM.

Unfortunately the cost estimate came back at an unbelievable $150,000! I have not yet figured out why the estimate came back so high, but I guarantee you I will investigate and try to find a way to lower the cost, or find a suitable alternative location somewhere in Southwest. We got you FSPN & MTV, and we will continue to work towards an ATM for you.

Seth Avakian
Student Trustee

The Collegian is looking for students expressing a wide range of opinions and voices. Anyone interested in writing for Ed-Op should come to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center basement, for a meeting tommorow at 6 PM.

You can reach 17,000 people every day. Write for Ed-Op.

The Watcher promising, but fails to deliver

THE WATCHER
Directed by Joe Charbanic with Keanu Reeves, James Spader and Marissa Tomei Playing at Mountain Farms Four

By Jennifer Chasen
Collegian Correspondent

Being one of those paranoid people who checks the back seat of their car before climbing in, peers through the peep hole in their door and locks every window and potential entrance to their home before curling up into the safety of their bed, I was offered the potential of a sleepless night by the new thriller, The Watcher. However, the predictable end-of-the-summer horror flick was lucky it kept me half-awake long enough to write this review.

Agent Joel Campbell (James Spader) is an apathetic, big-city detective who manages to survive solely on barbiturates and the occasional orange in his fridge. We learn early on that Campbell has a personal vendetta with the elusive serial killer David Allen Griffin (Keanu Reeves) who targets, stalks and attacks young, attractive females. Griffin killed Campbell's married lover in Los Angeles years prior. As a result, the detective moves to the solace of Chicago where he pours his heart out twice a week to his shrink (Marissa Tomei).

It's no surprise that Griffin follows the unemotional, unresponsive Campbell to his apartment in the city and murders his next door neighbor, but not before Fed-Exing the man a picture of his potential victim. Griffin teams up with the Chicago police department to try and catch the killer and for the next 92 minutes of this 93-minute film, an excruciatingly long game of cat and mouse ensues.

The audience is lead to believe that Keanu Reeves is an expert serial killer capable of fooling the FBI with his unyielding wit. However, it was hard to accept that Reeves could do little more than buy a Slurpee at the 7eleven, let alone steal one. As he tries to first charm his victims with his charismatic smile, every female impulse in my body wants to shout "run away" at these unbelievable female characters. While Griffin omits skeevy vibes all over the place, his unexpecting victims smile and bat their eyes, acting as if a total stranger asking to dance with them in the middle of the street is perfectly normal.

The protagonist of the movie, James Spader of Mannequin (yes, that campy 80's flick about a department store dummy that comes to life) fame, is a believable disgruntled, drug-addict cop and makes due with the script he's given. Supporting actor Detective Hollis (Chris Elliot), however, proves to be a highlight of the film and even manages to evoke the occasional snicker.

Joe Charbanic, who wet his chops on the music video, directs the film in the manner of a nightmarish MTV spot and it's no shock that the movie's cinematography looks like some REM video gone wrong. The Watcher is riddled with intermittent flashbacks of the main character that have the substance of a bad afterschool special, and quite frankly, may induce nausea.

The movie even starts off with a James Bond-like opening sequence that doesn't fit the movie's (sour) flavor and the soundtrack sounds as if it were some bizarre amalgam of Edward Scissor Hands and "NYPD Blue."

Even the climatic car chase is lack luster and in the time it takes you to down your king-size Diet Coke, you've practically written the entire movie in your mind's eye. There could have been a little more screen time for Oscar-winner Marisa Tomei. Her part barely surpasses cameo status.

It is advised that any Keanu Reeve's fan stay home. The shady Keanu, decked head-to-toe in black, masters the greasy serial-strangler look, but is not quite his usual "surfer-boy-attractive" self. And the film does have its high points; the infrequent photonegative flashes that prove to be really creepy and Reeves stalking his victims in the darkness a la Christopher Walken fashion.

This weekend's premiere of The Watcher succeeds in strangling any interest you have in the film within the first few minutes and isn't worth the Hollywood hype. It lacks the excitement of Speed and has quite a few more speed bumps. D-

Marisa Tomei plays a psychologist in The Watcher, which unfortunately is not about Dr. Dre.

Punk, metal, emo, rap, jungle, trance, hip-hop, rock, R&B, classical, folk, and experimental Norwegian electronica. The Collegian welcomes writers for all types of music. Come to the all-staff meeting on Thursday September 14 at 6pm and stick around to talk with Mike the music editor.

GREAT
1 Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
2 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
3 A great place to get contact lenses
4 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
5 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
6 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0000
Thurs @ 5:00
Fri @ 4:15
Sat @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT ™
(31 Years of service --and counting!)
Volunteer while earning credit.
A STUDENT COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT-- AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
YOU CAN EARN 1-2 CREDITS
GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE
REWARDING, CHALLENGING, AND FUN
RECRUITMENT NIGHT: You must attend THIS meeting
TONIGHT: Sept. 13 6:30-8:30 PM
Commonwealth Room of Student Union
(Note: Prompt starting time!!!)

confidence, pride,
[grit]
and plenty of time
to shower before calculus.
In Army ROTC, you'll get to do some pretty challenging stuff. Stuff that builds character and discipline. Not to mention muscles. You'll also learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. Talk to your Army ROTC advisor to find out more. And get ready to sweat a little.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Mc Murphy's
Welcomes Back
The Guitar Dudes
Live
Music 10-1 am
Positive ID Required

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

*donkey

*dumpster

*campus police

*Need more time to tell the whole story? Save up to 60% on long distance with priceline.com.

Hey, UMass, why are you paying up to 15¢ per minute when you could be paying just 5¢ per minute? Talk more for less–log on to priceline.com and Name Your Own Price℠ for long distance. It's that simple. Plus, for a limited time, you'll get an extra 60 U.S. minutes FREE when you buy an hour. To get your FREE minutes, enter this special promotional code when you make your offer: LNA001U. Now you can afford to tell all the embarrassing details.

priceline.com long distance

© 2000 priceline.com

Metallica dies by their own obnoxious hand

By Paul Sebert
West Virginia University

(U-WIRE) MORGANTOWN, W.Va. - Does anyone besides me find it rather fitting that the heavy metal parody This is Spinal Tap was released in theaters at the same time that America's premier metal band is making utter fools out of themselves? Has any band done more than Metallica to alienate their fan base in the history of rock music?

The whole Napster issue has turned the music industry upside down, but perhaps no fallout has been more bizarre than Metallica's fall from grace. At the turn of the 21st century, Metallica looked as if it had cemented its place in rock and roll's history. The group had everything: a large fan base, best-selling albums, sold-out tours and most importantly, they've had something that almost none of the bands in their field had - longevity.

Over the years when most of their fellow metal bands disintegrated or disappeared from existence, Metallica survived. But now, after a few short months, those who were once considered to be anti-establishment icons are now thought by many to be less respectable than flavor-of-the-month boy band, N'Sync.

The erosion of the band's fan base started with its lackluster series of CDs released in recent years, the best of which was S&M, an album whose sole artistic statement seems to be "Hey, we've got enough money to hire our own orchestra." But while albums such as Load proved lacking, even casual fans had the feeling that this was just a phase. They just knew in their heart that they were going to bounce back. The band seemed to have a sort of timelessness shared only by a few select groups such as The Rolling Stones and The Grateful Dead.

But alas, the probability of the band returning to its roots now seems more and more unlikely, largely due to the band's lawsuit against the Napster corporation and drummer Lars Ulrich's endless pandering to the mainstream media on the issue.

The filing of the group's rather publicly known lawsuit displays an uncanny combination of arrogance and a complete misunderstanding of the values shared by the group's fan base and the American public.

The lawsuit was destined to alienate the group's listeners because people like to root for the underdog. Most people find it hard to sympathize with a group of millionaire music icons when they're antagonizing a company started by a 19-year-old kid in his basement.

Needless to say, their position isn't as accessible to fans as say, for instance, when Pearl Jam chose to challenge the monopolistic corporation Ticketmaster. To many people, Napster's founder, Shawn Fanning, had come to embody the American dream. He had used his ingenuity to build a better mousetrap, and the world has beaten a path to his door.

Furthermore, what the band forgot to take into account was how little respect many people have for intellectual property laws. The mention of these laws brings to mind a growing number of absurd lawsuits that have been wasting the time of our court system, like the time the producer of the movie Screamers sued New Line over the title of Scream. How about MasterCard's recent legal action against Ralph Nader regarding his campaign ads which use the word "priceless?" Or Warner Brothers issuing "cease and desist" orders to cartoon fan web sites?

In short, a lot of people have simply come to the conclusion that current copyright laws have become too inclusive and are little more than tools for corporations to squeeze cash out of the hands of potential customers.

If issuing the law-suit was seen as a slap in the face by many fans, Lars Ulrich's appearances in the media certainly didn't help matters. For months, Ulrich would publicly appear in any media outlet that would let him speak his mind and badmouth Napster and its users.

These appearances did nothing but cement into the public's mind the image that Metallica had sold out; that the band that was once treated as godly was now viewed rightfully as corporate tools and subject to scathing satires, such as the popular "Napster Bad" series of cartoons.

Perhaps the group should have learned its lesson from other musicians with issues against the MP3 trading service, such as Dr. Dre who simply issued a few press releases and filed legal action).

Last week, one couldn't help but get the feeling that the group had hit rock bottom. Ulrich appeared on the MTV Video Music Awards in a sketch with the Wayans Brothers in an attempt to make fun of Napster.

He also attempted to improve his public image and prove he's not a bad sport despite having, oh say, 300,000 plus Napster users kicked off of the service. However, his failed, mean-spirited comedy segment was viewed by the live audience as little more than another slap in the face, and the Metallica drummer was jeered before a viewing audience of millions.

Looking at the public's current perception of Metallica, one can't help but wonder what if, in the end, the lawsuit succeeds, and Napster and all of its MP3-trading kin are shut down. Who then will the group have to blame when no one buys their next big album or attends their next tour?

Chastain set to go for gold once again with U.S. National Team

By Mike Penner
Los Angeles Times

SYDNEY, Australia - For Brandi Chastain, American icon in Australia, the Olympic women's soccer tournament represents a welcome change in the conversation.

For the next two weeks, she can discuss playing soccer Down Under, after having spent the previous year talking about what a soccer player does under.

For the record, for the 15,347th time, it was a sports bra. Chastain reminds. A jog bra. A workout bra. No satin. No lace. Something you're more likely to see in the pages of Runner's World than a Victoria's Secret catalog.

Shortly after winning the 1999 Women's World Cup with her climactic penalty kick and off-with-the-top celebration, Chastain was riding in a cab through New York's Central Park en route to a meeting with her agent.

"In Central Park, people work out in all different varieties of attire," Chastain says. "I saw a woman jogging in her jog bra and so when I got to my agent I said, 'Oh my God, John, you must call the press. There's a woman jogging in Central Park in her jog bra. It must make front page.'"

Chastain laughs at her own joke.

"I mean, what's the big deal?" she says. "People have been doing it for a long time."

America, however, reacted as if Chastain had posed nude in a national magazine. Which, in fact, she had, weeks before the World Cup, wearing nothing but her soccer boots while strategically cradling a soccer ball.

That provocative photograph caused barely a ripple. But the shot of Chastain in a moment of unadulterated jubilation, on her knees and waving her jersey above her head in the time-honored soccer tradition, became the U.S. sports photo of 1999, splashed across the covers of news magazines, replayed on television again and again, even spawning national debate over whether Chastain's jersey-tug was proper for public display.

At last year's Junior Miss America pageant, contestants were asked if Chastain had set a negative example for young girls with her goal celebration.

"Ooh," Chastain says, wincing, "that was a tough one."

"And I met one of those girls after. You know, they have to answer the questions politically correct. I mean, they don't answer the questions how they truly feel. I think they answer the question that could win them the title. Whether that's right or wrong, I'm not here to judge on that. So that was kind of odd.

"And then I did finally meet her and she didn't know it was me. I was on some Fox interview show or something and we start talking about the soccer and I said, 'How about that question?' And she made a comment and I said, 'That was me.' And she was, like, 'Ooh. That was you?'

"I said, 'Don't worry, I don't care what your comment was. I know you're answering for the judges.' It was a very loaded question. I think her response was something like 'I wouldn't have done it, I don't think it's appropriate.' All the right things that she should have said for that time."

Still, Chastain delights in the fact that one of her U.S. national teammates, Tisha Venturini, was one of the pageant judges.

"Tisha was a judge on that, so (the contestants) probably got marked down," Chastain says with a mischievous grin. "So it backfired on her, didn't it?"

The commotion, in large part, was simply the result of mainstream America's unfamiliarity with international soccer. Basketball players don't regularly rip off their shirts after scoring important baskets – Dennis Rodman was the exception – but you virtually can't watch a European or Latin American soccer match without seeing a frenzied goal-scorer ace the shirt as he performs the lambada with the corner flag.

"Which ones haven't done it?" Chastain says. "I think a lot them do it. I think you see a lot of guys pull up their shirts up with political slogans (on undershirts) on their chest."

Or even go further than that. Earlier this year, a male Iranian player was fined $1,200 and suspended for six months for celebrating a goal by taking off his jersey ... and pulling down his shorts.

"Somebody sent me an e-mail about that and said, 'Brandi, I don't think you need to go this far,'" Chastain says with a laugh. "Don't worry, I w o n ' t ."

Chastain even caught flak from some media critics for conspiring with her sponsor, Nike, to turn her goal celebration into a free advertisement in front of millions of television viewers, for Nike sports bras.

Well, of course Chastain and Nike obviously knew that China and the United States would play 120 minutes of scoreless soccer in the World Cup final and the match would go to penalty kicks and U.S. keeper Brianna Scurry would save one and the winning kick would come down to the Americans' fifth and final penalty taker and that player would be Chastain. Of course.

"I think people who are uneducated about the situation still bring it up," Chastain says. "But that has basically gone away."

But talk about being at the right place at the right time with the right left foot.

■ football

continued from page 10

surprised a lot of people. They played well enough to win, and on that day didn't deserve their name in the box column.

Head coach Bob Davie did an outstanding job of coaching in the game, up until one minute left in the fourth quarter. With a little over a minute left from the 30-yard line with two timeouts to their disposal, you can't play for overtime in that situation. Against the No. 1 team in the nation, you have to be aggressive, not passive.

In that situation, Davis played not to lose instead of playing to win. Through all the good things that the Irish did, the result was still a loss, one that stings considering that they lost quarterback Arnez Battle to a broken left wrist, and that their next three games are against Purdue, Michigan State and Stanford. Although the Irish have put themselves in the right direction in their quest to climb back to the top of the college football mountain, the Nebraska game showed them that they are not all the way back, not yet.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports. We like balls.

haircuts★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
perms★ tanning★facial waxing

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116
So. Amherst
256-0080

Atlantis
DJs SPINNING VINYL 7 NIGHTS A WEEK
FRI 9/8 GROWROOM RECORDS "HOUSE ON THE ROCKS" W/SIMI, BON BONS, HUSH & SALTY $2 COVER
SAT 9/9 HIP HOP, R&B, AND REGGAE W/ DJ TRENDZ (DRUNK MONKS) NO HATS, SPORTS JERSEYS, BOOTS "DRESS TO IMPRESS" $2 COVER
SUN 9/10 REGGAE W/ SELECTOR C AND DJ U. NO COVER
MON 9/11 B-SKI'S BINS UNDERGROUND HIP HOP AND SOUL No COVER
TUE 9/12 INTELLIGENT DRUM N' BASS W/DJ BEN TAYLOR NO COVER
WED 9/13 CAESAR (DIGITAL DOMAIN, NYC) JUNGLE/ DRUM N' BASS $2 COVER
THU 9/14 HIP HOP W/ DJ SEMANTIK $2 COVER
41 BOLTWOOD WALK, AMHERST
21+ POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

All New. All Yours. All Free.
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
free T shirt
MadAdz.com
No Brainer.
$500 cash
MadAdz.com hooked me up.

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?
The TIAA-CREF Advantage.
Call us for a free information package
Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF. And for good reasons:
• Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
• A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
• A strong commitment to low expenses
• Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options
For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.
Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader. TIAA-CREF.
THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance
TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™
1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc., distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and [illegible] 545-[illegible] Learn [illegible]

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst [illegible] and returning [illegible] to the [illegible] Night. Sat. [illegible] Brunch @ [illegible] 549-1666 for [illegible]

Participants Needed [illegible] Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sessions offered Race and Ethnicity Dialogue, Men and Women Dialogue Oct 6 & 9-18-2000 at 159 Hills South To receive information call Arlene, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments. [illegible] HEAT/HOT WATER, [illegible] kitchen, [illegible] bath [illegible] Sunshine. Call 665-3856

AUTO FOR SALE

1981 Mazda 626 loaded [illegible] coupe $750 and 1994 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

1989 Dodge Colt Wagon [illegible] runs fine. $800 549-[illegible]

1990 Subaru Legacy Wagon. Original owner New engine 90,000k asking $1800 548-9283

96 Mercury Station Wagon [illegible] condition 117k [illegible] $2000 [illegible] 413-367-2938

CHILDCARE

Parents Helper 2 great children. Mix of after-school, evenings & weekends. 4-15hr/week. 549-5448

Handicap Child 10-35hrs per week $9.50 Housework, car references experience. 413-247-5800

COMPUTERS

Scanner for Mac HPscanjet 11c $50 or bo 253-9140

Laptop P-166, 1.4GB, 64MB, 28.8KB, Win95. $400 o/b/o 256-4150

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT
Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland
This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays
Sugarloaf Estates
665-3856

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Biosheltters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 for Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable
20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514
paul_bebo@abtassoc.com
Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABDUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM
Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping the Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome
If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.
BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant Wanted Car a plus. 8:00am - 11pm - pm hours vary. Many shifts available. Call Martina 413-323-9633 or 413-323-7802

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

TUTORS/TRANSLATERS
Bilingual/for par-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Amharic, Chinese, Japanese, Khmer, Korean, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish and Vietnamese. Call ESL Office at 413-549-9857 Amherst Public Schools
An Affirmative Action/ Equal Opportunity Employer

Personal Care Attendent for male quad evenings and weekend $9.50 per hour. Call 546-0666

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle. $7-14/hr. 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Make Money & Do Good Stuff Earn good money while saving the earth. Flexible hours, paid training, students welcome. ($7.30 - $9.00/hr) Call Clean Water Action 413-584-9830

Paid Internship Seeking creative & responsible students to work for an e-commerce company on campus 30hrs/semester. Call 256-4560

Handyman Landscaper, House cleaning 6-9hr/wk $7.50-8 depending on experience. Car essential 549-1578

Get Credit, Vacation time and other training/employment opportunities. Community Activities with an MR woman. Get paid $8.90 to 9.50/hr DOE Contact Ellen 585-5133

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, gradeschool, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. Great Gymnastics Center with loose foam & Resi Pit System. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 413-773-3646

Baker
Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted
Minimum 20hrs per week Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

EMPLOYMENT

Recreation Leader - After School Program
The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in Elementary Education preferred. $7.66/hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resource Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Basniak @ 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

Put up posters at UMass every Weds. 2-3 hrs. Car, references. $20 a week. 259-1227

Get paid to play! Pelham after-school hiring counselors. 1-5 afternoons. $7.00 an hr. Lenny 253-5944

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply with-in After 5:00pm 586-2774

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558 is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

DP DOUGH

FOR SALE

www.affordablelaptops.com 800-864-2345

FURNITURE

Matching couch, coffee table, lamp, excellent condition $100 or B/O 549-0432

INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher
Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

LOST & FOUND

Lost: Black beaded Bracalet Friday 9/8/00 between Campus Center and the Library. If found please call 546-7467

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Cozy Quite 1.5miles to UMass. Laundry, parking, vegetarian, kosher kitchen. Non-smoking $350 per month 549-4853

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roomate needed to share two BR apt ASAP $200/mo on bus route 256-3772

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Stereo Equipment used, reconditioned, warranteed. Separate components, from basic to audiophile. Big selection great prices. Buy sell or trade. PA Gear, guitar amps. Also AV exchange. 253-5312

TRAVEL

SPRINGBREAK 2001
Hiring On-Campus Reps
SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!!
Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849
www.gospringbreak.com

SPRING BREAK 2001
Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free!
Student Travel Services America
1-800-426-7710

WANTED

WANTED!!
30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 30LBS IN 30 DAYS
FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO MassMuscles.com

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	FBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govt to Govt
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Sı
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 8, 2000

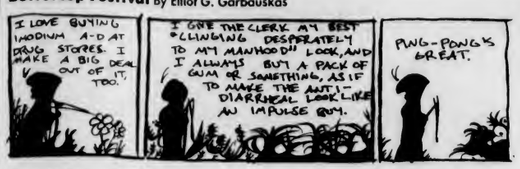
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Journal		The Grand (In Stereo)		Ayers Rock: Naked Planet
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Candid C.	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Candid C.	JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)	Making-Bend	Making-Bend		20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Baby Blues	PJs (In Stereo)	Popular "We Are Family"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Major League Baseball: New York Yankees at Boston Red Sox. (Live)						News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Teen Choice Awards (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Paradise Inn"		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Boy Meets World (In Stereo)	Making-Band	Making-Band		20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	The Strip "We Will Rock You"		Secret Agent Man (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Montreal Expos at Atlanta Braves. (Live)							★★½ "It Could Happen to You" (1994)
A&E	10	L.A. Law		Law & Order: "Savior"		Biography: McDowall		Poirot "Problem at Sea"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Blood Libel"
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)	Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live
DISC	23	Your New House		Wild Discovery "Ocean Pari"		On the Inside "K-9 Teams" (N)		Science-Summer Olympics		Storm Warning!		On the Inside "K-9 Teams"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	32	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Double Jeopardy" (1996, Drama) Joe Penny, Tori Garr				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	33	(5:30) To Be Announced			TRL (In Stereo)			Best of Say What? Karaoke		NSYNC's Dedications		Fashionably	Dream Date
NICK	35	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	U Pick Nicktoons (In Stereo)		Facts of Life		Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	35	Sliders "Eggheads" (In Stereo)		Quantum Leap (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Reunion" (N)		Farscape "The Ugly Truth"		Lexx: The Series "Gamelown"		Invisible Man "Reunion"
TLC	27	Home Again	Home Again	48 Hours "Nowhere to Hide"		Dangerous Pursuits		Death Defying Stunts		Motorcycles – Born to Be Wild		Dangerous Pursuits
TNT	26	ER "John Carter, M.D."		Pretender "Curious Jarod"		★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman						★★ "Fallen" (1997)
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Jinx" (In Stereo)		★★ "Seven Years in Tibet" (1997, Drama) Brad Pitt, David Thewlis. (In Stereo)				Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	53	5.15) "Three Men and a Baby"		Inside the NFL		★★ "Lethal Weapon 4" (1998, Action) Mel Gibson. "R"				★½ "Devil in the Flesh" (1997, Suspense) Rose McGowan. "R"
MAX	24	(5:45) ★★½ "Wolf" (1994, Horror) Jack Nicholson. "R"				★½ "Milk Money" (1994, Comedy) Melanie Griffith. "PG-13"				★★½ "The Thirteenth Floor" (1999, Drama) Craig Bierko,		Pleasure Zone
SHOW	25	★★ "Sliding Doors" (1998, Comedy) Gwyneth Paltrow. "R"				★★★ "The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan. "R"				Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "The Final Appeal"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



I LOVE BUYING IMODIUM A-D AT DRUG STORES. I MAKE A BIG PROFIT OUT OF IT, TOO.
I GIVE THE CLERK MY BELT "CLINGING DESPERATELY TO MY MANHOOD" LOOK, AND I ALWAYS BUY A PACK OF GUM OR SOMETHING, AS IF TO MAKE THE ANTI-DIARRHEAL LOOK LIKE AN IMPULSE BUY.
PING-PONG'S GREAT.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Okay, class... my office hours are every third Tuesday, from 2:37 to 2:41 pm...
My office is in Morrill 2C, Sub-basement 3, annex 'f', room 316d.
If you can find me, you get an 'A.'

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

BOXBOUR ANY COMMENT ON THE MILLION MOM MARCH?
WELL, I LIKE GUNS. I HAVE ONE MYSELF.
AND LET ME TELL YA SOMETHING—WHEN A BUNCH OF MOMS GET RILED UP LOOK OUT! HOLD ON TO YOUR HAT!
I THINK IT'S GREAT THAT SO MANY OF THEM ALREADY OUT THERE MARCHING AGAINST... UM... WHAT WERE THEY MARCHING AGAINST?
GUN VIOLENCE.
WELL, WHAT EVER—IT'S FABULOUS EXERCISE!

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Dilbert By Scott Adams

CEO AS SPOKESPERSON
SHOULDN'T I HOLD UP OUR PRODUCT INSTEAD OF LEANING ON A CHAIR?
NO!
THAT HELPED YOUR HAIR BUT YOU'RE STILL DRESSED LIKE A NUN
www.dilbert.com

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I'LL HAVE A CAN OF TUNA
THIS IS A CHINESE RESTAURANT, BUCK.
MA AM WHAT IS THIS ONE?
THAT'S THE FAMILY PLATTER.
I'LL EAT CHINESE TUNA I'M NO RACIST
SORRY ABOUT THIS WE DON'T GET OUT MUCH.
AHH THAT'S BACK FROM A WHOLE FAMILY?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I DON'T WANT CHEWY BUNS #00 - OR WHATEVER. I WANT TUNA.
BUCKY, YOU CHOSE THIS PLACE! NOW WHEN THE WAITRESS COMES BACK, I WANT YOU TO KNOW WHAT YOU WANT.
HM
I KEEP SAYIN' - I WANT TUNA.
YOU HAVE TO PICK SOMETHING OFF THE MENU.
GUYS, LOOK! WHO AM I? I WANT TUNA! I WANT TUNA!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

AS A TRIBUTE TO CHARLES M. SCHULZ, I'VE MADE A SCALE REPLICA OF SNOOPY'S DOG-HOUSE.
AND NOW, ROBOTBOY WILL DEMONSTRATE A DRAMATIC BAD BREAK, FOOT-GUY!
C'MON, ROBOTBOY, SMASH IT!
SMASH!
FOOT-GUY!
BAD BREAK
FOOT-GUY, I'M SORRY, BUT YOU'RE JUST NOT CUT OUT FOR THIS KIND OF WORK.
FOOT-GUY, I'M SORRY, BUT YOU'RE JUST NOT CUT OUT FOR THIS KIND OF WORK.

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 5
SYNCHRONIZED STEALING
NICE... THEY ENTERED THE KITCHEN TOGETHER.
DOOD...AND THE REFRIGERATOR OPENS AND ONE HITS THE SODAS WHILE THE OTHER ONE HITS THE CHEEZ WHIZ...
THEY HOP THE SPINNING LAZY SUSAN AND...
...NICE DISMOUNT!!!
ALL TO THE THEME FROM "DADDY'S HACK."
www.hedgeweb.com

Horoscopes

Gemini (may 21-June 20) - Your memory may be hazy regarding certain key events in your past, but a friend sheds some light on a few pivotal episodes.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) - A personal investigation on your part may lead to a dead end for now. Before the day is out, you'll want to rethink your methods.

Leo (July 23-August 22) - You can stay ahead of the competition today by watching the clock, and using the time available. Don't hesitate!

Virgo (August 23-Sept.22) - Something planned with a loved one today may have to be a solo endeavor when all is said and done, courtesy of an unexpected turn of events.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - You are likely to discover something quite surprising about yourself before the day is out, but a secret remains intact.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Take care that you don't drive yourself so hard that others begin to accuse you of being "obsessed" with your work. Relax and put your feet up!

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec.2) - You may actually have the chance to relive a past experience today, and do things just a bit differently. Maximize your enjoyment!

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Someone may be trying to take advantag of you in some way today. You must be careful to avoid being put in a position of vulnerability.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Expect the unexpected today. Be prepared to address those topics that you never thought would arise openly.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - The more you risk today, the more your potential rewards - but it is absolutely essential that your preparations are thorough and complete.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - The new and the untried are not for you today. You're more interested in reliable things.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - You may be dissappointed by an experiment. Never fear, however; lessons learned as a result of will keep you from making the same mistake again.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 76 LOW: 52	HIGH: 70 LOW: 51	HIGH: 66 LOW: 54

Quote of the Day

"It makes me think of Tupperware."

–Sarah Hammond, on the phrase "she's saving herself for marriage"

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Bagel Pizza

Chicken Rotini Casserole

Vegetarian Pella (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcester)

DINNER

Beef Forestier

Wild Mushroom Strudel with Spinach

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Berry Berry Smoothies

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Jarett Barr
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Sharon Panelo, Kara Stokes

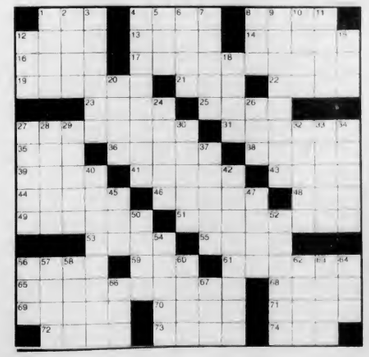
WHAT'S BLACK & WHITE & COSTS $2 FIND OUT SATURDAY
The HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

ACROSS
1 Arizone river
5 Scarlett's estate
9 Rebuke
14 Pitcher Hershiser
15 Easy as falling off —
16 Jazzman Blake
17 Loud noise
18 Boxer's knockout punch
19 From Cambodia
20 Number
22 Some outlows
24 Airship
26 Taro food
27 Prison supervisor
30 Steepke stete
35 Opera highlights
36 Be gage over
37 Hockey's Ullman
38 Short-legged horse
39 Landscape
42 Honey maker
43 ISU location
45 Elevator maker
46 SkyDome, e.g.
48 Charger
50 Loud sleeper
51 Luau instrument
52 Bags
54 Bonding materials
58 Hobby
62 Friendship
63 Eye shadow
65 Make muddy
66 Move in a coy way
67 Singer Adams
68 Rocky Mountain people
69 Spirited horse
70 Marries
71 Thick hair

DOWN
1 Mongolian desert
2 Turkey's neighbor
3 Spring period
4 Math course
5 Absorb
6 Siren
7 Cowboy Rogers
8 All excited
9 Fall or spring
10 Pad
11 Drame award
12 Fish-story teller
13 Lairs
21 Sheen
23 Shoe part
25 Fakes
27 Parrot
28 Bakery lure
29 Rome's river
31 Designer Si Laurent
32 Like a judge?
33 Cera or Dunne
34 Smudge
36 Permits
40 Kitchen utensil
41 Pulls hard
44 NASA vehicle
47 Speaker's platform
49 Approved
50 Tip the — offset the balance
53 Plant parasite
54 Bulk
55 Exclude
56 Go by bus
57 Twist
59 Pinch
60 Bearing
61 Word of choice
64 Celebratory poem

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

9-8-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, September 13, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegiansports@yahoo.com

UMass, UConn set to square off

Minutewomen travel to Storrs for important regional contest with Huskies

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Motivation should not be a problem for the Massachusetts and Connecticut women's soccer teams when the two clubs meet tonight at 7 p.m. at Joseph J. Morrone Stadium in Storrs, Conn.

The Huskies, the No. 8 ranked team in the nation, lost to No. 2 Santa Clara and No. 10 Stanford over the weekend to drop to 1-2-1 on the season. However, tonight's game against the Minutewomen will be the first ever contest under the newly installed permanent lights at Morrone Stadium.

"We need to regroup, even though we did play well in the two games [losses]," UConn women's soccer coach Len Tsantiris said. "We have to get ready for UMass, especially with it being a big rivalry and all that."

"I think that this will be more of a game for the spectators," added Tsantiris. "We have played at night before at home. We had portable lights a few years ago, but this will be the first game with the new lights."

UMass, on the other hand, comes into the meeting with their border rivals riding the momentum of a 6-0 win over Long Island University on Sunday afternoon. However, the Minutewomen have not defeated UConn since 1995.

But despite the fact that recent history is not on its side, UMass seems confident that the streak won't reach lucky No. 7 for the Huskies.

"A couple of us played with some of the UConn girls over the summer, and they don't seem any better than we are," said UMass junior forward Anna Motozuk, who is coming off a four-point outing against LIU. "We know what they have, and hopefully they don't know what we have. We're ready for them."

Said UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy: "When you play UConn, everything gets thrown out the window. This is the game and we better be ready for it. It's very important for regional bragging rights, and every year you know that you are playing a quality opponent who is going to be in the NCAA tournament."

Considered to be one of the top rivalries in collegiate women's soccer, the Minutewomen (3-2) and Huskies have had their share of epic battles through the years. Last season, the two clubs went to double-overtime before UConn squeezed out a 4-3 goal on a fluke goal by Lacey Toups. UMass rallied from deficits of 2-1 and 3-2 in the second half, only to come up one goal short in the end. In that game, senior Emma Kurowski netted the equalizer on both occasions to move atop the UMass career-scoring chart in both goals and points.

Needless to say, thoughts of last year's contest should also provide some extra motivation for the Maroon and White.

"I don't know, it might motivate the team," Rudy said. "We played a great game last year. We could have won it just as easily. But by now I've been in so many of these games that one of these teams is an underdog and the other is an overdog, and we're both just dogs who are scraping for the bone – and that's a win."

UMass has relied on a balanced scoring attack through its first five games. Junior Brooke Bartlett [two goals, four assists] and freshman Erin Lilly [four goals] lead the club in scoring with eight points, while Kara Cocca [three goals, one assist] is second on the squad with seven points. Juniors Kat Machamer, Kara Green and Motozuk have also chipped in six points apiece.

The Huskies will look to junior forward Mary-Frances Monroe and sophomore transfer Mary Beth Bowie to provide scoring punch. Monroe is a two-time All-American, while Bowie has had a huge impact up front since joining the Huskies. Bowie was a member of the Canadian National Team prior to coming to Storrs.

"She is a very good player who fits well into our group," said Tsantiris of Bowie. "She is good at creating opportunities and finishing."

In addition to the above duo, UConn returns all but one player from last year's club that finished 17-8.

"They're loaded, a team that is 17, 18 players deep," Rudy said. "They've got a hell of a squad. Right now we're a little beat up, particularly in the defense, but we're going to be ready."

Minutewomen Notes: Tonight's game will be tracked via webcast at http://advancedsoccer.com...The contest will be the 34th all-time meeting between the two schools, with UConn holding a 17-13-3 advantage...Lilly was named the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week last week for her three goal effort against Albany on Sept. 2...Motozuk's four points on Sunday surpassed her career point total. She had three career points entering the game with LIU...Bartlett was named to the United States National 'B' Team Pool earlier this month. The Clifton Park, NY native is off to a great start and seems to be on her way to setting a new personal single-season points mark this year...Green moved into a tie for second place on the all-time career scoring list with her goal on second. She is now tied with Rebecca Myers with 101 career points. The senior still needs 24 more points this year to break the record held by Emma Kurowski...The Minutewomen now begin a stretch of six straight games on the road. After tonight's game, UMass will play at Rhode Island, Arizona State, San Diego State (at ASU), Duquesne and St. Bonaventure. The next home game is October 6 against St. Joseph's.

PHOTO BY DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Juniors Brooke Bartlett (left) and Sarah Cook (center), along with senior Kara Green (right) will look to guide the Massachusetts women's soccer team to a win over regional rival UConn tonight. The Minutewomen have not defeated the Huskies since 1993.

MLS playoffs kick off

Gaffney on the opening round

CHRIS GAFFNEY ON MAJOR LEAGUE SOCCER

As the Major League soccer season enters the post-season, I have decided to take a crack at my picks for the first round of the playoffs. It has been a wild regular season, so now let's see what happens in the second season.

The matchups:

No. 1 Kansas City vs. No. 8 Colorado

Kansas City will gently caress Colorado in the first round of the playoffs and will have home field advantage throughout. But it's not like this is an advantage in the cavernous Arrowhead Stadium where the average crowd looks more like a queue at the local emergency clinic than a chorus of support for the best side in the league.

Kansas City, coached by the Jimmy Carter of United States soccer Bob Gansler, has the most organized defense in the league. And, as long as New York lets failure Tom Meola continues to stink to soccer KC will be difficult to score on.

It will also need to have aging former Europeans Mikko Mahtar, Mo Johnson and Preki in form to reach the final. Colorado won't be able to put up much resistance and might actually be aggrieved that their pathetic season was extended for another two games.

No. 2 Chicago vs. No. 7 New England

New England had a vibrant 4-3 win against New York/New Jersey on the weekend, but they may have scored their last goals for the year. Chicago is one of the elite teams in the MLS and has a hardedged professionalism about them.

It also doesn't hurt to have several players with World Cup experience as well as strikers Josh Wolff and Anton Razon. Hristo Stoichkov is one of the best players ever to set foot on American soil, and when paired with Lukas Lubicki and "Checkbox Hustle" Novak in the midfield, the team is free to distribute penetrating passes.

Add keeper Zach Thornton to the mix and there will be at least three hours remaining in New England's season. While it has some quality in Mauricio Wright, Wolde Harris and Leonel Alvarez, smoke and mirrors will not be enough to see them through.

Look for plenty of lotts, Rusty Pierce getting sent off and Chicago moving on to the semi-finals in two games.

No. 3 NY/NJ vs. No. 6 Dallas

How Dallas ever made the playoffs this year is a mystery. Along with Colorado, they are like the stupid students in class who are given a passing grade just so the teacher won't have to deal with them again the next year.

With no midfield to speak of and the comical asseverations of Ted Eck, class frontrunners Kreis and Graziani were left without service and the anonymous defense without help. It won't help Dallas that the league has given the Metrostars tons of players.

The league needs a successful team in New York, however, and even if Dallas had a possibility of beating the Metrostars, which they don't, the league would probably tell them to lie down and get some cheap cigars. Metrostars in three, just to boost the TV ratings.

No. 4 Tampa Bay vs. No. 5 Los Angeles

This is by far the most complex and entertaining of the quarterfinal matchups. Both teams are attacking minded, and both run through dynamic central midfielders who will directly oppose each other.

Los Angeles will look towards the Salvadoran, Cienfuegos, for offensive punch. He will duel with Tampa Bay's Valderrama for the role of top gun.

But how well the defensive central midfielders deal with these two will be critical to this series. For Tampa Bay, forward Mamadu Diallo's temperament and maturity will be called into question as he faces Paul Caligiuri.

Up front for L.A. is Mexican icon Luis Hernandez who will have to contend with strict marking. LA will surely miss midfielder Sasha Victorine, who is on duty for the U.S. in Sydney.

Although it seems impossible to say for such a large entity, the Galaxy have underachieved this year and really do suffer from an embarrassment of riches. If they can manage to show up on time to the game, they should take the series in three.

Chris Gaffney is a Collegian correspondent.

Pac-10 conference garners respect with series of early top 25 upsets

DAVID ROSE ON COLLEGE FOOTBALL

The college football season is entering its fourth week, and the rest of the nation needs to take notice – the boys out west are coming back strong.

The Pac-10 conference has done more in three weeks than it had in the past two years with wins over three perennial college football powerhouses.

It started with the University of Southern California's domination of Penn State in the Kickoff Classic. USC had been defeated by the Nittany Lions 41-7 the year before, and were looking for some measure of revenge. A 29-5 win did the trick, as the Trojans held the Lions' offense to a grand total of six yards rushing on 22 attempts.

In my opinion, Penn State's offense was worse than the Backstreet Boys, N' Sync and 98 Degrees combined and sang about as bad as they do, too.

Led by Sultan McCullough's 128 yards rushing, the Trojans got off to a flying start. The Trojans then continued their winning ways last week as they defeated Colorado 17-14 on a field goal in the final minute. After the pounding of Penn State, it was another Pac-10 team to step up and knock off a big dog.

It was USC's longtime rival UCLA who turned the upset trick next. They were as unknown as any team in the nation going into their showdown against No. 3 Alabama. The game was in Pasadena so the question going into the game was whether the cross-country trek to California would eventually get to the Crimson Tide. The answer was yes, and a physical Bruin attack didn't help matters, either.

Physical? The last time I said the word physical about anything in California had to do with plastic surgeries and breast implants. That was until UCLA out muscled 'Bama 35-24.

It wasn't the air attack that won the game for the Bruins, rather a slam it down your throat running game that did in the boys from the south. DeShaun Foster went wild, running for 187 yards and four touchdowns as the UCLA offensive line pretty much told the Alabama defense, "Son, you don't have to go home, but you have to get up out of here."

The defense put on the finishing touches as they held a high powered Alabama offense to just 265 yards in total offense, causing three turnovers and holding them scoreless for the final quarter and a half. That game showed that after a year of looking like crap, the Pac-10 is again for real.

Apparently, the University of Miami did not heed the warning signs.

Doesn't this sound familiar? A team from the east going across the country to play an underdog team from the Pac-10. It happened to Alabama the week before it happened to Miami.

The Washington Huskies did a number on the Hurricanes and all they had to do was one thing – show up.

They jumped on the Hurricanes early as quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo threw for one touchdown and scored another in the first half against, well nobody. Miami was still in the McNeese St. mode, which meant they were still in Miami waiting for US Airlines to get them to Husky Stadium.

The Huskies went up 21-3 at halftime as the plane from Miami finally arrived to make a game of it. Quarterback Ken Dorsey hit Reggie Wayne for one scored, then running backs Najeh Davenport and James Jackson both scored from eight yards out to make it 27-22. However, it was not enough as the Husky defense stiffened up and shut down the Hurricanes enough to pull out the win.

Three weeks, three upsets for Pac 10 teams. The trend could continue this weekend as UCLA hosts No. 3 Michigan at the Rose Bowl. It isn't the Rose Bowl, although this could be a preview of it. Another scary game for a top five team as the only two teams the Wolverines have played so far are a food and a JV squad.

Although John Navarre has seven touchdowns and no interceptions in two games, he has not had any stiff competition against him. Things will get a little tougher this weekend in the searing heat of the California sun. If the Bruins win this one, then the Pac-10 goes from bottom of the barrel last season, to the top of the mountain in 2000.

Nebraska's overtime win over Notre Dame could have been the best thing to happen for both teams. For the Cornhuskers, it showed them that they are not as invincible as everybody thinks they are, and will now be a more dangerous team because of it. But the game also showed the heart of that team. They were in a hostile environment, especially after blowing a 21-7 lead in the third quarter.

Instead of folding, their defense got tougher and played well enough for Eric Crouch to get one more crack at the Fighting Irish defense in the overtime. His third touchdown of the game ended proceedings and left Notre Dame heartbroken.

As for the Irish, they proved that they could play with the big boys and hold their own. The heart that they displayed coming back from the 14-point deficit in the third quarter

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

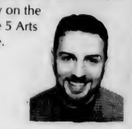
The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 7 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, September 14, 2000



Check out WMUA's general manager Dan Barowy and the rest of the WMUA crew on the page 5 Arts page.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts women's soccer team gave up and early goal and was unable to recover in a loss to rival UConn last night.

SPORTS p. 10

Central election questioned

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

The legitimacy of Van Meter's House Council has recently been called into question. Ken Campbell, Central Area Governor, said his first priority this year is to straighten out this matter.

While House Council elections are usually held in the fall, Van Meter decided to run their own elections last spring.

Campbell called the timing of the elections "sketchy." Not only was the timing unusual, but the fact that Van Meter was the only residential area in Central to hold elections during the spring caused some to raise their eyebrows.

After Central Area and several House governments got off to a slow start last fall, Van Meter residents were eager to "hold elections [in the spring] so they could be in power [come] the fall," said Juliette Okafor, Central Area Governor from last year.

When residents from Van Meter asked Okafora few days after Central Week last spring if they could hold elections before the end of the semester, however, she said she was reluctant to allow it.

Van Meter residents told Okafor, however, that they "would hold elections anyway."

Okafor assigned Trevor Tomasino, then Central Area Treasurer, to supervise the election process.

Tomasino spoke at that time with Shiela Tunney, Secretary of Administrative Affairs for the Student Government Association (SGA). Tomasino said Tunney assured him that there was nothing unconstitutional about the spring elections. Tunnes could not be reached for comment at the time of this article.

Campbell, though, asserts that the elections were, indeed, held in violation of the Central Area constitution.

"It was actually the Residence Director [of Van Meter] who ran the elections," Campbell commented, "which is against the constitution."

Both Tomasino and Okafor refuted that statement, though.

"There's nothing really to comment on," Tomasino said when asked for a comment on the constitutionality of the election process.

He went on to say that everything about the election was legitimate.

The issue of the constitutionality of the election process, and indeed the sitting House Council, is still being disputed. Campbell, however, is determined to hold new elections for the Van Meter House Council this fall.

"Van Meter House Council elections will be the same day that the rest of Central House Council elections will be," Campbell declared.

House Council elections throughout Central will be on September 26 and 27. Until then, current SGA members are visiting residence halls across campus, including Central, to educate residents about the upcoming campus-wide elections.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Elections held at Van Meter residence hall are being contested because of their timing.

UNI to fight predatory credit card companies

By Katie Scrivano
Northern Star (Northern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) DEKALB, Ill. – University officials nationwide want to deter credit card companies from preying on inexperienced college students.

One motivating factor, Generation Y: A demographic possessing more than $80 billion in disposable income, has fallen victim to credit debt and is in dire need of credit card education.

A 1998 survey by the U.S. Public Interest Research Group showed the average college student owning a credit card has an average unpaid balance of $3,066. Because of the potential trap for students, more than 150 colleges have banned credit card vendors from soliciting on campus.

Just last year, student organizations held credit card fund-raisers on more than 100 school days.

It's very appealing to students," he said. "But they're getting heavy into debt. Students are attracted by the free gift and say they'll read up card when they get it. Then they decide to keep it and say they'll pay off the bill when they get it."

Rick Clark, director of University Programming & Activities approached fellow college administrators at a conference for the Association of Campus Activities Administrators last September, asking what other schools do to deter credit card companies. He learned that DePaul University and the University of Illinois-Chicago have been bombarded with vendors harassing students, and thus, those schools chose to implement a $500 per-day charge to credit card vendors. Clark took their advice and implemented the same charge at NIU. Since Jan. 1, all credit and phone card vendors are charged $100 per day for on-campus fund raising – a fee that must be paid in advance.

Clark said the charge significantly has decreased the number of days vendors are on campus. Clark agrees that credit education fairs offered by the credit card vendors must accompany the selling.

"It's too easy for the companies to sell cards to students if they're on campus," he said. "They're right in front of you telling you the rosy benefits and not telling you the problems."

Senior finance major Mariusz Domaradzki said credit card companies presume college students will keep a balance, using them to what BT Online deemed the "plastic route to paradise."

"It's good marketing for the companies," he said. "But students need to look out for themselves. They have to look at the interest rates, late fee charges, grace periods and the discounts some cards offer. It's selfish for [companies] not to explain the pitfalls to students."

Despite the marketing tactics, Domaradzki thinks students should take a good offer to build credit, if they can make the payments and keep track of their credit reports. "Credit cards are like a time bomb," he said. "You can rack up $3,000 in debt instantly."

Although student organizations can make a large profit from companies for the number of applications they draw, Clark urged groups to find other ways of raising money.

They will be losing their peers from getting into debt," he said.

From the $500 charges, UPAA plans to help students, preferably with credit education pamphlets and workshops.

Nick Jackson, credit counselor for Credit Counseling Centers of America, said because it's inevitable that college students will have at least one credit card, it is vital that they educate themselves about potential dangers. He advised students to do the research on offers and opt for those with no annual fee, low interest rates and a limit under $500. Jackson said if used wisely, credit cards have some positives and can be a building block for good credit.

UMass professor trumps paralysis with modified student-designed instrument

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

It's a success story everyone should know about, and it began with a tragedy.

In 1993, UMass Trumpet Professor Walter Chestnut's C5 vertebrae exploded as he lay sleeping, leaving him paralyzed. Doctors blamed the tragic incident on a birth defect, and called the chances of what happened to Chestnut one in a million.

In the wake of the incident began Chestnut's incredible success story. His injury may have been rare and devastating, but it gave him the opportunity to prove himself to be one in a million as well.

After doctors rebuilt his shattered disc with part of his hip, Chestnut began a lengthy stay at the Weldon Rehabilitation Facility, entering into a rigorous physical therapy regimen in order to counteract some of the damage to his spine. Doctors told the 37 year-old Chestnut that he would never walk again. Worse still, they told Chestnut, whose hefty musical resume included performances with the famous Hayden Trumpet Concerto, the Boston Pops and with Arthur Fiedler, that his career as a trumpet player was over.

But Chestnut was determined. Discipline came naturally to the man who had once dazzled professors and colleagues at the University of Michigan by completing a two-year master's degree program in Music Education in just one year. Now, at Weldon, he threw himself into physical therapy with similar, if not greater, determination.

"In rehab, if they said do ten of one thing, I'd do twenty. If they said do thirty, I'd do sixty," he says. "I guess I was a good patient." While still in the rehab center, Chestnut also seized the opportunity to begin playing his trumpet again. Just days after his release from the facility, he had regained enough of his former skill to be able to play his familiar fanfare on the post horn, an ancestor of the trumpet which does not have valves, at the 1970 graduation exercises.

Of this remarkable feat, Chestnut said simply, "I had never missed a graduation, and I didn't want to miss it that time." But, he admitted, "it's a miracle I could play."

With his customary cheer, he added, "I haven't missed [a graduation ceremony] since. They call me the Campus Herald now. Isn't that sweet?"

Still, the fifty-year enthusiast of the trumpet had yet to pick up a modern horn; his fingers were too weak to make the valves move, and his arms too weak to hold up the instrument. Today, however, thanks to the generosity and expertise of other members of the UMass faculty, in addition to being a medical miracle, Chestnut is a technological marvel as well: he is learning to play his beloved trumpet again.

The quest to create a trumpet modified so that Chestnut could play it began in 1997. Dick Hansen, a friend of Chestnut's who had helped him with other repairs, designed a trumpet with foot pedals, which allowed Chestnut to press the valves with his feet.

Though Chestnut was grateful to regain any aspects of his previous abilities with the instrument, when graduate student Jim Snedeker first began studying with him, also in 1997, he had other ideas.

"He didn't like to see me playing with my feet," says Chestnut. "He thought [the pedal trumpet] was a good idea, but he thought that with today's technology, there could be something better."

According to an earlier article in the Amherst Bulletin, Snedeker began to investigate the possibilities newer technology could hold for his trumpet teacher, finally coming into contact with Michael Conboy and Asaph Murfin, professors in the UMass Chemistry Department.

In a random stroke of luck, just as Chestnut settled in to interview for this story, Conbo and Murfin arrived at his office, bearing the instrument that is the result of Snedeker's search and hard work over the past two years. Chestnut's new trumpet. The trumpet, which was designed so that hypersensitive touch pads trigger a tank of compressed air, exerts enough force to push down the trumpet's valves. This fairly simple design now allows Chestnut to play with his hands again for the first time in seven years.

As the two entered with the trumpet, Chestnut's face, though friendly and pleasant to begin with, took on a visible brightness. Conboy and Murfin carefully affixed the trumpet to a length of thin wire hanging from a metal armature (the five and a half pound instrument is still too heavy for Chestnut to support with his arms). When they moved away, he reverently but anxiously seized the instrument, raised it to his lips and immediately launched into a gleeful warm-up exercise. The sound was bright and full; Chestnut may have lost some dexterity in his hands, but his lungs were as full of power as ever. Even then a glimpse of his gift emerged.

Conbos said of Chestnut, "[he] is a remarkable fellow... to have gone through what he has gone through in the past seven years and still have the spirit he has is just remarkable."

As for Conbos's willingness to devote his energies to restoring Chestnut's ability to play, he considers such generosity a matter of course.

"It seems a shame in a University like ours, with the type of community we have, and the resources we have, that we don't do more with [assistive technology]," he said.

Conbos and Murfin both said they felt that assistive technologies could allow UMass to do more for its disabled students and faculty. They dreamt of a facility that could serve, as Conbos put it, "as a clearing-house" for people wanting to work with assistive technologies like that which helped Chestnut.

In fact, according to Murfin, many public universities have such facilities already in place, including the University of Connecticut. Moreover, both Conbos and Murfin agree that opening and maintaining such a facility would not place undue financial or logistical strain on the University at large.

Conbos explained that they were not asking for much, "just a small facility."

Turn to PROFESSOR, page 3

UPenn changes BYOB policy

By Stacy Humes-Schulz
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – Citing the ineffectiveness of the "bring your own beer" policy, the administration is set Wednesday to propose removing the BYOB component from the University of Pennsylvania's year-old alcohol policy.

When Penn implemented its new alcohol policy – with sweeping educational, disciplinary and social changes to the campus culture – last fall, officials said that BYOB was one method they would use to curb underage drinking. But a year later, officials have decided that the rule just doesn't work.

BYOB rules state that every 21-year-old attending a registered on-campus party – which include fraternity parties and most other events organized by official campus groups – could bring a six-pack of beer with them and then retrieve the alcohol from the bartender during the course of the evening.

"It wasn't that the whole policy was a failure, it was that the expectation that people would be arriving at the door with their own six-pack in hand was not met," University Alcohol Coordinator Stephanie Ives said.

The proposed changes, printed in yesterday's Almanac, Penn's journal of record, will be presented today to University Council, along with a comprehensive evaluation of the policy's first year.

In addition to the removal of BYOB, there are five proposed revisions to the policy. These include banning large alcohol containers such as kegs, prohibiting drinking games and prohibiting student organizations from using funds to purchase alcohol.

The administration is also proposing that no student, even those that are 21, may be served alcohol at a registered party if they are already clearly intoxicated. Also, alcohol must be served from a separate area of the party by of-age bartenders.

Undergraduate Assembly Chairman Michael Bassik, a member of the original provost-led committee that wrote the new alcohol policy in the spring of 1999, said the BYOB component of the alcohol policy was not necessary.

"It's no secret that the University's BYOB policy was unenforceable, and we felt rather than to continue recommending this unenforceable policy, we just decided to eliminate it entirely," said Bassik, a College senior.

"It hurts the credibility of the policy," he added.

And Andrew Mandelbaum, president of the InterFraternity Council, said the proposed changes are basically already in effect.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sunny and warm, with highs in the 70s...

Students took advantage of yesterday's fine weather, like this student on top of the Campus Center.

TAKE A MINUTE MAN.
PLEASE RECYCLE!

"REMEMBER ..... WE DO NOT INHERIT THE EARTH FROM OUR PARENTS, WE BORROW IT FROM OUR CHILDREN." CHIEF SEATTLE

UMASS
OFFICE OF WASTE MANAGEMENT
PHYSICAL PLANT
www.umass.edu/recycle

Did You Know???

Over our lifetime, Americans will dispose of an average of 600 times their body weight in trash!

Recycling one glass container saves enough energy to light a 100-watt light bulb for 4 hours. At UMass, all the glass that is thrown away by students in one semester, we could save enough energy to run 2,000 lightbulbs for over 3 months!

One ton of paper recycled saves 60lbs of air pollution. UMass recycles 6,000 of paper everyday!

If we recycled every plastic bottle we used, we would keep 2 billion tons of plastic out of landfills.

Recycling one aluminum can saves enough energy to run a TV for 3 hours. At Umass, with all of the aluminum thrown away by students in one semester, we could save enough electricity to run 10,000 TV's for 139 hours!

In FY 2000, UMass recycling efforts reduced greenhouse gas emissions by 1576.3 tons!

For every pound of you recycle, industry expends 17 times less energy and emits less air pollution in 10 major emission categories than if a pound were discarded!

professor

continued from page 1

He says he estimates that such a facility could easily be contained within the University's already-existing Disability Services department. Currently, according to Conboy and Murfin, Disability Services is currently more of a referral service reserved for students.

"They wouldn't have helped someone like [Chestnut]," Murfin said.

If Chestnut's case is any example, they said, relatively little time and money is involved in assistive technology as well. Although the total development of the instrument took place over two years, they said they worked on the invention during their free time. They estimate the total hours spent working on the trumpet to be 80 to 60.

Both mentioned that the cost of the invention was fairly inexpensive. "Definitely not more than two hundred dollars, at the outside," Conboy commented about the cost.

He also made a point of mentioning that there was no continuing cost to the University, as Chestnut paid for replacement parts and repairs on his own.

"It's amazing how little... it takes to give somebody back a huge piece of their life," he said.

Chestnut also gave a demonstration of his limitations: turning away from the trumpet for a moment, he held up one hand, making a miniscule movement with one finger.

"That's the movement in my first finger," he said, numbering his fingers in musicians' terms. He made another tiny movement with his middle finger, and said, "that's my second." His hand was then still.

"My third doesn't move at all," he said. He explained that the third valve, which was supposed to be operated by his completely immobile finger, corresponded to a touch pad he operated with his thumb.

"[With the other trumpet], I used to have to play using my wrist," Chestnut said. "Can you imagine what kind of a technique I had? None."

Today Chestnut must develop a whole new system of playing in order to take advantage of Conboy and Murfin's gift.

Although a seemingly daunting task, Chestnut approached it with the same positive attitude that helped him since the first day of his accident.

As Chestnut remembered, "The first thing I said to [the doctor] when I woke up in Intensive Care was, 'Ok, where do we get started? How do I get better?'" He smiled. "He said no one ever said that to him before—it was always, 'why me?'"

That's a question it's hard to picture Chestnut ever asking; despite the hardships of the past ten years—in addition to his spinal injury, his wife succumbed to a long bout with breast cancer this past year—he is fiercely committed to staying upbeat.

He sums up his experiences modestly: "This has been a pretty tough decade for me." But it seems that he deals with hardships by always looking to the future, "I just gotta move forward, and so I'm trying to."

He explained that it was the love and support he received from those close to him that really kept him going.

"My students have been very good to me," he said.

In fact, this year, students transferred to UMass' music department from Boston University and Syracuse University just to be instructed by Chestnut.

Of this, he said humbly, "I'm amazed that we have twenty-seven trumpet students studying with a guy they know is in a wheelchair and can't play. I mean, my pedagogy is still good, and my brain still works, and my heart is still the same. But I miss being able to fully demonstrate [techniques]."

He commented that his fellow faculty has been good to him as well. Chestnut spoke in awe of a benefit concert the Music Department faculty held for him in 1995, which raised enough money to buy him a van that would accommodate his wheelchair.

"Isn't that incredible?" he said, shaking his head. "You think there's not love in the world."

Love is a key word for Chestnut. The love for music, in addition to the love for other people, has been a theme in his life.

"Of his musical career, he said, "I think it's so important, especially for young people, and especially young people in college, that you're in a career, or preparing for a career that you really want to do. I can't imagine waking up in the morning, putting both feet on the floor, and saying to myself, 'I've gotta go and do this thing that I hate again today.'"

He continued, "There isn't a day, even this day today, that I haven't gotten up with love for what I do."

Chestnut maintains that love has influenced his teaching as well.

"I really [try to get] students to work on music by letting their emotions flow, [and] unleashing those emotions."

Colleague Dorothy Ornest, a professor in the voice department, agreed, commenting, "I've always enjoyed my many musical experiences with Walter, and I've enjoyed him as a colleague because he too lives and teaches the excitement of music."

Oddly, Chestnut's special place in the community has given him the opportunity to help others as well. He remarks, "If one person that's handicapped gets turned on that things are possible [by what's happened to me], it'll be worth it."

For now, though, Chestnut focuses mostly on continuing his musical journey. He still begins every day by practicing his scales.

"Some keys are harder than others," he commented. "But I play them all just to make myself do it."

He began a balling scale but stopped after a sour note.

"This is so hard," he said, matter-of-factly, and began again. Then, methodically, determinedly, he finished the first scale and moved on to another.

It is music to anyone's ears.

Defying Gravity

The UMass downhill racing team is training for this weekend's slalom race near the observatory behind Orhard Hill.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schaluk Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Gorlevsky-Gee, Technical Assistant Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobslarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaren Bass Photography Editor
Position Vacant Graphics Manager
Rob Schaluk Distribution Manager
Position Vacant Personnel Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Monique Magnotta Assistant Operations Manager
Mary Pappas Classified Advertising
Brian Stewart Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargano Assistant Business Manager
Kara Robb Assistant Advertising Manager

Got a tip? Call Collegian news at 545-1762

haircuts★ colors ★ highlights

REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St

253-9526

perms★ tanning★ facial waxing

SOUP^er BOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
- 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
- Bread bowls
- Fresh bread
- All made fresh daily
- also a limited selection of salads

96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

GRAND OPENING TONIGHT!
@ 7:00 pm
Hampden Snack Bar
FRANK & TERESSA'S ANCHOR BAR
ORIGINAL BUFFALO CHICKEN WINGS
WING EATING CONTEST
DOOR PRIZES
T-SHIRTS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, September 14, 2000
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Culture of carnage

Lieberman and false concern

The release on Monday of the Federal Trade Commission's report on the entertainment industry marketing violence to children left little question that Hollywood has an obligation to clean up its act.

However, Senator Joseph Lieberman's tirade during yesterday's Senate committee meeting, in which he condemned the modern "culture of carnage" and issued a six-month ultimatum to Hollywood was unnecessary, unrealistic and in essence nothing but a high-profile commercial for his and Al Gore's presidential campaign.

The argument over the glamorization of violence and its effect on American youth has been raging at the forefront of the nation's consciousness since the rash of high school violence that swept the country last year. Thousands of editorials have been written about whether the explosion of violence among American youths should be blamed on the entertainment industry, a decline in parental attention and control or even the portrayal of violence within the media itself.

That particular arguments probably has no definitive answer, but studies such as the one conducted by the FTC present, at the very least, contributing factors to the problem that can then be pinpointed and dealt with.

And no one can argue that marketing violence toward children is wrong. Whereas past accusations of Hollywood turning brutality into bucks have often been dismissed as purely speculative, the FTC's report lays out in concrete terms that the unfortunate trend does indeed exist and at least contributes to the desensitization of children toward violence.

But did Lieberman really need to throw his hat into the proverbial ring in this instance? Less than 24 hours after the release of the report, the Walt Disney Co. issued new guidelines on how its R-rated films will be marketed and how the Disney-owned ABC Television Network will handle movie ads. Jack Valenti, head of the Motion Picture Association of America, promised that the industry would examine how it advertises and conducts research so that it does not deliberately target underage viewers. Additional measures from other Hollywood power players are sure to follow, indicating that Tinsel Town has now abandoned its "don't blame us" attitude and begun taking responsibility for its audience.

That makes the senator's tirade yesterday all the more ridiculous. Lieberman's resurrection of the Columbine tragedy, which he strangely labeled a "psychic breaking point for our country," had more to do with hitting America where it hurts than it did with the relevance of the FTC's report. Nearly a year and a half passed between the Columbine incident and the release of the report, indicating that America's reaching of Lieberman's "breaking point" did not bring about any sudden, decisive change in this country's moral elasticity.

That very point is what makes the senator's ultimatum to Hollywood so totally absurd. Not only is the entertainment conglomerate already moving in response to the report, but anyone who believes that Lieberman will follow up on his vow to "crack down on the industry" should look no further than the senator's appointment book. Lieberman is scheduled to attend a fund raiser this very evening with Harvey Weinstein, president of Miramax Films.

There is little doubt that by the time Lieberman sits down with the entertainment mogul, the distraught idealist with the hardline stance will be long gone. In his place will be the morally devoid yes-man that America is ready to put in the White House.

The camera and Ben Franklin

"Now security cameras, while not presenting a threat of a police state, do present a loan of our rights to the Administration. If the Administration abuses their power, then the Administration must be stopped."

BOO DOWNS

"Those who would give up essential Liberty, to purchase a little temporary Safety, deserve neither Liberty nor Safety." -Ben Franklin

I was walking home a week ago from a social function, when I came across a startling sight. The lobby of my dorm was in shambles. Posters, flyers, and colored construction paper were all over the floor. When I got out of my elevator, I was greeted by more chaos, with paper torn all over the floor. The floor was wet, and the door leading to the stairs was propped up with beer bottles. The message board was torn down, exposing deep cuts and burn marks in the cork. Such destruction, resulting from end-of-semester mischief, normally would make me laugh the whole thing off. However, this was the eve before first day of classes! The first thing that crossed my mind was that this place was a complete mess. The second thought was that people just couldn't seem to respect others, or other people's property.

Perhaps the senseless destruction of the dorms is a playing factor in the emergence of security cameras. As mentioned several times, there has been a confirmation of a security camera on campus. This, of course, has been a long-standing issue originating last year. The Administration's actions were rationalized as a response to heightened crime in recent years. On the other side, students have reacted with outrage to the invasion of privacy. As reported, the leadership of the SGA has expressed their disappointment with the administration. It was hoped that alternative measures could have been explored.

The Administration, in a reactionary manner, took measures against crime by the placement of a security camera in Southwest. This linear progression of campus security in general has evolved in the past few years, from the card access doors to increased call boxes across campus. While these measures were designed to prevent crimes, it is sad that its creation was a result of the crimes committed against innocents. With the current frame of mind, security cameras seem to be the next logical step in increasing security. However, to some, the presence of security cameras presents something more than security. It presents the Administration's frame of mind, one that many people do not agree with since some of us are acting like babies, we are all going to be treated like children. While that reasoning is understandable, even if unpleasant, we need to look at a greater picture. The question we must ask ourselves is, do security cameras really solve the issue of crime? If the presence of security cameras does eventually reduce crime, is it worth the sacrificed rights of the students who behave responsibly? Are students willing to sacrifice a bit of their privacy in dorm lobbies and outside buildings in the name of security?

When it comes to social stability, be it a campus or the United States of America, there is a fine line to walk on. On one side, there is social anarchy, where individual rights outweigh the collective rights of the people. On the other side, a fascist or police-state reigns where individual rights are denied in favor of the institution or government at large. Ultimately, either extreme denies rights to individuals. In our society, any move towards a collective social order is shunned, as we remember the German Nazis or Communist Russia. On the other extreme, many right wing conservatives, including the Christian Right, have advocated a more rigid society, based on their ideals. Our current system, created by our founding Fathers, was based on a system of checks and balances. We would give a little freedom for our safety, but those protecting us answered to civilian boards, which could be considered the representative of the people. If those we give our freedoms to abuse their power, they will be held accountable for their actions. While the system is not perfect, and the justice system itself could use some more scrutiny, our rights are supposed to be protected. While the balance seems to be the most effective, it is often not given enough credit, and extreme measures are sought.

Now security cameras, while not presenting a threat of a police state, do present a loan of our rights to the Administration. If the Administration abuses their power, and extends security camera surveillance further into our personal space, then the Administration must be stopped. It would be a clear violation of our rights. However, if the Administration follows its plan only to look at footage after emergencies, and to use the cameras as a deterrent to crime, then our invested rights will yield personal profit. Perhaps there should be a student board, or even the elected SGA, that should act as a check for the Administration, so that our rights are not violated. Then, and only then, can we enjoy the security of a safer campus while not feeling oppressed by the Administration.

Ben Franklin wrote in the defense of Freedom in an era of tyranny. To give all your rights for anything, including security, is inherently wrong. However, in an era that stresses individual liberties, people are trampling over other peoples' rights in the name of their own personal interests. This ultimately leaves everyone with less rights overall. In order for everyone to enjoy the fullest freedom, rights need to be shared, rather than hoarded. This applies to personal security, as well as all of the rights we take for granted in this day and age. Then, and only then, will we be truly free to enjoy the Freedoms of Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist

Ed/Op!

There will be a mandatory all-staff meeting for all current and interested Collegian staff members tomorrow, September 14, at six o'clock in the Collegian office (113 Campus Center Basement). The general staff meeting will be followed by departmental meeting with the individual editors. It is strongly encouraged that everyone who wants to write for the Collegian this semester attend.

Beware of the top bunk!

KATIE LANDERS

My roommate and I bought a plant for school this year. It's an ivy plant. The plant just sits on the sill of our dorm window, and only relies on us to be watered and given some light. As I look at the ivy wilting away on the sill, I'm starting to think it might be a sign. What it's a sign for I couldn't tell you, but if I figure it out I'll let you know. I'm not real good with metaphors.

So I've decided to write for Ed/Op this year, or at least try to. Two definite conclusions that have come to me since I have been at U Mass are that I have no talent for anything, hidden or otherwise, and that top bunks are dangerous. So, anyways, I'm going to try this thing out, something to occupy my time and to get some of my thoughts out. I like to talk a lot but there just aren't enough people to listen to me. The people who do have to listen to me will probably be skipping this article because they've already had the sheer enjoyment of my scathing voice telling pointless stories.

This Ed/Op business should be a fun time-filler. In high school I was the annoying girl who belonged to almost every club, participated in sports (although I really sucked) and tried to have a well-rounded experience. When I chose UMass senior year I wanted to blend in. Freshman year I did absolutely nothing. I took all lectures, and I didn't try to join anything. I now know that I'm a very boring person. I can only entertain myself so long. Now, if it is my pleasure to attempt to entertain you for a few minutes.

I've been back to UMass for over a week now. I moved in early because four months is a long time to be home after you've been away for a year. I did enjoy my summer, it was just really long. The last month before coming back here I counted the days. I wasn't the classes that I missed, or even the DC food, but my friends and my freedom. It's taking a little while to get back into the swing of things. Although I'm back at school, work is not something I welcome with open arms. Right now I would just like a vacation from my summer work. However, life goes on and the world turns, and being dumb and poor is just not cool.

Coming back to school means returning to school work and returning to work-work. I live I said, I've discovered that being poor isn't cool for me. I've gone back to my job at the UMass Annual Fund. Don't pretend like you don't know what it is, or that you haven't worked there at some point in your college career. It's that job where you call alumni and ask them to donate money to the University on behalf of the college from which they graduated. I bet you could ask me any fact about this place and I could spit the answers back at you like I was Rain Man. It was the first on-campus job that would take me, and I guess you could say that I just can't leave it. Any comments from the peanut gallery? I didn't think so. It's a good job with good experience, plus it pays my bills and hopefully I'll get to go on Spring Break this year.

I remember when I first got here and tried to get a job working as a leader in an after-school program for little tikes called "Capacidad." I guess it's a program that allows little people of all kinds of backgrounds to go and learn outside of the school environment. It seemed to have an accepting kind of atmosphere. After my interview I was never called back. "Capacidad" wasn't accepting enough to take me; that was a little crushing. Landing in the Annual Fund wasn't a bad thing, though. It's a change of life from my summers. The past three summers I have worked as a lifeguard.

My job was, in fact, a highly over-rated baby-sitting job where I increased my chances of skin cancer by a hundred and fifty percent. The neighborhood was primarily non-English speaking. A lot of the older kids seemed to find my take on authority humorous, often responding to me in shouts of Portuguese because they knew I had no clue as to what they were saying. I'm not complaining, it's probably the best job I have ever had, but I'm still glad it was just a summer job.

Since being back to school I've remembered all the fun things missed over the summer, and all the humorous events that take place here. No lie, I did miss the DC this summer. My mom doesn't cook too much and when she does I'm usually not there for it. I'm left to fend for myself and there isn't much of a selection in the Landers' household. I usually settle with Double Stuf Oreos (only one 'f' there, make a mental note), or I buy myself McDonald's. I try to keep myself eating at McD's only once a week at home – what a diet. It's not being at sch..ol that makes people gain weight as students at UMass, it's being at home on breaks. While being back here at school, I don't supply my room with too much junk, I steer clear from the DC, and I'm just too poor to eat out. I don't have a car to drive to fast-food joints; if there were a McDonald's on campus, and it accepted the UCard, my heart and weight would be in serious trouble. The conclusion? I eat much less at school than I do at home, and therefore am thankful for school food.

My one humorous story from this past week of school is that I fell out of my top bunk. Go ahead and laugh; you weren't injured. As mentioned previously in this rambling piece, bunked beds are dangerous. In a completely sober state, coming out of a deeply unconscious state, I was alarmed by the phone ringing and just rolled clear off the bed. I landed flat on my hands and knees. This didn't seem to bother me too much during my phone conversation or getting back to sleep afterwards, but the battle scars still remain on my legs and arms a week later. Ah well, the price you pay for sleeping against a ceiling.

By now you are probably sick of listening to me, or rather of reading my words, if you haven't already turned the page. Before I go, much thanks goes out to a UMass student named (I think) Kathryn Landi. The school forwarded Time magazine to my house on her behalf (because our names are so close) and for that I've become a little bit wiser in the current events area. It definitely brightened my day when it came in the mail.

Until next time, be careful of anything called "southern fried steak" (honestly, who would fry something that was already going to give you heart disease by the end of the meal?) and carry a cordless phone to your top bunk.

Katie Landers is a UMass student.

Arts & Living

WMUA 91.1

"We haven't reached our potential"

Dan Barowy
General Manager

Adam De Young
Program Director

Glenn Siegel
Advisor

Aubrey Vachon
Office Coordinator

Chris Lind
Publicity Director

Jud Carver
Visual Media Director

Regan McKendry
Sports Operations Director

Pam Gorczynski
Fund Drive Director

Melissa Annand
Music Director

David Rose
Sports Director

Mahtab Khoshkhou
Women's Affair's Director

Maggie Riden
Editorial/News Director

By Sam Wilkinson
Staff Writer

Dan Barowy, General Manager

His own show "Tiny Planets" is on from noon to 2:30 p.m. on Wednesdays. "Everyone else with a share of the power at the station is a student. Dan Barowy, the station's General Manager, has quickly moved up the WMUA ranks, as he's only been at the station for a little less than a year.

I supervise 13 departments, keep the books, work on long term project planning, goal setting, budget stuff and general supervision at the station," Barowy said. His own radio show, called "League of Contemporary Android DJ's" is a blur of trance and house music.

For Barowy, WMUA is a "wonderful" place to work.

"It's one of the University's and the Pioneer Valley's cultural gems. We're committed to training and being a training facility, as well as providing the University and the Pioneer Valley community with access to music and other programming that isn't available elsewhere."

Adam De Young, the station's program director, was not available at press time to comment on the station.

Overall, the station is revered by the students who work there, and while the debate about the block programming simmers, the station churns forward, having just added the previously mentioned tower which give WMUA listeners more access to the college station.

WMUA (The Station)

In terms of the whole view, WMUA is revered and respected by the staff who make it go; it was described in interviews as being a "great opportunity to get broadcasting experience," the "best medium on campus to let people know about different things that are going on" and as a place for students interested in "finding out what they want to do with themselves".

For Barowy, WMUA is the "best place to work on campus" as well as a radio station seeking to capitalize on its promise. Siegel and Chris Lind, the station's Publicity Director, emphasized the music and programming featured on WMUA that just isn't available anywhere else. Others focused on the ability to make contacts, including Maggie Ridden, the Editorial/News Director, or the ability to reach people. Office Coordinator Aubrey Vachon said that it helped her to learn about and deal with all of the different groups both on campus and in the community. But others, when asked their general thoughts on WMUA, wondered if the station's community focus was actually hurting the station's ability to reach students.

David Rose, the Sports Director, felt that WMUA wasn't being honest when it claimed to be a student radio station.

"They ask us to say that on the air, but I never have. It all has to do with the community members. We're a community radio station, and in my case [sports] we reach students, but most want us to be a community station."

Others interviewed for this story refused to comment on the community presence and block-programming aspects of the station, instead choosing to say nothing but offering the interviewer a knowing wink or instead hinting at problems before retracting statements.

WMUA (Block Programming: Boon or Bane)

Rose said that his opposition to block programming was based on the idea that it made WMUA no different from a commercial station.

"If you're telling a DJ what they have to play during a certain time-frame, we might as well just be a commercial radio station," Rose said, his explanation differing from everybody else interviewed for this story.

Other opposition to block programming came not in arguments against it, but statements that they would rather work at a radio station with a majority alternative rock format.

The station's Music Director, Melissa Annand, said that "it would be nice if we were an indy rock station," but that the station would face too much opposition, adding that the station had been programmed in its current manner for too long for anything to change.

Regan McKendry, WMUA's Sports Operations Manager, felt that, without block programming, he wouldn't have his show (the Regan Show, Wednesday nights at midnight). That said, Regan said block programming made it impossible to target the station at any group, thus excluding the possibility of a campus.

Siegel for his part, felt that block programming offers listeners at least a little bit of predictability.

Turn to WMUA page 10

Time	Program Block	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
midnight to 3:00am	PM Eclectic	"The Midnite Rush" DJ Jazzy Jud	"Uncommonly Smooth" Donise Lasley	"Let the Good Times Roll" Strates Frangules	"The Regan Show Regan Mckendry	"The Beat" Adam DeYoung
3:00am to 6:00am	Program Producers In Training
6:00am to 9:00am	AM Eclectic	"Acoustic Cafe" Lee Larcheveque	"Breakfast Of Champions" Brooke Werley	"Oblivion Express" Fern	"Jazz Flights" Hollis Wheeler	"Colors" Jose Tolson
9:00am	WMUA News Update
9:05am to noon	Jazz	"The Jazz Garden" Mark Gardner	"Transnat. Jazz Conspiracy" Michael Ehlers	"Java Jazz" Cheryl K.Ken Irwin	"Free Trans. Radio" Ben Karetnick	"Afro-Excursions" W.S. Twkeme
noon	WMUA News Update
12:05pm to 2:30pm	World Music	Andrew Kaknes	"Nuevo Mundo" Ramon Solorzano	"Tiny Planets" Glenn Siegel	"Riddim 2K" Dave Boatright	"Global Vilage" Michael DiMartino
2:30pm to 5:00pm	Blues	TBA	"Mixed Bag" Gene Phelps	"Nuthin' But da Blues" Dave Hart, Jerry Clark	"Katie's R&B Revue" Katie Wright	"Blame It On the Blues" Ellen Miller-Mack
5:00pm to 5:30pm	WMUA News @ 5:00pm
5:30pm to 6:00pm	Public Affairs	"Undercurrents" Holroyde, Traschen, & Tremblay	5:30pm "Making Contact" 6:00pm "Upfront" Daria Fisk, Irene Daioha	"Sportsline/Joanie O'Brien Show" WMUA Sports	"Body, Mind & Healing" Robert Kracuaer	"The Glenn Brooks Show" Glen Brooks
6:00pm to 6:30pm
6:30pm to 9:00pm	Rock	"Other People's Noise" Matt Bielecki	"Swallow the Invader" Melissa Annand	"File Under: Easy Listening" Chris Lind	"Population: None" Bryan Grabigel	"Power Your Voice" Mahtab Khoshkhou
9:00pm to midnight	Urban Contemporary	"The Final Cut" George Gilmer	"Back To the Essence" Christian Smith	"The HITT List" Big ANT	"The King Dom" CK4	"Blast From the Past" Caroline Ealy

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

The University Gallery will open two new shows this Friday with a public reception at 5 p.m. Black (Red) Sound Installations by German artist Rolf Julius exhibits work that fuses our senses, combing artistic sights and sounds the artist has recorded, processed, and shaped into unique compositions. Abstract Notions features work from the gallery's permanent collection, all presenting abstract interpretations of shapes and forms. Both shows will run through Oct. 8.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation
Sept. 16-Oct. 28:
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Abstract Notions: Sept. 16-Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Scatterlings: Sept. 17-Oct. 5
Work by artist Paul Stopforth
Opening reception: Sept. 17, 2-5 p.m.
Hampden Gallery, UMass

UMass Summer in France 2000: Sept. 14-22
Work by UMass art students
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Student Union Art Gallery, UMass

Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community: Sept. 14-Oct. 17
Work by various artists
Opening reception Sept. 19, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House, UMass

New Abstraction: Sept. 11-Oct. 5
Work by artist Benjamin Shohan
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Central Gallery, UMass

MUSIC

Miracle Orchestra
plus Foxtrat Zulu
Sept. 15, 8:30 p.m.
Skybox

Pat McGee Band
Plus Soulwork
Sept. 14, 8:20 p.m.
Pearl Street Ballroom

Indie Tour 5000
With Mr. Len, Jean Gray, Mood Swingers
Sept. 15, 8:30 p.m.
Pearl Street Clubroom

Last Saturday of Summer Bash
With Hypnotic Kick, Shoot the Dancing Bear, etc.
Sept. 16, 5 p.m.
Pearl Street Clubroom

Peter Mulvey and Erin McKeown
Sept. 15, 7 p.m.
Ironhorse

Ben Swift Band
Plus Psychedelic Breakfast
Sept. 15, 10 p.m.
Ironhorse

Jess Klein
Plus Bob Hillman
Sept. 16, 7 p.m.
Ironhorse

Either/Orchestra
Plus As-Is Ensemble
Sept. 16, 10 p.m.
Ironhorse

THEATRE/DANCE

Triple Espresso
Now through Sept. 24, 8 p.m.
CityStage, Springfield

UMass Theater Guild Auditions
Much Ado About Nothing
Sept. 15, 7 p.m.; Sept. 16, 10 a.m. and 7 p.m.
Campus Center Room 163

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Sept. 14, 9 p.m.
Skybox

Comedian Elvira Kurt
Sept. 15, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Mission improvable
Sept. 16, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Room 101

COURTESY THEODORE STARR

Abstract Notions will be on view from Sept. 16 through Oct. 28 at the University Gallery.

Attention:

The Source has finally made its triumphant return. And we need your submissions. If you've got an event that you need to spread the word about, that you're sure is relevant to the University community email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com or bring press information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement and drop it in The Source mailbox.

radical christian worship
real teaching, real praise- for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10:00am Sundays
413-253-7073 • www.agapecommunity.org

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0000
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

University Productions and Concerts

Positions Available!!

Interested in MUSIC and CONCERTS?....

Join UPC

~Business Manager ~Office Manager
~Event Staff ~Promotions ~Hospitality
~Talent Coordinator

Applications available @ the UPC office ~rm 415 Student Union

Applications due by Friday, Sept.15th

Help bring the concerts to UMass!

Smith College Rec Council presents

MACY GRAY with special guest

Sunday, September 24
8 pm
John M. Greene Hall
Doors Open @ 7:30 pm
Tickets: $24 General Public

Available @:
•Northampton Box Office
•B-side Records 586-9556
•For the Record 256-6134
•Ticketmaster Outlets

413-586-8686 NBO NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE &THE-TICK

LET

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

FREEDOM

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

ROCK

DORITOS® WANTS YOU TO ROCK THE VOTE IN 2000.

ROCK THE VOTE. EM ED BY Doritos TORTILLA CHIPS

Log on to doritos.com or rockthevote.org and register to vote.

DORITOS and the DORITOS Logo are trademarks used by Frito-Lay, Inc. © Recot, Inc., 2000. Rock The Vote is a registered trademark of the Rock The Vote Education Fund.

Significant Others: An expedient look at a variety of new albums

AT THE DRIVE-IN Relationship of Command
Grand Royal

Rolling Stone magazine recently called At the Drive-In "just about the hippest band on the planet right now." I would agree with that claim, and add that their major label debut Relationship of Command is the most provocative and involving album I have heard in a long time, and definitely the best album of the year. Since I've heard 8 months already that's quite an exceptional music.

Having left the super producer Ross Robinson has done wonders for their previous full length Vaya. They have amazing but Jim Ward, and Robinson tightened the reins while losing none of the frantic trademark energy that made their previous efforts so memorable. The highlights are too numerous to mention, but "Pattern Against User" and "Invalid Litter Dept." the stutter riff and killer chorus of "One Armed Scissor," the world-ending chaos of "Cosmonaut."

Brilliant. All of it. Cedric Bixler, Pall Hinojos, Jim Ward, Omar Rodriguez, and Tony Hajjar are the perpetrators. The only reason this massive release is in the SO section is because my words simply don't do it justice. September 12, 2000 was the release date. National holidays? A

(Michael Delano)

HANGMEN 3
No Skits Vol. 1
Surrender

Boston producer collective Hangmen 3 really know how to get on my good side. Right away they name the album No Skits Vol. 1, denouncing the cumbersome and overused skits that clog rap albums past the twenty-song mark. They also include a lyric sheet, a true rarity for rap albums, but an always-appreciated extra that makes it much easier to learn those hard-to-decipher flows.

The icing on the cake is that Hangmen 3 show love for Boston, and try hard to put the oft-neglected tin the rap scene's city on the hip-hop map like Nelly has to St. Louis and No Limit and Juvenile did for Nawlins.

Hangmen 3 are three producers; Ray Benzino, Jeff Two Times, and Johnny Bananas, aided by Beantown rap group the Wiseguys, whose recently reduced ranks list Tangg da Juice, Big Roscoe, M5, Masta Criminal, and Mann Terror as their members. The production is solid, mostly gloomy and bass-heavy, although unexceptional, which isn't to say there aren't some interesting moments. The 3 definitely know how to get the party started ("Holla Back (Holla Boston!)") and slow it down ("Rap Star (All I Ever Wanted)") with ease, and aren't afraid to experiment. Witness the Latin-tinged acoustics that end "Holla Back," or the soulful piano sample that accompanies the contemplative "I Don't Wanna Die." "Never Wanna See You" has the album's most creative and memorable production, a sparse echo effect that complements the theme of the track perfectly. The rhyming skills are competent, but it seems like the Wiseguys are capable of more inventive lyrics than the ones on display, which are too many tired street stories that bring nothing new to the table, or classic misogyny that does little to elevate them from their peers. On the whole, the rapping rarely matches the production skill, although at times it comes close, like the closer "I Don't Wanna Die," where M5 takes a hard look inward and asks "God when did my life spoil/how come I'm faced with so much turmoil." No Skits Vol. 1 represents an above-average but far from classic debut, although everyone involved certainly has talent to burn, and I expect to see this team back in the future with an effort that will truly define Boston's rap scene. B (Michael Delano)

BT
Movement in Still Life
Nettwerk

Rave lueler BT brings to his most recent album Movement in Still Life what all the memorable recent electronic music releases have had: diversity. But diversity for BT isn't just adjusting BPM speeds or obscure sampling, it's running the gamut of musical genres and doing it well. Over the course of eleven songs, BT will school you on rap, trance, party techno, or just sit down with a guitar and play a song for you. BT aims to please and enlighten, and does both successfully.

"Never Gonna Come Back Down" is the minor hit you may have heard on alternative radio this summer, and is a good example of how BT handles the guests on this record. Knowing he can't control the freeform M. Doughty, BT lets him go off, to humorous effect, while backing him with plenty of bouncy beats and knob turning effects. A catchy chorus keeps things from getting too out of control, and there you have one of the more interesting dance songs of the year. Of course, when BT gets to showcase his own unaided compositions, he doesn't disappoint. Wacky video game sound effects liven up the title track, and the aggressive rock edge of "Smartbomb" prove that he can be creative while still moving your feet. But as big a heart as he has for dance, it's his singer/songwriter compositions that are the emotional center of the album. "Shame" and "Satellite" are beautiful, airy pieces that detail relationships in such an affecting way that some artists who devote full-time to this style are sure to be envious. Working with female singers is a favorite pastime of many techno artists, and Movement contains two lush tracks featuring the soothing sounds of Kirsty Hawkshaw. "Running Down the Way Up" is a breezy mid-tempo romp, while "Dreaming" allows Hawkshaw's beautiful voice to provide shelter among the thumping rhythm. There has been talk in the media of BT becoming the next Moby in terms of breakthrough electronic artists, and with material as good as this, there couldn't be a more deserving candidate for widespread recognition. B+ (Michael Delano)

EARTH CRISIS
Slither
Victory

This is the record Earth Crisis makes after leaving Roadrunner? Slither has so many similarities to Roadrunner releases, one in particular, that you would think the labels on this and their previous release, Breed the Killers, should be reversed.

Earth Crisis is a successful hardcore band that has made waves aggressively promoting various ecological and political issues, which are featured prominently in their music. After releasing a number of albums in the early 90s for the mainly hardcore label Victory, the band left to join Roadrunner, a label known mostly for their 90s metal releases. There they released Breed the Killers, a straightforward hardcore release that didn't fall in line with prototypical RR releases, but helped the label diversify their lineup along with acts like Vision of Disorder. Since then, both bands have left the label, Earth Crisis returning to Victory to release Slither, which curiously has Roadrunner's nu-metal stamp all over it.

A variety of influences can be heard on Slither, most notably that of Machine Head, specifically with the new more mainstream path they have traveled recently with their release The Burning Red. Not only does the cover artwork on Slither employ noted MH and frequent Roadrunner artist Dave McKean, the structure of the album musically is startlingly similar at the beginning to The Burning Red. Both open with a short, throwaway instrumental, before launching into an almost rap metal, mainstream sound, a radical departure for both bands. Curiously strong influences from the Massachusetts acts such as Tree and Gangsta Bitch Barbie are also apparent. Like with MH, the new sound of Earth Crisis will most likely divide fans, alienating those who dislike the mainstream sound, which is doubly unfortunate since, like MH, Earth Crisis has failed to break into the mainstream with this attempt. Unlike MH, however, Earth Crisis hasn't crafted an above-average record as a result of the transformation. Standouts like the title track and "Behind the Wire" are suitable metal tracks, and the band's socially conscious lyrics are often interesting and always forceful; when vocalist Karl Buechner screams "Stand up or die," he means it. But the album as a whole feels unfocused. This is a step up, musically, from Earth Crisis' previous efforts, but it fails to define itself inside the new genre the band has chosen to wander into. C (Michael Delano)

significant others

The Wiseguys, featured here, helped produce the new album from Hangman 3.

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Why is TIAA-CREF the #1 choice nationwide?

The TIAA-CREF Advantage.

Call us for a free information package

Year in and year out, employees at education and research institutions have turned to TIAA-CREF and for good reasons:

- Easy diversification among a range of expertly managed funds
- A solid history of performance and exceptional personal service
- A strong commitment to low expenses
- Plus, a full range of flexible retirement income options

For decades, TIAA-CREF has helped professors and staff at over 9,000 campuses across the country invest for—and enjoy—successful retirements.

Choosing your retirement plan provider is simple. Go with the leader. TIAA-CREF.

THE TIAA-CREF ADVANTAGE
Investment Expertise
Low Expenses
Customized Payment Options
Expert Guidance

TIAA CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™ 1.800.842.2776 www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

J.CREW

WAREHOUSE SALE

Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%

September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm

Free Admission
Open to the Public

Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403

We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).

Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS) From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whately exit). Left then right onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Left onto Campus from exit ramp.

The new album from 2gether may be the best thing to hit the pop charts since N'Sync's No Strings Attached.

Stimulating, amazing & remarkable; Just Three words that describe 2gether

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Boy Band Expert

2GETHER
2gether Again
TVT Records

In this era of studio-created pop crap, it's refreshing when a band comes along that is genuinely talented both in performing and writing their own songs. The singer-songwriter returns with a vengeance in the new album by 2gether, appropriately titled 2gether Again. The follow-up to last year's multi-platinum debut album 2gether. For all you people living under a rock that don't know of the musical genius that is 2gether, here's the 411. 2gether is an MTV-created and produced boy band made up of five incredibly talented young men, Jerry O'Keefe, O.T. McKnight, Mickey Parke, Chad Tinnie, and Doug Emus. (Chris Farley's far funnier older brother). Each member of the group brings their unique talent and ability to the table to make the group a total boy band package. This is in sharp contrast to other boy pop groups which always have that one member that just plain sucks; the Backstreet Boys have AJ, the New Kids On the Block had Danny Wood, and 98 Degrees has that ugly guy. Quite simply, there are no weak links in the group, and there aren't any on the album either.

From start to finish the album can be described in three words: "two much entertainment." The album serves as a soundtrack for 2gether's hugely popular DIY spin-off Black Dog's Dogstreet. 2gether took a hands on approach to songwriting and production on this album. Even though technically some of them wrote only tracks on the album, I have heard from my source that they did co-write all the tracks however this attention to detail is something that fans under whom the group would be well aware of, and people will think that this group is a talented hi-terms of the record industry. 2gether's success is simple is off the charts. 2gether has already fused teen pop with their [illegible]. In fact, they have taken it one step to the next level. And to the next level after that. Quite simply, greatest band since smell a Grammy for these [illegible] men come next February. 2gether is a must-listen for any teen music aficionado. Download it, or better yet, sprint to your local record store and, by any way, unlike anything Backstreet Boys, N'Sync, or Britney Spears put out this year. Once, every single song on this album is worth its purchase price of [illegible] discs. A+

Kurt Polesky is a columnist.

There will be a mandatory meeting for anyone who wants to write for Arts & Living immediately following tonight's all-staff meeting. If possible, please bring a writing sample.

Summer May Be Over But The Sales Are Still HOT At Liquors 44!!

LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY LOW PRICING

1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MILWAUKEE, LITE, MICHELOB LIGHTS, COORS, BIG RED $41.99 +dep

1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 +dep

1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $34.99 +dep

1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER CO. ALL FLAVORS $82.99 +dep

HIGH LIFE, LIGHT & ICE 30 PACK $12.49

BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT CASE $9.49 +dep

Coors EXTRA GOLD 30 PACK $10.99 +dep

MAGIC HAT 6 PACK ALL TYPES $5.99 +dep

Labatt's 12 PACK ALL TYPES $8.49 +dep

MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE 12 PACK $9.99 +dep

WINES OF THE MONTH

HARDY'S NOTTAGE HILL CHARDONNAY, CABERNET SYRAH, MERLOT, SHIRAZ $5.99 $6.99

CARLO ROSSI ALL FLAVORS 4 LITER $6.99

CONCHO Y TORO ALL FLAVORS 1.5L $6.99

CITRA WINES ALL FLAVORS 1.5L $5.99

BLACKSTONE MERLOT 750ML $8.99

Arbor Mist ALL FLAVORS $5.49

BACARDI LIGHT & DARK 1.75L $16.49

RUBINOFF VODKA 1.75L $8.99

POLAND SPRING GIN 1.75L $9.99

INVERHOUSE SCOTCH 1.75L $12.99

ABSOLUT CITRON 750ML $15.99

JACK DANIELS COUNTRY COCKTAILS 1.5L $9.99

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor Ask For Details

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA

HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

SALE PRICES THURS. 9/14/00 THRU WEDS. 9/20/00

CARDIO KICK BOXING

FIT-NESS • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0060

Mon. @ 4:15
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat @ 9:00

www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE

BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES

$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS

Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precor Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio Kickboxing

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 5 Amherst 256-0060

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS

NOW HIRING
$8.75/HR
TO START

No experience necessary.
Paid training program.
Flexible hours to fit your schedule.
Travel pay calculated from campus.

Must be 18 years of age or older and Have dependable transportation and a phone.
RGIS is an equal opportunity employer.

Call to set up an interview.
(413) 731-6910
Tuesday-Friday
10am-3pm
NO MONDAY CALLS!

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR

CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS

AMSTEL LIGHT Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	HARPOON Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	WOODCHUCK Case 24 btls $18.99+ dep	FREE Pint Glass With the purchase of Samuel Adams 12 pack $9.99 + dep
COORS LIGHT 30pk cans $16.49+ dep	BUSCH 30pk cans $12.99+ dep	KEYTONE LIGHT 30pk cans $11.49+ dep	Choose from Boston Lager Boston Ale I.P.A. Octoberfest
BUSCH Case 24 btls $9.99+ dep	M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99+ dep	PABST Case 24 btls $9.49+ dep	While supplies last!
NEWCASTLE 12pk btls $11.99+ dep	BASS 12pk btls $11.99+ dep	J.W. DUNDEE 12pk btls $6.99+ dep	Sale ends 9-21-00

333 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours Mon – Sat 9am – 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. ID's checked by Legal Age Software.

ANTHONY'S

HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT AND MORE!!!

GENTLEMEN, ALWAYS 18+
150 ENTERTAINERS WEEKLY,
MONTHLY FEATURE ACTS &
MONTHLY DRINK SPECIALS

ANTHONY'S
500 NEW LUDLOW RD.
SOUTH HADLEY, MA

CLUB-LINE
413/579-1621
HOT-LINE 413/579-6969
WWW.ANTHONYS.NET

LADIES, WELCOME BACK!
"THE CENTERFOLDS"
ALL-MALE REVIEW
SUNDAY SEPT. 17TH

BUY YOUR TICKETS NOW AND SAVE $2

18+ SHOW

ALWAYS TAKING APPLICATIONS FOR ENTERTAINERS - NO EXPERIENCE NECCESSARY!

confidence, pride,
[grit]
and plenty of time
to shower before calculus.

In Army ROTC, you'll get to do some pretty challenging stuff. Stuff that builds character and discipline. Not to mention muscles. You'll also learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. Talk to your Army ROTC advisor to find out more. And get ready to sweat a little.

LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
(413) 545-2321

Festival served with Fleck and Cheese

COURTESY THE STRING CHEESE INCIDENT

Three performances by The String Cheese Incident highlighted a wonderful weekend of music in Great Barrington, MA earlier this month.

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

Berkshire Mountain Music Festival
Great Barrington, MA
Sept. 8

Ever since I missed last year's Berkshire Mountain Music Festival (Berkfest), I could not wait for this year's to arrive. I bought my tickets extra early, ensuring my place at the festival. As the weekend of August 12th drew closer, my friends and I prepared for what was going to be an awesome weekend. We packed our bags and hit the Mass Pike hoping to make it to the opening gates in about 2 p.m., the same time the music was set to begin.

We had a beautiful scenic ride and arrived in Great Barrington, MA on schedule. We were flagged into the festival grounds and were anticipating an easy entrance and camp set-up. However, the festival staff had other ideas as they ushered us to the Auxilary Lot, six miles from the campgrounds. As far as I know, last year's festival entertained about four thousand people with this year's expecting a few thousand more. Unfortunately for most of the fans and the poor people of Great Barrington an estimated fifteen thousand people showed up. If you do not know, this many people converging on a small town can cause many logistical problems. Primarily, traffic! The two buses taking people from the auxiliary lot to the festival grounds were backed up bumper to bumper along the entire route. To make a long story short, we ended up waiting in that parking lot for almost nine hours and missing all of Friday's music.

After our first day was spoiled by Gameday's poor organization and crowd control, we were ready to hear some good music and that was what we got. This year's line-up is the best at a festival that I have ever heard. The first band that I caught on Saturday was UMASS favorite Iiggle the Handle. For their performance, Iiggle revealed earlier in the week that they would be performing a musical costume, a la Phish, for their Berkfest performance. They decided to cover in its entirety, Paul Simon's Graceland album. The highlight came when they came to "You Can Call Me Al". When their set concluded after a few original songs, I moved to the main stage in anticipation of hearing one of the best single nights of music.

The night's festivities began with the String Cheese Incident joined by Keller Williams. Having never seen String Cheese, I was very impressed with their unique sound and variety of music they play. Equally impressive was Keller Williams, who opened the show with a few solo songs off of his album Breathe. The highlight of the set came when SCI busted out with a cover of the Grateful Dead's classic "Franklin's Tower."

Following SCI was Bela Fleck and the Flecktones. Other than a short opening set for Dave Matthews in 1997, this was my first time seeing Bela and the Tones. This group is famed as one of the most musically talented bands playing today. Each member is a master of his instrument, especially Future Man, who has invented his own drum-wave machine. The highlight of their set came when DJ Logic joined the band to finish their set and encore, where they performed "Sinister Minister."

The music on the main stage was over due to the Great Barrington town curfew, so they headed inside to the two ski lodges. I headed to the Lower Lodge for one of my favorite bands, Soulive. As I made my way closer to the stage, I realized that Soulive was the second band on the lodge's line-up, along with Aaron and John from Percy Hill. At about midnight, Soulive took the stage and played a thunderous set to a jam-packed crowd in the stuffy lodge. When the last note of the night was played, everyone retired to the campsites knowing that another great day of music was in store.

Sunday's line-up on the main stage was surely a line-up that would not be soon forgotten for a long time. The first large headliner to take the stage was Galactic. These guys bring the funk. The screeching sax and soulful lyrics are what set this band apart. Up next was Deep Banana Blackout, the first time I was to see them. Unfortunately for their growing fan base, this performance was the last for Jen Durkin, the excitable front woman with the beautiful, soaring voice. DBB put on a great show with lots of energy and plenty of funk to go around. They will be making a stop at Pearl Street on November 9th, so make sure to catch them.

Following DBB, was the weekend's third installment of the String Cheese Incident. They put on another solid performance, showing their range of diverse musical skills. To close the weekend, Medeski Martin and Wood played a curfew-shortened set to the delight of the massive crowd. MMW was one of the deciding reasons for many people to come to Berkfest.

Personally, I was most excited to have heard two full sets by String Cheese Incident. Be sure to catch them when they come to the Calvin on Sunday October 29th, as part of their Northeast Halloween Run.

wmua

continued from page 5

"The change was instituted by a student programmer, and every time a format changes, everything has to be started all over again. Most people will turn off after the jazz show is off. We want to be known for all kinds of unique programming, but we define our blocks fairly liberally. I've heard world music on jazz shows and rap on blues shows, so it isn't like we have a policeman enforcing the block format."

General Manager Dan Barowy wouldn't comment any further than to say that the block programming adds to the diversity of the station.

Currently, the block programming versus format debate is a once a year event, usually happening at the beginning of the semester. Further debate is forgotten as the station needs to get into the annual groove. An issue that caused more contention was the involvement of the community in the station, with at least one person, Maggie Ridden, suggesting that the local presence chases off interested students.

WMUA(The Community Presence)

The community's involvement in WMUA has been a source of contention to some who have suggested that, because of their involvement, they control the station to their own ends. Others suggested the presence of the community is a positive one, providing the station with a number of trained individuals who can impart their knowledge on younger students.

There was a diversity of opinions on the presence of the community members, as showed by those who believed that the community should be there to those who saw their presence in varying shades of gray.

Siegel said WMUA was an interesting hybrid in having a community presence, as it added flavor to the station, giving both students and members of the community a way to interact with one another towards a common goal. He said that those individuals can help with such things as training and underwriting (an important way that WMUA makes money).

He did acknowledge that there is some tension for shows. However, tension for getting shows isn't as extreme as Ridden's suggestion that community members were making some interested students feel unwelcome, thus taking away from the student aspect of the station.

"I don't really know if we're always for the campus," Ridden said, echoing Rose's earlier view.

Lind said that while he believed it was possible that the community brought something to the station, it was possible that there were students who knew enough about Jazz or blues to put together successful shows.

McKendry indicated only that some community members felt that they had more say in the station than they actually did, but that their overall presence wasn't so bad.

Barowy mirrored the sentiment, saying that while their presence was necessary, "a real balance has to be found," as students are the priority of the station.

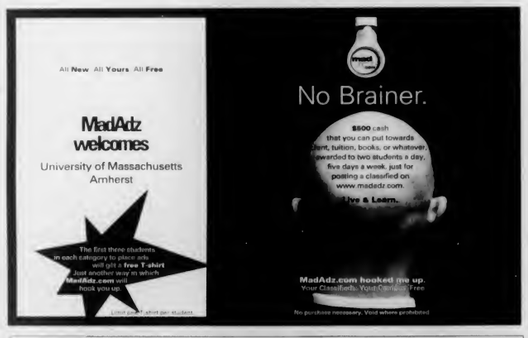
"We want this station to be accessible to students first and the community second." He did acknowledge that balancing the two interests can be difficult.

WMUA(The Future)

While tensions may simmer under the surface, there are no major changes in sight for the developing station. Community members will still be DJs and the music will still be heard in blocks. Any major change would have to be gradual, according to Annand, and while some indicated that they'd be interested to see what would happen if such a change were to occur, the station seems to, at least for now, exist comfortably.

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Lifeirower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST FITNESS CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080



All New All Yours All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt
Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds. Yours Online. Free
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS
ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

Breakaway Sports & Fitness
Student Membership
$249/year
$139/semester
Free Weights | Batting Cages | Aerobics | Indoor Soccer League
549-3638
Route 116, near campus on bus line

McMurphy's Presents
Halfway to St. Patrick's Day
BLARNEY BLOWOUT
Saturday September 16 Live Music by "The Tinkers"
4-7 PM Free
*Food at Noon
*Prizes
Positive ID Required

Cast away idea of paying your dues

By Brian Lowry
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD - When Anna Paquin, then 11, won a best supporting actress Oscar in 1994 for The Piano, a writer friend quipped to an actor, "How does it feel to know a 10-year-old is at the top of your profession? I don't see any kids that age writing movies."

Certainly, most people would like to think their job requires a degree of special skill that someone couldn't stagger in off the street with zero experience and design a building, churn out an entertaining script or, to cite a closer-to-home example, pen an informative column about the television industry.

Yet as actors stood onstage Sunday thanking producers, agents and managers (followed occasionally by spouses and mothers) while cradling Emmys, it was hard not to think about all the people who stumble and bungle their way into on-air professions such as acting and broadcasting with no previous training, including 16-new invaders thrust into the spotlight by CBS' "Survivor," some of whom attended the ceremony.

Even the also-rans from "Survivor" have quickly parlayed their participation in the show, not the folks who produced, edited or conceived it, mind you, but the ones forced to eat enormous bug larvae into parts in primetime TV shows. Winner Richard Hatch will tape an appearance this week on CBS' "Becker," while fellow-island inmates Gervase Peterson, Jenna Lewis and Joel Klug will guest-star on "Nash Bridges." Four members of the group will climb into "The Hollywood Squares." Lewis will play a resistance fighter who survives (get it?) a plane crash in an episode of the new UPN series "Freedom," while Peterson turned up on that network's "The Hughleys" on Monday.

Sonja Christopher, the first ousted contestant, is slated for a guest role on "Diagnosis Murder," and Susan Hawk will appear on "DAG." Dr. Sean Kennift became the medical correspondent for "Extra."

This trend hardly begins and ends with the "Survivor" gang. Darva Conger, who said, "I just want to go back to my real life" in her first interview after answering the question "Who Wants to Marry a Multi-Millionaire?" in Fox's much-lampooned special, has since posed for Playboy and regularly shows up to hit out at various celebrity functions.

Monica Lewinsky became a commercial spokeswoman and proved on "Saturday Night Live" that it's possible to play oneself poorly. Various O.J. Simpson trial figures, including Paula Barbieri and Brian "Kato" Kaelin, landed acting gigs, and the latter hosted a radio talk show.

Athletes leave the field, shower and seemingly walk straight into movie roles and the broadcast booth. From Brian Bosworth to Dennis Rodman. So do coaches, at least on the latter front, bringing a level of insider knowledge to the color commentary often balanced against an inability to articulate ideas - until 98-pound weaklings in broadcasting school must want to jump off a ledge.

Seeing these announcements drip out, how must actors feel? So much for honing one's craft and enduring auditions. The producers and executives who hire them don't put much stock in what they do, clearly, if they'll blithely turn Shaquille O'Neal, (ever seen one of his postgame interviews?) into a movie star.

The rule for Christopher, 62, is especially vexing in light of the many actresses disenfranchised by having the audacity to be born before the Johnson administration. Given all the 50- and 60-year-old actresses out there hungry for work and completely ignored, is this really the best the casting department could do? Two tides are at work here, both of them pretty pathetic. One involves the shockingly low price of admission to the once-select ranks of celebrity, the ultimate commentary on a society more impressed with fame than talent, with notoriety than merit.

The other stream, related to the first, stems from creative bankruptcy and fear leading to the belief programmers must find a promotional hook or gimmick to corral the attention of viewers and combat the flood of choices available to them.

Put on quality shows with talented actors and hope the word gets out? Why struggle with that challenge when you can grab whatever's burning brightest at that particular moment and try to light a fire before the spark flickers out?

That rest assured, in most instances that ember doesn't glow for long, which means the "Survivor" bunch barring any true discernible talent, rare in these cases will be discarded as soon as it's clear the public has moved on to something else. As proof, think of those would-be luminaries mentioned above, or the early

$1-million winners on "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire," who, at last count, haven't graced any People magazine covers lately.

Barenaked Ladies follow successful Stunt With Pink Floyd style dark side of Maroon

By Stephanie Swanburg
Washington State University

BARENAKED LADIES
Maroon
Reprise Records

(U-WIRE) PULLMAN, Wash. - The Barenaked Ladies have been screaming, and nobody's been paying attention. After fans spin their latest release, Maroon, they'll have to.

The Ladies have always been an immature, fun band. Rolling Stone magazine has rightly dubbed them "The reigning kings of geek pop. Canadian division." Songs like "One Week," "If I Had A Million Dollars," and "Grade 9" overshadow their albums, making us laugh at what funny little men they are.

But what about songs like "Straw Hat and Old Dirty Hank," about a farmer who stalks a celebrity, culminating in the lines "I know your address. I ring the bell/I bring you flowers and a .22 with shells."

It is not a nice band. We forget that. We know it dabbles in truth and coolness, we just haven't figured out why.

Maroon isn't your average Barenaked Ladies album. Sure, it is half made of cute songs like "Pinch Me" with lyrics laced with adolescent humor like "I could hide out under there/I just made you say underwear," so never fear, fans, but it also explores the darker side of existence.

Maybe it was band member Kevin Hearns' battle with leukemia. Maybe it's the addition of the Rolling Stones' producer Don Was. Or maybe they were just sick of singing about the X-Files and Sailor Moon.

Whatever it was, the group takes the other half of this album in a much darker direction. From "Conventioneers," a song that follows an office one night stand, ending with the sardonic line "It'd be great if you transferred out of state," to the serial-adulterer anthems like "The Humor of the Situation" and "Off the Hook," where it accuses the wronged party of blindness - "You wanted to believe him/He could get away with murder one/and you would clean the smoking gun."

And if you're not convinced by these, the softcore noir, maybe "Helicopters," in which the Ladies sing about a town devastated by war and pierce a vein of truth with the line "A world that loves its tears must hate the protest singer." Or the grand finale "Tonight is the Night I Fell Asleep at the Wheel," describing the carnage of a fatal car accident.

"I guess it's over now/ because I've never seen so much ..... blood/.../ In all the confusion there's something serene/ I'm just a posthumous part of the scene/.../ I can see my face slump with a grin/.../ and you're the last thing on my mind."

Musically, it still sounds like the Barenaked Ladies. Listen closely and you'll hear the happy strains of "It's All Been Done" and other pop rock wonders. In fact, it sometimes sounds like the Stones thanks to producer Was.

But there's something about the dark side of their moon that makes them rock just that much more. Remember, like the Emperor, the group has been trying to show us that they are Barenaked, not clad in the wholesome PG goodness we've been accusing them of.

COURTESY JAY BLAKESBERG

With their new project, Maroon, rock fans can only dream of Barenaked Ladies.

Emmy's a pitiful shame

Though this past week's Emmy awards would like you to think that the absolute best shows on television were sent home with prizes, the truth remains that the decision-making committee is a bunch of worthless bumbling idiots who can't give credit where credit is due.

The big news surrounding this year's production was the addition of several younger members to help choose who should bring home the gold. As you may remember, last year's show was criticized highly for its almost entire shunning of shows that seem to target younger audiences. Shows like "The Sopranos" and "Friends" came up empty while "The Practice" and "Ally McBeal" cleaned up. In previous years, "Frasier," "NYPD Blue" and "ER" have dominated the ceremonies, while tremendous series such as "Party of Five" were completely ignored.

The first and most obvious mistake made this year was the complete idolization of "The West Wing." The series is boring, hackneyed and has a dire hard audience of about five people. The only reason that "The West Wing" actually had any recognition at all is because it is the only new series from the fall of 1999 that is still around. Promising attempts like "Action" and "Get Real" turned out to be unwatchable cancellation victims, which left "The West Wing" looking like a gem. In reality, the show is not even the best new series of the year. "Malcolm in the Middle" deserves that title.

The fact that "The West Wing" won the award for Best Drama Series and "The Sopranos" did not is an utter shame. Any five minutes of "The Sopranos" is better than the entire first season of "The West Wing." And I'm pretty sure that this was the exact quote in 1998 when "The Practice" beat out "The Sopranos" in the same category.

The second major mistake that been made year after year for the past 10 seasons. "Friends" is one of the best-getting dy series on television. The only award that "Friends" has ever won is Best Supporting Actress in 1998 for Lisa Kudrow. It has been nominated almost every year for Best Comedy Series and has never seen victory. "Frasier" won for five years in a row, which was the first hint to the academy that the committee was too old, and not catering to a younger audience. Of all of the series nominated for any award, "Friends" is the most watched with the highest ratings every week, and the youngest viewers. You wouldn't know this by the miniscule amount of recognition that it has received at the Emmys.

With all of the terrific comedy series on television such as "Friends," "Frasier," "Ally McBeal," "Spin City" and especially "The Simpsons," the series that walked home with the title was, surprisingly, "Will and Grace." Though very funny, "Will and Grace" has definite roots in several other series from which it clearly draws material, these series being, "Friends," "Frasier," and "Ally McBeal." Am I the only person who noticed this huge oversight?

Who knows, maybe next year "The Gina Davis Show" will walk away with the award for Best Comedy Series, and "The Sopranos" will be beaten out by a heart-wrenching drama about Jack Lemmon's battle with a swollen prostate.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

The Note with Ryan Benharris

You take the good, you take the bad, you take them all and there you have... The Daily Collegian.

Mike's Amaizing 4 Acre Massachusetts Minuteman Corn Maze
665-8331
Weekends 11am-5pm
Warner Farm, 23 So. Main St. Sunderland (across from the Millstone Market)

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST
WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE
WEDNESDAY - Latin Night with DJ Creme
$2 cover - Spinning salsa, merengue, & Latin rhythms
THURSDAY - The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENTS
$2 cover before 10:30 - Featuring DJ Fezz spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
FRIDAY & SATURDAY - The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house
Spun by SVD productions DJ's: Fezz, Creme, Uneek, & Dell
Featuring weekly drink specials, outdoor patio, & upscale microbrews
This week's special is Mike's Hard Lemonade
LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 259-1000

PIZZA PAPA JOHN'S
UMASS/HAMPSHIRE/AMHERST COLLEGE SPECIAL
Now Hiring Delivery Drivers
Earn $12+ Per Hour
OCMP
One 14" Large One Topping Pizza $6.99
One 14" Large Pizza With One Topping, Breadsticks & A 2-Liter of Coca-Cola $12.99
3 Large 1 Topping Pizzas $19.99
Call 586-7272 For Fast, Free Delivery!
Open Until 1am Sunday-Thursday & 3am Friday & Saturday

NEIT resources
We've got you covered.
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
Sauza Tequila 750 $10.99
Rubinoff 1.75 $9.99
Absolute 750 $13.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack $9.99 +Dep
Beck's, Beck's Dark 12 Pack $9.99 +Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs $10.99 +Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack $9.99 +Dep
Spaten Lager 6 Pack $4.99 +Dep
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

■ soccer

continued from page 16

All in all, the UMass goalkeeper made nine saves on the night, five in the second half. Included in that mix were three point blank stops on Bowie, a member of the Canadian National Team.

"She was our hero, our savior tonight," said UMass junior forward Brooke Bartlett of Podhrasky. "They had some big time opportunities, but Julie really came through. Every time she would make a save, she made our team work a little bit harder."

In her first five games with the Minutewomen, Podhrasky has allowed only five goals. Although her record 12-3[illegible] may not seem stellar, two of those losses came in 1-0 games. On the other hand, both of her wins have been shutouts.

Needless to say, the 5-foot, 10-inch netminder has already had a big impact since coming to Amherst from Clemson, where she spent the last two seasons.

And, last night, it was the No. 6 ranked team in the nation who learned first hand just how good Podhrasky is.

"We had our opportunities, but their keeper made some great saves," UConn women's soccer coach Len Tsantiris said. "If we had that second goal, then it would have been a different game."

"She is very good," continued Tsantiris about Podhrasky. "We recruited her because she is a good keeper."

Next up to face Podhrasky and the Minutewomen will be Rhode Island on Sunday in the Atlantic 10 opener for both teams. Hopefully for UMass, the game will be just another chance for its keeper to showcase her skills to another unsuspecting opponent. Only this time, the Maroon and White are hoping for a better fate than they received against the Huskies.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Marching to the Saints!

The Massachusetts men's soccer team travels to Siena College for a non-conference matchup with the Saints on Sunday.

■ MLB

continued from page 16

but also game to game. More good teams equal more tough games. This is major. I'll give it 25 percent.

The Red Sox have had a core of players that have devastated their chances by performing far below expectations this season. After last year's breakout second half, Jason Varitek was thought by many as the second best catcher in the American League. The team believed he could put up big numbers approaching 30 home runs and 100 runs batted in. Seemingly suffering from a season long injury, Varitek has struggled with just 9 HR's and 60 RBI's.

Trot O'Leary has improved his numbers from year to year since joining the club. This year he was expected to at least match last year's numbers. Unfortunately, last year's team RBI leader and playoff hero has been horrific. He has only 11 homeruns and was batting in the low 100's for a few months. A small hot streak has brought his average up to the mid 200's.

Ramon Martinez pitched very well in the last few weeks of the regular season and into the playoffs last year. He was expected to step in as a solid number two pitcher behind his brother, Pedro. "Dad" Martinez, to solidify the starting rotation. This is set another major disappointment as Ramon has the lowest average innings pitched per start of any starter having pitched as many games failing to get out of the first inning much too often.

All of these disappointments combined with the unfortunate injury of third baseman John Valentin has to make this the largest slice of pie there is. I'll give it 50 percent.

Well, there you have it. Collegian Sports' own pie, sliced up nicely for you. Disappointing performances and the improvement of small walkovers have hurt the Red Sox chances for a spot in the playoffs. It is amazing that through all these obstacles, the team still has a shot at the Wild Card spot.

If they beat the odds and make a run into the playoffs, Red Sox Nation will have to suspend their pessimism an extra week or so. Oh well, at least we got rid of John "Wanaaaaaay Back" Wasdin.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian correspondent.

■ NFL

continued from page 16

Speaking of go figure, how did St. Louis' defense go from one of the NFL's stiffest last year, to a defense that has been torn apart in the first two weeks? They gave up 36 points to Denver in week one and 34 to Seattle last week. They have looked nothing like the defense that dominated teams last season, and have reverted back to the defense that would usually be on the receiving end of whitewashes before last season.

Thank goodness that the Rams have Kurt Warner and that explosive offense. Warner has thrown for 827 yards in two weeks and is showing no signs of slowing down from his torrid pace of a year ago. If you think that Warner is going to slow down this week, think again. They are playing San Francisco at home.

The 49ers have nothing. The new rule in the NFL this year is when the 49ers play, they should play with the Looney Tunes music in the background. The 49ers backup quarterback is Rick Mirer – "a bedi, a bedi, a bedi, that's all folks."

Speaking of which, the New England Patriots better be careful, or they will be saying "that's all, folks" to their season before you know it. They are off to a 0-2 start after a brutal loss on Monday night to the Jets.

I don't care if you are on the road or not; if you are up 19-7 with seven minutes left in the fourth quarter, you have to win these types of games if you want to be competitive this year. They wasted an 82-yard game on the ground from Kevin Faulk. They also wasted a ton of opportunities to score in the red zone in the first half and could only come away with four Adam Vinatieri field goals and a 12-7 lead.

If the Pats don't capitalize on their scoring opportunities and if they don't protect Drew Bledsoe better than they did the first two weeks (12 sacks allowed), it could be a long season in Foxboro.

Staying in the AFC, the big surprise this weekend was the Oakland Raiders. They fell behind 24-7 at halftime at Indianapolis, and then went on a scoring blitz scoring 31 unanswered points to steal a win.

Rich Gannon became the first quarterback in a long time to rush for three touchdowns in one game...actually the first since last week when Daunte Culpepper did it for the Vikings, but hey, in college, one week is a long time.

As for the Colts, they showed that they still have some growing up to do. They made a lot of mistakes in the second half and lost what should have been an insurmountable lead at home. Although the talent is there with Peyton Manning, Marvin Harrison and Edgerrin James, the Colts still have a problem of putting teams away. They build up a big lead early and then their defense proceeds to give up the lead as fast as it took to build it up. It cost them a couple of games last season and has already cost them one game this year.

This is the part of the article where I would make my weekly NFL game selections. However, after last week's performance in which the Cincinnati Bengals had a better performance than me, I won't even bother this week.

My quest for a winner last week was like Jacques Costeau trying to find a dry spot in the ocean. There was no chance of finding one. So, you can pick the games yourself this week.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist.

'Casual fans' take notice: 'RealNFL' is not for you

By Leonard Shapiro
The Washington Post

Terry O'Neil spent two years with the New Orleans Saints as the team's cap expert and contract negotiator, and before that had more than 20 years as a major player in network TV sports, once serving as executive producer for NBC Sports.

Fired by the Saints in a massive shake-up after the 1999 season, O'Neil is putting his passion for media and pro football into "RealNFL," a new Web site that will cover the game from a former insider's perspective. He also enlisted former Rams coach Dick Vermeil and former Saints special teams coach Bobby April and former Saints defensive coordinator Zaven Yaralian to write for the site. San Francisco General Manager Bill Walsh has promised to contribute when he leaves the 49ers, which could happen after this season.

"We all got fired on merit," O'Neil said of his Saints tenure. "We lost 23 of our last 29 games, so it wasn't that surprising. I was in withdrawal, playing a lot of golf. I wanted to stay current with the league, but I really couldn't find anything I thought was that well done, so I started talking to Vermeil, Bill Walsh, people like that, and we decided to get into it.

"The requirement (for writing for the site) is that you must have worked in the game as a coach, an executive or a consultant. We're only looking to attract the serious fans. I've asked casual fans not to log on. This is really for strictly hard-core enthusiasts."

O'Neil has had some interesting pieces, including a thoughtful examination of the Washington Redskins in relation to the salary cap. "As a thrifty former NFL club contract negotiator, you probably think I hate the Redskins' moves this year," O'Neil wrote recently. "Actually, it's the opposite. I love their attacking mentality."

O'Neil even took a shot at himself in his preseason review of the Saints, his old team. "Let's be fair to the new Saints general manager, Randy Mueller," he wrote. "The mess he inherited in New Orleans was the NFL's version of the apocalypse."

New keeper key to US's chances

By Graham L. Jones
Los Angeles Times

Only 14 months ago, Briana Scurry made the most memorable save of her career, flinging herself to her left at the Rose Bowl to turn away a shot by China's Liu Ying, earning the United States a world championship.

Now, she watches from the bench.

Scurry, an Olympic gold medalist in 1996 and a veteran of 103 international games, has yielded her starting position on the U.S. women's soccer team to Siri Mullinix.

Mullinix, 22, from Greensboro, N.C., will be in the nets here Thursday night against Norway when the U.S. begins its quest for a second gold medal.

"It's all right," Scurry, 29, said after practice Tuesday evening. "It's been a tough year for me. I got injured and everything and it took too long to heal, so I lost my spot. But I'm confident in my abilities and I always have been.

"So I'm hoping things go well and hoping that we bring (the Olympic title) home again. I'm fine."

The switch from Scurry to Mullinix – besides the retirement of Michelle Akers – is perhaps the most dramatic change to have taken place on the U.S. team since its Women's World Cup victory in 1999.

The rapid rise of Mullinix from No. 4 to No. 1 has left U.S. Coach April Heinrichs in an enviable position. "What we have are two phenomenal goalkeepers, and I think we're probably the envy of the rest of the teams in the world," Heinrichs said earlier this year. "It's a wonderful position to be in.

"I'll start Siri, but if something were to happen to Siri – she's still a young goalkeeper – I have great confidence that Bri will be there when her country needs her."

Mullinix, a University of North Carolina graduate, might be young, but she has plenty of experience. She started playing soccer at 5 and has been a goalkeeper from the start.

"I've always had the dream of someday playing in the Olympics," she said.

Now, she gets her chance. The U.S. plays Norway, China and Nigeria in the first round, with the top two teams advancing to the semifinals. The other four-team group features Australia, Brazil, Germany and Sweden. The gold medalist is expected to come from the U.S. group.

"It's an incredible bracket," Mullinix said. "They're all going to be very tough, very competitive games. Two great teams out there at the same time. Right now, I'm just focusing on Norway."

Mullinix shut out the Norwegians, 1-0, in the final of the Algarve Cup in Portugal in March, as the U.S. won the tournament for the first time.

It was her first international success and one that convinced Heinrichs she had made the correct decision in cutting World Cup '99 backups Tracy Ducar and Saskia Webber and elevating Mullinix to No. 1, ahead of the injured Scurry.

"Making her a starter is the single biggest thing I could tell her," Heinrichs said. "I don't need to have words for it. She knows, and these players know, that if they're a starter they've earned it and they deserve it and they're ready for it and that the coaching staff and the other players have confidence in them."

WANTED: Volunteers to serve on the Judicial Hearing Board

A great experience for students who:

are interested in student leadership
wish to enhance communication skills
want to build their RESUME!
want to learn about the University's judicial system

Requirements include:
full time enrollment
2.0 G.P.A.
no current judicial sanction

You can pick from one of three training sessions
all sessions held in campus center

Monday October 2	Tuesday October 3	Wednesday October 11
7:00-9:30 p.m.	7:00-9:30 p.m.	4:00-6:30 p.m.
Room 903	Room 903	Room 903

Applications available at The DEAN OF STUDENTS Office
Located in 227 Whit[illegible]
Deadline: 5:00 Thursday, Sept[illegible]

Any Questions? Please Co[illegible]
Paul Vasconcellos, Terry O'D[illegible]ell or [illegible]ham
Dean of Stude[illegible] Office
227 Whitmore
Phone: 545-6281

DON'T MISS OUT ON THIS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY!!!

Low Student Airfares

Eurailpasses

More Than 100 Departure Cities

Study Abroad

student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT

studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong
Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zürich Istanbul

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0080

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOX
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Thurs @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 7:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Made in USA
CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
Stencil #15 www.stencil.com
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

Think different
THINK AMAZING SEX.
THINK LOTS OF BEER.
Now think Collegian.

Think about working at ninth most read college newspaper in America, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Interested? There is an All-Staff meeting TONIGHT @ 6:00 p.m. in our Newsroom Room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Particpation in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian does not guarantee sex or beer.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground. Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments. FREE HEAT/HOT WATER, Fully applianced kitchen, designer bath On PVTA busline. Call 665-3856

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900 586-2166

Excellant Student Car! 1988Merc Tracer Hatchback, New Gastank, Recent Tires, Exhaust. Needs Emergency Break for Sticker $1500 OBO 413-665-3630

AUTO FOR SALE

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

1989 Dodge Colt Wagon 143k runs fine. $800 549-5448

1990 Subaru Legacy Wagon. Original owner. New engine 90,000k asking $1800 548-9283

96Mercury Station Wagon excellent condition. 117k miles/ac $2000 413-467-3938

CHILDCARE

Parents Helper 2 great children. Mix of after-school, evenings & weekends. 4-15hr/week 549-5448

COMPUTERS

Scanner for Mac HPscanjet 11c $50 or bo 253-9140

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT
Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland.
This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays.
Sugarloaf Estates
665-3856

Personal Care Attendent for male quad evenings and weekend $10.12 per hour. Call 546-0666

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT JOB
KITCHEN STAFF NEEDED
Work in low pressure, well maintained kitchen. Positions available for both skilled and untrained staff. Located next to campus. Help maintain kitchen and prep and cook meals. Flexible hours. Call today 549-7321

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

FREE PIZZA
with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 · Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pizza. 256-8911

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply with-in After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Paid Internship Seeking creative & responsible students to work for an e-commerce company on campus 30hrs/semester. Call 256-4560

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable
20hrs/wk minimum.
PVTA accessible.
Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle. $7-14/hr. 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM
Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping the Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.
BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifegaurd & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

Personal Assistant Wanted Car a plus. 8:00am - 11pm - pm hours vary. Many shifts available. Call Martina 413-323-9633 or 413-323-7802

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker
Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave, Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

DP DOUGH
is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

ENTERTAINMENT

SUPER K'S Party at The Pub. Sat-16 w/Dj-OK spinning the best in Hip-hop. 18+ to party 21 to drink. For info call Kaif 1-617-460-5476

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Keggerator for sale. $300 or B/O includes refrigerator. Call 413-250-0142

Roller and Inline Skates & Assessories 413-323-5380 www.flywheels.net

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

FURNITURE

Used Fruniture. 12 coaches $65-$100. Free delivery 586-2221

Matching couch, coffee table, lamp, excellent condition $100 or B/O 549-0432

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roomate needed to share two BR apt ASAP $200/mo on bus route 256-3772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRINGBREAK 2001 Hiring On-Campus Reps SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!! Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849 www.gospringbreak.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Maxatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001
Sunspot Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Florida
1-800-426-7710
www.sunspotvacations.com

Need to Advertise?!
Look no Further!
Call
545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gravel to Gravel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Going Places "Sydney"		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Vanished		News	Late Show
WLVI	56		Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Chick Flick"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date	Real TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	★★½ "Dead Presidents" (1995, Drama) Larenz Tate. (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Charlie Rose	(In Stereo)
WGGB	12	25	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Vanished		News	Nightline
WSBK	13		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager "Initiations"		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince		Major League Baseball: Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves. (Live)						★★ "Last Man Standing" (1996)	Bruce Willis
A&E	17		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Mad Dog"		Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Causa Mortis"
CNN	10	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	15	20	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Canned Ham	★★ "The Odd Job Shuffle" (1991, Comedy) Kevin Bacon.				Stein's Money	Stein's Money	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	21		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tiger		On the inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries		Mysteries of the Unexplained		On the inside "Real LAPD"
ESPN	31		Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	42		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "The Wrong Woman" (1995, Drama) Nancy McKeon				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	81		Aw, Uncensrd	Video Music Awards Opening Act (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)						Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK	83		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponge	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	86		Sliders "The Weaker Sex"		★★ "Alien Nation: Dark Horizon" (1994) Gary Graham.				Invasion Earth (Part 3 of 3)				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	97	28	Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies (N)		Welcome to Armageddon (N)		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT	55		ER "Welcome Back, Carter"		Pretender "Flyer" (In Stereo)		★★★ "Dead Calm" (1988, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.				★★★ "Dead Calm" (1988, Suspense)		Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.
USA	52		Walker, Texas Ranger		Strip Poker		U.S. Open Tennis Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)						Strip Poker	Texas Ranger
HBO	33		(5:00)	★ "Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Hodman. PG-13			Inside the NFL (N)		★★½ "Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock. PG-13				G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	51		(5:35)	★★★ "A Perfect World" (1993) Kevin Costner. PG-13					★★½ "Proteus" (1987) Arnold Schwarzenegger.		Fetch (N)		★★ "The Dentist II" (1998) Corbin Bernsen. R	101 Rent Boys
SHOW	50		(5:45)	★★ "Short Circuit 2" (1988, Comedy) Fisher Stevens. PG			★½ "Wrong Thinking" (1999) Drew Barrymore.		Outer Limits		Rude Awaken.		★ "Hellraiser: Bloodline" (1996) Bruce Ramsay.

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

MYSTICAL TREE OF EVIL INTENTIONS, WHY ARE YOUR INTENTIONS EVIL?
I'M SORRY BUT YOU DIDN'T PHRASE YOUR ANSWER IN THE FORM OF A QUESTION.
4/22/00
—OHH YOU'RE GOOD

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

DUKE 3000. GOOD MORNING!
1999. THIS IS ZONKER HARRIS.
JUST WANTED TO LET YOU KNOW I'LL BE COMING IN ON UNITA FLIGHT 349. NO NEED TO SEND A STRETCH LIMO. A SEDAN'S FINE.
ALSO, I DON'T NEED A NANNY. BUT BE OPEN-MINDED. I DON'T WANT THE STAFF TREATING ME LIKE I'M SOME SORT OF BIG DEAL.
OKAY. WHO IS THIS AGAIN?
HMM...SOUNDS LIKE INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS ARE LOW ONE.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

CAN I SEE YOUR HEAD? DOES IT HURT?
NO. THE CREAM JUST MADE IT FALL OUT. I FEEL FINE
SO WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO?
NOT MUCH TO DO BUT SIT HERE AND LET IT GROW OUT.
WELL, IT'S GOOD TO KEEP BUSY IN THESE DIFFICULT TIMES. YOU JUST KEEP ON GROWIN' IT OUT, ROBBO GROWING HAIR ISN'T A "HOBBY," SATCHEL.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

YOU KNOW, USING NO-HAIR CREAM ON YOUR FUR WOULDN'T HAVE JUST "CUT" THE LONG HAIRS - YOU'D BE ALL NAKED NOW YOU'D BE A SKIN-KITTY.
WELL, AT LEAST PEOPLE COULD FINALLY HAVE SEEN MY TATTOO.
WHAT?!
NUTHIN'. NEVER MIND. NO TATTOO.

Over The Hedge By Fry + Lewis

RJ, TELL US MORE STORIES OF THE EIGHTIES. WAS THERE REALLY NO INTERNET?
YUP...NO INTERNET...NO E-MAIL...NO AOL...NO AMAZON.COM.
NO AMAZON?! BUT WHERE DID YOU BUY BOOKS IN THE EIGHTIES?
WE HAD THESE THINGS CALLED "STORES". THEY HAD THE BOOKS. YOU BOUGHT 'EM THERE.
YOU CARRIED THEM HOME YOURSELF? WERE THEY HEAVY?
NOT "TV GUIDE."

Horoscopes

Aries (Mar 21- Apr 20) You are tapping into great inspiration and motivation – and it's about time! You won't be at loss for good ideas and the energy to manifest them. You don't need to be self-conscious, but don't underestimate the influence of your smallest actions since all eyes are on you.

Taurus (Apr 21-May 20) You now have access to some resolution at work. After much discussion and disagreement, you and your coworkers will arrive at a compromise, either with each other or about a specific project.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) When your own problems seem overwhelming and you feel alone, it is best to step out of your office and take a good look around. Watch a movie or the news, or just listen to a friend.

Cancer (June 22 - July 22) This is a good time to stand back and look at the bigger picture. Do this with others and the view will even be more intriguing. Viewing your life from this perspective will provide tremendous energy and peace. It will also whet your appetite for further exploration.

Leo (July 23 - Aug 23) You may offend someone with your inherent boldness – but, of course, you're used to this. Leo, it's in your nature to roar; this can't be helped. With opposition comes change, and change is inevitable. To step into the new, one must leave behind the old. Face opposition with composure and watch how gracefully the old one withers and the new grows appears.

Virgo (Aug 24-Sept 22) Nothing else will be as productive as speaking quietly into with your partner. This will fix things that are broken and restore strength anything that's been weakened by neglect. Engage in meaningful conversation in which opinions may be freely expressed with out penalty.

Libra (Sept 23 - Oct 23) Attend to the daily tasks that need your attention. Then is such an accumulation that you're bound to feel overwhelmed. Although these duties may be tedious and wearisome and you may loose interest persevere nevertheless. Don't be discouraged if you don't feel you are making any headway.

Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your life is ruled by the creative impulse that draws from imagination. William Blake is your metaphysical ally and William Wegman your creative inspiration. Your versatility, inventiveness, intelligence and passion attract people. Don't just stand there, being bathed in admiration. Become involved with those who are doing on you.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec 21) The times when you look to you for knowledge have the wisdom you need. Their understanding is instinctive and is offered freely. Wisdom knows no age so don't be surprised if these little gems come from a little one. Of course, you may seek counsel from an elder as well. Take pleasure in being entrusted and listen carefully to any information that may shed light on family and career.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 20) When you feel the urge to tumble and career and cannot strike a balance, reclaim your priorities. You have the energy to accommodate both but will have to temporarily spend it on one to achieve stability. Don't participate this since small misunderstandings may turn into larger problems. Times you won't have the resources to put out.

Aquarius (Jan. 21-Feb. 19) The road you face may well be bumpy but it promises also to be exhilarating. You are doing something important and you know it – this is something that will benefit everyone. This could prove to be a path of self-discovery as well.

Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20) You have a good feel for financial matters today. However, don't be fooled by a deal too good to be true or a wolf in sheep's clothing. Study all the facts and uncover all the lies before you make any decisions.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 78	HIGH: 68	HIGH: 65
LOW: 52	LOW: 52	LOW: 50

Quote of the Day

"The American Red Cross invites you to become a platelet donor."

–Jane Smith
Platelet Pheresis Recruitment Rep

ACROSS
1 Joyce Carol Oates book
5 Staffs
9 Tooth part
13 Type of blocker or wave
14 Asian nurse
15 Nile dam
17 Was in a choir
18 Comic Rudner
19 Debonair
20 Saturn and Mars
22 Epicure
24 Rara
25 Grand —, Mich.
26 Make less taran
29 Pieres
31 Gawkar
32 Verdi opera
33 Snoop
36 Wrath
37 Mexican food
40 Maul souvenir
41 Pioneered
42 Molecule part
43 Move like a baby
45 Varnish ingredient
47 Pumpernickel and rye
48 Physicial Einstein
51 Coasted
52 Mark Twain's forte
54 Bird expert
58 Secret agents
59 Encourage
61 Sugar unit
62 Nervous
63 Takes to court
64 God of love
65 Not as much
66 — tube
67 Does Easter eggs

DOWN
1 Recipe qty.
2 Mend
3 Still-active volcano
4 Lion of industry
5 Balsam or Sheen
6 Wrong
7 — King Cole
8 Track carpet
9 Lake Friday
10 Seizes power from 11 Hindu teacher
12 Blacktopped
16 Prolits
21 Tennis champ Chris
23 Mountain nymph
26 Earth
27 Meanie
28 Went on the lam
29 Mountain-climber's aid
30 Mild cheese
32 — spumante
33 Type of bargain
34 Caffail
35 Kennel sounds
38 Browners ovens
39 Sharp
44 Marked down
45 Playtime at school
46 Obliterates
47 Most melancholy
48 Helper abbr.
49 Part of a jacket
50 Seawater
53 They're wise!
53 "I — be dreaming!"
55 Inter.
56 Orchestral instrument
57 Loch monster
60 Regret

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

IT'S BACK
•$2 GUINNESS
PINTS START
TONITE
•1/2 WAY TO
ST. PATTY'S
DAY BASH
SAT. NITE
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

Dilbert By Scott Adams

SPEED IS THE KEY TO SUCCESS.
IS IT OKAY TO DO THINGS WRONG IF WE'RE REALLY, REALLY FAST?
UM... NO.
NOW I'M ALL CONFUSED, THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

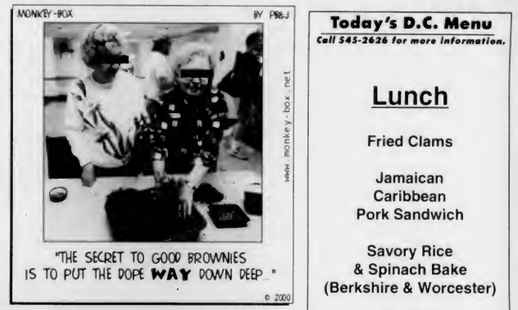
I SCHEDULED A MEETING WITH YOUR BOSS
HE'LL PROBABLY ASK ME TO SPEAK FRANKLY ABOUT ANY PROBLEMS IN THE DEPARTMENT.
THIS COULDN'T GET ANY WORSE.
HE'S CUTE. I MIGHT ASK HIM OUT.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I NEED TO TAKE A CLASS TO LEARN THE NEW TECHNOLOGY
OUR VENDOR'S SALES PERSON WILL TEACH YOU EVERYTHING HE KNOWS.
YOU ONLY NEED THREE "MOIST TOWELETTES" TO GIVE YOURSELF A SPONGE BATH.

Over The Hedge By Fry + Lewis

SO, YOU NEVER DID COME UP WITH A CATCHPHRASE?
I WAS TRYING TOO HARD. YOU CAN'T FORCE A CATCHPHRASE. THEY EITHER COME TO YOU OR THEY DON'T.
"THERE IS NOTHING EITHER GOOD OR BAD, BUT THINKING MAKES IT SO."
WAIT...THAT'S GOOD...BUT IT NEEDS TO BE SIMPLER.
"YOU ARE WHAT YOU THINK." THAT'S MY CATCHPHRASE.
YOU JUST REWROTE SHAKESPEARE.
TOO WORDY. SOMEONE HAD TO.



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Fried Clams

Jamaican Caribbean Pork Sandwich

Savory Rice & Spinach Bake (Berkshire & Worcester)

Caribbean Jerk Tofu (vegan)

Dinner

Chicken Fingers

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Sarah Wingardner, Sarah Wingardner

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Thursday, September 14, 2000 16

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UConn nets 1-0 win

Ranta's first-half goal too much for Minutewomen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CT – Sometimes the turning point of a season can come, in the form of a moral victory.

After all, that is what the Massachusetts women's soccer team took away from a 1-0 loss to regional rival Connecticut last night at Joseph J. Morrone Stadium.

The Minutewomen (3-5) dominated play in the second half and warded off a flurry of UConn pressure in the opening 45 minutes, but Salla Ranta's goal a mere 3:57 into the game proved to be the margin of victory in the contest.

The tally came off a corner kick from the right wing that was originally headed by Jen Carlson before Ranta knocked it into the goal.

UMass played the game without head coach Jim Rudy, who was back home resting from an illness. Assistant coach Dan Magner guided the troops admirably for 90 minutes, but the Huskies managed to get the best of the Minutewomen once again. UConn (2-2-1) has now defeated UMass in seven consecutive meetings with three of the last four contests being decided by one goal.

"Tonight we were playing for two things," Magner said. "Number one, we were playing for Coach Rudy. Number two, we were playing for UMass. I think that Coach should be very proud of his team, because they worked very hard tonight."

UConn, the No. 6 ranked team in the country, got all that it could handle from the Minutewomen throughout the contest. Despite controlling the action in the first half, the Huskies went into the intermission leading by only one goal.

Then, in the second half, UMass finally jumpstarted its offensive attack. However, the Maroon and White just couldn't squeeze the equalizer past UConn keeper Maria Yatrakis.

"We saw that if we could pressure their backs, and make their backs play in an uncomfortable spot, then that would be to our advantage," Magner said. "Our forwards put pressure on them in the second half, but it just would have been nice to nip one in."

Said UConn women's soccer coach Len Tsantiris: "They came out hard in the second half and gave us a lot of problems. I give credit to UMass. They dominated us in the second half."

UMass junior forward Brooke Bartlett was in the middle of most of the action in the second half, creating several opportunities thanks to an assortment of moves both in traffic and in the open field. Her best chance came with 23:45 left in the game, when she weaved through three UConn defenders before firing a shot that Yatrakis tipped over the bar.

"I was hoping to get it in," said Bartlett of the chance. "I was trying to shoot low, but it came off high. I just wanted to keep going forward, so I kept dribbling [through the defenders]."

On the defensive end, UMass keeper Julie Podhrasky had an outstanding night in goal, making nine stops. Despite several saves from in close, including three on Mary Beth Bowie, the early goal by Ranta was just enough to allow UConn to escape with a win.

"With each save that she made tonight, you saw a ripple of confidence go throughout the team," Magner said. "I was so proud of the way that she played." Added Bartlett: "She was our hero, our savior tonight. They had some big time opportunities, but Julie really came through. Every time she would make a save, she made our team work a little bit harder."

Even Tsantiris recognized Podhrasky's efforts in goal, acknowledging that her stellar play kept his team backed against a wall for the entire second half.

"We had our opportunities, but their keeper made some great saves," he said. "If we had that second goal, then it would have been a different game."

Despite its 3-3 record through the first six games of the season, UMass has dropped two one-goal games during that span. And, with the start of the Atlantic 10 season set to begin on Sunday against Rhode Island, there is a reason to believe that a return to the winning ways is just around the corner.

"We aspire to be a Top 20 team like UConn, and this was a great measuring stick tonight," Magner said. "If we play with this type of commitment, enthusiasm and effort all the time, then I wouldn't want to be Rhode Island on Sunday."

In addition, the Minutewomen can also find a bit of solace in knowing that there is at least one more Top 20 team left on the schedule this season. Although a win over Arizona State [scheduled for Sept. 24 in Tempe, AZ] would probably not seem quite as sweet as one over regional rival UConn might have been, don't be surprise if UMass shows another elite club that it can play with the big boys.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Maggie LaBrode and the Massachusetts women's soccer team dropped a heartbreaker to rival UConn last night by a score of 1-0, at Storrs, CT.

Podhrasky's solid play is still not enough for UM

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CT – As the ball traveled past the final UMass defender and onto the right foot of sophomore Mary Beth Bowie, the bench for the Connecticut women's soccer team rose to its feet.

After all, the Huskies had good reason to think that the Canadian product would convert on this golden opportunity, as only UMass goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky stood in the way of the second UConn goal of the night. However, with only 7:30 remaining in a game which the hosts led 1-0, Bowie could all but seal up a win for her club with another tally.

But just like she had done several times before, Podhrasky made a key stop to keep the Huskies from pulling away. This time, the Dallas, TX native met Bowie about 10 yards away from the net before sliding to her left to make the stop.

In the end, though, even Podhrasky's stellar goalkeeping couldn't assure a win for her team. Salla Ranta's goal only 3:57 into the game proved to be enough in a 1-0 win for UConn.

"With each save that she made tonight, you saw a ripple of confidence go throughout the team," said UMass assistant women's soccer coach Dan Magner, who assumed the head coaching duties in the absence of an ill Jim Rudy. "I was so proud of the way that she played."

On numerous occasions last night, Bowie would end up in the right place at the right time. She would have the ball in a one-on-one situation, or even a two-on-one advantage. However, Podhrasky made the save on Bowie each time, even with the knowledge that a second UConn goal might dash any hopes of a UMass victory.

"I didn't even notice [that she was continuously stopping the same player, Bowie]," Podhrasky said. "I don't pay attention to stuff like that. Actually, I would have to say that I felt less pressure after the first goal, because then we knew that there was something to fight for."

Turn to SOCCER page 12

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Goalie Julie Podhrasky made a career-high nine saves in the loss to UConn last night.

Fans ride Raven bandwagon: Sky-high Eagles back to Earth

4th and inches

David Rose

The NFL season has already entered its third week, and if last week is any indication of the rest of the season, let's enjoy the ride.

In my opinion, the team that benefited the most from last week was the Baltimore Ravens. The team that has not had a "contender" since its move from Cleveland took a step in the right direction with its victory over Jacksonville. They survived a 291-yard receiving day from Jimmy Smith and a 17-0 second quarter deficit by going to their vaunted air attack.

Tim Couch without wide receiver Quadry Ismail, quarterback Tony Banks threw for five touchdowns and proved that he could lead his team down the field in the last two minutes to victory. It also helps that he had Shannon Sharpe who told the Jags defense, "You don't even know how to spell DOWNS" as he galloped down the field to haul in the game winning score. Now everyone is jumping on the Baltimore Express. The Ravens have defeated Jacksonville and Pittsburgh in back to back weeks and now play Miami on Sunday night. But be careful which wagon you jump on, it could be a bumpy ride.

Case in point, the loud thud you heard last week could be contributed to one of two things. It might have been everybody falling off the Philadelphia Eagle bandwagon, or me after my weekly NFL picks (Note: I went 5-9-1 last week and currently stand in fourth place. Anybody who wants to give me advice on this week's picks can feel free to come down to the Daily Collegian – you can't do worse than I did). The Eagles followed up their domination of the Cowboys by getting squashed by the New York Giants.

Duce Staley followed up his 201-yard performance in week one with the inspiring numbers of seven carries for eleven yards. The Eagles as a team dropped from 306 yards rushing against Dallas to 36 against the Giants.

While the Eagles offense was sputtering, the Giants offense was omnipotent as they got off to a 24-0 start for the season. The double threat backfield of Tiki Barber and Ron Dayne continued to excel while quarterback Kerry Collins threw for two touchdowns as the offense controlled the ball for close to 39 minutes. If the Giants can continue to get enough offense to support their strong defense, they could be a team to reckoned with in the NFC East.

Speaking of the NFC East, there was another loud sound coming from Sunday. It was Washington owner Daniel Snyder's room becoming his own personal destruction area after the Skins provided a lackluster performance in their 15-10 loss to the Lions in Pontiac.

Think of the comparisons between these two teams over the season's first couple of weeks: the Redskins won the NFC East last year, made the conference semifinals, then went out and signed Jeff George, Bruce Smith, Deion Sanders, Lavar Arrington, Chris Samuels, John Riggins, Art Monk, Michael Jordan, Willie Mays, Mickey Mantle, Ted Williams and anybody else that they could during the off season. After two unimspiring performances, they stand at 1-1. To make matters worse, they lost All-Pro wide out Michael Westbrook for the season with a torn ACL, which is yet another injury caused by artificial turf. If Brad Johnson does not improve the offense soon, we could be in for a (gulp) quarterback controversy.

On the other hand, the Lions had Stoney Case at quarterback in week one, have had no running game, have scored no offensive touchdowns in two weeks and are 2-0. Go figure.

Turn to NFL page 12

Cynical fans search for Wild Card answers

Hit and Run with Jim Pignatiello

As the Red Sox begin to lose their handle on the American League Wild Card race, fans are forced to wonder what happened to this team. During the preseason, Sports Illustrated made the Red Sox their choice to win the World Series and break the team's 82-year championship slump. Sure, the Sox still have a shot at making the playoffs (7 of their next 11 games are against the wild card front-running Cleveland Indians), but it wasn't supposed to be this difficult.

The Sox looked like Secretariat coming out of the blocks in April beginning the season with a record of 25-13, but slipped up in late May and early June and have been unable to find their footing since. Is a team with arguably the best number one pitcher/short-stop/centerfield combination in the league. What happened?

There are so many pieces of this "blame pie" to hand out that it is tough to decide where to begin. Let's look at the problems and the percentage of blame they deserve.

There are some who believe that the "Curse of the Bambino" is upon us once again, destroying the hopes of Red Sox Nation as it has since 1918. It is a tale told to the youngest of Red Sox fans by their parents or grandparents who have suffered through Bucky Dent, Bill Buckner and many more. Since the team traded away this larger than life athlete, the Red Sox have failed to win a World Series, and have come painfully close far too many times. It seems that "The Curse" is destroying our hopes once again. Some, like my grandfather, would give it 100 percent blame. I'll say only five percent.

There is an old belief in something called the "Curse of the Sports Illustrated Cover." This suggests that since the Red Sox were on the cover of the magazine with it stating that they would win the championship, we are destined for failure. This may sound ridiculous, but even Bill Parcells refused to allow the magazine to put the Patriots on the cover back when they went to the Super Bowl (a lot of good that did us). I'm not a fan of this school of thought, zero percent.

Many blame the General Manager, Dan Duquette, for not getting the team enough talent toward the end of the trading deadline in August and off the waiver wire thereafter. While it can be debated until the end of time, it seems to me that the addition of Rolando Arrojo from Tampa Bay was a terrific pickup. He has been pitching like the number two man we have needed all year.

Dante Bichette from Cincinnati and Rico Brogna from Philadelphia (off waivers) are at least serviceable players. Bichette provides some pop in the middle of the lineup. His downfalls occur either when you write out his paycheck or put him in the field. Brogna is arguably the best defensive first baseman this team has had since George Scott; he just hasn't found his way into the lineup enough to make much of an impact.

Comparing these pickups along with some other less influential additions, to some of the other contenders, makes it easy to blame Duquette for this teams disappointment. While he definitely has some blame to share, it isn't as much as many believe it to be, he gets 15 percent.

Another popular scapegoat is the manager, Jimy Williams, who many blame for "overmanaging." There has been complaining in the clubhouse by more than one pitcher that Williams doesn't allow his hurlers to pitch out of jams. As soon as there is any trouble, Jimy goes right to the bullpen.

Pitchers, like Tim Wakefield and Jeff Fassero, have complained to the press about this, saying that it would help their confidence level if they were able to pitch out of trouble.

Williams has also been criticized for platooning his players too often. He sits his good players down in order to get everyone playing time. Players like Trot Nixon, who plays right field, should be in the lineup everyday. Because Nixon is left-handed, however, Williams benches him whenever there is a southpaw on the mound. Instances like this are keeping the quality players out of the lineup too often. Williams has got some pie to eat, but not too much - 15 percent.

For a couple years, the Red Sox have been a basic shoe in for the wild card race with the Indians, Yankees, and someone in the West (usually the Rangers) joining in. This year it is much different. The White Sox have become one of the best teams in the American League and are currently tied for the best record in baseball.

Toronto, Detroit, Seattle, Oakland, and Anaheim have all become major players as well. These improved teams have made the competition fiercer not only for the Wild Card spot,

Turn to MLB page 12

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 8 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, September 15, 2000

Helen Hunt, starring in the new Nancy Meyer film What Women Want, gets smart in Arts today.

ARTS p. 5

UMass gets set to face the Richmond Spiders tomorrow in Virginia.

State of the Art Facility Opened

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Three prominent figures in the field of Computer Science were awarded honorary degrees in conjunction with the opening of the Computer Science Research Center.

Degrees were awarded to Barry Boehm, Raj Reddy, and Leonard Kleinrock, at a ceremony held yesterday.

Boehm, a professor of Software Engineering and the director for the center for software engineering from the University of Southern California, was awarded a degree for his contribution to the field.

He received a B.A. from Harvard, and both his M.S. and Ph.D from UCLA all in mathematics. Following his graduation, he served as Director of the DARPA information Science and Technology Department in the U.S. Department of Defense between 1989 and 1992.

Well known for his contribution to the definition of the field of computer science, some major projects that Boehm has worked on are the consructive Cost Model (COCOMO), the Spiral Model of the software process, and the Theory W (win-win) approach to software management and requirements determination.

Some of his current contributions include serving on the boards of several scientific journals, as a member of the Governing Board of the IEEE Computer Society, and the Chair of the Board of Visitors for the CMU software institute.

Another prominent figure in the world of Computer Science that was awarded a degree because of his contributions to the area of Artificial Intelligence is Reddy.

A current faculty member at Carnegie Mellon University, Reddy was educated in a variety of different countries, which span to include India and Australia, before receiving his Ph.D. from Stanford University.

Some of his research interests include the study of artificial intelligence and of human-computer interaction. Some current projects that he is working on are research on spoken language systems, invisible computing, gigabit networks, universal digital libraries, and distance learning.

Finally, the third to be honored with the degree is Leonard Kleinrock, a professor at the University of California, who is often referred to as the father of the Internet. His career with computers began with schooling from MIT, the institution at which he received his Ph.D. Since then, he has published more than 225 papers and authored six books. In addition, he founded the Linkabit Corporation, the Computer Channel, and the Technology Transfer Institute.

He is called the father of the Internet for several reasons, one of which is his pioneering work on packet switching. His laboratory at UCLA was the location of the first node on the Internet on September 2, 1969 and he supervised the first Internet message transmission on October 29, 1969.

These honorees were all invited to speak at the two-day celebration, which will wrap up today in the new computer science building.

One of the highlights of yesterday's ceremonies was the ribbon cutting in front of the building and the dedication of the building to the department's "Path of Pride" motto.

Festivities will continue today and include a series of lectures and discussions on computer science related material. Some of the topics that will be discussed are vision and robotics, language and architecture, information retrieval and management, the changing face of education, software engineering, and the machine-learning network and distributing system.

JARET BARR – COLLEGIAN

Three faculty members were recognized in conjuntion with the celebration opening the new Computer Science building.

No quick solution to microfridge shortage

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

With one academic week complete, the University of Massachusetts has estimated that [illegible] microfridges have yet to be delivered to [illegible] in the Central and Southwest north residence areas.

According to Robert Campbell, director of housing services, last year [illegible] were initiated at the end of last semester. [illegible] numerous bids over the summer, with [illegible] getting an offer they were happy [illegible].

Campbell said that [illegible] and storage for a refrigerator company in the [illegible] the company informed them [illegible] be able to supply the number of [illegible] dents.

"The first vendor had a [illegible] realized that the volume [illegible] of the product," Campbell said. "[illegible] to bid so the time table we [illegible] a little bit [illegible] to work late."

This forced the University to [illegible] another company through which [illegible] that it threw us back [illegible]," Campbell said. "As a function of that, the second half [illegible] was delayed and that means that [illegible] this summer."

Campbell explained that [illegible] had caused the refrigerators to not be delivered in time [illegible] the start of the semester. However, [illegible] agency started delivering on August [illegible] to hit everyone. However, he said the [illegible] are waiting for microfridges [illegible] in the next couple weeks.

According to Campbell [illegible] will be delivered in a much different manner than [illegible] as a result of an incident [illegible] in Cashin residence hall in Sylvan.

"An RA saw an employee [illegible] with the RA's watch on [illegible]," Campbell said. According to Student Living Staff Assistant [illegible] that his watch was missing from [illegible]. She then [illegible] noticed a Microfridge employee [illegible] Assistant Avakian said when the RA [illegible] the employee threw the watch down an [illegible].

As a result of the alleged theft, [illegible] Living is demanding that all fridges [illegible] Community escorts accompany them into the [illegible].

"We are being very vigilant about having [illegible] throughout the halls," Campbell said. In the past, [illegible] had escorts, but the incident has provoked [illegible] measures." According to Avakian, however, Microfridge had just completed the hiring process for new employees in which they contract workers from a temporary agency located in Holyoke.

However, Campbell spoke for Microfridge, stating they were surprised by the allegations made by the RA. According to him, Microfridge conducts pre-screening tests before hiring any employees.

"Whether that test was accurate, I don't know," Campbell said. "We will not allow them in the halls without an escort."

In regards to finding another provider, Campbell said they have a five-year contract with Microfridge and guarantees that they are working towards distributing the remaining products.

Microbiology dept. innovates decontamination process

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

Derek Lovely, head of the microbiology department, has devised a unique and relatively inexpensive method to clean up some of the dangerous contaminants contained in gasoline by encouraging microorganisms already in the ground or water to degrade them. The project is outlined in a recent issue of the journal Environmental Science and Technology.

Lovely and UMass graduate assistant Robert T. Anderson have shown it is possible to spur microbes to degrade benzene in petroleum- contaminated underground water, even where oxygen has been depleted by massive or long-term contamination. Benzene, a major constituent of many fuels, is a known carcinogen, according to Lovely.

Now, Lovely and graduate assistant Kevin Finneran are conducting a similar project to degrade methyl tertiary butyl ether, or MTBE (another hazardous gasoline component that is hazardous to health) at contaminated sites.

Lovely and Anderson received funding from the American Petroleum Institute and Conoco to determine what they could accomplish in a site near Ponca City, Oklahoma that had been contaminated with various forms of petroleum for over 50 years. Traditional approaches to clean up the area, which included more than 25 million gallons of contaminated water in an underground aquifer, had been unsuccessful.

"We were faced with a massively contaminated site," explained Lovely. "Sometimes they pump oxygen into badly contaminated soil and water like this to get the microbial remediation process started, but that approach is costly, and then you end up with other problems, including plugging up the aquifer with iron oxides. We've shown it's not only possibly but it's also easier and cheaper to remove benzene from these contaminated wells anaerobically, or without oxygen, by pumping sulfate into the sediment below an aquifer. This encourages microorganisms deep in the soil to finish the remediation process fast."

To accomplish this feat, Lovely and Anderson set up 40 injection wells over a section of the aquifer, as well as a series of observation wells along the groundwater's flowpath. Sulfate was dripped into the contaminated area through the injection wells over a period of 200 days. Tests run in the observation wells demonstrated how well benzene was removed from the water.

"When we added sulfate to the aquifer, we saw virtually immediate stimulation of benzene removal. The bacteria oxidized benzene and produced carbon dioxide, which is not harmful to the environment," said Lovely. "To our knowledge, this is the first successful field demonstration in which the anaerobic degradation of benzene has been accelerated at the site of contamination. This process may not work in all petroleum-contaminated aquifers, but we have proved it works where there are sulfate-reducing microbes present in the environment."

Now Lovely and Finneran are transferring the benzene-removal technology to sites contaminated with MTBE. That gasoline additive tends to migrate quickly when it reaches underground pools of water and is difficult to remove at low concentrations through conventional treatment processes, says

Turn to MICROBES, page 3

Hallock appointed Dean of Nat. Sciences and Math

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

Robert Hallock, professor of physics, has been named interim dean of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, effective September 1.

Hallock's appointment, which lasts for one year, was announced by Cora B. Marrett, senior vice chancellor for academic affairs and provost. Hallock succeeds Linda Slakey, who was recently appointed interim dean of the Commonwealth College.

"Bob Hallock has a wealth of experience, demonstrated leadership abilities and an unwavering dedication to the University of Massachusetts," said Marrett. "He is an outstanding researcher and teacher, and I am confident he will guide the College to new frontiers."

The appointment was also praised by Chancellor David K. Scott, who said, "Bob Hallock will provide outstanding vision and leadership for the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, building on the excellent directions set by Dean Slakey. He is a world-class scholar who cares deeply about the future of the University and all of the people in it."

Hallock has achieved widespread recognition on campus as a 1998 recipient of a Distinguished Teaching Award and a Distinguished Faculty Research Fellowship, in 1993. The previous year, he was presented with the Chancellor's Medal for his Distinguished Faculty Lecture titled, "Mysteries and Magic Near the Absolute Zero of Temperature." The Chancellor's Medal is the highest honor bestowed on individuals for outstanding service to the campus.

Hallock's Research interest is experimental condensed matter physics, or the study of physical properties of certain types of materials. The author of many research and scholarly publications, he is a Fellow of the American Physical Society. He has been named a Woodrow Wilson and a Sloan Fellow, and in 1992 he received a Guggenheim Fellowship as well.

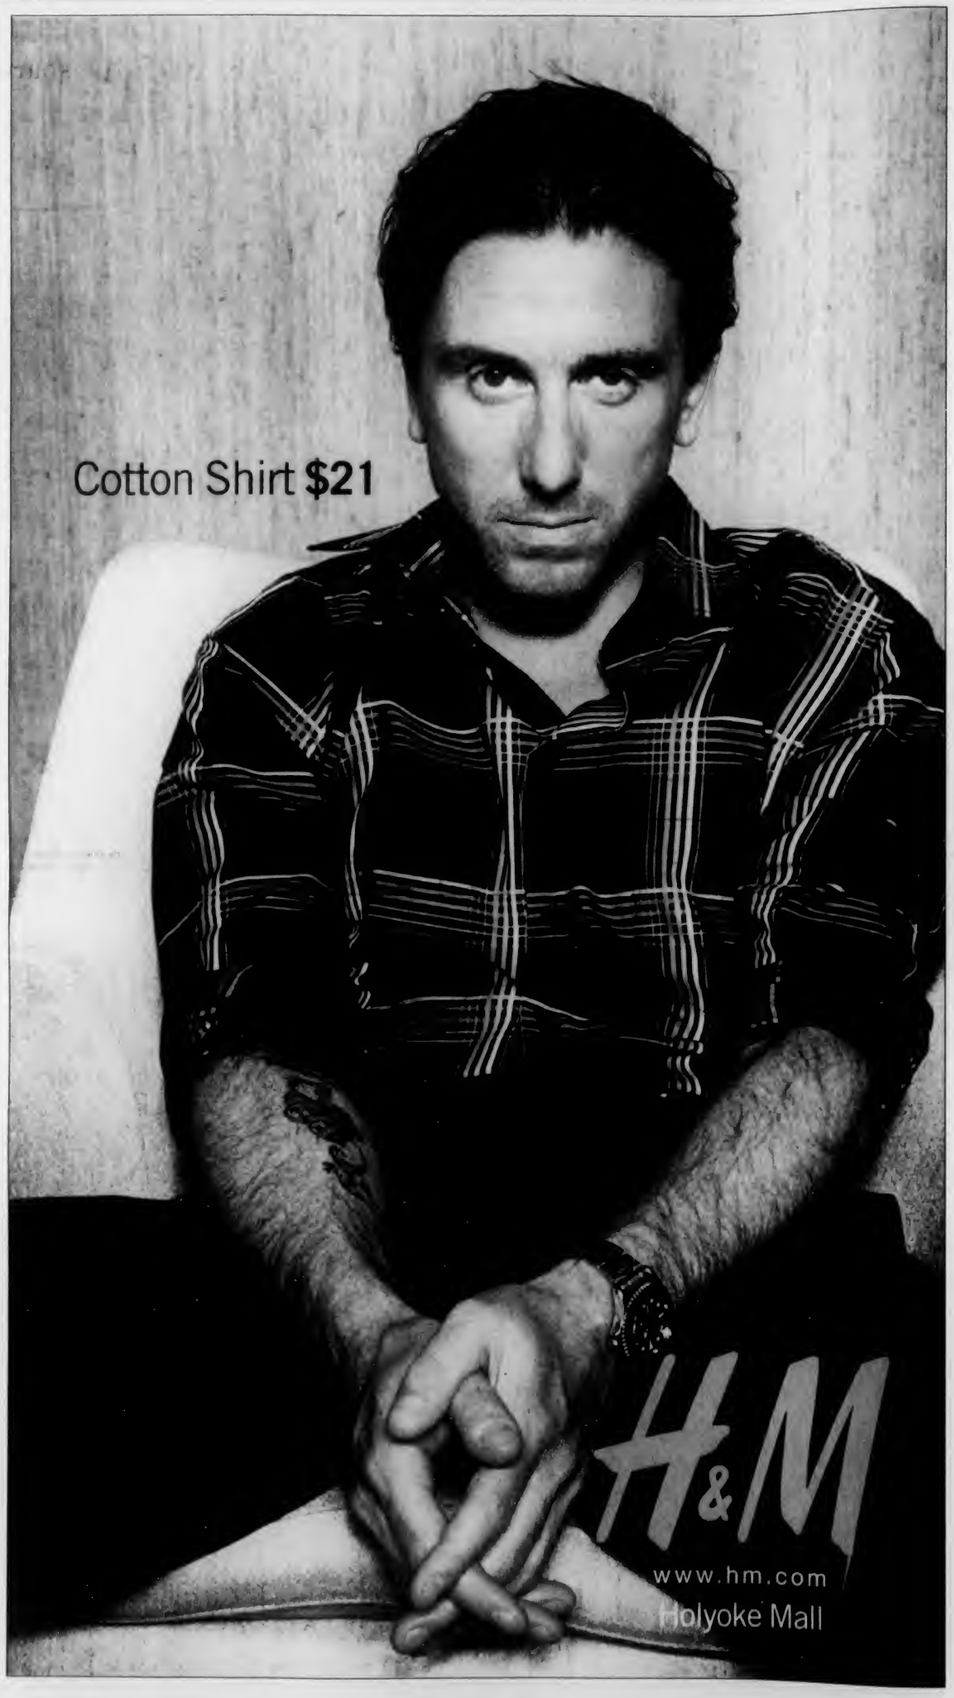
He joined the UMass faculty in 1970, and served as head of the department of physics and astronomy form 1985 through 1993. Hallock received his bachelor's degree from the University in 1965. He then went on to earn his master's and doctorate degrees from Stanford University in 1967 and 1969, respectively.

The College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics includes the biology, chemistry, computer science, geosciences, mathematics and statistics, physics, astronomy, polymer science and engineering, and five College astronomy departments, and the biotechnology program.

Hallock commented, "I am very dedicated to the University and will do what I can to enhance the agenda of the college which includes strengthening educational opportunities for undergraduates, both in the classroom and by means of enhanced opportunity for students to work with our excellent research faculty, and strengthening the position of the college to conduct frontier research that enhances the national reputation of the institution. We have a superb University, with superb faculty and excellent students, I am proud to have graduated from the University of Massachusetts, proud to be a faculty member here, and pleased to have the opportunity lead the college for the year."

Almighty microfridge unit

Even if students received their microfridge's on time they wouldn't look like this one.



Md. Firm's Skin Drug Heralds

By Justin Gillis
The Washington Post

When poor circulation turned his lower right leg into one big, oozing sore, Jay Cohen tried the standard treatments. Nothing worked. In excruciating pain, the 53-year-old Philadelphia restaurant owner was facing the possibility of having his leg amputated when he heard about an experimental treatment developed by a company in Maryland.

Prodded by employees at his restaurant, Cohen enrolled in the test, albeit skeptically. A nurse would spritz his leg, which was raw and oozing from his ankle to his knee, once a week with a mysterious substance.

"I said to myself, I must be an idiot to do this," he said this week. "No spray is going to cure this."

Then, a month into the test, Cohen watched in amazement as skin began to grow where there had been none. It grew and grew. By the test's end, his wound had closed. "It was just really beyond belief," he said. "I can't tell you how happy I am. This has literally changed my life."

Cohen's testimonial represents one of science's first forays into genetic medicine, the product of efforts by Human Genome Sciences Inc., a company in the Washington suburb of Rockville, Md., to systematically search human genes for potential treatments.

New results from the study in which Cohen participated strongly suggest that one of the drugs developed from that search, Repifermin, spurs the growth of human skin, healing or partially healing some debilitating wounds that were previously difficult or impossible to treat.

The results, presented this week at a scientific conference in Australia, are the first data testing the drug's effectiveness against rigorous scientific standards. Because it was a small, relatively brief test, the results don't establish how best to use the drug, nor how well it works in various groups of patients. But the findings leave little doubt that the drug affects skin growth, at least in some circumstances. Many patients who got it showed markedly improved skin healing compared with patients who got a placebo treatment.

Sometimes the results were so striking they astounded patients who have spent years, even decades, battling painful, malodorous leg sores called venous ulcers. Cohen hugged a company representative and declared himself ready for a season of Bermuda shorts. The affected leg is darker and thinner than the other but otherwise fine, months after the test ended. A woman in the test asked a reporter for the address of the company president so she could write him a thank-you letter.

The results tend to validate the approach used by Human Genome Sciences and its competitors, which are similarly combing the catalogue of human genes for medical breakthroughs.

"The fascinating thing is that the development of this drug is a window into the future," said David L. Steed, a professor of surgery at the University of Pittsburgh who is helping to test Repifermin. "This is a drug developed by studying the human genome. That's the way new drugs are going to be discovered in the world."

Researchers caution that full development of Repifermin and other drugs discovered in a similar way will take years to complete. Moreover, despite Cohen's experience, the drug tended to work better on newer, smaller wounds, leaving open the question of how well it will work for people with large, long-lasting skin sores. Human Genome Sciences plans to commit millions of dollars to long-term tests involving many subjects to establish the optimum use of the drug for venous ulcers.

"It is rare in this difficult disease to see such positive results," said William Haseltine, chairman and chief executive of Human Genome Sciences. "These are patients that have underlying disease", namely, poor circulation that starves their skin of oxygen and nutrients.

To see substantial amounts of new skin being built is very telling.

He doesn't need to convince Anna Kadzis. The 75-year-old Dorchester, Mass., retiree has poor circulation in her legs and has spent 35 years battling venous ulcers. She enrolled in the Repifermin test and had the spray applied to one of her sores every week for three months.

"Mine did close, and I was thrilled," Kadzis said in a telephonic interview. A different sore, not treated in the trial, has been on her leg for 25 years, and various skin grafts and other treatments have failed to heal it. So she found the healing, which happened in weeks, particularly noteworthy.

Two months after the test ended, however, her sore began reappearing in the same spot, though it remains tiny. That raises one of the issues Human Genome Sciences now confronts in testing Repifermin: Will some people need to use it over the long term to preserve intact skin, and if they do, will it eventually lose its effectiveness?

Kadzis hasn't been told whether she received the drug or a dummy spray during the test, nor has Cohen. But, said Cohen, "If this was the placebo, they should patent the placebo."

With indications that it has an effective drug on its hands, Haseltine's company is likely to face an avalanche of requests to test Repifermin for other types of medical problems, including burns. It already has embarked on such tests for two types of inflammation in the digestive tract, but no meaningful results are available yet.

■ microbes

continued from page 1

Lovely.

The two Umass researchers have collected sediments from a variety of MTBE-contaminated sites from around the U.S. by stimulating an anaerobic process similar to what Lovely and Anderson used to extract benzene. They have reduced the amount of MTBE in the soil samples by about 5 percent a week. At this rate, they expect to remove all of the MTBE from the soil in less than a year.

"One of the major advantages of using an anaerobic technique is it lets you remove MTBE at the source, before it has a chance to spread," says Lovely.

Field tests following procedures similar to the benzene test will begin in California this fall. Every day, almost 200,000 gas stations across the country pump about a half a million gallons of gasoline into America's motor vehicles, according to The Journal of Petroleum Marketing (June 1998). Invariably, some gasoline escapes into the environment by spilling in the course of motor vehicle accidents, dripping onto the pavement at the pump, or seeping into the ground from a rupture in an underground tank or pipe. Accidental spills can contaminate residential or agricultural soil or even an area's water.

Lovely says the anaerobic bioremediation techniques he, Anderson, and Finneran have developed could be used to clean up some or all of those spills.

Napster ban won't stop file sharing: students set on digital openess

By Dave D'Onofrio
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - Gal Zhovnirovsky discovered the joys of Napster only three days ago. His song library now consists of about 100 songs.

"I'd have more songs if I had the room," said the College of Arts and Sciences sophomore.

The story of Zhovnirovsky's music miracle is the same as millions of other college students nationwide. Equipped with high-speed network connections to the Internet, students have taken a liking to Napster, using it as an inexpensive alternative to purchasing costly compact discs.

According to the music industry, however, downloading copyrighted music is piracy, and when attorneys for Metallica and Dr. Dre sent a letter to BU Chancellor John Silber last week, Boston University was officially pulled into the national debate raging over the sharing of music.

Students, however, said they were confident that as long as the Internet exists, so will access to shared files.

"I would do anything possible to share music," said Simon Teitlbaum, a CAS sophomore. "Why spend 10 bucks on every CD I wanted? We've got MP3s, we've got CD burners."

Katherine Morgenstern, a senior in the College of Communication, shares the opinion of many students at BU, that the music industry will survive, even if Napster is allowed to stay up and running.

"They make money off of tours and videos," Morgenstern said.

"It's ridiculous to think that they're going to go bankrupt because people can get a song off the Internet."

"I think that musicians are really selfish, and they have enough money as it is, so they should just mind their own business," added Samantha Walters, a CAS freshman.

Universities have been a focal point of the assault on Napster since Metallica and Dr. Dre filed a lawsuit against the company in April. The University of Indiana, the University of Southern California and Yale University were all named as co-defendants in that suit for, attorneys for the artists claim, "their knowing facilitation of the massive copyright infringement."

Morgenstern said though she understands Napster use is popular among her peers, the music industry should attempt to ban its use through the judicial system — not by singling out private institutions.

"That is a little ridiculous because it has nothing to do with colleges and the BU network. It's an Internet issue," she said. "The fact that they're going to schools to deal with it, instead of dealing with it where it should be dealt with, is a little ridiculous."

"I can see why they would go to colleges because we're the age level that would go to Napster the most. However, it kind of seems like back-stabbing a little bit, in that instead of going ahead or going through the court, they're going out on their own and trying to get Silber or whoever to try and shut it down or not allow it on our site."

Teitelbaum echoed those sentiments, holding that BU should not bow to the intimidation of the letter unless threats of litigation ensue.

"I don't think BU should get involved unless a court tells them to get involved," Teitelbaum said. "I don't think BU needs to do anything more. BU has no reason to do anything on account of the music industry, we're not connected to them."

Teitelbaum also shared the opinion of many other students, saying that even if Napster was shut down, alternative methods of downloading MP3s would just increase in popularity.

"Ultimately, I don't think Napster is the final solution," he said. "I think it's like a stepping stone because everybody's going to be sharing. At this point people are so flexible about uploading files onto their own web pages. If you look, you can find all of those files without using Napster."

"Free sharing of music is going to happen anyway," Morgenstern agreed. "With technology, there's no way they can stop it. They need to figure out a way to deal with it instead of completely shutting it down."

The companies should sell MP3's. I think they'd sell a lot. They're fighting it but they're not using it and that's the problem," Zhovnirovsky said.

Come write for Collegian news... we got it goin' on!

J.CREW
WAREHOUSE SALE
Fashions from the pages of the J.Crew catalog discounted up to 70%
September 12–September 15, 9am-9pm
Free Admission
Open to the Public
Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Amherst, MA 95403
We accept VISA, MasterCard, American Express®, J.Crew credit cards, cash, and personal checks (with proper identification).
Directions: From South (Springfield, Hartford, New York): I-91N or I-84W to Hartford. I-91N through Springfield to Exit 19, (Rt. 9 Northampton). Right turn onto Rt. 9. Left turn onto Rt. 116N to first exit (UMASS).
From North (Greenfield, Vermont, New Hampshire): I-91S to Rt. 116S (Amherst/Whatley exit). Left then right onto Rt. 116S to UMASS exit. Left onto Campus from exit ramp.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our Opinion

Bush concedes to debate

After weeks more of planning than it should have taken, George W. Bush, Republican candidate for president, has finally agreed to three debates with Democratic candidate Al Gore.

Bush made a mockery of himself by refusing to debate Gore unless the debates were held on his terms. Was he afraid that he'd look bad against Gore, an experienced debater with a recent history of successful arguments?

Absolutely.

Is that a justified reason to avoid the debates?

Absolutely not.

He has every reason to worry about how he will appear in a debate. He frequently stumbles over his words and practiced his speech before the Republican National Convention for weeks before finally delivering it – being asked to deliver quick-witted answers against Gore is a challenge that most agree he will not be able to overcome.

But at least he's going, something that he had been earlier threatening to not even do. His behavior was embarrassing and demeaning to the already slandered idea of American elections. His insistence that the debates happen where he wanted them to (in places where he wouldn't be as visible as the current debate plan) and when he wanted them to (at times where they wouldn't be heard as often) did nothing but harm the idea of debates and the his chances at winning.

Rather than receiving any sort of support for his childish attitude, Bush took major hits in credibility, both from his detractors and his supporters, both of whom felt he was simply dodging part of his election year responsibility the debates themselves.

That Bush has finally accepted the debates not only boosts his sagging campaign but also lets the American public in on who the candidates really are against one another: can Gore present credible argument for why we should elect a seemingly robotic man, and can Bush overcome his current appearance as a foolish rich kid? Will the candidates be able to present credible programs that both benefit the American public and the American economy? Will they hold up under the fierce and intense speculation of their persona?

The questions are endless, and will we even like the answers they receive?

We shall see, but at least we will see. Knowing that Bush finally agreed to the debates lets all of us know that, despite starting the entire campaign to participate, Bush will put himself before us all.

Please Bill, some respect

First, let me say welcome back to our returning students and staff, and greetings to our first years. This being an election year it is time to select, among other things, our new President. I encourage you not to vote if you plan on voting for George W. Bush. However, if you have the slightest inclination that once in the voting booth you will cast that vote for progress and select Al Gore, then by all means get out there and have your voice heard. How can anyone be a college student and a republican? It is like being African American and sending money to the local chapter of the Ku Klux Klan. Republicans don't care about the college students or education unless your attending Harvard or Yale. They then pay attention because the majority of the persons attending those universities are wealthy. Where do you think the University of Massachusetts is on George W. Bush's priority list? Massachusetts is Democrat country (when it comes to the presidency). Bush would not even agree to debate at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, maybe because he just doesn't like higher education, as his grades at Yale would indicate. Bush pulled a C average. I know football players with better GPA then the republican nominee for president, sorry about the sidetrack. I hate to tell you how to vote, and besides this column is supposed to about our tireless crusader for everything good. Bill Clinton.

ETHAN BERGERON

William Jefferson Clinton has been in office since 1993. He won the presidency over the ever witty and energetic incumbent George Bush Sr. Some of Billy C's greatest accomplishments are the largest economic expansion in U.S. history. The country was going into dept faster then we could calculate, and now thanks to our greatest president since Lincoln, we are paying it down. Clinton/Gore have created more then 22 million new jobs, for the record that is more then President Reagan and Bush created during their three terms. The list goes on and on, from educational advancements to environmental protection of endangered lands and forests to reforming the welfare system. This is what makes Bill Clinton a great president and with his approval rate at over sixty percent you'd think that it would be possible to find someone, anyone that had a kind thing to say about the man.

No one has come out and said "Thank you Bill, you took a country that was being driven into the ground by the aftershocks of Reaganomics and lifted us to a prosperous nation where the American dream can be fully grasped." It sounds like a clammed out sound bite but it's reality. I think monies started to grow on trees last year. Everyone with a website and half an idea is making millions. This is all do to The Man – Bill Clinton.

People are quick to judge the man. The flip-flopped on the gays in the military, Bosnia was a disaster, he rode the coattails of prosperity of the Republican 80's." This is all hog-wash, and if you heard it and believe any of it, please drop out of this university, because you are damaging the curve.

What makes Bill Clinton special and what will make him greatly missed are his imperfections. What stands out in everyone's mind is the ever-tiresome Monica Lewinsky incident, everyone in America jumped on the president for have sexual relation with this intern.

The act of engaging in oral sex with Monica has forever removed Bill Clinton from the mantel of perfection. Yet this makes him all the more perfect for the job of president. Presidents are human, they make mistakes, and yes, they do lie. Clinton is an everyman; he has faults and problems just like every other person in this country. Many Americans have had to tell their wives that they committed adultery, usually these matters are kept private. Bill Clinton had to tell his wife he cheated, and then, to conclude his day, face the entire nation and attempt to explain his actions while trying to avoid being the first man since 1860's to be impeached.

"The act of engaging in oral sex with Monica has forever removed Bill Clinton from the mantel of perfection."

Do you have the intestinal fortitude to handle that much pressure? Some would say that we should be able to hold our leaders up to higher moral standards, these are the same people that behind closed doors enjoy taking golden showers, popping prescription medication, and being strapped to a headboard and while being whipped into a coma while little Tommy sleeps in the next room. As I stated earlier presidents are human, and part of the territory of being human are laps in judgment. Bill Clinton is real person, who happens to be the president.

George Bush Sr. was a like a robot, (have you ever seen footage of the "read my lips" fiasco — he sounded like one of those information operators that asks you "city and state please"). And my theory on Reagan is that he died somewhere after his reelection, but they pulled a Dave with him. Bill Clinton has removed the façade of presidents being Golums and has showed us that yes, and you might want to whisper this part, Presidents enjoy "Sexual Relations with Woman." And if Bill wanted to freak some bereswearing intern, then more power to him, I hope. It lowered his stress and allowed him to perform his duties with greater relaxation. Ask yourself, do you want the man that has his finger on the button to be sexual frustrated? I am certain that until the story broke about Monica, Bill was not having problems; now it's probably slightly harder for the man to get serviced, but even Hilary has needs, right? That is a question I can hear running through our under-appreciated president's mind at about 2 a.m. each night as he sleeps alone on the couch In the Lincoln Bedroom.

When you vote to elect Al Gore in November, don't forget that leaving the White House on Jan. 20th is our Kennedy. Yes, that's right, Bill Clinton is the closest thing our generation will have to a leader that speaks about hope, love and dreams. Bill Clinton fought against poverty and countless hardships to fulfill his dream, and to show every American they are capable of achieve their own. Thank you Bill, you will be missed.

Ethan Bergeron is a Collegian Columnist

Common misconceptions of our fraternal men

Hey, hey, hey UMass. What's up? Welcome back to all of the returning sophomores, juniors, and seniors. To all of the freshman and transfer students, I hope your time here is enjoyable and stimulating. To those who know my writing and are fond of it, I hope this will not be my last column before "Notes from the Campus Center Basement". Though only the first two or three weeks will tell. The reasoning for this, just so you all know, is that I'm cracking down on my school work (I'm applying to law school soon; my grades have to be impeccable) in addition to working as many hours as I can and writing some for the Arts and Living Department (yes, you can still catch some of my writing there). If all goes well, then I will be writing regularly this semester.

As my regular readers know, I enjoy clearing up common misconceptions that exist either on this campus, or in general society, our society being both on and off campus, and in the rest of the world. The common misconception that I've decided to focus on today is one that I had until the beginning of the summer.

For the second summer in a row, I've chosen to live up here. I lived in Sunderland and held two jobs over the summer, one being a job at a law firm. Don't ask me how this happened, but like last summer I found myself with a good amount of extra time on my hands. I ended up meeting a group of fraternity brothers (Zeta Psi), and the misconceptions that I had believed soon proved to be false.

My freshman year I was talking to a group of friends. Some of us had truly experienced Greek life. My brother is a Kappa Sigma brother, so I naturally had mixed feelings about fraternities. During my freshman year, I spent a very limited amount of time at fraternities. My ex-friend from my freshman year (we'll call her Melinda; no, that's not her real name) stated that the only reason that brothers can be called guys is because they have penises. She stated that they are rape cultures. Unfortunately, I had no experience with fraternities at that time, so I could not make any statements. Now I can.

This summer I was given the privilege of meeting and getting to know brothers from Zeta Psi and Alpha Tau Gamma. Honest to God, there is nothing negative that I can say about these brothers. They are incredibly friendly and welcoming.

My first experience with them was meeting at a pool where I spoke less than five words to them before I left. As I left, one of them approached me (which I had been hoping wouldn't happen) and invited me their house (Zeta Psi) that night. As an experiment I decided to go. As I went over, my expectations were incredibly low (they're frat brothers, remember?), and I was blown away.

They were all very friendly, funny, nice and loyal to each other. I had a blast that night. No one pressured me to do anything. They all offered up different forms of entertainment, and as soon as I said, "No, thanks," they backed off. That's more than I can say for the two guys that I dated over the summer before I met this group. Everyone at Zeta Psi was just amazing. After that, a few of us went back to the apartment of one of the brother's (no, I wasn't the only female there). The fun and amazement just continued.

"Now that school is back in session I find myself compelled to defend brotherhood because of its loyalty...I hope I succeed in clearing up the misconception that fraternities are evil, sexist, rape cultures."

As I left, I couldn't stop thinking about how off my previous thinking was. I had assumed that the Greek culture was spurned by negativity because of Melinda. Other "Womanists" had told me that they wouldn't go to fraternities because they did not want to be raped, but honestly I can't see any of the brothers at Zeta Psi or Alpha Tau Gamma committing such a heinous crime. They're above that.

A little while later, I was then invited to ATG. My shock at brotherhood continued. These men were just as great as the Zeta Psi brothers: laid back, cool, fun, good-looking, and nice. Again, I was shown a good time without any pressure. They told me to participate as much or as little as I wanted. They made me feel incredibly comfortable.

Through Zeta Psi and ATG, I discovered a new respect for brotherhood, one that I previously had no intention of believing in.

Now that school is back in session, I find myself compelled to defend brotherhood because of its loyalty. If I hear a negative comment about either of these fraternities, I will question them, and it's just because of what I was shown this summer.

As far as partying goes, I was never much of a partier, but if someone needs a recommendation as to where to party, I will openly recommend either Zeta Psi or ATG. You can't beat the brothers; they're just amazing. The atmosphere is laid back (no pun intended) and fun, and the pressure is non-existent (that was at least my experience).

I'm hoping that I succeeded in clearing up the misconception that fraternities are evil, sexist, rape cultures. Honestly, this is "Womanist" crap. I feel safer in either of those two houses than I ever felt in the dorms.

So if you're looking for a place to hang out and/or party, my recommendation is to check out these fraternities. You won't regret it.

I do admit that there are fraternities where rape is a problem. There are even one or two fraternities on this campus where rape is a problem. What I am saying is that all fraternities, either campus wide or nation wide, should not be judged by the appearance of a select few. Before you can judge a fraternity, with a completely unbiased mindset, you have to experience them for yourself. I'm simply stating that from my experience, these two fraternities, Zeta Psi and ATG, are trustworthy and worth both a second and a third glance.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist

Legends of the TA

Let's face it. The teaching assistant at UMass is a myth - like Santa Claus, the Bible, or global warming. By now, whether you're a freshman or a 16th year senior, you've probably realized that teaching assistants don't really "assist" so much as "teach the whole class."

Now, there's not anything wrong with that. But UMass might as well admit it – they don't actually have any professors here. And the professors they do have are just puppets. Or, they're actually professors from the other colleges, but UMass hires them to come over and make us look like a real school (this also applies to the basketball team). But, really, it's all just a façade for the true fact that TA's are somehow in charge of everything.

BRYAN MCALLISTER

Which can be more than a little daunting, especially for freshmen, who face daunting, weird challenges like this every day. The first of those challenges is, undoubtedly, "what kind of pizza do I order at Antonio's?" Because they'll kill you if you don't know right away. The second challenge is, "what's the deal with TA's?"

It's odd, when you think about it. These teaching assistants are only 3 or 4 years older than you. They basically look like you, and sometimes, even act like you. Yet, they seem to have more responsibility than you've ever had in your whole life, even that time when your parents went away and left you the house, and you "didn't have sex on their bed."

I'm not sure I could be a teaching assistant. It would take qualities like patience, attention to detail, and pure insanity. I'm sure I could master the insane part, but patience? Attention to detail? Responsibility? These are all crazy words that adults use to make us conform to their crazy adult ways. Here's another one of them – fascism.

So its understandable that teaching assistants come in many weird, strange varieties, all using drastically different approaches to get the job done. Here's a little sampling of the kinds of TA's you can get in your classes this semester:

The Bitter, Mean TA
Appearance: Always frowning and looking upset
Usually teaches: Anthropology, languages, any science
Description: Ok, let's face it – Anthropology sucks. No one likes it, even people who major in it. So it's understandable that a TA for this class would be angry and bitter. Usually, what happens is, this TA was really, really excited to be teaching last year, and probably was a little lenient and easy on his/her students. Naturally, the students realized this and took advantage of him/her – making the the TA suddenly turn into the Anti-Christ.
Phrases You'll Usually Hear From Them:
"I don't care if you die, there are no make-up exams."
"Let's just make this clear right away – I hate all of you."

The Sickeningly Enthusiastic TA
Appearance: Dresses with many accessories – scarves, shawls, and sandals.
Usually teaches: English, Art History, Psychology
Description: This is the complete opposite of "The Bitter, Mean TA". Here's someone who's probably in their first year of teaching, ready to take on the world and change it. They sport huge smiles, give you their home phone number, arrange class parties, and seem way too excited at 9 a.m. in the morning.
Phrases You'll Usually Hear From Them:
"I hate grading – so everyone's getting an A!"
"And if you're really good, I'll put a smiley face on your paper."

The TA That Everyone of the Opposite Sex Loves
Appearance: khaki pants and a loosened tie, long skirts and curiously unbuttoned blouses
Usually Teaches: Any humanities class
Description: This all goes back to the TV show, "Saved By the Bell," when there was a substitute for English class, and the new teacher – a young guy — read Shakespeare with Kelly Kapowski and all the girls suddenly loved him. We've all had teachers like this. For girls, they're usually really smart, pompous, somewhat handsome, and so much more "mature" than college guys. For guys, they're usually really hot. A sign that you have a TA like this for girls: All the girls show up for the 9 a.m. Friday class wearing their Friday night outfit. Sign that you have a TA like this for guys: All the guys actually show up for the 9 a.m. Friday class.
Phrases You'll Usually Hear From Them:
"Feel the lust in this iambic meter."
"Anyone is welcome to see me after class in my office."

The Really Old, Boring TA
Appearance: suspenders and something he calls "slacks"
Usually teaches: Science
Description: Oh, the horror, the horror. This is clearly the worst TA you can get. Probably, they could care less anymore about teaching, and just like to go on and on and bore people out of their mind. Model for this TA: The teacher in Ferris Bueller's Day Off.
Phrases You'll Usually Hear From Them:
"Ok, sit back for a second, and I'll just give you a brief history of evolution."
"Did anyone listen to NPR this morning?"

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian staff member.

New Drake film explores sex issues

By Simon Trujillo
Daily Lobo (U. New Mexico)

(U-WIRE) ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – While waiting for an interview with David Drake, film writer and sole star of The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me, I could not help but notice the barrage of compliments paid to him from other viewers at the theatre.

One person after another stopped and shook his hand and congratulated him, or discussed many of the elements of the film. The fact of the matter is Drake's The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me is an audacious, poignant and insightful piece of cinema.

Essentially a one-man play brought to the screen, I had my reservations as to how director Tim Kirkman of Dear Jesse, would be able to hold the focus of the audience for a film that centers around Drake's monologues without him ever leaving the stage. However, Kirkman's deft camera work and resourceful directing, along with Drake's powerful and enigmatic acting, quickly dispelled my doubts.

"I worked with Tim Kirkman for months, moving though what would be the best way to shoot things, and moving though the emotional beats of the writing," Drake said. "I knew that the camera was close at times, and I would pull the emotion in tighter, because it didn't have to reach the actual audience, but actually incorporating the camera itself as an audience member."

The film is based on Drake's play of the same title, which is the longest running one-man show in New York Theatre history. The film's seven incisive monologues are an intimate, semi-autobiographical portrait of a gay man's journey of self-discovery. Through his monologues, Drake delves into many of the spiritual, sexual and political desires and frustrations that resonate within gay America.

In one monologue, Drake explores the chronic narcissism and mate hunting in a modern day weight room. In the piercingly raw monologue, called "12 inch single" he recreates and explores the somewhat lonesome, but extremely feral emotions found in a heavily sex and drug-saturated gay club.

"We don't see that raw lust and sexuality in movies or television with gay characters," Drake said. But it's 1"12 inch single" about violence too-the way we act out on each other sexually, dominance and submission, and also about self-hatred."

In a more poignant monologue, Drake reminisces about close friends who have lost their battle with AIDS, and in the concluding monologue, he offers an inventive glimpse of the future where homophobia is eliminated and gays are embraced by societies around the world.

The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me is important in the evolution of gay cinema. Drake brings awareness to his audiences by allowing them to empathize with universal emotions that transcend sexual preference and affect everyone. In the end, David Drake's film is not only significant as a work of art, but in capturing a zeitgeist in our society.

turn to HELEN page 7

Talented Helen Hunt

By Amy Wallace
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD – Writer-director Nancy Meyers sits in a small editing room, watching Helen Hunt and Mel Gibson fall in love. In the What Women Want scene unfolding on a large monitor, the camera focuses on the couple talking in the candle-lit booth of an Italian restaurant. Hunt tells Gibson she feels he is reading her mind. Gibson says he doesn't need to mind-read because she usually says what she thinks.

"That's a Helen note. Right there," Meyers announces, stopping the film. "I had written Mel's line, 'You say what you think.' But Helen said, 'I'm not sure I actually do that enough in the movie.' So I added more examples of her thinking something, then saying it."

In addition to Hunt's comedy talents and her confident bearing on screen ("You don't have to put glasses on Helen Hunt," said Meyers. "to believe she's a smart person"), Meyers came to value the actress' writerly brain.

"She embraces good ideas in a way that's thrilling. And she pushed me to another level," Meyers said, recalling that during the shoot, Hunt repeatedly encouraged her to rewrite key scenes — to realize their full potential by exploring the messiness of human emotion. "Did I love writing scenes over and over while I was also directing? No. But at her urging,

O Brother
George Clooney and his fellow chain gang escapes in the upcoming O Brother, Where Art Thou? [illegible] to us from the Coen brothers of Fargo and The Big Lebowski fame, and based loosely upon Homer's Odyssey

RGIS INVENTORY SPECIALISTS
NOW HIRING
$8.75/HR TO START
No experience necessary.
Paid training program.
Flexible hours to fit your schedule.
Travel pay calculated from campus.
Must be 18 years of age or older and Have dependable transportation and a phone.
RGIS is an equal opportunity employer.
Call to set up an interview.
(413) 731-6910
Tuesday-Friday
10am-3pm
NO MONDAY CALLS!

who said there are no good [bars] on campus?
The best bars on campus don't serve drinks, they serve their country. You see, when you complete Army ROTC and graduate, you'll be an officer and get a set of gold bars. Register for an Army ROTC class today. Because there's no better buzz than the sense of accomplishment.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Spectrum Magazine
the undergraduate-run literary and art journal on campus
First Meeting:
Sunday, September 17th at 7pm in Campus Center room 903
Come to find out how to submit writing and artwork to the magazine, and how to get involved in creating it. Editorial positions are open as well as Publicity and Business positions. We're open to any ideas, all are welcome.
Call the Spectrum office at 545-2240 or visit at room 406E in the Student Union for any information or questions.

NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANNA EAT?
CAN'T FIND A MENU?
DON'T WANNA PICK UP THE PHONE?
LOG ON TO
WWW.MASSMUNCHIES.COM
Point, Click, Eat!
Browse menus and order food for delivery with a few clicks of the mouse!

ANTHONY'S
#1 CLUB FOR ADULT ENTERTAINMENT
BACK BY POPULAR DEMAND!
SUNDAY SEPT 17TH
"THE CENTERFOLDS"
ALL-MALE REVUE
DOORS OPEN 8PM
BUY TIX NOW - SAVE $2!
18+ SEATING
500 NEW LUDLOW RD. – S. HADLEY
CLUBline ... 413/532-3621 HOTline ... 413/538-6969

© 2000 Nintendo ™ ® And the "N" logo are trademarks of Nintendo of America Inc.
© 2000 Nintendo of America Inc. Game, System and N64 Expansion Pak sold separately.
N64 Expansion Pak™ required.
E
Animated Violence
THE END IS COMING OCTOBER 26.
TO PREPARE, RESERVE YOUR COLLECTOR'S EDITION GOLD CARTRIDGE WITH 3D LABEL. WHILE SUPPLIES LAST.
TO SURVIVE, GO TO WWW.RADIOZELDA.COM
THE LEGEND OF ZELDA
MAJORA'S MASK

■ Helen

continued from page 5

I ultimately think I did really good work. I can't tell you how much I appreciate it. I would not have done it without her."

When told of Meyers' comments, Hunt is startled. Although the director is known to be generous with praise, Hunt is still surprised to receive credit for her kibitzing. "It's so rare that anybody ever admits that," Hunt says, touched. "Because I do that all the time, but nobody ever says, 'That's what makes her good.'"

Clearly, Hunt believes that her meticulousness is essential to her success. Still, not everybody responds so positively. There are many tales of Hunt's deconstructionist approach to acting – what the actress calls her "detailyness." She doesn't so much read a script as unravel it, testing whether each beat truly leads to the next, searching – always searching – not just for what the characters, as written, are doing and feeling, but for what they ought to do and feel. Hunt sees this as necessary. Others, though not eager to criticize her on the record, admit that sometimes it just feels difficult.

James L. Brooks, who directed Hunt in her Oscar-winning role, has said that Hunt is motivated by enormous respect for the process. "It's not ego," he has said. "Helen's the other side of ego – genuine humility." But even in her own descriptions, the way she honors the work sounds like it can be wearing.

On Pay It Forward, for example, the rehearsal period at times became a script autopsy, with Hunt, Kevin Spacey, Haley Joel Osment and his father, the film's director Mimi Leder, producer Steve Reuther and two writers (Leslie Dixon and Barra Grant) pulling apart every single scene.

Hunt also pushed the envelope during the Pay It Forward shoot. Her interest in doing the film, in addition to working with Spacey, was that "it had the potential to take on sort of the biggest question there is: Is the world (crap)? That's what this miraculous boy (Osment's character) asks." She was determined that her portrayal would be "dark enough and light enough to at least make it a worthy exploration." So when it came time to slap Osment in the face – a pivotal scene upon which the plot of the movie turns – she fought to make it stronger.

"We shot the scene and we all thought we had it. They were striking (the set) to move into the next shot, and I got halfway to my trailer and I just had that thing in my stomach that told me it wasn't right," Hunt recalls. "I said to Mimi, 'I don't think it's brutal enough.' And she called her editor down, and her editor and I and Mimi looked at it and he agreed: It wasn't brutal enough. It scared me to death, but I knew it needed to be more brutal than it was safe for me to do as a stage slap. So we staged the scene a different way."

Gibson said Hunt's insistence on feeling deeply works as well in comedy as in drama.

"When I read the (What Women Want) script, I thought, Helen is the only person who could pull this off. She has to convincingly be someone who is so good that she actually changes the guy with the power of goodness. And that's who I see her as," he said. "She's not a prima donna. She's there to give. And she's serious about giving. She's very conscientious and Spartan-like about the way she approaches work. And it bears fruit, because when most people would be inclined to stop and say, 'This is in pretty good shape,' she goes deeper. She doesn't settle for less than extraordinary."

Helen Hunt in her Oscar-winning role as Carol Connelly in As Good As It Gets.

Cameron Crowe: social commentator extraordinaire

By Sharon Waxman
The Washington Post

SAN DIEGO – You never forget your first head shop.

Director Cameron Crowe is peering through a darkened plate glass window toward the dim mists of his youth, at a grimy, run-down store where he spent hours of adolescent rapture.

It's abandoned now, in what used to be a seedy section of downtown, next to the vintage Spreckels Theatre, near enough to the port so sailors would come for the girlie magazines, close enough to the wild side so hippies would come to buy roach clips.

Fourteen-year-old Cameron came for the Zap comics. Creem magazine and his very first copy of Rolling Stone. Mick Jagger was on the cover. Wearing lipstick.

Some things just stick with you.

A year later – it was 1973 – Cameron was swept up in the whirlwind of rock 'n' roll, a fabulous force that consumed him for the next several years. And marked him for life.

How could it not? At 16, Cameron Crowe was a writer for Rolling Stone magazine.

Not too much later, the boy became a man. He wrote the teen manifesto Fast Times at Ridgemont High, the coup-of-adulthood Say Anything and Singles, and then the definitive what-is-a-man? movie, Jerry Maguire, which catapulted Crowe into the premier ranks of Hollywood directors.

But he never let go of the kid sitting on the floor of the head shop, oversize and gawky, shaggy-haired and moon-faced. Sometime, he knew, he would have to tell the world what it felt like to be that kid – seeing so much, so young.

Almost Famous, opening Sept. 22, deals with what Hollywood knows best of all: fame.

But for Crowe, it's about more than fame. It is his treatise on rock music, on fandom, on celebrity journalism, on growing up and – no, seriously – being true to your rock 'n' roll dreams.

In other words: on himself.

"When you get good at the glossy, fake legend of your life, you get so good at it that you believe it yourself," Crowe says, an unprompted confession that lasts for the next two hours. "And that's what I didn't want to do."

A beat. "I did it because it was in me and it had to come out. It was a story I wanted to tell. It feels better to have told it than not to have told it."

So let's dispense with the niceties.

"You can either be Woody Allen and say, 'Don't confuse the character with the person,' or you can put your cards on the table," he says, collapsed in a wooden chair at a Mexican restaurant and clutching a chilled Dos Equis. "Let's not play that game. Let's just say it's semi-autobiographical."

Pause.

"OK, let's dispense with the semi."

Crowe, 43, is drained from an intense day of publicity in which he coughed up confessional sound bites to 30 successive reporters. His brown hair flops onto his longish face, and he wears a baggy shirt, baggy pants and sneakers.

Almost Famous tells the story of William Miller, a 15-year-old rock fan from San Diego who is hired by Rolling Stone to write a story about a quintessentially '70s band called Stillwater.

Leaving behind a terrified mother (Frances McDormand) and rebellious older sister (Zooey Deschanel), William tries to enter Patrick Fugit) hits the road with the band. He befriends the musicians (led by Billy Crudup and Jason Lee), the groupies – mystic hoodies led by the mysterious Penny Lane (played by Kate Hudson, Goldie Hawn's daughter).

Yes, Crowe did go on the road with the Allman Brothers, Led Zeppelin and many other bands. He did leave his distraught professor mother behind. (Crowe's father was there, though he died in 1980.) Crowe was the appalled mother-eye, the family clown and the peacemaker between her and his angry older sister.

And there really was a Penny Lane. He'd meet her on tour again and again, each time with a different band, and she'd always act as if they were meeting for the first time. One day, the real Penny Lane came onto the set, regal as a queen, recalled Kate Hudson, "and Cameron just shrank back," a timid teen again.

But Crowe's memoir is not primarily backward-looking. "I don't spend that much time thinking about Rock Magazine. I don't spend time thinking about the movie Cameron Crowe, and how it was received, and how many people saw it. It's about being a human and caring about the human condition and yearning for a piece of rock poetry."

And it's about winning the girl, who you are sure can't be yours, and Emmy Rossum, who plays 16-year-old Penny Lane Wenner, calling you on the phone.

Wenner published Rolling Stone, was calling Crowe on the phone.

Cameron had had Penny Lane over-dramatic scoop: an interview with Led Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page. Instead, he'd been regaled with tales of Penny Lane's sexual conquests.

Cameron, who had lived on tour with the band for three weeks, caught up with the elusive guitarist in the Plaza Hotel in New York and persuaded him to talk to the magazine.

Suddenly I had all these [illegible] Crowe recalls. "Bebe Buell [ex-Todd Rundgren's girlfriend and Liv Tyler's mother] is making a mixtape up in my room. The Stones' Exile on Main Street. It was like a Technicolor sweep, except I'd never seen a Technicolor movie at the time."

Cameron submitted the interview, and Wenner called and said he'd come to his town house. Years later, Cameron arrived, expecting to meet Wenner. Wenner told him – [illegible] important piece. And I was on the appointed. You didn't write it as you wanted to write. You wrote what they wanted you to write. Cameron was devastated.

Wenner went on: "We're going to run it. But you failed. And I am doing it not because you have failed as a writer, but as a human."

Crowe recounts this story as if some years later, as triumphant as this day he experienced it. He looks up from his comfort zone, every bone from becoming a cocaine statistic, among the casualties of rock 'n' roll right. He affected me in a very deep way. He slapped me down to being on the verge of being [illegible]

Suddenly I had all these [illegible] Crowe recalls. "Bebe Buell [ex-Todd Rundgren's girlfriend and Liv Tyler's mother] is making a mixtape up in my room. The Stones' Exile on Main Street. It was like a Technicolor sweep, except I'd never seen a Technicolor movie at the time."

Cameron submitted the interview, and Wenner called and said he'd come to his town house. Years later, Cameron arrived, expecting to meet Wenner. Wenner told him – [illegible] important piece. And I was on the appointed. You didn't write it as you wanted to write. You wrote what they wanted you to write. Cameron was devastated.

Wenner went on: "We're going to run it. But you failed. And I am doing it not because you have failed as a writer, but as a human."

Crowe recounts this story as if some years later, as triumphant as this day he experienced it. He looks up from his comfort zone, every bone from becoming a cocaine statistic, among the casualties of rock 'n' roll right. He affected me in a very deep way. He slapped me down to being on the verge of being [illegible]

Collegian Arts
We are Cat Lovers

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256.0060

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0060
Thurs @ 5:30
Fri @ 4:15
Sat @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

radical christian worship
real teaching, real praise for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10-noon Sundays
413-253-7073 • www.arcchurch.org/agape

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

McMurphy's Presents
Halfway to St. Patrick's Day
BLARNEY BLOWOUT
Saturday September 16 Live Music by "The Tinkers"
4-7 PM Free
*Food at Noon
*Prizes
Positive ID Required

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT AND MORE!!!
GENTLEMEN, ALWAYS 18+
150 ENTERTAINERS WEEKLY,
MONTHLY FEATURE ACTS &
MONTHLY DRINK SPECIALS
ANTHONY'S
500 NEW LUDLOW RD.
SOUTH HADLEY, MA
CLUB-LINE
413/532-3621
HOT-LINE 413/538-6969
WWW.ANTHONYS.NET
LADIES, WELCOME BACK!
"THE CENTERFOLDS"
ALL-MALE REVIEW
SUNDAY SEPT. 17TH
BUY YOUR TICKETS NOW AND SAVE $2
18+ SHOW
ALWAYS TAKING APPLICATIONS FOR ENTERTAINERS - NO EXPERIENCE NECCESSARY!

COMING SOON.

THE MAJOR motion PICTURE SHOW

Drivers wanted.

FEATURING:

K2 SKIS AND SNOWBOARDS

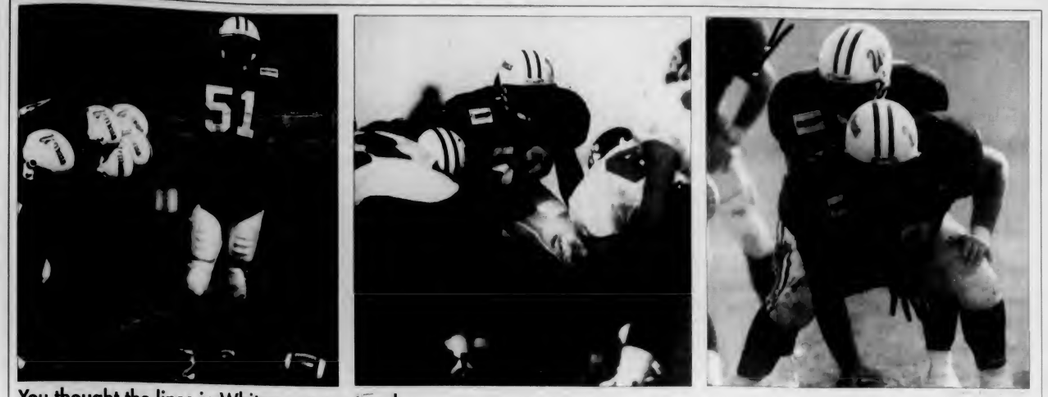
TREK BICYCLES

NEW VOLKSWAGENS

VOLKSWAGEN CERTIFIED PRE-OWNED VEHICLES

AND OF COURSE, MOTION PICTURES.

Thursday, August 31th • Colorado State University • The Lagoon: 11am - 3 pm • Movie: 7:30 pm



You thought the lines in Whitmore were tough...

Wilson Valente (left), Compton Webster (center), and Ryan Woods will all try and do their part to help the Minutemen put points on the board tomorrow in Richmond. UMass holds a 10-6 lead in the all-time series with the Spiders. It will be the men in maroon's third Virginia trip in three years.

Australian slang: A-Z guide to Sydney

Los Angeles Times

Aerial ping pong: Australian rules football.
Ankle biter: Small child.
Back of beyond: Way out there somewhere, remote.
Barbie: Barbecue.
Barrack: Cheer, as in "barrack for the Socceroos."
Battler: Someone who tries hard despite money problems.
Beaut: Great, terrific.
Billabong: A water hole in a dry river bed.
Billy: A metal can, usually tin, used for making tea over an open fire.
Bitumen: Paved road. (Pronounced: "bitch-a-men.")
Bloke: A male, a guy, a mate.
Bludger: A person who does little or nothing, slothlike.
Blue: To have an argument or a fight.
Bonnet: Hood of a car.
Boot: Trunk of a car.
Bottle shop: Liquor store.
Buckley's chance: Absolutely no chance. "He's got two chances: Buckley's and none."
Bull: Water buffalo.
Bung on an act: To exaggerate the circumstances.
Chemist: Pharmacy or drugstore.
Cuppa: Cup of tea or coffee.
Drongo: Stupid, clumsy person. Derived from the name of a hapless racehorse.
Drover: Australian cowboy or stock herder.
Esky: Insulated container (usually to keep beer cold).
Eyeful: A beautiful or attractive woman.
Fair dinkum: Something that is genuine, true or fair.
Fair go: A chance, an equal opportunity.
Flake: Shark meat, what you usually get in fish and chips.
Flat out: Very busy.
Footy: All-encompassing term for soccer, rugby and Australian rules football.
Give it away: Give up.
G'day: Greeting, as in "Good day."
Get a rat up ya: Hurry up.
Gone bung: Broken.
Goodonya: Well done. "Good one."
Grazier: Cattle or sheep farmer.
Grog: General name for all alcohol.
Hard yakka: Hard work.
Holiday: Vacation.
How much can a koala bear? How much can a person take?
Jackass: Another name for the Australian bird, the kookaburra.
Jackeroo: Young male ranch hand.
Jillaroo: Young female ranch hand.
Journo: Journalist. "At the Olympics, a sportswriter."
Kiwi: Person from New Zealand.
Knock off: The end of the work day.
Larrikin: Mischievous, irreverent person. Used admiringly.
Lift: Elevator.
Lolly: Candy.
Lay-by: To buy on installment; lay away.
Mate: Friend.
Matilda: Sleeping bag or bedroll.
Meat wagon: Ambulance.
Milk bar: General store.
No worries: Don't worry, no problem, everything is OK.
Nuddy: The swim in the nude.
Ocker: A genuine Australian, usually a person from the bush who regularly uses Aussie slang.
Offsider: Assistant or partner.
Out of pocket: Spent more than received.
Pavlova: A meringue pie-shell filled with fruit and whipped cream. If Australia has a national dessert, this would be it.
Perve: To be a peeping Tom, to look with lust.
Pommies: Englishmen.
Possie: Position or spot.
Ratbag: Weirdo.
Razoo: An imaginary coin of no value; to have no money. As in "He didn't have a brass razoo."
Roll a racehorse: To roll one's own cigarette.
Roo: Kangaroo.
Ropable: Extremely angry or bad tempered.
Sealed: Paved, as in a "sealed road."
Septic or seppo: An American, from rhyming slang for "Yank" (as in "septic tank"). Now more than a bit outdated, according to sophisticated locals.
Shellacking: Criticism for a thorough, shameful defeat.
Shonky: Dubious, unreliable.
Shoplifting: Shoplifting.
Shout a beer: To pay for a beer. As in "My shout."
Singlet: White tank T-shirt. Often worn alone by certain Aussie males.
Smoko: Cigarette break.
Strine: Australian slang.
Sunbake: Sunbathe.
Swagman: A tramp; itinerant worker.
Ta: Thank you.
Takeaway: Takeout food.
Tinnie: Can of beer.
Trucker's Food: Derived from what Australian truckers (drovers) could pack into their saddlebags for a day.
Windscreen: Windshield.
Yobbo: Uncultured lout.

Come till this space :)

Collegian Sports... ready to go

resources
We've got you covered

- FLEXIBILITY
- Competitive Pay
- Temp
- Temp to Perm
- Career Opportunities
- Vacation

HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES

Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.

Car necessary.

CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card

Sauza Tequila 750	$10.99
Rubinoff 1.75	$9.99
Absolute 750	$13.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack	$9.99	Dep
Beck's , Beck's Dark 12 Pack	$9.99	Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$10.99	Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack	$9.99	Dep
Spaten Lager 6 Pack	$4.99	Dep

REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

STRENGTH • FLEXIBILITY • CONDITIONING
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB • 256-0080
Thurs. @ 5:30
Fri. @ 4:15
Sat. @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
Keiser • Nautilus • Cybex
Stairmasters • Lifecycles
Treadmills • Precar Ellipticals
Liferower • Cardio
Kickboxing
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0080

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

Minutemen take the pool with a sturdy Vander-'wall'

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Correspondent

[illegible] men's water polo team [illegible] to action on the pool [illegible] Tuesday [illegible] 10 in Providence RI [illegible] and the number [illegible] Washington to 2-1 swept [illegible] 3rd Invitational [illegible] using wins including [illegible] goal each number [illegible] and thus [illegible] will leave the [illegible] and will be [illegible] Coach Russ [illegible] said that [illegible] Last [illegible]

"Vanderwall's the man," sophomore Justin Houck said. "He's done such a great job so far, not only defensively, but also helping offensively to start our counterattacks. With him back there it allows us to go forward more and concentrate on the attack."

Leading the way at the other end of the pool against the Bears was junior Greg Fraser, the team's fourth leading scorer. Against Brown, he had a hat trick while sophomore Chad Arnold added a pair for the Minutemen.

Junior Adam Moore, the team's leading scorer with 14 goals and seven assists, will be asked to do the same up front on Saturday.

When asked, Houck did not want to make any predictions on the outcome of Saturday's game but did say, "We're working hard right now and we have the talent to win," he [illegible]. But who knows what can happen when they have the home-pool advantage, if things start to go their [illegible]

[illegible] is the second of three meetings between the Bears and Minutemen this season with the third coming on October 7 at the CWPA Championships in the Bronx. UMass leads the all-time series 21-15.

Women's tennis ready to go

[illegible] the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team [illegible] Mount Pleasant, NY, to [illegible] the Eastern Tennis [illegible] the season which [illegible] September 15-17 [illegible] Yorktown Yacht [illegible] for the [illegible] UK events.

The competition will feature four eight-flights two doubles flights, and consolation rounds.

Last year the Minutewomen compiled a 9-15 record for the year, and placed third at the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Junior Helena Horak and Anne Hamilton will lead the Maroon and White this season, looking to earn many points for the team in both singles and doubles matches.

Horak, who played number two singles last year, is the probable replacement for the graduated Ola Gerasimova, who fought hard at the number one singles last season.

The new additions to the team this year are Jafra Depontes and Susan

Turn to TENNIS page 11

STAY-WITH-IT · FLEXIBILITY · COORDINATION
CARDIO KICK BOXING
AMHERST athletic club · 256-0080
Thurs @ 5:20
Fri @ 4:15
Sat @ 2:00
www.amherstathletic.com

Men's soccer out to shock Saints

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team has been slightly derailed by some stiff competition early this season, but will attempt to get back on track this Sunday when they roll into New York to face Siena University.

Heading into their match with the Saints, the Minutemen stand at 1-3 this season. Coming of a recent 1-0 loss against Boston University, UMass hopes to regroup with a victory over a Siena squad with a record of 2-4.

"Huge, Huge, game for us. We got to turn it around," coach Sam Koch said. "We are playing at their place, and that is a hard place to play."

However, just playing at Siena field will not be the only problem for the Maroon and White, as the Siena team will line up against UMass fresh off a 5-0 rout of Central Connecticut State. A game where Siena unloaded on the Blue Devils during the second half, scoring five out of their total six team goals this season. Leading point man for the Saints, sophomore forward Paul Ciovacco, racked up only one goal for Siena but also tallied three assists in the contest.

Similar to Siena's situation, the University of Massachusetts has also been short on goal scoring this season.

"We have to keep on playing as well as we have, and create more chances," Koch said.

Four games into the season the Minutemen have only found the back of the opposition's net five times. Falling to both South Carolina and the University of Hartford with a 2-1 deficit, and then just this past week to Boston University, UMass' inability to finish their opportunities has directly affected their games outcomes.

"BU was a tough loss. We out played them in the second half and we could not put the ball away," Koch said. "We just have to create more chances so we can finish some more."

Even the Maroon and White's single victory this season was a 2-1 win over the University of Maine, Orano. A game where UMass finished ahead of the competition, but still was only record two goals for its efforts.

"I think sooner or later the ball is going to go in, but I think it is going to have to happen this weekend," Koch said. "We start the conference in two weeks. We have to make sure we are putting things away now. We can't really wait much longer."

That being said, the team spent most of its practice time this week working on finishing shots and shooting on net.

"The main thing is to keep on creating chances," Koch said. "We are doing everything we need to do. We need to cut out our mistakes and avoid those situations. We need to keep our neck clean and put at least one away."

The added time spent on finishing will hopefully help UMass put away the Saints and goals this Sunday at 1 p.m.

Collegian Sports: We don't throw cats.

Men's X-C gears up for the visiting Black Bears

By Kevin Stone
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow, in the squad's only home meet of the year, the Massachusetts men's cross country team will face Central Connecticut State University, Boston University, the University of Vermont, and the University of Maine.

"[Maine's] the team I'm worried about," head coach Ken O'Brien said. Dubbed a "dark horse" by O'Brien, he indicated that UMaine has both depth and front runners including transfer student Joey Luchini, who was ranked nationally in high school, and Ben Ray, who recently was a runner up in the mile race against the east coast's top runners.

O'Brien feels that the quality of the Black Bears squad is definitely being overlooked, and that Maine will definitely surprise many teams.

He expects that CCSU and BU will have a few good runners, but they could lack depth. CCSU coach John Keler hinted that his team is expecting to run well, but only if the team is healthy for the meet. Like UVM, O'Brien finds his squad's strength in its depth.

"We'll be in good shape if the top five or six runners can narrow the spread of time between our first runner and our sixth to 80 or 90 seconds at this point (in the season)," O'Brien said. "By the end of the season, they should finish under a minute (apart)."

Adding depth to the Minutemen are freshmen Mike Ahern, John Jacobson, and Ted Breen whom O'Brien expects to see finishing among the squad's faster runners in the near future.

Improving on last season's fourth place finish, the Minutemen tied for second with the University of Connecticut, falling to the University of New Hampshire on Friday, September 8. The Minutemen also defeated Boston College and Brown at the meet. Top finishers for the Minutemen were seniors Mike Pieck and Kevin Somers, placing in fourth and fifth, respectively. Behind them were Ryan Corbett and Salvatore Nastasi at 16th and 17th with Brendan Sullivan finishing 24th.

"I have always felt that a good team benefits when its runners stay close together during the meet, even if it holds the top runners back," O'Brien said. "If they stay a bit reserved in the first part of the season, they're better able to maintain their strength through the end of the season."

As O'Brien indicated, most teams are training for competition later in the season, which means the runners are still recovering from practice on race day.

"At this point most coaches are doing the same thing, running their teams hard so they're going into the meets tired," CCSU coach Keler said.

"This meet is always real competitive, tightly run meet. There are four good teams competing and it's always a lot of fun looking forward to (this meet)."

The meet will be held tomorrow, Saturday, September 16, behind the Totman Gym, at 12:30 p.m.

X-C to face four

By Adam DeYoung
Collegian Staff

Home is where the heart is, and this weekend it is where the Massachusetts women's Cross Country team will be as well. The squad runs in its first home meet of the 2000-2001 season this Saturday, as it takes on Boston University, Central Connecticut, Maine, and Vermont.

The Minutewomen will be led by junior Kristin Ciswoksi, who ran an impressive 19:23 in the 5,000-meter and finished 13th last weekend as UMass placed third at New Hampshire.

Also turning in fantastic performances for the Maroon and White were freshman Molly Ketschek and senior Melissa Henderson who finished 17th and 18th respectively. Katherine Blais and Rebecca Aldrich helped the cause, placing 24th and 25th.

This weekend, the Minutewomen, who are among the elite teams in the Atlantic 10, will try to run their opponents out of the woods. UMass started the season strong and looks to build on its third place performance this Saturday.

Jeans at ZANNA
THE JEANS TRADITION mavi
AMERICA'S FAVORITE LUCKY BRAND
BCBG MAXAZRIA
BUFFALO DAVID BITTON
ZANNA downtown Amherst

PIZZA PAPA JOHN'S
UMASS/HAMPSHIRE/AMHERST COLLEGE SPECIAL
OCMP
Now Hiring Delivery Drivers
Earn $12+ Per Hour
One 14" Large One Topping Pizza $6.99
One 14" Large Pizza With One Topping, Breadsticks & A 2-Liter of Coca-Cola $12.99
3 Large 1 Topping Pizzas $19.99
Call 586-7272 For Fast, Free Delivery!
Open Until 1am Sunday-Thursday & 3am Friday & Saturday

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
Special Offer: $25 off
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

NFL Week 3 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only.	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
	last week:	9-5-1	8-6-1	7-7-1	4-10-1	5-9-1
Minnesota @ New England	N.E. by 1 1/2	Minnesota	Minnesota	New England	Minnesota	Minnesota
Baltimore @ Miami	Baltimore by 2 1/2	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Miami
Atlanta @ Carolina	Carolina by 6	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina
NY Giants @ Chicago	Chicago by 2	NY Giants	Chicago	Chicago	NY Giants	NY Giants
Philadelphia @ Green Bay	Green Bay by 4	Green bay	Philadelphia	Green Bay	Phildedelphia	Green Bay
Cincinnati @ Jacksonville	Jacksonville by 13	Jacksonville	Cincinatti	Jacksonville	Cincinatti	Jacksonville
San Diego @ Kansas City	Kansas City by 5	Kansas City	San Diego	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City
Buffalo @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 1	NY Jets	Buffalo	Buffalo	Buffalo	NY Jets
Denver @ Oakland	Oakland by 3	Denver	Oakland	Denver	Denver	Oakland
Pittsburgh @ Cleveland	Cleveland by 2 1/2	Cleveland	Cleveland	Cleveland	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh
San Francisco @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 16 1/2	San Francisco	St. Louis	San Francisco	San Francisco	St Louis
New Orleans @ Seattle	Seattle by 6	New Orleans	New Orleans	Seattle	Seattle	Seattle
Tampa Bay @ Detroit	Tampa Bay by 3	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay
Dallas @ Washington	Washington by 10 1/2	Dallas	Dallas	Washington	Dallas	Dallas

TRASH TALK

In a new twist on the standard Collegian NFL picks chart, each week's winner will get a chance to strut his stuff in a special sidebar accompanying the following week's chart.

After a rather solid 9-5-1 showing in week one, it is my pleasure to draw first blood in the sure to become victory-quickly new column known simply as "Trash Talk."

First of all, a big "Whaa!!!zzuppppp" to all you fools who laughed at my picks of Cleveland and Detroit last week. I Sam you alone get some props for your knowledge on those. All I can say is that sometimes you've just gotta go with your fantasy league guys when your guts fail you. Since Jim Couch and Jonas Stewart aren't worth a damn in the land of gridiron make believe, I can at least reap some rewards from them when it comes to prognostication.

Now I can't help it, but a few of my fellow experts deserve a literary beat down for their AWFUL predictions in week one. Adam Martignetti, maybe you should just stick to focusing Kevin Bacon movies and chasing down news, four correct picks makes me wonder if Kathleen Rallis would consider a guest spot on the chart especially for grade. Benson, I'm still going to mention that you're supposed to be our NFL guru (whoops, I just did) and that a 5-9-1 mark leads me to wonder whether or not "Fourth and Inches" is anything more than those cute ads we're getting a use about football.

Smitty, at least you broke even. I can't talk too much smack about any freshman, especially since he's my fraternity partner on ahem football and probably knows a lot more than his record indicates.

Big Sam Wilkinson, with some bad. Hoo-boy-oh-oh-oh. It's time to kiss that Chicago team as a Cubs fan [illegible] magic when a whole team [illegible] Bryan Smith [illegible] 7-7-1 [illegible] even [illegible] Jacksonville [illegible] Jacksonville [illegible] Jacksonville

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground. Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue. Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South. For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gastank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

1991 Toyota Pickup 4 Cyl. $900 587-0524

1989 Dodge Colt Wagon 143k runs fine. $800 549-5448

CHILDCARE

Occassional care weekends, weekdays, evenings, and daytime. Experienced and car necessary. Call Randa with references. 549-1122

Parents Helper 2 great children. Mix of afterschool, evenings & weekends. 4-15hr/week. 549-5448

COMPUTERS

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

Immediate Openings Dishwashers Wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 North Pleasant Street

Painter own vehicle $8-12 Steve 290-7161 Work around schedule. bonouses.

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

EMPLOYMENT

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pizza. 256-8911

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM

Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

EMPLOYMENT

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifegaurd & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

Personal Assistant Wanted Car a plus. 8:00am - 11pm - pm hours vary. Many shifts available. Call Martina 413-323-9633 or 413-323-7802

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Drivers Wanted. Must have own vehicle. $7-14/hr. 4-10pm Delivery Express. 549-0077

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Deliy Baker Customer Service and kitchen positions. Take-out establishment in Amherst. FT/PT All shifts. Experience, but will train. Cushman Village Store 491 Pine St. 549-1953

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply with-in After 5:00pm 586-2774

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Full/PT Help Wanted in Amherst Greenhouse. Growing pesticide free hydroponic herbs 549-3558

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

ENTERTAINMENT

SUPER K'S Party at The Pub. Sat-16 w/Dj-DK spinning the best in Hip-hop. 18+ to party 21 to drink. For info call Kaif 1-617-460-5476

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Keggerator for sale. $300 or B/O includes refrigerator. Call 413-250-0142

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

FOR SALE

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.COM

FURNITURE

Used Fruniture. 12 coaches $65-$100. Free delivery 586-2221

Matching couch, coffee table, lamp, excellent condition $100 or B/O 549-0432

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

TRAVEL

Best Place to Advertise... 545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCVH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gravel to Gravel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING C - Campus SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Going Places "Sydney"		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Vanished		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Chick Flick"	News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date	Real TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	"Dead Presidents" (1995, Drama) Larenz Tate (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Vanished		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager "Initiations"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Meths
WTBS	22	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves. (Live)					"Last Man Standing" (1996) Bruce Willis.
A&E	40	L.A. Law		Law & Order "Mad Dog"		Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Cause Mortis"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	25	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Canned Ham	"He Said, She Said" (1991, Comedy) Kevin Bacon.				Stein's Money	Stein's Money	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	29	Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tiger		On the Inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries				On the Inside "Real LAPD"
ESPN	59	Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Wrong Woman" (1995, Drama) Nancy McKeon.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Aw, Uncensrd	Video Music Awards Opening Act (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)						Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK	33	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	55	Sliders "The Weaker Sex"		"Alien Nation: Dark Horizon" (1994) Gary Graham.				Invasion Earth (Part 3 of 3)				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	26	Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies IV		Welcome to Armageddon (N)		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT	45	ER "Welcome Back, Carter"		Pretender "Pyre" (In Stereo)		"Dead Calm" (1988, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.				"Dead Calm" (1988, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.
USA	47	Walker, Texas Ranger		Strip Poker	U.S. Open Tennis. Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)							Strip Poker	Texas Ranger
HBO	61	(5:00)		"Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Rodman. PG-13		Inside the NFL (N)						Inside the NFL
MAX	62	(5:35) "A Perfect World" (1993) Kevin Costner. PG-13						"Predator" (1987) Arnold Schwarzenegger.		Fetch (N)		"The Denise" (1996) Corbin Bernsen. R	101 Rent Boys
SHOW	63	(5:45) "Short Circuit 2" (1988, Comedy) Fisher Stevens. PG.						"Wishful Thinking" (1999) Drew Barrymore.	Outer Limits	Rude Awaken.		"Hellraiser: Bloodline" (1996) Bruce Ramsay.

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

MYSTICAL TREE OF EVIL INTENTIONS, CAN I ASK YOU A QUESTION?
ANOTHER QUESTION?! WHAT HAPPENED TO THE DAYS WHEN PEOPLE WOULD WANT TO PLAY CRIBBAGE OR SING JOHN DENVER TUNES?

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

THEY SAY YOU'RE NOT SUPPOSED TO SHOP ON AN EMPTY STOMACH.
OTHERWISE YOU GO CRAZY AND BUY WAY TOO MUCH FOOD.
GOOD THING WE HAD THOSE SANDWICHES BEFORE WE CAME.
I'LL PUT THIS CART WITH OUR OTHERS.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

THE PHALLIC NATURE OF PINE CONES IS A CONSTANT DISTRACTION TO ME. AND WHEN KIDS TAKE THEM AND SMEAR THEM WITH PEANUT BUTTER AND BIRD SEED AND HANG THEM BACK UP IN THE TREE ... THAT'S JUST WRONG. HOW'S THE TREE SUPPOSED TO FEEL ABOUT THAT?
WHEN I WAS A KID, MY MOM DIDN'T WANT ME USING MITTENS WITH THUMBS... I HAD TO USE WOOL SOCKS, AND SHE GLUE-GUNNED THEM TO MY WRISTS.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 6
SPLATTERY...
READY... AIM...
GO!
SPLAT!!!
BULL'S-EYE
FILLING THE BALLOONS WITH SUPER GLUE REALLY HELPS GET AN ACCURATE SCORE BY KEEPING THE TARGET STILL.
MILDRED! GET OUT THE JAWS OF LIFE!!!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

ALEX?
ENTRE 2 POMPADOURA EXCELLENTS
COULD WE TALK OUT HERE? OUR ALEX CAN FREAK'S ME OUT.
OH, DADDY DON'T BE SUCH A BAD LISTENER. I HAVE NO SECRETS FROM MY FAN BASE.
YEAH, WELL, I DO MOW BIGGS' THAT FAN BASE, KAL-RNDUAY?
I GET ABOUT 9 MILLION HITS IN THE EVE NING.
9 MILLION PEOPLE WATCH YOU DO YOUR HOMEWORK?
AHHHH, I'M STARTING TO SEE WHERE IT SPRINGS DOWN. MY BACK BREAKS.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

WE'VE HEARD MORTY BIGGS'S FAN BASE IS NOW BIGGER THAN ROBOTMAN'S. NEW PROMOTIONS DIRECTOR
HI THERE! MORTY BIGGS HERE. I'M HERE TO SHUT ROBOTMAN COMICS!
BEST PRICES AND WE GUARANTEE TO BEAT THE COMPETITION. YOU HEARD RIGHT... WE WILL NOT BE UNDERSOLD!!!
SO CONE IN AN SHE HAS A TEST READY ON WHO TELLS EN MORTY SENT YA!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SO WHAT DO I SAW THE PLEASURE, NEPHEW?
I NEED YOUR INPUTS UNCLE Z.
JEFF AND I ARE STARTING AN INTERNET BUSINESS THAT RECYCLES THE INVENTORY OF FAILED E COMMERCE SITES. WE'RE CALLING IT MYDEADDOT.COM
THE PROBLEM IS WE ARE JUST TWO KIDS WITH A DREAM AND NEED A TOP EXECUTIVE WITH MAJOR CREDS A HEAVY HITTER WHO CAN KICK THE COMPANY INTO HIGH GEAR.
I CAN'T. I'M GOING TO WORK FOR UNCLE DUKE.
UM... OH, DADDY. WELL COULD YOU RECOMMEND SOMEONE?

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

PLANET OF THE APES
COL. TAYLOR & CLARKE HAVE BEEN CAPTURED BY A LARGE, HAIRY CREATURE.
(TO BE CONTINUED)
OH MY GOD! IT'S A COMMUNITY OF APES!
IT'S AN APE, LOOK! I'M GOING TO FAINT!
IT'S A PLANET OF APES! WHAT?
I KNOW!

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

SO WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO FOR A BUSINESS, DUDE?
I DUNNO. OUR THINGS STINKS. A LOT OF E INITIATIVES ARE TANKING.
I KNOW SOMEBODY OUGHT TO JUST BUY UP THEIR REMAINING IN-VENTORIES AND SELL THEM ON THE WEB AT DISCOUNT.
BUSINESS PLAN! BUSINESS PLAN!

Horoscopes

LIBRA (September 23-October 23)
You penchant for Catholic school girls will get you in a heap of trouble if you try to do it in the confessional booth today. Stay away from the church. Don't assume your mom knows where you hid those photographs. They're safe in your closet.

SCORPIO (October 24-November 21)
You will be hugged repeatedly today as a Cullelyan newsroom reporter. When he says it "feels so good," agree and ask for more. He'll be tall, dark, and dashingly handsome. Why stop there about capital investing?

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21)
If you see a gravestone with your name on it, run in the other direction. It probably isn't your fate (that doesn't mean you won't be killed today). Also, look for love by the campus pond at 2 p.m. She'll be wearing a "I love Britney Spears" shirt.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19)
When you woke up this morning and saw such a mute was peering in the closet that wasn't a dream. Neither was the time when you're on a train on your new shirt, and you thought it was orange juice. Well, that ain't orange juice, and stop dreaming, cause dreams never come true.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18)
What were you thinking yesterday? I hope you can turn into a psycho sometime soon, I can't believe we went out that summer. I really like you anyway, you just had a lot of fake games and a pool. By the way, I bet you were

PISCES (February 19-March 20)
Unexpected funds from parties deep fixation could make life an exciting day. You may still [illegible] amicable view of what other people accomplish. By the way, you have lettuce in your teeth.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
Intense things will happen today. You'll get up, [illegible] and go back to sleep. Then you'll sleep [illegible]. Why that would sleep? Then you might want to go to bed. Because you're probably [illegible] after such a busy day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Dr. Laura Berk, I wouldn't read that horoscope. Really? You didn't let me watch re-runs and break. I could beat your ass any day. And by the way, [illegible] in bed and I only dated you to get your brother. Man was he a fine piece of work.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)
[illegible] on my 12.50 class...can I get the [illegible]. Today will be the greatest day of your life. Everything will happen for you. Love, accomplishment, eternal enlightenment. Your will think it's in Saturn. Sorry, Gemini.

LEO (July 23-August 22)
[illegible]

Remember when you were a kid, and your parents told you that they didn't sleep in the same bed because your mom had a bad back? Well, your mom didn't really have a bad back.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22)
If you close your eyes, and envision success, happiness, and love, you'll get a clear picture of exactly what your life won't be like. Stay away from the Campus Center today.

Amherst

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 67 LOW: 52	HIGH: 65 LOW: 44	HIGH: 62 LOW: 43

KEVIN BACON? HE'S GREAT! I MET HIM THE OTHER DAY AT THE PREMIERE OF "HOLLOW MAN!"

© 2000

Quote of the Day

"Oh, that feels soooooooooooooooo good!"

–Jason Trenkle

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Curry Coconut Chicken with Bok Choy and Basil

Vegetarian Egg Roll (vegetarian)

Vegetable Fried Rice (vegetarian)

Caponata Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Grilled Cheese on Branola (Berkshire & Worcester)

Dinner

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Veal Parmesan

Algerian Stew (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Broccoli-Cauliflower Casserole (vegetarian)

IT'S BACK
1/2 WAY TO ST.
PATTY'S
DAY BASH
SAT. NITE
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

ACROSS
1 Moby Dick's foe
5 Dinero
10 Straighten up
14 Fair
15 Emanations
16 — Ben Adhem
17 Identical sibling
18 Lock
19 Muscle spasm
20 Kodiak bear locale
22 Leavers a federation
24 Come to the rescue
25 Learn by memorize
26 Get along well together
30 Bundled alone
35 Citrus drink
36 Lake cheneys
37 Hoards
38 Compunction
41 Spotted cats
43 Shade tree
44 — roll: lucky
45 Indignation
46 Doze
47 Tortola orders
50 Border on
53 Type of scout
54 Tropical fruits
58 Goddess of wisdom
62 Pantyhose color
63 Dwell
66 Valhalla heavy
67 Climb (a rope)
68 Plumber's tool
69 Final ingredient
70 Main body of a book
71 Ms. Moorehead
72 Ragout, e.g.

DOWN
1 Movie terrier
2 Coyote cry

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-2-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

3 China's place
4 Miniature tree
5 Toros foes
6 — Town
7 Natural resource
8 Ranch rope
9 Valuable quality
10 Skirt
11 Footnote abbr.
12 Cooked enough
13 Laughs
21 Fox's young
23 Stop
25 P.O. abbr.
26 Injures
27 Just right
28 City near Phoenix
29 Payment for services
31 Guy's date
32 Stay away from
33 Aquarium fish
34 Mountain curates
39 Buttermilk
40 Give in kind
41 Yoko —
42 Waterfalls
44 Baseball's Mel
48 Egyptian boy-king
49 Loathes
51 Toy-airplane material
52 Taking advantage of 54 Mouse or ant
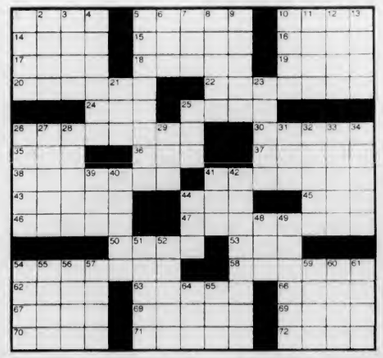
55 Be sore
56 Grand — Race
57 Father's sister
59 Correct a manuscript
60 Riviera resort
61 Over again
64 Moving vehicle
65 — out: make do with



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Jarett Barr
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Friday, September 15, 2000 | 14

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Web of intrigue: football sets sights on Spiders

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Spiders. Most people hirstle at then nare mention, with visions of hairy leggeds crawling through their head. Pinchers. Beady eyes. Eight legs.

Eight reasons why the Massachusetts football team should fear Elon as it gears up to face the Richmond Spiders tomorrow in Virginia.

No. 1) Starting off on the wrong foot. UMass struggled in the early going of the '98 campaign, suffering an ugly three-game losing streak that inevitably ended with week five's 77-0 humiliation of Northeastern. Should the Minutemen repeat their performance of that initial showing this year, the opportunistic Spiders will more than likely capitalize and make UMass pay.

No. 2) History repeats itself. The Maroon and White victorious in week one, 30-0, started the season 2-0 in 14 years. As a matter of fact, in the 117 years that the Minutemen have been taking the field, they have opened the season with two straight wins a mere 16 times.

No. 3) Keep your enemies close. The Spiders will have familiarity on their side in tomorrow's showdown, as this will be their third straight season hosting the Maroon and White, and their fourth home war in five years with UMass.

The Spiders' comfort level against UMass will extend to the sidelines as well as Richmond's Jim Reid stood at the helm of the Minutemen for six years from 1986-1991 and guided the squad to a 36-29-2 mark. The Reid era also saw the squad bring home a two-of conference crowns.

The Spider coaching staff also boasts four former UMass players and graduates in Defensive Coordinator Joe Cullen ('90), linebackers coach Ben Albert ('95), tight ends coach Bill Durkin ('94) and defensive ends coach Rich Cavanaugh ('92). Durkin was a two-time All-American, while Albert and Cavanaugh each captured All-Yankee Conference accolades while playing here.

No. 4) The Minutemen still have that 'new-car smell.' As Head Coach Mark Whipple pointed out at Wednesday's weekly sports luncheon, this weekend will give several key players on the Maroon and White roster the first road trip of their UMass careers.

Defensive lineman Dorain Davis, linebacker Joe Ferrer, defensive back

Rob Green and quarterback Richard Lucero will all hit the field in away white for the first time at U of R Stadium tomorrow.

No. 5) A field general still new to the troops. The spotlight will shine brightest on signal caller Lucero. Although he shattered all expectations in his UMass debut by putting up the second-best outing by a quarterback in school history (376 yards and two touchdown passes against William & Mary), the transfer phenom was forced to sit out practically all of last week's practices with a finger laceration on his throwing hand.

"Lucero wasn't able to practice until Friday," said Whipple.

No. 6) Conquering Mount Rushmore. While the pure ground power of UMass' Marcel Shipp is no secret to anyone who follows Atlantic 10 football, the Spiders have quietly assembled one of the most formidable rushing attacks in the conference.

Richmond steamrolled Bucknell in week one to the tune of 268 yards on the ground, thanks to 88 yards from junior QB Sean Gustus and 66 more from senior tailback TyRonne Turner. Week two saw U of R rack up 228 more rushing yards at Virginia, with fullback Claude Diggs and his 80 ground yards leading the way.

The Spiders' somewhat shaky passing offense undoubtedly factors into the team's propensity toward running the ball: Gustus connected on only four attempts at airing it out against the Bisons in week one and managed only a pair of completions last weekend at Virginia.

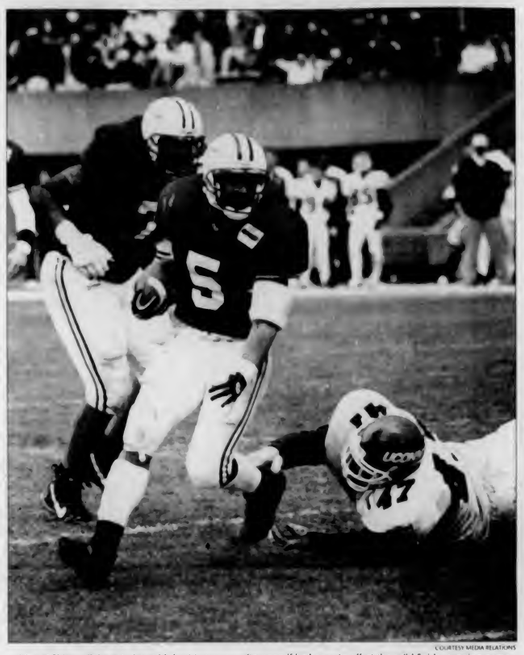
No. 7) You can't win if you don't score. Perhaps the single most dangerous aspect of this year's Richmond team is its tenacious defense. The Spiders surrendered a miniscule 96 yards of total offense and only seven points to Bucknell in week one, then held the Cavaliers to a mere 107 yards rushing a week later.

"Their defense is even stronger than it was last year," Whipple said on Wednesday. "They played very well against Virginia, only giving up 100 yards rushing."

No. 8) The weight of expectations. Judging from the past history between the two teams, nothing less than a solid victory should be expected from the men in maroon tomorrow afternoon. The Minutemen lead the all-time series between the two teams by a tally of 10-6, and have persevered in their last three visits to Richmond.

With accolades come even more pressure, and this week the Minutemen garnered a heap of praise with the release of three national polls. UMass ranked No. 1 in Don Hansen's Football Gazette Poll, while nailing down the No. 5 spot in polls by The Sports Network, ESPN/USA Today and Jeff Sagarin.

Kick-off is slated for 1 p.m., and the game will be broadcast live on WMUA student radio.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Marcel Shipp will have to be at his best tomorrow afternoon if he hopes to offset the solid Spider running game.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Lindsay Abbot will look to up her 3 goal total thus far this season with a solid performance against defending national champion Maryland. UMass was ranked number 12 this week in the National Field Hockey Coaches Association Division I Top 20 Poll.

It's time to take on the best of the best

Field Hockey treks to College Park to fight number one Terrapins

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

There is no disputing the fact that the Massachusetts Field Hockey team is very good. With nine of 11 starters returning from last year's squad, the Minutewomen have jumped out to a 5-1 record and a #12 ranking in the National Field Hockey Coaches Association poll.

Normally, tennis quiver in their skirts at the thought of playing such a national powerhouse.

However, this weekend will not be one of those times.

Why is this weekend different from so many others you might ask? What team could possibly stand in the way of a red-hot UMass squad that is riding an impressive streak of three consecutive wins against Boston College, Ball State, and Miami of Ohio?

Oh, only a University of Maryland team that is returning all 11 starters. A team in which every single player takes the field for a national team in the off-season, and one that is ranked #1 in the country this year, after a fairly successful 1999 season in which they merely won the National Championship.

This all means that the Minutewomen will have their work cut out for them when they travel down to College Park this Saturday to participate in a clash of the titans with the Terrapins at 1 p.m.

"It's a great game to play in," said UMass head coach Patty Shea. "Maryland's the one with the big bull's eye – they're the National Champions. We've got nothing to lose."

One thing that this game will definitely not be lacking is firepower. Maryland (5-0) has chewed up and spit out almost every team that has dared to take the field against them, outscoring its opponents by a combined score of 58-7. In fact, the only time this season that the Terrapins were even tested was a 5-4 double O.T. win on Sept. 5 against another of the nation's great teams, #3 Old Dominion.

"Their transition game is very strong," Shea said. "And their counterattack is very good. They attack in numbers."

Maryland is led by a quartet of All-Americans: back Rachel Hiskins, midfielders Keli Smith and Carla Tagliente, and forward Caroline Walter.

For Shea and rest of the Minutewomen, the scariest part of this lineup is the fact that any one of these players can strike at any time.

UConn and Ohio found out just how good Tagliente is when she dropped hat tricks on both of them, while Towson notched in one as Walter netted four goals on Sept. 13. Hiskins was able to score four goals of her own against Ohio and while Smith has yet to put up the numbers of the other big three, she is always due for a break out game.

The only thing that might be able to match the offensive and defensive might of the Terrapins is their confidence level. With such a stacked team, nothing less than another National Title will make the year a successful one for Maryland, and last season's NHCA coach of the year Missy Meharg seems to think that the other teams in the nation might as well just concede the title to her squad, and play out the rest of their schedules for second place.

"Repeat will not be the word of choice," said Meharg. "The words and actions are more like reloading and ensuring that everyone's individual greatness plays a vital role in our team success, and creating a style of play yet to be seen in NCAA field hockey. Repeating, no. Reloading our energies toward our goals is what this team will be all about."

All hope, however, is not lost. One position that UMass seems to have a clear-cut advantage over Maryland is goalie. Senior Zowie Tucker has shined in net for the Maroon and White, and her play over the past few games earned her WHMP/UMass athlete of the week honors. Thus far on the year she has made 23 saves and has posted a stellar 0.88 goals against average. Of course, Maryland will prove to be a tougher challenge than almost ans she has faced over her illustrious four-year career. But, as usual, the fate of the Minutewomen will rest in her hands.

For Maryland, Terrapins goalie Ashley Hohnstine has a decent, but not great, 1.4 GAA.

So the question remains: will UMass have a chance against one of the best field hockey teams to ever take the field at the collegiate level? Shea seems to think so.

"We've been practicing fine-just focusing on the little things that we have to do," said Shea. "The team is ready."

Turn to VOLLEYBALL, page 11

Minutewomen, Rams to clash in A-10 opener; URI still undefeated

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

A year ago, the University of Rhode Island women's soccer team started the season off 5-0. However, the Rams proceeded to close out the season with a 7-7-1 mark in their final 13 games to finish up shop with a 12-7-1 record.

Ironically, URI has also jumped out of the blocks this season to a perfect 5-0 mark. On Sunday afternoon at the URI Soccer Complex, though, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will look to start the hosts on a new skid in the Atlantic 10 opener for both teams.

UMass (3-3-1) is coming off a 1-0 loss to No. 6 Connecticut on Wednesday night in Storrs, CT. The Minutewomen played well in defeat, giving them a sense of optimism heading into the matchup with the Rams.

Game time is scheduled for 1 p.m. in Kingston, RI.

"We aspire to be a Top 20 team like UConn, and this was a great measuring stick tonight," said UMass assistant coach Dan Magner following the loss to the Huskies. "If we play with this type of commitment, enthusiasm and effort all the time, then I wouldn't want to be Rhode Island on Sunday."

UMass has relied on a balanced scoring attack through its first six games of the season. Junior Brooke Bartlett (two goals, four assists) and freshman Erin Tully (four goals) lead the club in scoring with eight points, while Kara Ciocca (three goals, one assist) is second on the squad with seven points. Juniors Kat Machamer, Kara Green and Anna Morozuk have also chipped in six points apiece.

Goalkeeper Julie Podbrasky played well in the loss to UConn, making a career-high nine saves in the losing cause. However, head coach Jim Rudy may start freshman Kelly

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 11

Primetime match-up for UM

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team left Thursday morning under the direction of Head Coach Bonnie Kenny in hopes of pulling out a couple of wins in the wild, wild, west. Fort Collins, Colorado, marks the spot of UMass' next battlegrounds, the Coors Classic, which features a primetime 9 p.m. match-up between the Minutewomen and the Colorado State Rams. The Maroon and White enter the weekend with a 3-3 record.

The Rams, who are ranked fourth in the latest USA Today/AVCA Coaches Poll, hold an intimidating 51 game home winning streak. Yup, 51 games. Colorado St. is led by a trio of players who have each received All-Tournament honors for three consecutive weeks: Angela Knopf, Summer Jennings and Krista Swartzendruber. Last year's Mountain West Coach of the Year, Tom Hilbert, leads the Rams onto the court.

"Colorado State will probably be the best team we play this year. It is extremely evident that they can play with the big dogs," said Kenny. "We need to head into this weekend with the attitude that we too can compete with the big dogs. We are going to need our 'A' game this weekend."

The Minutewomen arise Saturday morning slated to plan Georgia Tech at noon. The Yellow Jackets take the floor with a 7-2 record on the season, most recently going 1-2 last weekend at the Courtyard by Marriot Classic in Atlanta. Georgia Tech brought 10 new players onto their squad this season while returning highly touted Maja Pachale, a first team all ACC performer last season.

From the outside looking in, it appears that UMass should be able to capitalize on the Yellow Jackets' inexperience, although their only losses this season have come from two of the top ranked teams in the country, GT lost to 10th-ranked Minnesota and 11th-ranked Pacific.

The finale of the weekend features a match-up with Loyola University of

The Collegian takes a look at the most up-to-date fashion looks in a new installment called Style File.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Zowie Tucker and the rest of the Massachusetts field hockey team put in a strong showing against the #1 ranked Maryland Terrapins, but eventually fell short 2-0.

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 9 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, September 18, 2000

Students deemed threat to meeting

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

"I thought it was totally ridiculous he [Farber] wouldn't allow the other area governers there. There was nothing said that couldn't be discussed with students there."

-Seth Avakian, Student Trustee

Six University of Massachusetts students were removed from an Amherst meeting Friday after town officials deemed the presence of those students to be a threat to "the free exchange of ideas."

Amherst officials called the meeting to discuss a series of dumpster fires that occurred last weekend in the Townhouse apartment complex and the concern for security measures it has prompted.

Amherst Attorney Larry Farber, who called the meeting, said there were reports of approximately 500 people inciting numerous dumpster fires near the Townhouse area sometime between 1 a.m. and 3 a.m. last weekend. In addition, police reported numerous accounts of streetlights being knocked down and vehicles being vandalized. The concern for security and enforcement around the complex led to Friday's meeting with the Amherst Police and Fire Departments and Town Manager Barry Del Castilho.

"There have been five dumpster fires since Labor Day," Del Castilho said, also calling for "some discussion in general of other problems of large gatherings."

According to Farber, he didn't want student representatives present at the meeting because its goal wasn't to spur debate and subsequently bog down the proceedings.

"The main reason we didn't have people there was that it became a little difficult at the end because student representatives were taking it personal as it blaming [all] students when we were only talking about a very small percentage, that were creating the problem and causing it," Farber said.

All officials attending the meeting were allowed through invitation only and many student government representatives expressed their frustration with not being allowed to attend the meeting to discuss student issues.

"I asked him [Farber] if the prevalence of two or three extra students would impair this discussion," Commuter Area Governor Rob Moore said. "He said it would."

Commuter Area Lieutenant Governor Jason Malstrom said he didn't think it was right for public officials to be using a public building to discuss an issue in a closed setting, especially one which pertains to the public's interest.

"If it's a private meeting, it shouldn't be in the Town Hall," Malstrom said. "You shouldn't have closed meetings in a public building."

According to the Massachusetts Open Meeting Law, a public meeting is defined as that which holds quorum. Therefore, for the meeting to have been made legally public, 60 percent of Amherst's elected town representatives would have had to been present, but Del Castilho was the only town elected official present during last Friday's meeting.

However, Town Clerk Margaret Nartowicz is responsible for posting meetings that are taking place in the Town Hall, and she expressed the suspicious nature of the meeting and said she had heard nothing about a meeting to discuss the behavior surrounding the Townhouse incident.

"This is the first I have ever heard of the meeting," Nartowicz said. "I don't know who he [Del Castilho] was meeting with, but the open meeting law wouldn't be required if certain issues were being discussed."

According to her, a closed meeting may be warranted to discuss issues involving the dismissal or discipline of a public official, officer, employee or individual.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian was one of only two student representatives invited into the meeting. According to him, there weren't any issues being discussed in the meeting that would warrant a town official to hold a closed meeting.

"I thought it was totally ridiculous he [Farber] wouldn't allow the other area governors there," Avakian said. "There was nothing said that couldn't be discussed with students there."

Farber said new enforcement methods will be instituted around the Townhouse complex. Meanwhile, the Amherst Police are offering a $5,000 dollar reward for any information leading to the arrest and conviction of the individuals responsible for the fires.

UMass researchers receive $700,000 for hormone study

COURTESY UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

Geert DeVries

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

The National Institutes of Mental Health recently awarded five University of Massachusetts researchers almost $700,000 to study how hormones interact with the brain and other parts of the body.

The research will be conducted through the Center of Neuroendocrine Studies (CNS) located on campus. CNS is a group of 11 dedicated faculty members with varying interests in the relationships among hormones, the brain, physiology and behavior. The 11 come from three different departments and are all part of a special interdisciplinary graduate program leading to a Ph.D degree.

Geert DeVries, the grant's coordinator and also a professor in psychology, explained in a statement that this grant has already helped the University attract three top graduate students and will bring two postdoctoral researchers to campus later this year.

"A training grant doesn't change the focus of our own research, but it gives us an edge in the fierce competition for top students and post doctoral students who will benefit from spending a few years in our multidisciplinary training program," DeVries said, explaining how the grant will affect the CNS program as a whole. "We'll gain from the transfer of knowledge between labs, and they'll gain from a multidisciplinary experience in neuroendocrine research that would be hard to find somewhere else."

UMass graduate students who will be conducting research in conjunction with the grant include: Susan Zup, Juli Jones and Iris Iannacone.

Zup will be studying the sexual differentiation of the central nervous system. Jones will be researching the balance between reproduction and nutrition. And, Ianaconne will study environmental pollutants and brain development.

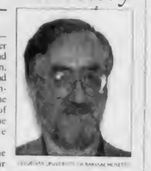
In addition to working with UMass faculty in three different departments, the students will also have the opportunity to work with faculty at Smith College, which is a participant in the CNS program as well.

According to DeVries, the center fosters research by sponsoring scientific meetings facilitating the flow of information among laboratories and coordinating efforts at UMass and Smith to support training research.

The CNS currently has projects underway exploring the relationship of environmental pollutants to reproduction, the role of nutrition in determining fertility, behavioral and environmental influences on neurohormone production and hormonal regulation of behaviors.

Pulitzer Prize winner to give talk on history

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff



COURTESY UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS

John Dower

John Dower, a Pulitzer Prize winning author and award winning historian, will speak to students and faculty today in a conjoined effort between the University of Massachusetts and the Five College Graduate History Program.

The talk, which is the first effort for this year from a program that is in its third year, is free and open to the public and will be held in Memorial Hall at 4:30 p.m. Dower will speak on "War, Law, and Memory: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial."

The author is an Elting Morison Professor of History at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is a former graduate of Amherst College. He received a Pulitzer Prize, the National Book Award, the Bancroft Prize, the Mark Lynton History Prize, the Los Angeles Times Book Prize, the John King Fairbanks Prize, and the PEN/New England Windship Award for his most recent book entitled: "Embracing Defeat: Japan in the Wake of World War II."

The novel itself explores many of the issues that will be touched on during the lecture. Kevin Boyle, a professor in the UMass Public History Program, commented in a statement to the UMass News Office, commented that Dower's lecture would draw from one of the most stimulating sections of his novel, the portion in which he explores what he calls "victors justice."

"It is just this sort of analysis of the everyday, what is known as public history, that in part makes Dower's talk of such relevance here at UMass," Boyle said in a statement to the press. "We look forward to hearing Dower speak in person. He is a brilliant historian, and his talk should be a fascinating event."

The novel itself, "Embracing Defeat" tells the story of postwar Japan under American occupation following World War II. The novel explores the way in which a nation that proved to be victorious following a war controls and defines what is considered justice within the occupied nation.

Within the novel, Dower criticizes U.S. General Douglas MacArthur's introduction of democracy to Japan calling it a "neocolonial revolution." He also focuses specifically on how public opinion was manipulated to separate Japanese military officials from the then Emperor Hirochito. In a more historical manner, Dower also explores Japanese popular culture at the time looking at songs, magazines, advertising and even jokes for more information on the Japanese mindset.

Following the talk will be a reception, which is open to the public.

Da mayor will see you now: San Francisco politician just normal guy

By John M. Glionna
Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — It's not quite 7 a.m. on a sleepy Saturday — a time when most American mayors are still home in bed – but the people's court, Willie Brown-style, is about to come to order.

Arriving at City Hall in his stylish homburg hat and $3,500 Broni suit, the slightly built man known to most San Franciscans as simply "Da Mayor" will spend the next five hours employing his decisive brand of political problem solving to tackle the concerns, complaints and flights of fancy of some two dozen constituents.

There's the homeless mother of three who tearfully tells Brown the city "spends more on outreach for drug addicts than it does on babies" and the woman claiming she was attacked by a fellow patient at a city counseling center. There's the cabby with an idea to cut the long waits for taxis in town, the fidgety man who's writing a screenplay with roles for both the mayor and President Clinton, and the frustrated carpenter whose repeat requests for a city job interview have gone unheeded.

America's most unabashed politician has an answer for them all.

"Sometimes," he tells the carpenter, "your name falls through the cracks because the system is not perfect. But that's about to change. It's going to change right this very minute."

No other big city mayor does it quite this way. Since launching his once-a-month Open Door sessions at the start of his first term in 1996, Brown has met with thousands of strangers, parceling out favors, offering advice, accepting pointers.

Serving his second and last term, the 66-year-old mayor insists he's in no need of any campaign-style grandstanding or public relations gimmick. The meetings, he says, are a simple grass-roots tool: "cutting through the bureaucracy that bedevils people's lives."

And Saturday, he notes, is when the working-class people who put him in office have time to talk.

Brown, who once joked that he took the job as mayor because the position of emperor wasn't available, says, "I just enjoy solving problems. When I can instantly correct the imbalance, that gives me a reason for being mayor."

Sometimes the suitors bring solutions instead of problems. Brown has hired several of them for his staff and appointed two to city commissions.

San Francisco Chronicle columnist Phil Matier says Brown "views himself as the sun king. When he shines all things happen – jobs appear," says Matier. "But there are two sides to Willie Brown. If you're on his good side, doors open. But if you're on his bad side, doors slam, and they slam on your foot."

Critics charge that his administration is rife with back-slapping patronage and point to an FBI probe into alleged bribery at the city's housing authority. Homelessness is rampant and management of public transportation is notoriously inept.

But his meet-the-folks regimen helps keep his adversaries at bay.

"Willie Brown represents an era when politicians called the shots from their gut and didn't worry about public opinion polls," said a cabby named Frank who brought his son to get the mayor's autograph. "He's going to be historically famous one day."

Brown's accessibility is more than just a once-a month gig. He has a regular public-access television show, writes a community newspaper column and enjoys offbeat public exchanges at restaurants and after church.

He even lists his home telephone number. And after a woman woke him at 2:30 a.m. to complain that a streetlight was out, the mayor had the problem fixed that very day.

Then he called her back to give her the news: at 2:30 a.m.

Both New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and Los Angeles Mayor Richard Riordan appear on weekly radio shows. And mayors in Las Vegas, Minneapolis and Little Rock, Ark., each have regular forums to which the public is invited.

Oakland Mayor Jerry Brown conducts "house meetings" in which he visits the homes of residents to field questions from the host and a dozen neighbors.

Along with his open door sessions, Flint, Mich., Mayor Woodrow Stanley cruises the streets in a motor home that serves as his "mobile city hall."

To win an audience with Willie Brown, people lose sleep.

Like anxious rock fans, the throngs line up at 3:30 a.m. for passes to one of Brown's 10-minute sessions.

Before dawn on a recent Thursday, newspaper delivery trucks prowled empty city streets as 40 residents huddled in the dark waiting for the doors to open at 7 a.m. The first 25 landed appointments for the following Saturday.

Come meeting day, various city department heads are summoned to help Brown field visitor queries.

"And if they don't have an immediate answer to his questions," said aide Bevan Dufty, "the mayor is not pleased."

To keep the people flow moving, the mayor often consults his watch and calls out "Who's next?"

A streetwise attorney who once represented San Francisco's prostitutes and other roustabouts, he plays the various roles of father figure, tough cross-examiner and "old country lawyer."

When a couple complained the screeching brakes of city street cars kept them up at night, Brown summoned his transportation chief to get the tracks oiled.

But the woman who griped about city harassment over her unpaid parking tickets saw another side of Da Mayor. Brown listened patiently and then asked how many tickets she was talking about.

Her answer: 2,200.

"She got a pretty stern lecture," recalls Brown press secretary Kandace Bender. "He told her that nobody should have 2,200 parking tickets that she needed to take responsibility for her life."

Glenda Patterson wanted to lecture Brown after he told her he couldn't intercede to ensure the bathrooms at her sons' school were kept clean. "He blew me off so bad," she said.

DAN SANTILLI/ COLLEGIAN

Wheel in the sky
The Big E hits Springfield from the fifteenth of September through the first of October.

COURTESY ROBERT DURELL/ L.A. TIMES

People fill out forms before participating in San Francisco Mayor Willie Brown's Aug. 26 Open Door session.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

One time at band camp...

UMass graduate Josh Cowen practices as the UMass Marching Band help their annual pre-season camp this weekend.

UPenn profs to school: do not yield to activist pressure

By Rachel Nawi
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – University of Pennsylvania presidents across the country are under attack for the way they handle sweatshop issues.

A group of economists and lawyers, including a Nobel laureate, is sending a letter to college and university presidents criticizing the decision-making process when it comes to labor monitoring organizations.

Over the past few years, sweatshop monitoring has become a major cause for student activists at Penn and across the country. Students at many schools – including the University of Wisconsin, the University of Michigan and Columbia University – have held highly publicized protests and sit-ins over university policies for monitoring production of school-logo apparel.

Now more than 200 scholars belonging to the Academic Consortium on International Trade signed the letter saying that schools are caving too quickly to pressure from student activists and not reviewing their options effectively.

"We often encounter news reports of sit-ins by groups of students ... after which decisions are often made without seeking the views of scholars," the letter states."

There are two major monitoring groups - the Fair Labor Association and the Worker Rights Consortium. Students favor the WRC, saying it is less corporate in its interests.

The WRC has risen from less than 10 college members six months ago to 50 today, largely due to student pressure.

Currently, Penn does not belong to either organization. Penn Students Against Sweatshops have been calling for WRC membership since their sit-in last February, which succeeded in forcing Penn to pull out of the FLA.

The six authors of the letter emphasize the importance of process when schools choose to join monitoring groups.

"We need more consultation on the issues. They're very complex, [and] we don't want to be ruled by sit-ins," co-author and University of Wisconsin Economics Professor Robert Baldwin said. PSAS member and College junior Matt Grove defended PSAS' actions last year when the group led a nine-day sit-in.

He said the student activist group had gone through all the appropriate channels trying to persuade the administration to listen to their concerns. It was only when those means failed that PSAS decided that a sit-in was necessary.

Grove also emphasized that PSAS members made a point to study the sweatshop issue.

"Obviously our group had done lots of work regarding learning about [the FLA and WRC]," he said. "We were not uneducated on these issues when we had the sit-in."

WRC Interim Director Maria Roeper also criticized the letter's assertion that decisions were being made in a haphazard fashion.

"Most of the decisions to join the WRC have been done through a committee process," she said.

Academic Consortium members worry about more than just the process through which the decisions are made, however. They are also concerned about the FLA and the WRC's commitment to improve workers' wages, which may very well mean paying workers above the minimum or prevailing wage.

That could actually be more harmful than helpful for workers, the Academic Consortium believes.

"The net result would be shifts in employment that will worsen the collective welfare of the very workers in poor countries who are supposed to be helped," the consortium's letter warns.

It is unclear what type of reception the letter will receive when it makes it into the hands of university presidents.

Included among the 200 signatures is that of Robert Lucas, a Nobel laureate and professor of Economics at the University of Chicago who signed because he feels that "people ought to be well informed before they make decisions."

The names of the other signers are not being released at the moment. However, Robert Stern from the University of Michigan, who led the letter-writing effort, did say that one of the signatories came from Penn, but would not release his or her name.

Indiana University fraternity entertains Playboy Playmate at rush dinner event

By Elvin Yavuz
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – A white limousine pulled up to the Delta Tau Delta house at Indiana University and Playboy playmate Tiffany Taylor Miss November 1998, walked in. She smiled shyly as fraternity members greeted her.

The fraternity arranged the event as one of its rush activities. "There is no better way to meet the guys, but to sit down and have dinner with them," said Nick Mcleland, junior and rush chair. "Tiffany is here for the Playboy golf tournament. She's trying to promote herself, and we thought it was a good dinner gig."

The Delts had a formal dinner with Taylor along with their rushees. At the end of the night Taylor thanked the members for having her and took pictures with them. Senior fraternity members received an autographed picture.

The members agreed to donate five dollars for each picture Taylor signed.

"The house is doubling the amount, and we will donate over $100 to a soup kitchen. We want to give something back to the community," said Matt Glasser, junior and treasurer of Delts.

Taylor, a junior at University of Maryland, said she was happy to be in Bloomington promoting the event.

"The Delts seem to be unified as a fraternity and have a good spirit. They were very well behaved," Taylor said. "I am very happy to be here. I party with the Delts at school."

As a part of a resolution that was passed last spring, fraternities can no longer have alcohol-sponsored events. The celebrity dinner was one of their non-alcoholic events for rush.

A lot of members are not happy with the new policy.

"It's depleting our greek system...," Mcleland said. "It's hindering rush, and it won't let us do rush like it has been done for 100 years. Like Bob Knight said, times change and so do people."

But Frank Miller, public relations for Delts and a junior, said the new policy is not hindering the rush process.

"It's just hard on the living situation, it's like living in a dorm again," Miller said. "It doesn't affect the fun and the brotherhood, but it restricts personal freedom."

Ryan Evans, a freshman and a rushee, said the policy is not coming in the way of their good time.

"I think it's great, it shows we can have a good time without the alcohol," he said. "You see all the crazy guys still, just without the alcohol." Taylor is in town for the Playboy Scramble, a national golf tournament hosted by local radio station B-97. Bloomington's Eagle Point golf course was chosen as one of the sites for the event. Winners of the regional tournament move on to nationals, which are held at the Playboy mansion. The event is held to raise money for Athletes and Entertainers for Kids. Chuck Bolanis, the promotion director for B-97 said the event would not be complete without having a playmate.

MAKE $ BEFORE BREAKFAST!

As a delivery driver or distribution manager for the UMass Daily Collegian you'll have all your work done before classes.

If you are interested & available in the mornings, please contact:

Shawn Ilinitch at the UMass Daily Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center or by calling 545-3500.

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Where are the rides?

This child swings while patiently waiting for his parents as they shopped at a furniture store at the Big E.

U.S. weathers oil price jump

By John M. Berry
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON –The big run-up in world oil prices is taking a toll on the U.S. economy in terms of slower growth and somewhat higher inflation, but consumer confidence hasn't suffered and neither economists nor government policymakers see any sign that the bigger oil bill will tip the nation into a recession.

Prices of crude oil to be delivered next month hit a 10-year high of $36 a barrel Friday after the president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Ali Rodriguez of Venezuela, said the price might temporarily reach $40 this winter. A flare-up between Iraq and Kuwait over the latter drilling close to their common border added to concerns about the adequacy of future supplies.

Each of the three prior big oil price spikes over the last 30 years triggered a surge in inflation and sooner or later caused the economy to slump. In New York last week, President Clinton raised the possibility that rising oil prices might trigger a recession somewhere in the world, but Friday he told reporters that isn't very likely to happen in the United States.

Asked at the White House if Americans should be worried about a recession, Clinton replied, "Well, I think in the short to medium term, the answer ... is 'no.' We have worked very hard over the last 25 years to be a more diverse economy and a less energy-intensive economy in a lot of our production. So we have withstood this oil price fight very much better than we did when it happened before."

Federal Reserve Vice Chairman Roger Ferguson told reporters that so far the impact of higher oil prices has not spilled over into the prices of non- energy goods and services, though that remains a risk. And it hasn't had a significant effect on consumer spending either, he said.

"There's obviously a potential for a price impact, which thus far has been contained," Ferguson said. "There is also the potential for it to have the equivalent of a tax impact (by reducing consumer spending). But again, I'm not sure we're seeing any of that showing up just yet."

And I. Alfred Broaddus, president of the Richmond Federal Reserve Bank, said the recent energy price rise presented a "manageable risk" to the U.S. economy.

Economists regard higher prices for imported oil as the equivalent of an income tax increase because it reduces the purchasing power of consumers. But each $10-per-barrel increase, if it is sustained, raises the total spent for imported crude and refined products by only $36 billion a year – a very small amount relative to the size of the U.S. economy. According to the federal Energy Information Administration, the average price of imported crude is likely to be about $10 a barrel higher this year than it was last year.

Over the past 12 months, the prices consumers pay for energy in all forms are up 15 percent. Gasoline prices at the pump are up 19 percent and home heating oil costs have skyrocketed by more than 35 percent, according to Friday's Labor Department report on the August consumer price index.

Over the past year, the CPI increased 3.4 percent, with higher energy prices directly contributing 0.8 percentage points to that rise. However, higher oil prices have indirectly affected some prices, such as those for airfares.

Economist Ethan S. Harris of Lehman Brothers in New York drew a sharp distinction between earlier oil price spikes and the current one.

"Successive oil shocks in 1973 and 1978-79 helped cause a dismal combination of low growth and high inflation," Harris said. "Indeed, in 1990, history seemed to repeat itself, as oil prices spiked and the economy slid into recession. (But) the impact on growth and inflation depends importantly on the underlying state of the economy prior to the shock and the psychological or confidence impact of the shock."

"The U.S. economy is in much better condition to withstand a shock than in any of these earlier periods," Harris said. "Today, core inflation is low and essentially flat, productivity growth is soaring and gross domestic product is growing at a solid 3 percent to 4 percent rate."

An analysis by Macroeconomic Advisers, a St. Louis economic forecasting firm, concluded that a $20-a-barrel price increase eventually slices about 0.8 percent off the U.S. economic growth rate.

"That's a significant but manageable shock," Harris continued. "More serious damage comes if either the Fed feels compelled to aggressively fight the oil price increase or there is panic behavior – disruptions of supply, hoarding or a collapse in confidence. For example, in 1990 the hike in oil prices caused an immediate collapse in consumer confidence, which hurt the economy more than the direct impact of the price hike."

In fact, the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in August 1990, which sent oil prices soaring, caused such a collapse in confidence that consumers cut back their spending enough to trigger a recession that lasted until the following April.

That contrasts sharply with what has happened since oil prices began rising in the first half of 1999. Most measures of consumer confidence are higher now than they were before oil prices started climbing.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Suc Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Jaret Barr Photography Editor

Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Attention Seniors!
Apply Now for positions overseas after graduation. All majors welcome.
Contact the 5-College Peace Corps office @ 112 Stockbridge, 545-2105

Come work at the Collegian or our ass will kick yours.

It's not too late to get a job at the Collegian!

WANTED: Volunteers to serve on the Judicial Hearing Board

A great experience for students who:

are interested in student leadership
wish to enhance communication skills
want to build their RESUME!
want to learn about the University's judicial system

Requirements include:
full time enrollment
2.0 G.P.A.
no current judicial sanction

You can pick from one of three training sessions
all sessions held in campus center**

Monday October 2	Tuesday October 3	Wednesday October 11
7:00-9:30 p.m.	7:00-9:30 p.m.	4:00-6:30 p.m.
Room 903	Room 903	Room 903

Applications available at The DEAN OF STUDENTS Office
ed in 227 Whitmore
Thursday, Septembe

Questions? Please Contact:
ancellor Terry O'Donnell or Seth Watson
Dean of Students Office
227 Whitmore
Phone: 545-6281

DON'T MISS OUT ON THIS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY!!!

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.
For more information call 545-2321

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Without an identity
Bush campaign stagnates

While he'd have us believe that he's going to clean up Washington, create a bipartisan approach to politics and give money back to Americans, Texas Governor and presidential hopeful George W. Bush's campaign is at an absolute standstill.

His failure to define himself is a big reason why.

Bush's attempt to redefine his political campaign is an act of sheer desperation. After months of character assassination and focus on everything but his own week point, actual policies, Bush is now promising to talk policies with the American people.

His proposition?

In fifteen pages, Bush explains his policies on taxes, education, health care, social security, family and community. The problem is that, compared to Gore's 191 page collection of proposals, Bush has showed yet again why his campaign is failing.

He can't do what he wanted to do in the election very well: slander Gore, Gore's lack of personality, and Gore's ties to our current administration.

And now he can't do very well what Gore is doing: spelling out proposals that will benefit the American people.

The failure of the Bush campaign has been a fascinating one, and while the election is by no means over, if Bush doesn't get it together, it might as well will be. What positive strides has the Texas Governor made in the last week?

None.

In the last week, he's been accused of doctoring advertisements, he's been caught on tape being unable to pronounce simple words, he only finally agreed to debates and lost his statistical dead-heat to Gore in recent polls. Bush is clearly a desperate man, and while Gore presents Americans with a confident tone, the Texas governor is grasping at straws.

His increasing desperation has seen him offer more and more money of the government surplus to anybody who might vote for him, especially anybodies found in swing states. He is promising tax credits to families per child, and he continues his plans to spend vast amounts of money on tax-breaks that will benefit primarily the richest segments of the United States population.

And now his only solution is fifteen pages of solutions, barely outlined, much less explained and paid for. The American people deserve better for its president. For Bush to prove that he is better than he has currently shown himself to be, he needs to better explain his proposals, nevermind stay away from character attacks that bare no real importance on the election.

Bush's problem now is that he is stuck in neutral, somewhere between being himself, which isn't very appealing, or mimicking Gore, which he isn't very good at. To offer the American people something better, Bush has to figure out who he is, because right now, he isn't much.

Write for Ed/Op!!

Summer Randomness

So many random events took place this summer. Some made national headlines; others reached all over the world. Either way, these are the events that we may or may not remember, and I think it's time that we look back to this past summer before we begin a new semester.

The world watched as the Los Angeles Lakers proved victorious over the Indiana Pacers in the quest for the NBA championship. And in celebration Los Angeles showed their love and devotion to their team in a way Los Angles can. Overturned police cars and anarchy in the streets, caused our nation to fear the celebration in the California city and leave us to worry that this may be the future of sports violence in the United States. Well if this is the future of how we as a country are going to celebrate winning victories in major athletics than thank heavens I live in Philadelphia.

> "Well if this is the future of how we as a country are going to celebrate winning victories in major athletics than thank heavens I live in Philadelphia."
>
> PAUL RAFELSON

The world also witnessed two political conventions this year. The Republicans were in Philadelphia, and the Democrats were in Los Angeles. Having lived in Philadelphia this summer, I can say every major heartache I experienced this summer was at the fault of the Republicans and a group of bored, unoriginal, earthy protesters, who decided to violently protest Mumia Abu Jamal for the umpteenth time in the city's history.

For those of you who don't know the outcome of this summer's political conventions, I am not going to tell you because anyone that ignorant doesn't need to be told. I think I can speak for many when I say that the vote this year is not about electing the nation's choice, but electing the lesser of two evils. Truly if the people wanted to elect a president that meant something to them they would pick Duce Staley who had over 200 rushing yards for the Philadelphia Eagles vs. Dallas last Sunday.

With the exception of riots and protests in Philadelphia, the convention went smoothly. The city looked beautiful. The skyscrapers were lit up with red, white and blue. The city was clean and the taxi's didn't smell any more. All eyes of the media were on the Republicans as we anticipated the reaction of John McCain, and George W. Bush as they took their first bite of the original Pat's cheese steak. I must give the media credit for the controversial and insightful coverage of the Republican's first cheese steak. By the way I am not being sarcastic, Pat's cheese steaks are that good. Everyone should try them. In fact, I invite everyone from UMass to head down to Philadelphia, and hold the first annual UMass cheese steak convention. I figure if it is important for the Republicans it's important for us too.

The entire world also watched this summer the grueling home video capturing the crash of the Air France flight. It was the middle of July when Air France's Concorde crashed into a Paris hotel, killing 109 people. The accident was ruled to be the result of a faulty tire. I rule it to be the result of an almost 30-year-old plane that hasn't been manufactured in twenty-five years. It was a day prior to this accident that British Airways officials noticed small cracks in their Concorde's wings. Although this is unrelated I think it's time for Euro Carriers to consider new alternatives to their 30-year-old tradition of high priced, high-speed transit. This crash was the first in the history of the Concorde. For those of you considering paying the high price for supersonic travel beware.

Other events that proved random took place on the Today Show, which airs on NBC. I know many of the readers are from the Boston area so I thought this might be of interest. Former Boston radio shock jocks Opie and Anthony were able to chalk one up in the book of public disturbances, in the name of "Whip'em out Wednesday." A woman outside the NBC studio who bared her chest during a nationally broadcast crowd pan generated the attention. In related news Today is now the highest rated morning news show among post adolescent males.

Random as this summer was, we can all look forward to new conversation topics as the world unfolds more surprises and randomness. I will scrutinize, and scour the world news to provide accurate, informative news with a strong bias. I'll try but if that fails, I can always watch the Today show every Wednesday and keep you posted.

Paul Rafelson is a UMass student.

The whole truth

The fact that this column is appearing now is proof beyond reasonable doubt that I am a filthy, evil liar. I told you, the noble readership of the University of Massachusetts, that I was done writing for the Collegian.

I claimed, in filthy liar fashion, that I had gotten a job working at The Recorder in Greenfield, and that you would see no more in the way of Seth Koenig columns.

Well, being a filthy, evil liar, it seems to make perfect sense that I lied – in a filthy and evil sort of manner, of course, and here I am writing columns for the Collegian once again. I do work at The Recorder, mind you, but I just couldn't help myself. I'm back again.

And the peasants rejoice. And those peasants who don't like it can go straight to hell.

So... let's delve into what has happened in my life since last I wrote, which, according to very scientific chronological calculations was approximately a "wicked long time ago."

I know you've been dying to know what I'm up to. I apologize in advance if my column-writing skills are a bit rusty, but here goes nothing.

Let's start from the beginning. I was sitting innocently at my apartment at the end of last August checking email. I had gotten a message from my parents back home in Southern Maine that explained that I had gotten a very important postcard from the distinguished folks in the Massachusetts law enforcement field.

Those friendly gentlepeople sent me a warm, cheerful note that not only expressed their concern for my overall happiness and well-being, but also encouraged me to show up for jury duty in Northampton – that's "Hamp" for the locals out there – because if I did not, there was an extremely good chance that I would be tossed helplessly into a small, windowless room made of steel and concrete.

Luckily for me, being the master procrastinator that I am, there was a neat little postcard that I could mail back to the law enforcement individuals that said something to the effect of "Go to hell! You can't make me do anything."

SETH KOENIG

I don't want to do (until next year) and I refuse to show up at your imperialist function (until next year)! So there! Stick that in your pipe and smoke it (until next year)."

So, having waived my civic duty for a calendar year, I was set. Until just last week.

Sure, a bunch of stuff happened to me in the course of that year, but let's face it: I'm extremely unimportant and that stuff doesn't matter in the slightest.

There I was, sitting at my apartment checking my email and I got another message from mom saying that the Massachusetts law enforcement folks wanted my attention again.

It seems as though I could no longer avoid my duty. I understood, then, that as an American, it was my job – my obligation, if you will – to aid in the justice system (play patriotic music here) and keep the streets safe for Americans everywhere. Especially in Northampton.

So, at the extremely early hour of 7 a.m. on September 5, 2000, I hopped eagerly out of bed (translation: managed to regain enough consciousness to understand that the incessant beeping was, in fact, my alarm) and promptly dressed in all black, decorated with flaming skulls.

I, being an American, was also very interested in getting out of work, and so I figured that dressing like Marilyn Manson would keep me out of the jury.

A quick overview for all of you out there who have spent a better part of your life trapped in a cardboard box: When Massachusetts law enforcement folks encourage you to attend "jury duty," you are immediately put in a room with a bunch of complete strangers – most of whom are dressed in black, decorated with flaming skulls – and 12 of you are chosen to actually sit at a trial and decide something of vague legal importance, such as whether or not some criminal should live or die or whatever.

By dressing like Marilyn Manson, I was thinking that the extremely noble folks who decide which of the complete strangers should sit at this particular trial would look at me and think I was an absolute lunatic, and that I should go home and not serve on the jury.

When I got to the courthouse, I was quickly and officially ushered in by a security guard, who wondered out loud what I was doing there. I was run through a metal detector and sent straight upstairs, where, to my astonishment, I was the first person to arrive in the big, scary jury selection room.

I was even more astonished when I realized that not only was I the first person to arrive, but I was the only person to arrive. Apparently, there was yet a third letter that had been sent – which got to my apartment later that afternoon – saying that I should probably call a day ahead of time to see whether or not the whole thing was canceled.

So there I was, dressed like Marilyn Manson for no reason, thanks in large part to the timely efforts of the United States Postal Service – or some facsimile thereof.

In a climactic ending to this enthralling story, I went home and collapsed on the couch in front of Sportscenter.

As is the case in all of my columns, as you undoubtedly remember, there is a pertinent moral to all of this.

That is: never dress like Marilyn Manson when going to serve on jury duty, because a chance exists that the people at the court sent you a letter that will appear some time in the distant future that suggests that you call ahead to see if you have anything to show up for.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

To make a mask

BOO DOWNS

"I'm going to make myself a mask...to cover up my simple face...a lekyl mask for Hyde...I'm going make myself a mask, that hides the face inside." –Jud Caswell, To Make a Mask.

The weather in early September did little to betray the imminent change of season. As I walked with a friend through Amherst Center, it was clear that summer was making one last push before fading toward winter. The sun was out, the leaves were still green, and the temperature was in the high 70's. With such weather, almost everyone was walking around in his or her summer attire. Everyone, that is, except my friend, who managed to survive in black pants and a jacket. As we made our way downtown, crowds of people milling about greeted us. As two heterosexual males, we could not help to notice the hoards of attractive college women wearing the current fashion, which is really not much at all. I was thankful that my friend was wearing sunglasses, as his eyes tripled in size at the sight of some of the ladies we encountered. If my friend and I were women, we would have noticed the large numbers of men, with their T-shirts, ball caps, and loose shorts. In fact, there were attractive people out for every lifestyle.

I will not deny that I personally found a large number of the women out very attractive. However, as the number of women wearing almost identical clothing grew into the double digits, I found that each singular woman did little for me. In fact, no matter how attractive these women were, I found my eyes wandering to people who looked different.

Before every guy on campus lynches me, I must make myself clear. I am just your average college guy, and enjoy certain body parts as much as the next person. However, it is hard to appreciate individual beauty when everyone looks like a fast food restaurant made them. The concept of beauty and attractiveness is, of course, based on our subjective experiences. With that in mind, I fully expect to for disagreements to arise. The question I must raise is not whether or not people are attractive or beautiful, but whether or not people successfully express their individuality.

My mother once told me that beauty is in the inside. This, while certainly being a piece of idealism, becomes legitimate in our mass-produced society. While presentation plays a huge role in our relations with others, fashion is a two-edged sword. It presents us in a favorable light to others, but as a crutch it hinders our self-expression. In today's culture, physical attractiveness and expressional beauty are merged into one unit. This beauty unit is the standard for society, created by magazines, T.V. and Hollywood. We eat this up, and try to be "beautiful" ourselves. In the process, open, more traditional beauty becomes only skin deep like makeup.

Designed to make people look better, designer clothes actually end up making people look the same, and thus destroys personal uniqueness. While fashions create continuity, it causes us to identify people not for who they are, but what group they belong to. Mainstream fashion even transcends race, as people can be now categorized not by just skin color, but the name brand they are wearing. Clothing, makeup, and accessories (jewelry, piercing, etc.) are designed to create an instant, simplified view of its wearer. With legions of people wearing the same things, individual identity is lost, as the wearer is now herded into a group of people who look almost identical. Even people who are considered attractive in today's society are at a loss, as they are reduced to a category of body parts like everybody else.

Attached to fashion is the wearer, who could infuse their own individuality into the persona. Many people successfully make up the lack of unoriginal clothing for an original personality. For others, it is hard to imagine why they put themselves through such torture. I can understand that there is an inherent need to make oneself presentable, whether it is for a social or professional occasion. However, I find it amazing that I see people come to their 9:05 AM class in full fashion, complete with too much makeup, and a scowl on their face. One, who are they trying to impress at that time of day, and two, how can somebody be considered beautiful when they have a perpetually cold, contorted scowl on their face? For all their fashions and physical attractiveness, they look completely hideous.

A way to find if the personality matches the clothing is to look at them either doing a mundane activity, or when they don't think their being watched, like waiting alone for a bus, for example. Look at their facial expression, and the way they present themselves. You will find that a great deal of these people appear uncomfortable, unhappy, and downright pissed off. Granted, the fact that they may be tired, emotionally strained, or ill may also contribute to this. However, if they notice you looking at them, they will look even more uncomfortable. Notice that person when he/she sees someone familiar approach, and the composure changes. This new person is far more dynamic, composed, and sociable. Is this a sign of someone being "fake?" No, this is a natural social process where we adapt socially to any given situation. However, it does reveal that we cover up ourselves in order to be more appealing. With that in mind, we move back to fashions.

Fashions, and fashion accessories physically do cover us. The question is whether we use the fashions to enhance our individuality, or we use fashion as a mask. For those who become more beautiful with fashion, the more respect I have for them. Those who need fashion to define them, they need to be content with themselves before others will be content with them. Then the mask can be lifted, and you can be who are.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist.

Introduction of contemporary fashion

It's Monday. The bus tires are squealing, the swans are attacking joggers and college students everywhere are blinking their tired eyes at the first blinding sunlight they've seen in three days. While half the campus is shuffling off to class in an array of pajama bottoms and warm-up pants, the other half is shuffling back to bed after ripping their alarm clocks from the wall. Either way, the Monday-head look college kids have sported for years is it in a big way. Tousled, wild and where's-my-hair-brush looks are what it's all about this fall.

Style File with SHAUNA BILLINGS

While fashion magazines this spring and summer were predicting that the hot fall hairstyle would be a feathered-Charlie's Angels do, or a big headed 80's look, people across the nation revolted by hiding their hair dryers and barrel brushes and flat out refusing to spend an extra hour perfecting their locks. But now the pages, from hair help articles to fashion spreads, all show models with that carefree look.

Meg Ryan's messy, freehand shags have been the envy of women several years, and now other celebrities have joined in the craze for that less than perfect look that makes them all the more endearing. "Sex in the City's" Sarah Jessica Parker lets her tight curls go free, Singers Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera have added wild razor chops to their blond pop-star locks to create a little rock-and-roll drama (as if they needed to after their MTV Video Music Award ensembles). And the Caesar like Clooney crop from years back has gone the way of the Roman Empire, while messy dos like Brad Pitt's and Ethan Hawke's are what's in.

Whatever your hair's length or texture, bedroom hair can work you, but it all starts with a great cut. To get hair as wild as Meg Ryan's, let your stylist go to town on your strands with a razor, but be careful – short, choppy hair is a pain to grow out, so make your decision wisely! For long hair that holds a curl, or naturally spirals or waves, get a soft layer cut – the look with curly hair is gentle flow, so take it easy on the layers and the intensity of the angle, or you will suffer from very unflattering triangle-head. However if your hair is sleek and straight, then by all means, get edgy with sharp, jagged angles in your style.

To create the messy look, minus the bed, blow-dry hair until slightly damp, and add a volumizer for fine hair, light gel for normal hair, or pomade for thick hair. Blondes should check out the John Frieda Sheer Blonde product line, which will give you the control you want, without darkening light shades. Work the product through hair, and blow-dry while tousling with fingers. To create a more textured look, grab random sections of hair, twist, and then partially unwind. To make a look more piecey, curl ends of hair in different directions. For shorter hair, scrunching has a similar effect. And proceed with caution those with thick, unruly heads of hair. While air-drying will cut down on the damage caused by a blow dryer, be sure to add a defrizzer no matter the drying method.

Curly haired girls are in luck as perfect ringlets have gone the way of the pashmina shawl (classic, but not the now look). Tame truly curly hair with a little de-frizzer, and then let locks flow free for a natural look. Just don't let the curls get too out of control. With wavy hair, scrunch it to add more definition, or add some loose curls with large rollers. For those on the hunt for texture for their limp locks, check out the kinder, gentler new perms, which add a little wave and volume, but open the doors to a lot more styling options. Physique's Spiral Creme is great for keeping curls under control, while the same line's smooth + control Contouring Lotion keeps flyaways down.

For the edgy, tagged-layer do, keep hair relatively smooth, and finger separate strands of hair. Add extra kick to the rock star style by rubbing in a product that de-fluffs and texturizes hair, like Bed Head by Tigi, or Head Games Messed-Up Molding Creme.

And guys stop covering your hair with those baseball caps! So it's a little messy and you spent your barber money on a pizza last night. You're in luck because textured is the look that all of Hollywood's hottest guys are sporting. The past trend for very cropped cuts for guys has given way to a look with a little more length that provides actual styling options. So embrace shagginess, and get a funky style with the aforementioned texturizer.

But a warning to those of you avoiding the shower like it's gone out of style. Guess what, it hasn't. Good hygiene is always a must. This season's look does not give you permission to skip the shampoo and let grease locks flow free. The look is clean shirts and well-used hair. So while the style rules say to skip soap and water temporarily.

Sleek and straight hair will never really go out of style, but why not have some fun this fall and get a shaggy layer or two put in? Just remember, this look is a lot harder to sleep in, so invest in a pillow that doesn't leave you with pillow-head. Or just embrace your inner Medusa.

ARTS is GREAT
Write for ARTS
If you write for ARTS, you too will be so cool that people ignore you will finally notice you so write for ARTS!!! for your own sake

Breakaway Sports & Fitness
Student Membership
$249/year
$139/semester
Free Weights
Batting Cages
Aerobics
Indoor Soccer League
549-3638
Route 116, near campus on bus line

JOIN UMASS MEN'S CREW
A WINNING TRADITION SINCE 1871
NO PRIOR ROWING EXPERIENCE NEEDED
PLEASE COME TO THE INFORMATION MEETING:
Wednesday Sept. 20th at 6pm in front of the Totman Gymnasium or Call Coach Brian Mehr at 545-0487

CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
#15
Stencil www.stencil.com
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

Smith College Rec Council presents
MACY GRAY with special guest
Sunday, September 24
8 pm
John M. Greene Hall
Doors Open @ 7:30 pm
Tickets: $24 General Public
Available @:
• Northampton Box Office
• B-Side Records (586-2556)
• Fine Line Music Cafe (584-0134)
• Ticketmaster Outlets
WRNX 95.5 NORTHAMPTON
STING-RAY

Business | Education | Communications | Health | Law
GRADUATE PROGRAMS MASTER'S:
Business Administration
Health Administration
Teaching
Journalism
E-Media
Advanced Physical Therapy
Biomedical Sciences
Forensic Nursing
Molecular and Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant
FIRST PROFESSIONAL:
Law
Law/Business Administration
Law/Health Administration
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
This is HARD Hitting. This is HARD Hitting.™
Hamden, CT 06518 • www.quinnipiac.edu • 203-582-8672/1-800-462-1944

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH
D.J. MATT
Filmore
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
DRINK SPECIALS
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANNA EAT?
CAN'T FIND A MENU?
DON'T WANNA PICK UP THE PHONE?
LOG ON TO
WWW.MASSMUNCHIES.COM
Point, Click, Eat!
Browse menus and order food for delivery with a few clicks of the mouse!

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981 Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, eml Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas: Administrative Support Data Entry Operator Entry Level Management Front Office Support Customer Service Representative CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com Corporate Staffing Solutions 126 Northampton Street, Suite G Easthampton, MA 01027 (413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise?

You Found the Place!

It is Easy!

Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because

you can use jock font too!!!

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks, you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

Ustore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	26	CNN SI
8	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel	28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WCCH & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
14	International	33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	34	C-Span
16	WB/ New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 7, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Zoboomafoo	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Going Places "Sydney"		Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) [Part 3 of 3]			Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	King	Billy Graham (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	King	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Vanished		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sister, Sister	Fresh Prince	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Heartbreak City"		Charmed "Chick Flick"		News		Friends	Nanny
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Divorce Court	Divorce Court	Blind Date	Real TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		News		Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Ent. Tonight	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WYCC	20	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Will & Grace	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Doctors	Australia: Beyond the Fatal Shore (N) (In Stereo) [Part 3 of 3]				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Vanished		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Crossfire	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Initiations"		Med Ath. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball: Arizona Diamondbacks at Atlanta Braves. (Live)							Sup. Ser. Main Stand (Pt. 1) (Live)	Bruce Willis
A&E		L.A. Law	Law & Order "Mad Dog"		Biography: Vincent Price		Murder One			Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Cause Mortis"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	58	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Canned Ham					Stein's Money	Stein's Money	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tiger		On the Inside "Real LAPD"		Science Mysteries				On the Inside "Real LAPD"
ESPN		Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia Tech at East Carolina. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV		Ax. Uncensrd	Video Music Awards Opening Act (In Stereo)			MTV Video Music Awards (In Stereo Live)						Awards Post	MTV Awards
NICK		Wstg & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Sponge	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI		Sliders "The Weaker Sex"				Dead Zone "Deadtime Story"		Invasion Earth [Part 3 of 3]				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	28	Home Again	Home Again	Chasing the Killer Storms		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!		Ancient Prophecies IV		Welcome to Armageddon		Tornado! Hurricane! Flood!
TNT		ER "Welcome Back, Carter"		Pretender "Pyre" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Pyre" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Out of Vogue" (In Stereo)		Movie: "Under Siege" (In Stereo)		Movie: "Under Siege"
USA		Walker, Texas Ranger		Strip Poker		U.S. Open Tennis: Men's Quarterfinals and Women's Doubles Semifinals. (Live)						Strip Poker	Texas Ranger
HBO						Inside the NFL (N)		Real Sports (N)		Boxing: Oscar De La Hoya vs. Felix Trinidad (Live)
MAX						Dark Shadows "Lost"		Movie: "Arnold"		Movie: "Twilight"		Movie: "Twilight"
SHOW						Dark Shadows "Lost"		Movie: "Arnold"		Outer Limits		Outer Limits

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

PIZZA, CHILI, ICE CREAM, TUNA, CORN CHIPS, SALSA, FRIED CLAMS, CHEETOS...
ICED TEA, ROOT BEER, MILK, CHOCOLATE SYRUP, SARDINES, CRACKERS...
CLAM CHOWDER, PEANUT BUTTER, SPICY MUSTARD, MAYONNAISE, POP-TARTS...
IF THIS CART DOESN'T SPELL DELICIOUS, I DON'T KNOW WHAT DOES.
MIND IF I RIDE INSIDE?

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

THIS CLASS IS OVERSUBSCRIBED. WHY SHOULD I ALLOW YOU INTO THIS CLASS?
WELL, I'M AN HONOR STUDENT, WITH A 4.0 GPA, I'M ON DEANS LIST, AND I PROMISE TO COME TO EVERY CLASS AND YOU?
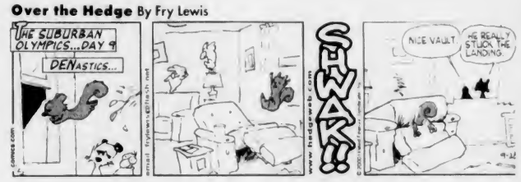
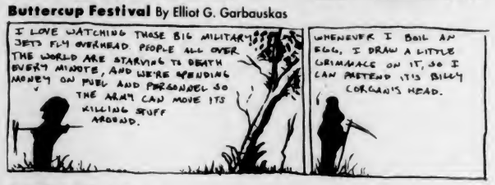
IF YOU LET ME SIT NEXT TO HIM ... I PROMISE I'D DO GOOD
I'D DO WELL
SHUT UP

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis



Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



I LOVE WATCHING THOSE BIG MILITARY JETS FLY OVERHEAD PEOPLE ALL OVER THE WORLD ARE STARVING TO DEATH EVERY MINUTE, AND WE'RE SPENDING MONEY ON FUEL AND PERSONNEL SO THE ARMY CAN MOVE ITS KILLING STUFF AROUND.
WHENEVER I BOIL AN EGG, I DRAW A LITTLE GRIMACE ON IT, SO I CAN PRETEND IT'S BILLY CORGAN'S HEAD.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

WE FORGOT WHAT IT WAS YOU SENT US TO BUY, SO WE BOUGHT A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING TO BE SAFE
CORN CHIPS, BEAN DIP, SODA, NACHO SAUCE, ICE CREAM, BEEF STEW, MINI DONUTS...
I WANTED EGGS! THERE ARE NO EGGS IN HERE!
CALM DOWN. WE'VE GOT 47 MORE BAGS IN THE CAR.
FORTY-SIX. ONE JUST HAS THE RECEIPT.

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

IN A FAILED SPACE TRAVEL ATTEMPT, THE AMERICAN SPACE SHUTTLE SPUNKNIK LIES SINKING IN A MYSTERIOUS LAKE ON A MYSTERIOUS PLANET. COL. TAYLOR AND CLAYMORE ARE THE ONLY SURVIVORS.
I GUESS WE SHOULD EXPLORE THE TERRAIN BUT IT'S TOO HOT AND UNCOMFORTABLE
HUFF HUFF
YOU'RE TELLING ME! TRY HERDING HUMAN CATTLE IN THIS WEATHER!

Horoscopes

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Those who thought they were out of the race were misinformed. Break free. Do not be cajoled into indifference.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Full moon in Aquarius relates to your house of career. Stand tall for what you want; important people are behind you.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Emphasize home and prosperity. If you are diplomatic, you win. Conversely, if you force issues, you lose.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Define terms, outline boundaries; let it be known that you are alive and kicking.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan.19) It can be your kind of day if you desire. You can either be comfortable or active. Ambition plays a role, so go after what you desire.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb.18) Cycle high, open the lines of communication; you will be in the right place at the right time. Circumstances are turning in your favor.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) People note that you are out of character. This means that you are no longer timid but aggressive. Stress both independence and originality.

Aries (March 21-April 19) What you have desired will become reality. Be careful what you ask for; you are liable to get it.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) Remarkable comehack. Read, write, analyze. People see you as a speaker, a teacher. Members of the opposite sex see you as divine.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) You exude personal magnetism and sex appeal. Don't break too many hearts. At the very least, offer tea and sympathy.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) A promise made will be fulfilled — you will obtain financial support. Accent color coordination, showmanship and advertising.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) Make personal appearances to show that you are not confined. As social activities accelerate, you will be in demand.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 75 LOW: 52	HIGH: 77 LOW: 55	HIGH: 73 LOW: 54

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
www.monkey-box.net
"WITH MY SKULL-LIKE HEAD AND HATRED FOR HE-MAN, I SHOULD BE A SUPER VILLAIN... BUT BY WHAT NAME?!?" © 2000

Quote of the Day

"I think people who speak in metaphors ought to shampoo my crotch."

–Jack Nicholson
As Good As It Gets

Jose Maldonado ate your lunch

ACROSS
1 Type of eclipse
6 Widebeest
9 Hold responsible
14 Circumvent adroitly
15 Dawn goddess
16 Raring to go
17 Races
19 Office worker
20 Kind
21 Fragrance
22 Looks after
23 "— Eyre"
25 Army posts
26 Dry gully
29 Sweat
31 Filmaker
32 Candle material
36 Reporter Lois
37 Caress
38 Toast topper
40 Vicious fish
43 Cooks' wear
45 Do the backstroke
46 Dresser
47 Sumptuous meal
50 Hobgoblin .var
51 Krishna devotee
52 Potato
54 Tease
57 Secret
58 Harrison Ford, e.g.
61 Hosiery shade
62 Hardwood
63 Cowboy movie
64 Skirt features
65 Endeavor
66 Santa has one

DOWN
1 19-wheeler
2 Like eggs
3 Escapade
4 Lord Byron's daughter
5 Soak (flax)
6 Hollow stone
7 Words to Nanette
8 Old map units
9 Gives
10 After a while
11 Representative
12 Repairs
13 God of love
18 Confer distinction on
23 Wild card
24 Response on deck
25 Enemy
26 Leatherworking tool
27 Harvest
28 Rajah's wife
29 Crosswise, in a ship
30 Kitty's doc
33 Fret
34 Soothing herb
35 Warrior
36 Princess of TV
37 Frat letter
39 Big Ten sch.
41 Guarantees
42 Falkenvinta's pl.
43 Living quarters
44 Type of nose
47 Important exam
48 Boredom
49 Expert
50 Massive 51 Blockbusters
52 Highlander
53 Bosc or Anjou
54 "Lovely — meter maid"
55 Centurion's highway
56 Polar explorer
59 Choreographer Fosse
60 "Noma —"

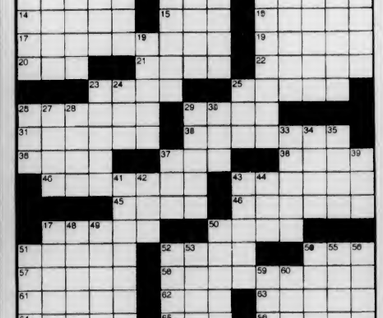
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-3-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

MONDAY NITE WINGS ALL YOU CAN EAT FOOTBALL

the HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zokoshansky, Soren Nash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, September 18, 2000

8

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegiansports@yahoo.com

Lucero, Minutemen manhandled by Richmond

Spiders pull out win by spinning web of victory

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

RICHMOND, VA – Caught in a web of deceit. That is where the University of Massachusetts football team found itself on Saturday afternoon in its Atlantic 10 matchup with the University of Richmond.

The No. 9 Minutemen came into the game having steamrolled conference rival William & Mary on August 31 in the first night game in school history and completely rested after a bye week. The Spiders crawled into the contest after being abused by I-A opponent Virginia Tech.

For all the positives that UMass (1-1, 1-1 A-10) had on its side heading in, it was all washed away with a devastating fourth quarter. The result was a 31-24 defeat at the hands of the Spiders.

Leading 21-17 going into the final frame and with possession of the ball in Richmond territory, the Minutemen looked poised to add to the lead. But the usually vaunted Maroon and White offense sputtered inside the 10-yard line and was forced into a field goal attempt. Jason Cherry's 30-yard try fell short, and with it the momentum turned in favor of the hosts.

"You can't miss a chip-shot field goal," Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "We gave them a chance to get the momentum, and they took it. Good football teams do that."

On the ensuing drive Richmond (2-1, 1-0) quarterback Sean Gustus drove the predominantly rushing team 80 yards in four plays, with the backbreaker coming via a 69-yard scoring strike to a wide-open Ryan Tolhurst.

The resulting 10-point swing put the Minutemen in a hole from which they were unable to climb.

UMass' next possession gave it a chance to regain the momentum, but again the team was stymied by an opportunistic Richmond defense. The Maroon and White had the ball with first-and-goal inside the 10-yard line, but was unable to hit pay dirt when Marcel Shipp was stopped twice inside the five-yard line.

"Maybe we catch a cream and get the ball to our best player," Whipple said. "If we don't kick the field goal, 24-24."

With Shipp unable to find the end zone, Cherry kicked the game-tying field goal and with it came a new ballgame.

But Richmond once again refused to give in to the highly ranked Minutemen, marching 80 yards in seven plays for the winning touchdown.

The game-winning score came on another long pass play from Gustus to Tolhurst.

The score was the result of UMass cornerback Rob Green biting on Gustus' play action fake. With Green at a standstill at the line of scrimmage, Tolhurst sprinted down field and found himself all alone again.

"It's fundamental lack of discipline by our corners, the same thing that happened the week before Whipple said. "Good play calling on their part, good execution ... things we didn't have."

Trailing 31-24 with 2:27 remaining, the Minutemen had a chance to mount a comeback but were unable to do so as the fourth and 12 snap sailed over quarterback Richard Lucero's head. Lucero was forced to retreat and all he could do was pick up the ball before a swarm of Spider defenders were in his face for the sack.

"We run it [two-minute drill] all the time in practice," Lucero said. "That's no excuse. They came out ready to play and [we] weren't ready.

The snap was reminiscent of the one that went over Todd Bankhead's shoulder in the waning moments of UMass' 26-21 defeat to Villanova a last year.

UMass fell behind early, due in large part to the play of Gustus. On the opening drive of the game, the senior drove the Spiders 80 yards and capped it himself with a 25-yard scamper to give Richmond an early lead. The Minuteman offense sputtered early.

Behind 7-0, the Maroon and White was marching downfield with relative ease, but the drive was halted by a Lucero interception. The pass was intended for Adrian Zullo, but Richmond defensive back Jason Hill read the eyes of Lucero and stepped in front of Zullo for the pick.

The Spiders added to their lead as a result of the interception, when Doug Kirchner booted a 27-yard field goal to boost the lead to 10-0.

The Minutemen showed resilience in the second quarter, putting up two touchdowns. Both of the scores came on passes from Lucero to Zullo. The first came early in the second quarter and saw the All-America candidate make a great adjustment on an under-thrown ball for the score. The second had Lucero

Richmond DE Jonathan Wilfong de-cleats UMass QB Richard Lucero with a vicious hit during the Maroon and White's 31-24 loss Saturday in Virginia. The Spiders sacked Lucero four times and forced two interceptions over the course of the game.

COURTESY UNIVERSITY OF RICHMOND MEDIA RELATIONS

Little things spell loss

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Football is about much more than big name players making big time plays. The game itself, though a relatively simple one, often hinges on the little things. The intangibles. The play of one or two guys at certain positions that don't always make it onto the stat sheet or into the recap.

A team can go down in flames in spite of its big stars lighting it up on the field, and that is precisely what happened to the Massachusetts Minutemen Saturday in Richmond. Despite Marcel Shipp hitting the century mark on the ground yet again, despite Richard Lucero reaching the 300 yards passing plateau for the second time in as many starts, despite UMass running more plays and gaining more yards than the Spiders, the end result is still a bitter pill for the Maroon and White to swallow.

Richmond 31, UMass 24.

"I thought that 24 points would win this game, as bad as the offense played," Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "But it wasn't the offense, it wasn't the defense, it wasn't the kicking game and it wasn't the coaching staff – it was all of us. We're all in this together and we've got to take the blame."

As diplomatic as Whipple's take was, a fair share of the fault for this one should be shouldered by the Maroon and White lines – both offensive and defensive – for allowing the Spiders to resurrect their own aerial attack while their pass rushers teed off on Lucero seemingly at will. U of R had racked up all of 41 yards on six completions in its first two games of 2000, woeful statistics that may have instilled the UMass defense with an "air" of overconfidence.

But Spider quarterback Sean Gustus enjoyed a true resurgence on Saturday, using a mere half-dozen completions to rip the Maroon and White for 173 yards and two touchdowns through the air while rushing for a game-high 130 yards and another score. Such numbers would suggest that the diminutive natural athlete (who also happens to be the team's top punt returner) simply found his rhythm against UMass, but those in attendance Saturday saw otherwise.

One reporter on hand remarked afterward that even Gustus' 56-yard game breaker to Ryan Tolhurst was nothing more than an "end-over-end, flailing prayer" and that UMass' pass rush and coverage were so poor that U of R's receivers had a full ten yards to adjust to Gustus' "wounded ducks" and still make the plays. Even Whipple admitted that on the Spiders' winning drive, he expected the UMass defense to come up with a stop instead of lying down.

"I didn't think they'd go 80 yards on us," Whipple said. "We had the wind, [Doug White] kicks the ball in the end zone, they get the ball on the 20 and go 80 yards? I feel like we're going to stop them once or twice, get the ball and have a chance to win this thing."

But instead, the Spider D tightened up even more on an already flustered Lucero. Whipple dismissed the possibility that the transfer's lacerated right finger affected his play, but two interceptions and 13 incompletions on the afternoon suggest that wunderkind one's "golden boy" may not have been at 100-percent in Richmond.

The UMass offensive line certainly did little to help its wounded field general make it through: the Spiders sacked Lucero four times, including twice on the Maroon and White's critical final possession. The team's last offensive play, in which receiver Jeff Howard milled about the backfield as if lost while the snap sailed over Lucero's head, was a perfect snapshot of how out-of-synch the Minutemen were against the spiders.

"We've got a bunch of guys that we think are good players, and everybody's told them they're good," Whipple said. "It's what they want to make of their season; that's what it always is. All they've got to do is look to the last two seasons to see that everything's in front of them."

UMass shows great promise despite falling to #1 Maryland

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

There's an old Kikuyu proverb that says, "When elephants fight, it is the grass that suffers."

Go ahead and substitute the Artificial Turf Facility on the University of Maryland campus for 'grass' in the aforementioned saying, and then Saturday's battle between the University of Massachusetts field hockey team and the Maryland Terrapins can be paralleled to the fight of those sovereign animals.

Ranked 12th in the nation, the Minutewomen ventured to College Park this past weekend to face off with defending national champion Maryland which hasn't lost a game since September 4 of last year, a 5-3 defeat at the hands of Old Dominion.

And today, the Terrapins streak of now 29 successive victories (Maryland beat Bradford yesterday, 11-2) lives on.

It does so because Maryland was able to score two goals on the Maroon and White in the final 10 minutes of Saturday's game, beating UMass 2-0, before 1,003 fans. But, to say it was an easy victory for Maryland is to say that Zowie Tucker, the goalie and backbone of the seventh-rated Minutewomen defense, didn't give it her all.

And that preceding statement amounts to naught.

Because for the first time this season, the Terps were unable to produce a goal in the first half, and Tucker, who stopped 15 Maryland shots, shut the Terps out longer than any goalie has thus far this season, keeping them scoreless for just over the first 60 minutes of play.

"We stayed with them for 60 minutes," Tucker said. "And I think that if we keep working hard in practice and produce more goals, I think we can go with them for 70 minutes."

Ultimately, it was frustration that did in the Maroon and White.

The Maryland defense held UMass to a mere five shots for the entire contest, allowing only one penalty corner chance in the midst of it all.

Massachusetts' best scoring chance came in the first stanza when the Minutewomen rallied with a two shot possession. But Terp goalie Ashley Hohnstine and the Maryland defense would end the march. A kick save by Hohnstine and a defensive stop by Terp back Lindsay Gorewitz on a shot by UMass forward Stacey Blue would keep the Maroon and White permanently off the scoreboard.

Hohnstine made her second and final save of her shutout later in the half when she made a diving deflection to deprive Minutewomen Patty Robinson of a penalty corner capitalization.

"We only had limited chances," Tucker said. "But I think if we had connected on a free-shot corner, that would have totally changed the game and the whole outcome because we would have definitely surprised and panicked them a little."

With 9:13 left in the second half, 3-time All-American Carla Tagliente blasted a left-handed slap shot past Tucker and into the cage to give the Terps the 1-0 advantage. Junior All-American Caroline Walker netted the insurance goal for Maryland with 6:22 remaining.

"They move the ball better than most teams," Tucker said. "They have a lot of experience. And they finish. Every opportunity they have they take."

No team is ever content with a loss. But for UMass, it was a step in the right direction.

"We felt like we could compete with [Maryland] and we did that," Tucker said. "To play Maryland is a good stand-point to judge where we (UMass) can go and how far we can go. And before it's all over we'd like to be a national championship team. A lot of teams say that, but they really don't know unless they go against the best. We went against the best in Maryland. And I think we can do a lot better. I think we can actually beat them."

Zowie Tucker showed why she is one of the top goalies in the nation by limiting Maryland to its lowest goal total of the season.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Defense shines, leads UMass to physical road win

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Correspondent

ALBANY, NY – Coach Sam Koch summed it up best.

"We needed a win and we got it," he said after the Massachusetts men's soccer team pulled out a hard fought win against Siena on the pitch Sunday afternoon.

It was a physical game (over 20 fouls were whistled) in front of a sparse but hostile crowd in Albany, but the Minutemen still managed to come away with a crucial victory pulling them within one win of a .500 record for the season.

Coach Koch had stated previously at the mid-week sports luncheon that he "never had a group that I think has worked harder." Never was the work ethic of this team more evident than in their well-contested match against the Saints.

The defense was tested early and often, but the strong back line led by sweeper J.R. Pouncey was able to turn back the persistent Siena attack for the entire first half. The stagnant Minuteman offense certainly did not help the situation as the majority of the first half play took place in UMass territory.

After a spirited halftime speech by Coach Koch the Massachusetts attack came alive. The Maroon and White strikers jumped out of the gates putting pressure on the untested Saint defense in the period's opening minutes. Just under three minutes into the half midfielder Derek Rhodes volleyed a pinpoint cross into the back of the net finishing off an undetected far post run.

Unfortunately the scoring strike seemed to take the fire out of the UMass offense as Siena proceeded to counter by dominating the next eleven minutes. The Minuteman defense remained a stalwart facing repeated scoring chances from the Saint offense during this crucial point in the game.

After a broken down play off a UMass corner the Saints countered moving the ball efficiently downfield. Junior goaltender Bryan O'Quinn was up to the task as he intercepted a home team cross, turning back the first wave and starting off a series of standout plays by the Massachusetts native.

30 seconds later O'Quinn turned back another Saints scoring bid making a lightning quick reaction to a short side blast from ten yards out. The ensuing corner kick was broken up by the defense, but the barrage did not end there. In the following six minutes Siena would send one shot over the bar and have numerous centering passes cut off of by the physical UMass defense and its aggressive goaltender.

Finally, the Massachusetts offense awoke from its slumber capitalizing on its second chance of the half with its second scoring strike. The play started with a free kick near the center line when the ball switched fields three times before finding Jeff Deren who one touched a shot off the keeper and over the goal line to give UMass a two goal lead. Most importantly, the tally gave the fullbacks a much-deserved cushion.

In contrast to the first score the offense did not sputter, but kept on rolling, building on the momentum instead of laying back. The overall play of the team for the next fifteen minutes gave Coach Koch a reason to call the second half "a very good effort."

UMass proceeded to dominate play placing balls in the box and creating scoring chances on the Green and White goalkeeper. This trend continued up until the last ten minutes of the game when Siena buckled down and started attacking the defense once again.

With nine minutes left in the tilt a long throw into the box found the head of a Saint forward who beat the keeper cutting the lead in half. From there on Siena's offensive engines were running full speed ahead, raising the tension for the final minutes. However, UMass would not back down as J.R. Pouncey and the Minuteman defense played outstanding positional and one on one defense to stave off the onslaught. The last scoring chance for the Saints came with five minutes remaining when a header in the box beat keeper Bryan O'Quinn but was calmly cleared away by a perfectly positioned veteran, Matt Christy.

The defense played very tough in an extremely physical game and the offense finally showed some signs of life. After the game, Coach Koch said, "It wasn't pretty and it was closer than it should have been," but it is still a win and most importantly, it is something to build on.

J.R. Pouncey and the rest of the Minutemen defense did a fine job of slowing the Siena attack

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 10 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, September 19, 2000

Gwenyth Paltrow stars alongside Huey Lewis in Duets. Read more about it in today's Arts section.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts men's water polo team kept on rolling in defeating both Harvard and Brown this weekend.

SPORTS p. 10

Dower wrestles with War trials

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

War crime trials prevalent in Japan during World War II are often complex topics; just ask John Dower a historian and Pulitzer Prize winning journalist who specializes in Japanese post-war history.

Dower spoke to both faculty and students yesterday on the University of Massachusetts campus about the misconceptions surrounding the war crime trials in Japan. He also touched on the effect that the trials have upon the Japanese public. He discussed issues of war, law and memory during and following the Japanese war crimes. He explained that the issue effected people all around the world, not just the Japanese.

"We tend to think of the Japanese memory of World War II," Dower said. "There is no Japanese memory."

He illustrated his point, as well as explained the unrest within Japan regarding the war crime trials by discussing a Japanese film entitled, Pride: Japan's Fatal Moment.

This film, produced by right wing individuals from Japan in 1998, addressed the period following Japan's defeat during which the country was occupied by the United States. This occupation lasted for a total of six and a half years.

Dower explained to the audience that during this time 28 Japanese political figures were put on trial for war crimes in Tokyo. Seven of these people were executed, including Hideki Tojo, the head of the Japanese military. Dower commented that the film shed light on the feelings of the Japanese people towards Tojo following the loss of the war. In one scene of the film, Dower explained, a Japanese widow committed suicide in front of Tojo while screaming the word "die."

"It was an incredible sense of hatred that the Japanese felt for him [Tojo]," he said. "People felt that he was responsible for the death of their families."

Dower explained that although he did not entirely agree with the film, he felt that it was an accurate portrayal of the views of a portion of Japanese people.

"It is a terrible propaganda film, and I disagree with much of what goes on," Dower said. "But I want you to know where they were coming from."

The film addresses the fact that the Japanese emperor at the time, Hirohito, was never put on trial.

"It was absolutely clear, to me at the very least, that this is Tojo's and the other's last act of dying for the emperor," he said. "I think that the ideals of this trial were very noble, I am not cynical about the nobility of it."

Commenting on the necessity of the trials themselves, Dower explained that he felt that they had been overall unfair to some of the parties involved.

"They trial was really very flawed," Dower said. "In fact, one man was hanged on a 6-5 vote."

He went on to explain that during his research of the trials at large he found that Americans who fought in World War II felt that the Japanese should not be put on trial for their crimes. He commented that former soldiers felt that many negative things had occurred on both sides during the war.

"What is clear now, and is clear to me, is that many Americans did not like these trials," Dower said.

He went on to say that the issue was very complex and that through records the public at large was able to learn the true history of the war crime trials. He explained that this was still an issue that students, teachers and historians alike should really think about.

"This is what we wrestle with, it is still volatile today," he said. "This is a task that I hope that you take up, all of you."

MIT History professor John Dower, seen here before his lecture in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon, lectured about the memory of World War II in contemporary Japanese society.

BRIAN MCGILLIVRAY/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Durnakowski focuses on students for required signatures

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

For students who think they have no role in the governing process of the Town of Amherst, Stanley Durnakowski wants to change your mind. Stanley is trying to overthrow the government, and he thinks you can help.

For the past six months you might have seen him on the street corner, at the grocery store, or even in your neighborhood going door-to-door, collecting signatures to replace the Amherst Town Meeting and town manager with an elected mayor and town council.

Durnakowski must collect 2,512 certifiable signatures by Oct. 15 to add a question to the spring ballot asking to form a charter commission to review the current form of government.

After losing over 400 signatures this summer due mainly to students forgetting to report changes in address, making them ineligible to vote, Durnakowski is determined to inform students of the importance of his movement.

"I'm not doing this just for the townspeople, I'm doing this to help the students," said Durnakowski, who believes the current form of government promotes irresponsible spending and isn't held accountable enough to the voters.

"[Town manager] Barry Del Castillo doesn't listen to students," Durnakowski said, because he is not held accountable to voters. "He beats around the bush when it comes to student issues," said Durnakowski. "Because they can't vote him out of office."

"Students think because they are here only 4 years they are not involved, but they can make a change," said Durnakowski, adding that he thinks a strong mayor and city council could do more to help keep rent down in Amherst, a concern to students living off campus.

Del Castillo was appointed town manager by the town select board, made up of five officials elected by the voters. The select board, said Del Castillo, is better informed to choose the manager of the city.

"You wouldn't go to the stock holders to select the CEO of a major company," said Del Castillo, "you'd go to the board of directors."

"It is not at all uncommon to have both a manager and a mayor," said Del Castillo, and that if the city votes for a new government, he hopes his position remains part of it.

The UMass Green Party keeps Durnakowski's petition on their table in the campus center for students to sign. Green Party activist Neil Nugent said they support Durnakowski's attempt to inform the public about their right to change the government.

"I've heard there is public dissatisfaction with Town Meeting, but I'm mostly concerned with getting students to vote," said Nugent.

Durnakowski said he started this petition after friends and family expressed discontent over the way Town Meetings operated. Durnakowski, 64, is a retired janitor at Amherst College, and says this gives him time to collect signatures.

Town meeting member Larry Kelley is one of Durnakowski's supporters and admirers.

"I'm absolutely blown away by the determination of Stanley," said Kelley, a semi-professional boxer and owner of Amherst Athletic Club. "I know what it's like to train hard and stay focused for months."

After being a town activist for the past twenty years, Kelley says he has never seen anyone as determined as Durnakowski to change town politics.

A similar attempt to replace Amherst government was made in 1996, but voters rejected the measure to create a town mayor and city council and reduce town meeting members from 240 members to 150 by a vote of 1,509 to 1,272.

Durnakowski does not endorse any individual candidate for mayor and will not run himself.

"I'm doing this for the people, nothing else," said Durnakowski.

Durnakowski will be collecting student signatures on the Campus Center concourse tomorrow.

Boston Common high with Freedom Rally 2000

By Kevin Stone
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON – Believing America's Drug War is another Vietnam orchestrated by an oppressive, imperialistic, bloated bureaucracy, an estimated 100,000 attended the Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition's (Mass Cann) 11th annual Freedom Rally on the Boston Common on Saturday, Sept. 16.

"In a war, truth is the first casualty," said Carla Howell, Massachusetts' Libertarian candidate for U.S. Senate. "Our lives and our liberty have been taken by our government. Seventy million Americans have smoked marijuana and 18-million smoked it last year. Our government is involved in a morally wrong, no-win war against 18 million Americans. The war against marijuana is a dismal tragic failure – another Vietnam."

Established in 1989, Mass Cann is the commonwealth chapter of the nation's premier marijuana legalization advocacy group, the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML). The University's Cannabis Reform Coalition, formed in 1989, bussed 25 people to last Saturday's Rally.

"College chapters of NORML in Massachusetts that have come and gone but the (UMass-Amherst) Cannabis Reform Coalition is one of the oldest and most effective," said Bill Downing, Mass Can President. "I consider them highly valued (in the legalization movement), no pun intended."

Receiving corporate sponsorship from Boston-based radio station 104.1 FM WBCN, Mass Cann presented the event to raise awareness for the marijuana legalization cause through speakers, vendors, and musical performers.

"This kind of event galvanizes people for our cause," explained Howell.

"Our government is involved in a morally wrong, no-win war against 18 million Americans. The war against marijuana is a dismal tragic failure – another Vietnam."
-- Carla Howell, Massachusetts' Libertarian candidate for U.S. Senate

Allen St. Pierre, the Executive Director of NORML and a 1989 UMass-Amherst graduate, "It makes people realize that they're not alone in wanting the decriminalization of marijuana for responsible adults."

There was a host of vendors offering everything from hand woven sweaters and hemp clothing to hot dogs and products claiming to increase a marijuana-induced high. Socialist, Libertarian, and Green Party advocates offered information on their cause along with voter registration forms.

"As if Al Gore or George Bush would have been better off serving ten years for their 'youthful indiscretions' with drugs," said Harry Browne, the Libertarian presidential candidate. "People must come to realize that the drug war is a disaster. All people should be free to live as they see fit."

Other speakers included Elvy Musikka, one of only eight Americans who receives medical marijuana from the federal government, and John Sinclair, whose possession conviction resulted in the "Free John Sinclair" tent at the original Woodstock.

Boston's Darkhuster, Scissorfight, Tree, and jam band Jiggle The Handle played for an enthusiastic crowd between speakers. While the rally elicited passions in the protesters so deep that several of the speakers compared the cannabis legalization movement to that of the colonial revolutionaries who once stood on the Boston Common, the police were not so moved.

"You do not need to consent to a search of your bags in order to enter," announced Downing. "The police are searching you in order to intimidate people from attending our event."

Armed with camcorders, several rally organizers yelled such warnings to those entering the event for two hours before Boston Police ceased searching and opening the bags of those entering the Freedom Rally.

"The police are violating civil liberties when they search people's bags. There's no probable cause and those searched are profiled," said Chris Peron, a Mass Cann founder. "There have been arrests, but not one ounce of violence with up to 85,000 in attendance at any given time."

A Boston Police spokesperson conceded that while sixty rally-goers were arrested, most for alleged possession of marijuana, during the FreedomRally's first four hours, all taken into custody surrendered without incident.

Popular date rape drug, GHB, suspected in death of Johns Hopkins University senior

By Tom Gutting
The Johns Hopkins News-Letter (Johns Hopkins U.)

(U-WIRE) BALTIMORE – The Office of the Chief Medical Examiner in New York City is still investigating the July 22 death of Johns Hopkins University undergraduate Jamie Wiest, 21.

According to the New York City Police Department, however, drugs were likely involved.

Wiest, a rising senior and Biomedical Engineering major, collapsed at 6:50 a.m. at Twilo, a club on West 27th Street that was holding an all-night party.

Paramedics rushed him to St. Vincent's Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead at 7:55 a.m.

Ellen Borakove, director of public affairs for the Chief Medical Examiner, said that Dr. Barbara Sampson, who performed the autopsy, is awaiting test results before declaring the cause of death.

"We're still pending," Borakove said. "It can take anywhere from six to eight weeks to get the test results back."

Eyewitnesses told police that they saw Wiest take a drug – ecstasy, according to some – shortly before he passed out on the floor of the club, which is a converted warehouse located in Chelsea.

Club owners refused to comment on Wiest's death.

Peter Sullivan, a lawyer for Twilo, disputed the claims that Wiest ingested ecstasy, a drug that can lead to overheating, an increased heart rate and dehydration.

He told the New York Times that Wiest took gamma hydroxybutyrate (GHB), a popular form of the "date rape drug."

Results from toxicology, histology (tissue) and neuropathology (brain) tests will determine what drugs were in Wiest's system, Borakove explained.

New York City attempted to shut down Twilo two years ago, after New York University student Brigitte Murray died in March 1998 of an ecstasy overdose at the club.

During the undercover investigation that followed, police made 18 drug buys at the club. Twilo, however, remains open, pending the outcome of another city lawsuit.

In September 1999, the city sued Twilo, calling it a public nuisance and demanding its closure. A trial date has not been scheduled.

At Homewood, Wiest's friends are keeping his memory alive.

Sruti Nadimpalli, a senior, remembers congregating with Wiest and other friends to watch "South Park."

"We were veritable cult members when it came to that particular show," said Nadimpalli. "And every time Jamie would see me, he'd recite, in his best Cartman accent, 'Oh look, another hippie. Hi Sruti.'"

Another friend, who preferred not to give her name, said she will always remember how selfless Wiest was.

"For a year and a half, he was the one I called for advice; for a smile for a complaint or anything at all," she said. "Mostly, I will remember Jamie as having the biggest heart of anyone on this campus. He gave more to others than he ever expected to have returned."

A memorial service is scheduled for Sept. 27 – Wiest's birthday – at the Inter-Faith Center.

A memorial fund has also been established, as well as a Web site at http://www.jamiewiest.com.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Conquering the mountain

Freshman HRTA major Laura Klesh gets ready to ascend a climbing wall. The wall was set up on the library lawn by VW automobiles, who sponsered an afternoon of events on campus.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sittin' on top of the world...

Alison Burger and Gabrielle Perry, who both plan to start UMass in January, take a break and look at a map after hiking up Mount Sugarloaf in Deerfield yesterday afternoon.

Effects of death in U. Penn genetic research test reach far and wide

By Nadine Spitalnick
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – A year ago Sunday, only a prophet could have predicted the consequences of the death of a single young man on an entire field of medical research.

But today, the aftershocks of the death of 18-year-old Jesse Gelsinger, who died while participating in a study at the University of Pennsylvania's Institute for Human Gene Therapy – the first reported fatality in the experimental field – are clearly evident.

Despite the promising advances that came this summer with the mapping of the entire human genome, the tragedy at Penn slowed a huge portion of the country's genetic research.

And after a year of governmental inquiry into the actions of the researchers at the IHGT and an official suspension of human trials there, gene therapy researchers, bioethicists and lawmakers across the country have had to readjust and reconsider the ramifications of gene therapy and other evolving fields like it.

Larry Kedes, a researcher with the Institute for Genetic Medicine at the University of Southern California, said that since Gelsinger's death, he has noticed "a great deal of more clinical oversight ... on any clinical gene therapy trials being proposed or underway."

"Because of what happened to [Gelsinger] it became very clear that there needed to be reform of the patient protection system," said Abbey Meyers, president of the National Organization for Rare Disorders and a former National Institutes of Health gene therapy advisor on the Recombinant DNA Advisory Committee.

According to Meyers, the idea that patients must be protected in research became a law after the Nazi war crimes trials at Nuremberg, more than 50 years ago – and the common law had not been changed since.

"Gelsinger's death showed that the system must change," Meyers said. "It was the fault of the system and there was no way for the government to enforce the rules."

Said Stephen Eck, co-director of the cancer gene therapy programs at the IHGT, "What the Gelsinger death did was it brought into sharper focus what people had already been concerned about."

He added that the tragedy simply shed light on an already widespread problem.

After the death, critics began to snipe that institutional review boards – internal committees set up to oversee experimental processes at each research program – are not enough protection for patients undergoing experimental treatments.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the NIH announced in March two initiatives to protect patients in these trials. The first program is the FDA's Gene Therapy Clinical Monitoring Plan, requiring that sponsors of gene therapy trials routinely submit their third-party monitoring plans to the FDA and also be subjected to routine surveillance and inspection.

Second is the Gene Transfer Safety Symposia in which the NIH and the FDA will establish quarterly forums for the sharing and analysis of medical and scientific data from gene transfer research.

But some researchers are skeptical about the changes, saying that they make scientific innovation much more difficult. At the time bone marrow therapies were being researched, "if these regulations had been in place, it would have been terminated," said Dusty Miller, a gene therapy researcher at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Center. Many people died for what "ultimately resulted as a very useful tool," he said. "The same can be said for gene therapy technology."

Study: local colleges cause housing woes

By Heather Milum
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON – A year-long study released last week reports something Boston students have known for years: affordable housing is hard to find. And according to the authors, local colleges and universities are part of the problem.

According to the study, conducted by Northeastern University's Center for Urban and Regional Policy and funded by FleetBoston financial, Boston's vacancy rates are so low that home prices and rents have risen "substantially faster" than most household incomes. Should the rates continue to rise, the housing crisis could pose a barrier to the future growth of the region.

To help ease the demand, Boston-area colleges and universities should build more dormitory space for students in order to "take pressure off of the neighboring housing stock," the study said. If 7,500 new student residences are created over the next five years, pressure on the rental housing market will be reduced significantly.

The study also recommends building a minimum of 2,700 family housing units each year for the next five years. Meeting such a large goal will require overcoming significant "social and political barriers," because many residents and political leaders are hesitant to further develop their communities, the study said.

Building so many houses would constitute a "bold challenge," according to the authors. However, it said, "short of a disastrous economic recession, the affordability gap can only be allayed by a significant increase in housing supply."

Cardinal Bernard Law, archbishop of the Archdiocese of Boston, issued a letter alongside the study. He urged the public and private sectors to address the housing crunch immediately. The recommended measures are "not a blue-sky dream," but "a moral imperative," Cardinal Law said. He invited the public and private sectors to "eliminate the social, political, and economic barriers that keep us from fulfilling the promise of affordable housing for all."

He said a failure to meet affordable housing promises could have significant negative impacts for all residents. "If we fail at this task, then the issue of housing affordability will continue to be used for political advantage, taking us deeper in the direction of a divided society."

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is free; subscriptions are available for the University of Massachusetts community only and are generated by advertising. The paper was founded in 1890 as the College Signal in 1903 the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Collegian. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a recognized student organization since January 1904. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Broussseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benhamin Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trentkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Simawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beath Assistant Advertising Manager

$6/hr FOOTBALL JOBS! $6/hr

Game staff positions are available for all home football games this season.

Position include ushers , ticket takers, parking attendants and ticket sellers.

$6/hr We have 40 positons available.

Stop by the Curry Hicks Cage Ticket Office by September 21, or attend a meeting on Thursday, September 21 at 5:30 PM in Section 8 of the football stadium.

JOIN UMASS MEN'S CREW

A WINNING TRADITION SINCE 1871

NO PRIOR ROWING EXPERIENCE NEEDED
PLEASE COME TO THE INFORMATION MEETING:
Wednesday Sept. 20th at 6pm in front of the Totman Gymnasium or Call Coach Brian Mehr at 545-0487

UMass Transit Service Needs YOU!!!

UMass Transit Bus Drivers are needed now!!!! You can have fun, make excellent money, and have plenty of opportunities for advancement. Get in on one of the best jobs on campus.

Training sessions are forming now! Call us at 545-0056. Try it. You'll like it!

We offer you paid training, starting pay at $8.80 per hour with an increase every semester, and opportunity to get real management experience, a work schedule that fits your class schedule, and a marketable Class B Commercial Driver's License.

It's your bus service so help keep us rolling!!!

THE ASIAN DANCE AND MUSIC PROGRAM PRESENTS

Shashank and the Carnatic Music Ensemble

Sunday, September 24
Bowker Auditorium at 8pm

"Playing several flutes of varying lengths, Shashank manifested an ineffable sweetness of tone throughout even the most briskly florid embellishments, and inspired his colleagues to some ecstatic flights of improvisation."
–Thomas May
The Washington Post

Professor Indira Peterson will give a pre-concert talk on Carnatic music at 7:30pm.

www.indiaartist.com

Tickets: $15 general admission; $7 Five College students & children
Call the Fine Arts Center Box Office 1-413-545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS

Rape reporting remains a delicate balancing act

By Zachary R. Heineman
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, MA – Last April, at a Take Back the Night rally, Assistant Dean of the College Karen E. Avery was asked how many rapes had been reported to her. She said four.

"That's bullsh*t!" someone yelled out.

For Harvard University and other universities, the question of reporting and recognizing rape, and ultimately preventing it, remains volatile.

"How do we respond if no one's coming to us?" Avery asks. Federal legislation, passed in 1990 and spurred by a collegiate rape and murder, now forces Harvard to carefully collect data on rape from senior tutors and sexual assault/sexual harassment advisers.

Student groups like the Coalition Against Sexual Violence (CASV) argue the numbers do not reflect the real level of rape on campus and advocate building a women's center to encourage victims to feel safe enough to tell their stories.

While victims are encouraged to report their rapes, emotions are not recorded in the federal tally, as the College balances its federal duty with a healthy respect for the rights and privacy of rape victims.

CASV members say they feel the College does not do enough to encourage victims to report incidents of rape.

In 1999, there were two formally reported on-campus sex offenses, three formally reported public sex offenses (in areas geographically surrounding Harvard) and nine confidentially reported cases. In 1998 there were 11 formally and five confidentially reported sex offenses, and in 1997 there were only three formally and zero confidentially reported sex offenses.

But Jennifer C. Price '02, a CASV member, says she questions the administration's responsiveness to rape survivors.

"There's a sense that if you go to the Ad Board nothing will come out of it except a long and painful process," she says.

One of CASV's primary goals is to pressure the administration for a central resource like a women's center, that would be able to guide victims through the medical counseling, the Ad Board and the courts.

But Veronica Reed Ryback, director of the Beth Israel-Deaconess Medical Center Rape Crisis Intervention Program, says she is unsure whether centralized help would be more effective than the individual groups, like Response, that already exist.

Ryback also says she does not think it would be in University Health Services (UHS) best interest to try to provide the "rape kit" used to collect evidence from a victim.

"They don't have the volume to learn how to do the exam properly," she says.

BY THE NUMBERS

Massachusetts state law requires that professional care providers –physicians and mental health workers – report incidents of rape they treat to the state Commissioner of Public Safety and the local police. But this report never includes the victim's name, address or other identifying information. It does, however, include the general location of the attack.

Deborah Cohen, a clinical social worker at UHS, says UHS policy is to inform the patient of what the state requires, but emphasizes the mandatory reporting "does not change the confidentiality" and "would not end up in police log," which if seen might make the victim uncomfortable. These reports are used for annual crime statistics.

"I think (the statistics) are important and useful because they're used to keep track of potentially dangerous areas," Cohen says. "If it's a dark area maybe policy makers would put a streetlight there."

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

Mandatory reporting for the college is governed by federal, as opposed to state, law.

In 1990, President Bush signed the Campus Security Act, a federal law intended to make statistics on campus crime available to college communities and potential students and faculty.

As Congressman John L. Duncan, Jr. (D-TN) testified, "When a family chooses to move to a new town or city they base that decision on many factors, including crime rates. When a family begins to decide what college or university they will choose, they also should have the right to know about the crime rate of that area."

However, the law was fairly ineffective because of both genuine confusion about what was required and loopholes that allowed schools to keep crime secret.

In 1998 Congress expanded and strengthened the law in addition to renaming it in memory of Jeanne Ann Clery, a Lehigh University freshman who on the morning of April 5, 1986 was beaten, raped and murdered in her bed by a fellow student.

Clery's parents learned soon after that the quaint Pennsylvania campus had been the site of 38 violent offenses in the three years before her death, and began pushing for legislation requiring disclosure of campus crime statistics, which led to the 1990 act.

VICTIM'S RIGHTS?

Harvard University Police Department's (HUPD) last major rape case, when Joshua M. Ulster '00 was arrested on charges that he sexually assaulted and battered another undergraduate, placed police in hot water because initially the case was accidentally removed from the blotter.

The department is required by Massachusetts law and the Clearys Act to maintain a daily log available for public inspection.

While the omission aroused concern, HUPD said it was the result of computer bugs and human error and soon after installed accurate checks on the system.

But while the Harvard administrative justice process is not held to the same standard of public access, the consequences remain grave. According to Avery, the Ad Board defines rape more broadly than the state, viewing someone who is intoxicated or under the influence of drugs as unable to give consent.

While the College urges victims to pursue the courts first, once an arrest is made, it is likely the College will take action to protect the victim and place the alleged perpetrator on an involuntary leave.

DRIVERS WANTED

Would you like to make $$$$$$$MONEY$$$$$$$$
and have all your work done BEFORE Breakfast?

Have a car & Have Tuesday & Thursday from 7:30-9:30 am free?

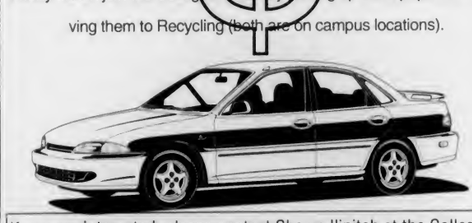
..then come join the UMASS Daily Collegian Team as a delivery driver.

OR

Would you like to make money on your lunch break? If you have a pick-up truck & have just an hour free from 11am to 1pm Monday through Friday ...then join the Collegian Team by picking up extra papers and driving them to Recycling (both are on campus locations).



If you are interested, please contact Shawn Ilinitch at the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus center, room 113, by phone 545-3500, or call Charlie Jacco at 256-8012.

Hey! Need a Job!?

Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Attention All New Students:

For your convenience
Meningitis Vaccine Clinic
University Health Services
Tuesday, October 3, 2000
Tuesday, October 10, 2000

Students under the age of 30 who would like to receive the vaccine should call the University Health Services at 577-5101 and ask for an appointment with the Meningitis Clinic. The cost of immunization is $75. Cash, check or credit card accepted. For additional information, call the Public Health Line at 577-5044.

Sigma [fly] Alpha

Just like any fraternity or sorority, Army ROTC offers teamwork, camaraderie and friendship. Plus, you'll get to do challenging stuff like this that'll help prep you for the real world. Stop by the Army ROTC department. We won't rush you.

ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

Bet you can carry this car.

The Volkswagen College Graduate Program makes it easy to finance a car right out of school. You don't need a co-signer. You don't need a credit history. All you need is proof that you graduated from college within the last 24 months (or will within the next 4), and proof that you have (or will have) a job. We want to put you in the driver's seat. Of course, if you'd rather position yourself under the engine block, it's a free country.

Drivers wanted.

©2000 Volkswagen 1 800 DRIVE VW or VW.COM

Dana Automotive • 968 Bridge Road • North Hampton, MA 01062

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Rising gas prices should fuel changes

With fuel protests in full swing throughout Europe, where prices are at 10-year highs, Americans should take notice and be thankful to live where the price of gasoline is low.

Low?

With prices around Amherst creeping towards a $1.70 a gallon, Americans are still paying more than half what the rest of the world does for similar amounts of fuel. Because of our international influence, power and tendency to purchase, America's fuel needs have been continually met, and while the prices rise, we are still nowhere near the fuel prices of the other parts of the world.

And Americans rarely understand that, instead choosing to complain as our cost of fuel rises to levels still incomprehensible to those in other parts of the world. There's no real way to prevent those sorts of feelings in a people used to getting their fuel for cheap, but there have to be better ways to make our lives move.

It's time for America to lead the charge into alternative fuels. Gasoline, even if the price is held to a minimum, will still run out at some point, and in all of the concern about increasing fuel prices, the need to find long-term replacements must be addressed.

Giving companies more money to study what alternative fuels will work the best to developing the engines and systems that can use them. Be it solar, electric, modified forms of gasoline, natural gas or otherwise, these alternative fuels have to be found and they have to be found now.

As America continues to speed up in lifestyle and it's need for immediacy, there's no real threat that the price of fuel is going to decline. During the highest prices of this summer, Americans purchased gas with a reckless abandon, both financially ignoring and emotionally complaining about their increase. The oil producing nations of the world know this and will continue to charge as much as they please.

For that reason alone, there needs to be a renewed charge for alternative fuels. Oil has a stranglehold on the world economy, and while new fuels wouldn't prevent future strangleholds from being created, at least then would release the one that oil currently has.

The price of oil is currently threatened to domino the world into a recession of sorts, certainly not the kind of thing that anybody needs. While alternative fuels certainly won't be available immediately, there future creation gives nations without oil a place to bargain from.

Without these newer and perhaps better fuels being created, the world economy and fuel reliance threatens to stagnate even further, causing long term problems that go well beyond our ability to drive to the corner store for cheap.

We can only hope that they'll be developed.

The new generation

LAURA SICILIANO

There are some professors on this campus that believe that the student body is ignorant, complacent, uninvolved and uninterested. I know this because I have heard it from the horses' mouths. They complain that we do not know about the events that are on the front page of the newspaper and on the evening news. They claim that we are politically disinterested. They believe that we are ignorant of culture and society, that we do not know some of the basic things that university students should have knowledge of.

I do not believe that most of us are ignorant. I do believe, however, that there is a sharp gap between our generation and the generations of the faculty. The generation gap explains that we have a different scope of knowledge than our professors do. Think about this: the majority of professors at this university are old enough to be the parents of most students, and some are old enough to be the grandparents of students. There are faculty members who served in World War II. The experiences of someone who grew up during the 40s, 50s, 60s, or 70s are phenomenally different than the experiences of most traditional students at this campus.

The majority of the members of the freshman class were born in 1982, with some class members being born in 1983. What does this mean? It means that this class was not even alive before the age of MTV. It means that the first president that they can clearly remember is President "Read my lips – no new taxes" Bush. It means that the fundamental years of their development came during the roller-coaster years of the 1980s and 1990s, an age which brought technological and economic changes that may not be clearly understood for several more years. I myself am a baby of 1980-my first clear memory of the news is of the Challenger explosion in 1986, and the only war I can remember is the Gulf War, greatly different than all of the previous wars. I do not know what it is like for my peers to be drafted, nor do I remember clearly any Presidents other than Bush or Clinton.

Is a generation gap an excuse for ignorance? No, not all. However, a generation gap can explain why our generation is more aware of some things than others. A cultural revolution has occurred which many people are unaware of, a revolution that cannot even be completely understood yet. We were not taught the same things in school that our parents were. We were taught phonics, less grammar, and more "self-esteem" skills. Our parents were taught more American history, we were taught more world history. And above all, we are the first technological generation. Our parents' generation may have started the computer industry, but we were the first to grow up with computers as part of our education.

The changes that society has gone through have meant that schools have had to change as well. Different educations produce different students. However, just because some of us are unaware of who Christopher Marlow was or when the Seven-Year's War was, this does not make us ignorant. We know HTML and are more aware of the media than any other generation. And since our generation has not been given our hour to shine yet, we cannot say for sure that we have been failed by the educational system. There is no excuse for our generation not to read the paper; however, perhaps many of us are reading the news on the New York Times home page rather than on paper. Just as we need to be tolerant when a professor has difficulty with setting up his Power Point presentation because he is not completely technologically adept, the faculty at this university have to remember that we were raised in a very different time then them. Our perspectives and experiences are different. Do not blame us if the educational system may have failed us. We had no power over that. Our time of power will arrive soon, and if we fail then, label us as ignorant, lazy, complacent, or unaware – but don't label us yet.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

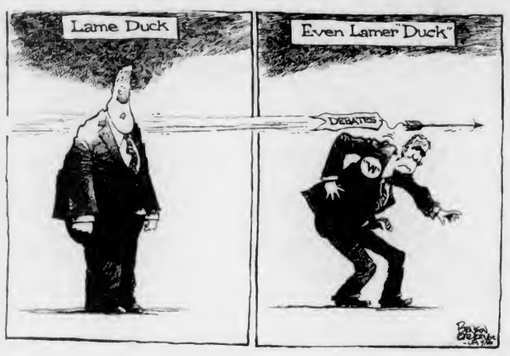
Letters to the Editorial must be typed and can be emailed to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com or delivered in person to the Collegian office.

Eminem and his sheepish fans



ELIZABETH PARISEAU

Eminem: the man, the myth, the legend. Everywhere you go this year, you see his face – on the cover of Teen People this week, flipping his trademark bird in the pages of Rolling Stone, and featured in Time and Newsweek over this past summer. Eminem has become such a huge star that, like his astronomical counterpart, he has taken on his own gravitational pull – alarmingly huge legions of fans now swarm around and clamor for this paragon of controversy. Though I was not initially impressed by what I heard from Eminem, his popularity has made him too large to really avoid, and I felt the need to find out for myself what he was all about. So, I finally gave in and settled down to listen to my roommate's copy of The Marshall Mathers LP just a few days ago.

What I heard shocked and sickened me. The LP was one huge rant, in which Eminem's main goal seems to be how many times he can possibly cram the words 'faggot' and 'bitch' into a particular song. One segment between songs about homosexuals was so graphic, disgusting and nightmarish that I had to turn it off. While I acknowledge that radicals and activists can sometimes be too anal-retentive with what they choose to protest, after listening to the Marshall Mathers LP for myself, I think Eminem's protesters have hit the nail right on the head. Eminem is a misogynist and a homophobe, plain and simple, and in light of this fact, his success both angers and scares me.

It angers me simply because I feel that he is undeserving of it. Some Eminem fans readily acknowledge his offensiveness, but the never-ending refrain is 'but he's so talented.' I have yet to find a person willing to voice a different opinion on this matter. So I will.

Eminem has a high, chirpy, whiny voice, one that makes his raps about as pleasant to listen to (their content disregarded) as fingernails on a chalkboard. He is uninventive with his lyrics, with the aforementioned repetitive word choice being the main feature of his rhymes. Despite slightly different mixing and background music, most of his songs are, lyrically, the same. In every one Eminem toots his own horn about being the subject of controversy and attention. After a while, and, in fact, almost comically at times, his controversial raps are about nothing but being controversial; he is now receiving attention for receiving attention.

Which leads me to the part that scares me: the attention Eminem is receiving, even as he speaks. What it amounts to, unfortunately, is that Eminem says aloud what a certain element of our society wishes they could say, that element being homophobic, misogynistic white males who have been reigned in for much of the past decade by the movement towards politically correct speech. When Eminem says in "The Real Slim Shady," "I'm like a head trip to listen to/because I'm only giving you/the things you talk about inside your living rooms," he sadly speaks the truth. But, obviously, not all of Eminem's fan base is like that, especially since a number of Eminem fans are women themselves. It can only be concluded that in this instance, a now familiar pattern in American society has taken over: what I like to call the Sheep Factor.

The Sheep Factor is what happens when a small group of people, in this case the aforementioned ignorant white males, begins to cluster around an entertainment entity, in this case Eminem, which, in turn, makes the wider society take notice. After a while, more people support that entity, simply because they have received the message that he is supposed to be popular.

This Sheep Factor, ladies and gentlemen, is what really and truly sucks about society. The Sheep Factor is what makes evil organizations like the WTO possible. Nazi Germany was brought to you by the Sheep Factor. I'm not saying that Eminem is as huge and drastic an entity as the WTO or Nazism, but I am saying that his success is an indicator toward that larger trend, and that's what ultimately scares me the most – not that some people identify with his hate-filled lyrics, but that many don't, and they still listen to him.

Scarier still, while Eminem is only one man, the commercial success of his homophobic rants feeds the flames of our society's already rampant homophobia. I personally feel that the discrimination against homosexuals will be the embarrassment of our era. Someday, I hope, we will look back and cringe at atrocities like the boycotting of Matthew Shepard's funeral by religious fanatics, and we will shudder to hear Eminem shouting 'faggot' at the top of his lungs. But that will only happen if those in our society who listen to Eminem because of the Sheep Factor wake up and realize what his music means to our society and to people they may actually know and care for.

I know I've made some pretty heavy statements about Eminem here, but from my point of view, it's impossible to make too big a deal about someone like him and what he means to our culture at large. It is equally impossible to underestimate how important his fan base is, because the ills of our society will only be propagated by the kind of irreverence and apathy that many Eminem fans demonstrate by listening to him. All the civil rights advocates and activists currently trying to counteract the ignorance in our society today will be of no use until the mainstream world realizes how important this is. Ultimately, the true power in our society lies with regular people like you and me, who have important choices to make about who we support commercially and artistically. We have a responsibility to carefully scrutinize some of the people involved in our entertainment industry – people like Eminem, who achieve their success because people will listen, but no one really hears.

Elizabeth Pariseau is a UMass student.

Wacky stories of the world: makes us all feel special

BRIAN LOHNES

News that I enjoy reading the paper for the stories that get buried in the back pages about news that, well, you just don't hear about every day. I am talking about stories on polygamist doomsday cults and female gladiator remains. Sure its "news," but it is pretty funny. Those are the stories that people trying to work their way up the journalistic ladder get sucked with. Let's take a look at some of the oft-beat news in just one issue of The Boston Globe.

We lead off with the classic doomsday cult story, but with a twist. These people are polygamists, meaning that one guy marries a whole crowd of women and then has about a thousand kids. I can't see the benefit of any of that business. As if a doomsday cult isn't weird enough, they live in Colorado City, AZ and are a Mormon "splinter" group. The main part of the story focuses on the fact that these people have pulled their kids out of schools and dozens of the teachers, who are in the cult, have quit their jobs. The two fellows who run the cult, a father and son duo, are reputed to have "dozens of wives."

Moving on, in a story that would make the WWF happy, the remains of a female gladiator from ancient London have been found. Apparently we aren't the first culture to enjoy watching women beat the daylights out of each other. I assume that the Romans didn't have a Titanitron, fog machine, or any kind of pyrotechnic show, but they did have bands of wild animals released on people, so I guess we can call it even. The scientists who made the discovery found only a shred of the supposed woman's pelvis and were able to say they were seventy percent sure it was a woman. They also found a whole bunch of "exotic" stuff in her grave like pinecones and a dove. I wonder how many millions of dollars were pumped into this investigation and where they could have been better spent.

Some news that appeared in this paper is noteworthy, like the story of the flying cat. In case you missed the story, a first-time delivery guy for Domino's Pizza was making a drop off in Southwest when he came upon a football game. The only problem was the fact that the guys were playing with a live cat as their ball. The delivery guy, an avid cat lover, had the cat actually bounce off the windshield of his car. At last count he hadn't called or returned to work. Now, all of us have had our weak moments when we do something less than flattering under the influence of alcohol, but playing football with a live cat? I sure hope those guys were drunk because if they weren't, they really need some help. Amazingly, the cat survived the attack and at last report was hanging around the police station recovering from its harrowing experience.

The other great on-campus story was the supposed "light" mounted in Southwest. This "light" didn't actually light up and it had a small blinking red light on top of it. After some badgering it came out that the "light" was actually a security camera. Now, this camera is there for the protection of students and to keep criminal activity to a minimum in the area where the camera sees. This camera was very effective in stopping the cat-ball game, and now that everyone knows that it is there, it will probably not see too much besides people passing by. Also, the camera is not being watched constantly according to the article, but the tapes will be reviewed in case of an incident. This really seems like a super-duper idea.

As anyone who rides the bus knows, the schedule would serve us better as toilet paper than a bus schedule. In last week's article about the PVTA, it came out that they are horribly short of drivers and are cutting routes and schedule times. They also said that it would be about six weeks until the shortage is fixed. Does anyone plan ahead? If they knew of a big shortage of drivers coming wouldn't they try to counteract that? If they didn't know it was coming, they should have.

Finally, as the best story of the week, I chose one from the Globe. Criminal attorney Fred Ford made a mistake in 1999. He tried to hire a hit man to kill two of his old clients, and, oops, it was a federal agent. Ford offered the guy $11,000 to empty a whole clip of ammo into each person. Now Ford wants his money back. That's correct, this guy hired someone to kill people and paid him and now wants his money back. This guy has a pretty good set of cajones on him to be asking for his money back. I don't have the guts to ask for my money back if I get cold food in a restaurant, and this guy tried to have people killed and he not only wants his money back, but is demanding it. In this day and age I don't know why anything surprises us anymore. The sad thing is he will probably get it back.

So there is a quick smattering of some of the strange and off-beat stories you can find in the news. As a quick review, stay away from polygamist cults, the WWF having women wrestle is definitely not a new idea, the bus may or may not be coming, if you hire a hit man make sure he's not a cop, and if all else fails kick your cat.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

GLBT AFFAIRS
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

GLBT Lecture Series Kicks Off

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday marked the beginning of the Stonewall Center's Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay and Transgender Studies Lecture Series. This program brings different people, including UMass graduate students, professors at other schools, and professionals such as journalists and doctors, to UMass every week to present lectures on topics related to GLBT (Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgendered) issues. The lectures take place every Thursday from 12:30 to 2 p.m. in the Campus Center (hence their nickname "Lunchtime Lecture Series"!.

On Thursday, Sept. 14, Framji Minwalla presented a talk entitled "The Politics of Queer Pedagogy" in Campus Center room 903. Minwalla is a professor in the Theater Department of Dartmouth College. His lecture focused mainly on teaching in a university setting and how his identity as a queer man impacted his teaching.

Minwalla stressed that identity is not a rigid thing. He said, "We all, all the time, refigure who we are." He spoke of the difficult time he has had of finding a place where he feels like he belongs. This is because Minwalla is not only queer, he is also a person of color. He feels that there is no place where he can exist peacefully with those two identities. He spoke of communities being organized around sameness, and shared interests, much like fraternities are organized around gender lines. "I am what I am – all the roles I've played are in the same skin," explained Minwalla. "I have a deep distrust of the very idea of a community," he said. He does not feel like he can find a community, which can accommodate all the parts of his identity. Even in a university setting, which is generally supposed to be diverse and accommodating to different people, Minwalla explains he still does not fit in because a university is a "melting pot that does not melt" (using a quotation from the play Angels in America).

Minwalla talked about the fact that he often was not himself or his true identity while acting in the role of a teacher. He said that, often, pedagogy and identity do not connect. "My sexual orientation disappears in a classroom when I do not teach GLBT texts – I am an authority," said Minwalla. However, when he does teach GLBT plays, he sees his students looking at him in a different, almost sexual way. Minwalla said that it is impossible for him to completely separate his identity from his job as a teacher. "I cannot think straight... or white, or right!" he exclaimed. Many professors try hard to separate their own personal point of view from their teaching, as they do not want to influence their students, but this is a very difficult task. Minwalla feels that he wants to provide students with tools they need to find meaning in plays and texts. He also wants students to see how theater participates in creating modern culture. However, he realizes that his own personal politics play a part in reading of texts, and said that it is an abuse of authority to think otherwise.

Minwalla spoke about the authority that teachers have in the classroom. He explained that, "my authority [as a teacher] depends on my possession of knowledge." Minwalla said that there is an assumption that the knowledge he imparts as a teacher will give his students authority, but in fact, his authority is gained from the institution of Dartmouth College. Doing something unconventional, like going to teach his class in drag, would break his authority in front of his students. Minwalla said that the authority that is given by universities to teachers is often abused by teachers. For example, it is an abuse of authority when teachers teach all students the same. It is also an abuse of authority when a teacher says to his or her students, "I value 'King Lear' (another play by Shakespeare) more than I value you." He says that a branch of pedagogy that he advocates, oppositional pedagogy, needs to question teachers' abuse of their authority. He said that in pedagogy, there needs to be a political but also an erotic aspect. What is the erotics of pedagogy? It is not a sexual or physical erotics, but an academic erotic aspect which is a passion that teachers have for learning and teaching their students.

Minwalla is very worried that students are losing their passion for learning. He spoke of many students who are blocking off their love for working because the outside world tells them that academic students, especially those in the liberal arts, are wrong, lazy and don't work much. As a result, students no longer have passion for school and choose majors based on how much money they can earn once they graduate. For example, one of Minwalla's students could not fit more theater classes into his schedule, even though he loved theater, because he was a double major in economics and computer science. Although he was miserable, he felt he was making the best decision for his future based solely on his future earnings potential. Minwalla said that "parents don't want to pay money for kids to learn Roman sculpture or philosophy, but studying things that have no material value is the best thing we can do" because technology does not always mean progress. Liberal arts asks you to think, to exercise your mind, said Minwalla, and that makes you think critically and be able to own yourself. Minwalla says that teachers should teach students to love learning, and that they should resist the corporatization of the world and the commercialization of the university by talking to each other and working together. Instead, unfortunately, many times they squabble over research and try to stake out individual academic territory instead of worrying about their students.

Minwalla talks to his students a lot about history and how people create history – it is not created for us. He said that we are the agents of history, that history moves through human subjectivity, "We participate in history as subjective beings; the personal is always political," said Minwalla. "I teach students to ask themselves why all this matters – answers change their whole lives." Minwalla quoted scholar Walter Benyamin when he said about the angel of history, "History it cannot fix, torture it cannot know."

During the lecture, Minwalla discussed the daunting task that teachers face of having to crack students' prejudices about certain issues. "Students are young and impressionable, but they are not blank slates," he said. "They will shed some masks and don others in college." He spoke of a time when a he tried to discourage a student at Dartmouth from putting on a racist production of Shakespeare's play "Othello."

The production took place anyway, and Minwalla commented that it was one of those times when he sees "ignorance and chutzpah merge in students." One of the ways in which Minwalla tries to make his students overcome their prejudices is to make everyone in his classes presume that everyone else in the class is queer until he or she comes out to the class as straight. He also asks people to not come out as straight to the class until three weeks go by. He says this is an excellent diversity exercise for his classes because it teaches people to go against their ingrained instincts, which tell them to automatically assume straightness in everyone they encounter.

What is "queer?" Minwalla spoke about the concept of queerness in his lecture. He said that to say that something is "queer" is a presumption that the "other," "normal" thing is always present. He explained that by talking about being queer, people take away from the world its ability to assume straightness and to label "good as 'normal' and queer as "monstrous." Minwalla said that labeling someone as queer is a performative act, and that "queer is a non, verb, and adjective – it is to mock and tease." It registers an identity based on a "norm," as in politics versus a concept of "queer politics." This fosters unhealthy separation of ideas by calling things or people "queer." Minwalla said, "Queer is where the personal and political come together."

Minwalla talked about the many challenges he faces as a minority teacher. For example, there is a list of plays that all seniors graduating from Dartmouth as theater majors should have read. When the faculty revises this list, said Minwalla, there is an unfair burden placed on minority teachers like himself to make sure that everyone – GLBT people, African-Americans, women, Latinos – are represented on the list of plays. He said that a major part of his work has been to call attention to the lack of minorities at the private and exclusive schools, like Vassar and Dartmouth, at which he has taught. It is difficult for Minwalla to be a gay person of color on the Dartmouth College campus because many of the GLBT people at the college are in the closet. He is one of only three gay men who are out of the closet on the Dartmouth faculty. "It is both a burden and a pleasure," Minwalla explains, "to put yourself out there and see what comes back to you."

Despite all the difficulties he faces, Minwalla explained that he loves to teach and is very passionate about his job. He strongly believes in "learning through teaching," which he feels is a very important concept. He says that teaching makes him clarify his own thinking, and this helps him make sense of our world. Minwalla is actually planning to write a book about pedagogy and the issues surrounding it when he has some time off from teaching in the next year or two.

The LBGT Studies Lecture Series continues this week on Thursday, Sept. 21. Troy Arnold, a UMass graduate student in labor studies, will give a talk entitled "GLBT Workplace and Employment Issues" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 811-15.

On Death and Dying

By M.D. Franzuk
Collegian Correspondent

In the United States, the Land of Freedom, our choices are not always honored. I attend a weekly meeting of Gay, Bisexual, Transgendered and Questioning men. Recently, we had a rather in-depth discussion concerning death and dying. We expressed a wide range of thoughts, emotions, and deeply rooted beliefs. The issue affected all of us in different ways and raised some serious concerns while also opening new avenues to each of us.

Many people in the GLBT community meet someone with whom they become life partners. Inevitably, one of them will die before the other. The process of dying, in the modern medical age, can be quite convoluted. Doctors and hospitals want to do all they can to keep the person alive. Even our wishes concerning DNR (Do Not Resuscitate) documents can be ignored if doctors or family can find a way to say the person may not have understood what was being signed.

Our last moments then fall into the hands of family and loved ones, but who are these family and loved ones in the United States? A GLBT couple that has lived together for 20, 30 even 40 years is not granted the same basic rights as a heterosexual couple, even an unmarried heterosexual couple which has been together for as little as five to seven years as a common law marriage. In heterosexual couples, the family or loved one is the spouse or life partner of the dying person. This person, who is without question the person closest to the dying one, who knows the most about the dying person's wishes and beliefs, is the one the hospitals and doctors turn to for the final word on the patient's care.

However, in a GLBT relationship, the spouse is not consulted. The doctors and hospitals turn to the parents and siblings of the dying person instead. These people may be the same parents and siblings who have ostracized the dying person in the past, who would not talk to the person on the phone, send birthday or holiday cards, and would never consider visiting the person. These may be people who have said, "You are no son of mine," or "I don't have a sister," or many more horrible things. Yet these people, who often do not know the dying person well anymore, are the ones who make the final decisions. Does the person live on machines or die naturally? Will the person's wishes be carried out? It is true that not all families are that way, and some do include the GLBT spouse of the dying person in the decision-making process, but these accepting families are not the majority.

We also discussed in our group the question of letting go and found that this idea really affects what people do in these final moments of the dying person's life. Many of us hold very strong opinions of what happens after death. Many of us also hold very strong opinions about whether or not we would want to turn off life-saving devices and therefore lose the loved one. When we can't say goodbye to a dying person, we don't let go.

All of us in the group knew of or had direct involvement in, a letting-go situation. We came to the conclusion that we need to tell the person that we can accept our loss and that it is ok for the person to move on. Many people don't do this and instead tell their loved ones to hang in there, and, amazingly, they do! Usually the "hanging in there" is much harder on the family, as they can't move on with their own lives and we have no idea what it does to the person who is dying, who may very well be in a coma and laying there for days, weeks, or even months or years. We all found that when the loved ones came to the person and say that it is ok for the person to go, the individual passed on sometimes immediately, sometimes a few minutes or hours later, sometimes even longer, but always within 48 hours.

Most of us don't want to deal with death, but as those of us in the group who were for natural death all said, there is something beautiful — sad, yes, but beautiful – about the passing on of someone you love. None of us could explain it, but we all felt it.

We found there were two very useful things people could do to prepare for death. The first, since the United States does not acknowledge same-sex partnerships, is to get a "Power of Attorney" contract with your partner. It is a legal document that gives all the power concerning your death and dying wishes to the person you choose. If you give this to your partner, it is virtually as strong as civil marriage rights in that realm. Second, when the time for death does come, seek a bereavement counselor. They are trained in dealing with these situations and can really help people deal with and accept the inevitable passing of a loved one.

Death is a scary, sad, and beautiful thing. It is as natural as being born and growing up. It is the final closure of life, its completion and fulfillment. We should accept it lovingly, and we should also prepare for it. May it be many years before we have to experience it on either side.

Queer freshman on campus

By Bethany Kimball
Collegian Correspondent

A week and a half into classes, I still can entertain myself by looking around for gay pride pins on knapsacks. While that would be a rather futile activity in my hometown, here it reaps plenty of rewards with a variety of pink triangles, rainbows and other queer paraphernalia adorning knapsacks, necklaces, bracelets, and purses. Of course, it's rather strange to walk into the Air Force ROTC building for class with my queer pride displayed for all to see on my bookbag. I'm still getting used to that.

I'm still getting used to a lot. I come from a town where the queer culture consisted of four people, including myself, in our tiny little posse. Here, there are actual "Real Live Gay People," and I have no idea who they are, as opposed to home, where I knew them, was friends with them, and had our semi-traditional Gay Movie Nights with them. An adjustment, to say the least, is in order. As opposed to long, rainy emails to each other, here at UMass we have B.I..A.T.A.N.T. (the newsletter of the Stonewall Center), plus the Stonewall Center and the Pride Alliance. There are advertisements for a gay men's domestic violence shelter on the sides of the PVTA buses. No buses even stopped in my hometown except for the big yellow school buses. Can we say "culture shock"? In the best sense of the word, of course.

Wandering into Amherst proper led to several more interesting discoveries that I made. A book fiend, I discovered that there are at least five bookstores on the various Pleasant streets alone, including the local militantly leftist/queer/women's shop, Food For Thought, where I could easily spend hours surrounded by books that extol the virtues of being queer.

I have seen gay bumper stickers, and "Higgins for Mayor" stickers (for non-locals, Mayor Higgins is the Northampton mayor and an out lesbian). A quick hop onto a PVTA bus leads one to Northampton, the lesbian mecca of western Massachusetts, home of The Grotto (a GLBT dance club) and Pride & Joy (a store with GLBT-related books and products). The Five College area is just ripe with queer positive vibes, stores and bumper stickers.

To say the least, I'm still getting used to the idea of being one of many queer freshmen. Who wouldn't be a little overwhelmed in a world where being gay is no longer a big huge deal? Where gay pride is just that, out and open and on the street. It still isn't as easy to say, "Hi, I am gay," as it should be, but UMass is a far easier place to be queer than many of our hometowns.

As I look out over the fields and dorms of Orchard Hill, I know two measly, yet very important things. Here, there's a much bigger Queer Posse. And, that the Hill is very steep.

Teaching in the Face of Discrimination

By M.D. Franzuk
Collegian Correspondent

People behave in the strangest ways, especially when dealing with GLBT's. On a recent trip to New York I met a gentleman visiting some friends. We were sitting on the back porch chatting the afternoon away. During the course of the conversation we talked about our fields. It turned out he recently became the principal of a small private school in New York. The school desperately needed teachers and he felt I might be good for one of the positions. He suggested I come to his office. We settled on 11 am for a half-hour interview.

Being a weekend trip, I didn't have anything formal to wear so I went in casual dress. We met and conducted the interview. The interview concluded with his asking the Dean to interview me as well. I took this as a rather good sign.

A few minutes later I found myself seated in the Dean's office. We discussed many topics ranging from discipline to general classroom setup. We also reached a financial agreement. When the interview ended, the Dean asked me to go to the Principal, make sure my references were set and leave my number. They would contact me in two to three days.

When I returned to the Principal's office, he asked me several more questions, including if a financial offer had been made. He was astonished at the figure, stating it to be substantially haigher than the usual starting salary. He asked me to wait in his office for a few minutes and left.

Moments later, he returned. While on his way downstairs to see the Dean, he ran into the Dean coming upstairs. They were each going to suggest that I be offered the position. At 1 p.m. (remember, it was supposed to be a half-hour interview), I became the new eighth grade teacher. I was given my books and told I should return in a week to discuss the curriculum with the Principal.

Due to difficulties, our meeting got pushed off by a few days. When I went for the meeting, the Principal was rather unhappy. It seems that he and the Dean had a disagreement concerning me. He told me I needed to speak to the Dean. As I left, I heard him mutter, "You don't offer a guy a job and then take it from him."

Arriving in the Dean's office, I was informed that during the process of checking my references, he, the Dean, had spoken with people at my old school. (I should note that this private school is a religious school and my old school is part of the same organization.) It seems there had been a rumor going about for several years that questioned my sexuality. The Dean told me that based on the rumor, he could not hire me. I asked him what if the rumor were to be proven false. His response was that he still would not be able to hire me because he couldn't have one of his teachers being spoken of in such a way.

I was shocked and outraged. I had just encountered my first bona fide case of discrimination and it was based solely on a rumor; they didn't have the decency to base it on the fact that I am a homosexual. I was deeply hurt. I went away from the school thinking about how much narrow-mindedness really hurts the world. With only ten days to go before the opening day of school and with no prospective teachers applying for the position, the Dean had decided that a possible homosexual was not able to teach in this school. It seems it is better that these students don't have a teacher than to have someone who basically shares the same values and beliefs but is possibly homosexual.

GLBT Laughter

By Heather Lember
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center Auditorium was overwhelmed with the sound of laughter Friday night as comedian Elvira Kurt took the stage, proceeding to bombard the nearly packed house with her cynical social commentary on everything from technology taken too far to her eventual coming out two thirds of the way through the show.

The Canadian-born comedian had the audience laughing almost from the minute she stepped on stage. Beginning with more than a few cracks on the concrete structuring of the room to the massive size of the university, to the large hole in the curtain (where she later hung her coat), her apathetic view of higher education was swiftly made relevant, as she pointed out that it does not really matter in the end what your major is. Kurt herself claimed to have been some type of science major, "constipated with knowledge." Kurt proceeded to inform every student in the room that we are "working too hard."

Kurt continued on with her social critique by rejecting all our new technology and nostalgically taking the audience back to a time before cell phones, computers, answering machines, call waiting and high-tech toothbrushes (with extra grip handles and blue bristles). Kurt recalled her own childhood memories during the years when playgrounds where made of metal, with sharp cornered rusty slides featuring towering ladders and a vertical drop to the cement ground. This is a stark contrast to the playgrounds of today, which she described as padded plastic with soft curved edges. Using her playground talk as an analogy to today's pampered online youth, Kurt encouraged everyone to get away from their dimly lit rooms and humming monitors, inspiring the audience to leave their computers behind and go outside.

Kurt's social commentary took on a personal note as she came out to the audience as being a lesbian. The rest of her jokes consisted of her coming out experiences and being a queer comedian. In the tradition of Margaret Cho, she impersonated her mother's Hungarian accent, displaying how she reacted to her daughter's homosexuality. She closed the show with her mother's statement of reluctant acceptance "My daughter's a comedian and a lesbian at the same time!"

Write for GLBT Affairs!

Paltrow's Duets Fails to Sing

By Jennifer Chasen
Collegian Correspondent

Duets
Directed by Bruce Paltrow with Gwyneth Paltrow and Huey Lewis

Huey Lewis and karaoke. Karaoke and Huey Lewis. Just mentioning these two things in the same breath is enough to evoke excitement for me. As ashamed as I am to admit that I do, in fact, own a copy of "The Best of Huey Lewis and the News" and have been known to participate in the self-deprecating pastime of karaoke, I thought that I would never be able to pan a movie like Duets that is innovative enough to include both. I was wrong.

The film's 115 minutes start off with a series of little vignettes that reveal part of the lives of the movie's six major characters. We are introduced to Ricky Dean (Huey Lewis), a no nonsense singer who earns his monies by betting with low life barflies and his good-natured daughter, Liv (Gwyneth Paltrow), whom he has never met. We also meet Todd (Paul Giamatti), a traveling businessman, who can't seem to redeem his 800,000 frequent flier miles and singer turned convict, Reggie (Andre Braugher). Aspiring priest turned cab driver, Billy (Scott Speedman) teams with waitress turned slut (Maria Bello) and our circle is complete.

In a bizarre (and confusing) twist of fate, the characters seem to come together and become involved with the karaoke circuit in some way. They sing and they dance, and they all make it to the Karaoke Finals in Omaha, NE where they get the chance to compete for $5,000. Along the way, the characters (with the exception of Speedman) sing a wide array of very good tunes, rob convenience stores, and perform sexual favors. All in all, your typical good time karaoke flick.

The film was directed by Gwyneth Paltrow's father, Bruce, whose last film, A Little Sex, debuted in 1982. Apparently the poor man was out of practice, because Duets had the direction of a made-for-TV movie, showing way too much of Huey Lewis—an actor he is not—thinking. I adore The Power of Love as much as the next person, but a tattooed and shirtless Lewis is not the image I want to be thinking about when I go to bed at night.

Paltrow's character was supposed to be interpreted as fun-loving and endearing, but I found her speaking voice to be greatly irritating and her outfits in a state of complete and utter misdirection. The only costume choice that was remotely enjoyable was the leather jacket sported by Felicity's Scott Speedman. While his part wasn't quite the deepest thing since Sophie's Choice, he is cute, even minus his regular WB time slot.

Despite the film's poorly written and oftentimes sloppy script, I felt the characters Todd and Reggie emerge as the movie's high points. Both Braugher and Giamatti, when paired together, are funny and touching and make the best of the script they have. Also, Braugher's a cappella rendition of "Freebird" is particularly moving amongst the confusion that is Duets.

The movie is even riddled with continuity problems and at one point it looks as if Gwyneth Paltrow, who doesn't have a microphone, seems to magically pull one out of her butt and make it appear. The picture's only saving grace is the intermittent bursts of song, which made me wonder why musicals are no longer produced on film. Lewis' version of Joe Cocker's, "Feeling Alright", makes it well worth buying the soundtrack and Braugher and Giamatti's cover of "Try A little Tenderness" will bring a smile to even those opposed to any sort of cinema that teams a cheesy plot with even cheesier song stylings.

COURTESY HOLLYWOOD PICTURES

Gwyneth Paltrow stars in Duets directed by her dad, Bruce Paltrow, seen here. I wonder how she got that part.

Elton John Makes Aida, Scoring in B'way show

By Jake Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Aida
Palace Theater - Broadway

The longest-running musical in Broadway history may be Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Cats," but The Great White Way turned gold when it became home to a show about another kind of feline. When Disney adapted their blockbuster film "The Lion King" to the stage, it eventually became one of the most popular and beloved plays in American musical theatre history.

Hoping to achieve the same success with their latest musical, "Aida," Disney again recruited pop superstar Elton John to compose the music, and Tim Rice to write the lyrics to this update of Verdi's sweeping operetta of the same name. The result is a striking and moving, emotionally driven musical that tests the strength of love against the power of death.

Shortly after returning home fro war with the nearby land of Nubi Egyptian captain Radames learns th the Pharoah is at death's door. Upo the ruler's passing, Radames will we the Pharoah's obedient daughte Amneris, and assume the throne, th ending the days he loved most: as captain upon the sea.

When he meets the mysterious slav Aida, whom his soldiers captured whil in Nubia, the two begin to bond ov their similar feelings of being enslaved each in a different manner, by the gov ernment. Their unusual friendship soo blooms into an unlawful love, culminating in a pulse-pounding finale tha unites the two star-crossed lover together forever.

For those familiar with the vast the atrical landscape, Adam Pascal (Roge from the original cast of "Rent") is th dashing Radames, while Tony Award

Turn to AIDA, page

COURTESY OFFICIAL DISNEY WEB SITE

Adam Pascal and Heather Hadley get spicy in Disney's Aida.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer: $25 off
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

YOUR CHEWABLE VITAMIN DAYS ARE BACK.

Eat with your head.™
New BALANCE GOLD® helps give your body sustained energy, plus 23 essential vitamins and minerals.
It's a 40-30-30 ratio of carbs, protein and dietary fat fiendishly hidden in peanuts, caramel and a rich chocolate flavor. Now if only we could make it look like a little cartoon character.
Want to learn more? Log on to Balance.com.

adia

continued from page 6

winner Heather Headley (last seen as Rafiki in "The Lion King") delivers a powerhouse performance as Aida. In her breakthrough role, Sherie Rene Scott is at the top of her game as the conflicted Amneris.

Pascal and Headley make a handsome couple, and their chemistry sizzles from the start. Pascal's gravelly, rock-star vocal stylings, and Headley's sultry singing add just the right touch to John's award-winning score. In addition to Headley and John winning Tonys for Best Actress and Best Score, respectively, the lighting and scenery bring the show to life, magically taking the audience on a fabulous adventure to another world.

The music, however, is the true delight of the show, especially considering how it almost never made it to the stage in the first place. After "The Lion King's" mind-blowing success, John and Rice were immediately recruited to score the Dreamworks SKG musical adventure "The Road to El Dorado." During this time John also released his latest studio album, "The Big Picture," for which he went on an international tour. Add to the mix that he took six months to team up again with piano man Billy Joel for another series of "Face to Face" concerts overseas. To top it all off, he was fitted with a pacemaker to prevent worries of heart failure.

Further conflict arrived when John released a "concept" album of music from the forthcoming show, where he hired big-name stars to do their own rendition of the musical's numbers. Despite music icons such as James Taylor, Lenny Kravitz and The Spice Girls, the album was less than well-received, a fact that had Disney execs sweating under the collar.

Yet the show must go on, and it did. In a wise move, Disney brought in renowned Broadway director Robert Longbottom ("Side Show") to helm the production, with Linda Woolverton ("Beauty & The Beast") and David Henry Hwang ("M. Butterfly") to write the play's book.

Now those folks at Disney are basking in the glow that is "Aida." Only six months into performances, "Aida" has won a slew of Tony Awards, captured the hearts of critics and fans alike, and has a best-selling soundtrack. Already, the LeAnn Rimes rendition of "Written In the Stars" has received generous radio airplay. In addition, the three leads have been appearing on the talk-show circuit performing the bouncy ballad "A Step Too Far." The 1950's doo-wop song "My Strongest Suit" is the big showstopper, while "Another Pyramid" involves an exciting, urban hip-hop dance sequence (thanks to the choreography of "Tommy's" Wayne Cilento).

The strongest argument against "Aida" as it begins its international tour this spring is that a large majority of the music is formulaic Elton John. Several times throughout, one can imagine John's crooning as if he were performing the songs (especially those that are sung by John Hickok in the role of Zoser). Fans of his will find no fault in this, but the fate of the show and with any future Elton John projects, perhaps, rests in the hands of those who aren't as keen on John's style. "Aida" is Broadway for the new millennium. It is a combination of Verdi's opera, with the modern spin of "Rent," and the tragic love of "Les Miserables." "Aida" throws off the shackles of predictability, and triumphs with a liberated voice calling out to the 21st century.

"Aida" is playing at The Palace Theatre in New York City. The tour begins in May in Minneapolis.

P.O.D. rocked the main stage of Locobazooka on Sunday at Green Hill Partk in Worcester.

UMass CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
Ice Hockey (M/W)....9/21
Volleyball (M/W/C)....9/28
Tennis Singles....10/2
Ultimate Frisbee (M/W)....10/2
Weekend Softball (M/W)....10/2
OFFICIALS NEED:
Volleyball - Clinic Dates: October 3, 4, 10, 11, Call for requirements, times and locations.
On the web at: www.umass.edu/umim

Made in USA
CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
Sleacil www.sleacil.com #15
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work . . .
Be part of an intensive study at the Smith College School for Social Work
INFORMATION DAY
Tuesday, September 19, 2000
6:00 p.m. - 7:30 p.m.
Seelye Hall - Room 106
Smith College
For more information, call (413) 585-7960

RELIEF resources
We've got you covered
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

What are you doing this weekend?
STUDY ABROAD with SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY
Italy
London
Spain
Hong Kong
France
Africa

Women's tennis well at Easterns

By Alison Sciamanna
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's tennis team finished up a successful weekend at the Eastern Tennis Championships in West Point, NY with victories from rookie Francesca Mancini at No. 2 singles as well as the No. 2 doubles team of freshman Jafra Depontes and junior Lindsey Gillooly.

Mancini, a newcomer from Milan, Italy, won her first round match over Barbara Affertshult of Stony Brook before defeating Albany's Samantha Kremer in the semifinals. Then, in the finals, Mancini beat No. 4 seed Courtney Iseldyke of Seton Hall to take the No. 2 singles crown.

The No. 2 doubles team of Depontes and Gillooly took the first round match against Stony Brook's duo of Deanna Ghozati and Delquin to advance to the semifinals. Once there, they beat the No. 3 seeded team of Melanie Bundoc and Ali Rohr. In the finals, the pair came back to defeat No. 1 seeded Heather Binen and Marie Ongseng of Binghamton.

"Jafra and Lindsey actually won the doubles which was great since they've never played with each other before," said junior Helena Horak.

Sophomore No. 3 singles player, Katie Stammen, beat Erin Monaco of Binghamton in straight sets and Long Island's Leslie Harvey to advance to the semifinals, where she defeated No. 2 seeded Susie Coggin of George Washington. She then fell in the final round to Seton Hall's No. 4 seeded Nicole Cercone.

In the early rounds, the Minutewomen got strong play from No. 1 doubles team of Horak and Susan Hyams, who advanced to the semifinals by beating Veronika Krakovskava and Sheana Sinclair of Long Island and Bree Himmelstein and Meghan Womack of Fordham. In semifinal action, the duo was beaten by No. 3 seeded Annie Collier and Melissa Sentelle.

"I'd never played tennis with my partner before and the coach [Judy Dixon] is basically trying out different doubles combinations to see which ones will work the best - and my partner and I complimented each other very well," Horak said.

In the consolation rounds, junior Annie Hamilton defeated No. 2 seed Annie Weber, before losing in the finals to Seton Hall's Kyli Tassale.

The Minutewomen return to action today against Amherst College. The Lord Jeffs are 2-0 in the fall season. The match is scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m.

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.
Call us for a free tax-savings calculator
One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.
With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.
And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.* Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid history of investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.
So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.
INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan†
IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL
$102,068
$67,514
$41,232
$31,933
$13,052
$11,609
Tax-deferred savings after taxes
After-tax savings
10 YEARS 20 YEARS 30 YEARS
In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.
*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.
TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™
1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. 1. You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a personalized calculation of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1 800 842-2776. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed.
© 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments. FREE HEAT/HOT WATER, Fully appliances kitchen, designer bath On PVTA busline. Call 665-3856

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

AUTO FOR SALE

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4?00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 for sale. For further information. 413-667-3084

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99. Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays. Sugarloaf Estates 665-3856

Resturant Cashier Speaking and writing Chinese and English Part-time or Full-time (413) 582-7045

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, em! Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 for Fax 413-549-9945

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

2 Cute Kittens need loving homes 413-665-7315 Act Quickly

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for Free Testing and Assistance 549-1906

Foreign & Taiwan Students. DV2002 greencard program. Deadline Oct. 20 Info:20231 Stagg St. Winnetka, CA 91306 Tel. 818-998-4425

SPORTS

Attention Wrestlers, Boxers, anyone who likes to workout. Mixed Martial Arts Program located at local gym. Looking for interested athletes. Kirik 256-0080 www.mixedmartialarts.com kirik@mixedmartialarts.com

TRAVEL

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free Materials Provided. Earn Easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRINGBREAK 2001 Hiring On-Campus Reps SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!! Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849 www.gospringbreak.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sunsplash Vacations 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

WANT CASH? Sign-up your classmates for cool Internet sites, and receive a minimum of $1.00 per person!! There's no easier way to make money! Log onto TeamMagma.com or call 1-877-866-2462

Need a job?

Is your money getting tight already?

Check out The Collegian Classifieds and find the job for you!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because you can use jock font too!!!

HSCN Bulletin Board

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Gavel to Gavel
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 19, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N) (In Stereo) CC		Anyplace Wild (In Stereo) CC		Nova: Escape! Accidents		P.O.V. "KPFA on the Air" (N) CC		Sports Heroes	Inside the Box
WFSB	3	News 3	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother 3: King		Survivor: Too Little Too Late?		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) CC		News 3	Late Show CC
WBZ	4	News 4	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother 3: King		Survivor: Too Little Too Late?		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) CC		News 4	Late Show CC
WCVB	5	News 5	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle CC	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City CC	Spin City CC	News 5	Nightline CC
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless CC	Friends CC	Nanny CC	Buffy the Vampire Slayer CC		Angel "To Shanshu in L.A." CC		News CC		Friends CC	Change-Heart
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) CC
WTXX	4	7th Heaven "Family Secrets" CC	Blind Date	Real TV CC		Teen Files: Surviving High School (N) (In Stereo) CC				News	Real TV CC	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	18	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) CC								Friends CC	Frasier CC
WTIC	61	Simpsons CC	Frasier CC	Seinfeld CC	Friends CC	★★½ "Jumanji" (1995, Fantasy) Robin Williams, Jo				News			Nightline CC
WWLP	22	News 22	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) CC
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer CC		Anyplace Wild (In Stereo) CC		Nova: Escape! Accidents		P.O.V. "KPFA on the Air" (N) CC		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) CC
WGGB	40	News 40	ABC News	Seinfeld CC	Frasier CC	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City CC	Spin City CC	News 40	Nightline CC
WSBK	38	Judge Judy CC	Judge Judy CC	Seinfeld CC	Frasier CC	Teen Files: Surviving High School (N) (In Stereo) CC				Star Trek: Voyager "Prototype"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	69	Roseanne CC	Roseanne CC	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball	New York Mets at Atlanta Braves. (L) (Live) CC				★★½ "Lock Up" (1989) Sylvester Stallone.
A&E	33	L.A. Law "Frye Me to the Moon"	Law & Order "Breeder" CC			Biography. (In Arnie Morrison		American Justice CC		Investigative Reports (N) CC		Law & Order "Burned" CC
CNN	24	Worldview CC	Moneyline Newshour (N) CC		Crossfire CC	World Today CC		Larry King Live CC		Newsstand CC		Sports	Moneyline CC
COM	35	Saturday Night Live CC		Daily Show CC	Stein's Money	★½ "Porky's Revenge" (1985, Comedy) Dan Monahan				Toothbrush	Whose Line?	Daily Show CC	Stein's Money
DISC	49	Your New House		Wild Discovery	Supernatural	New Detectives "Family Plots"		New Detectives		FBI Files "Deadly Obsession"		New Detectives "Family Plots"
ESPN	51	Sportscenter CC		Rembr-Trians	Major League Baseball	Teams to Be Announced. (Live)					Baseball	Sportscenter CC
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	★★½ "Menendez: A Killing in Beverly Hills" (1994, Drama) Edward James Olmos, Beverly D'Angelo CC								Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Countdown	Makeover	Tom Green CC	Tom Green CC	Tom Green CC	Tom Green CC	Tom Green CC	Tom Green CC	MTV's 10 Most Revealing Moments (In Stereo)
NICK	25	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! CC	Rugrats CC	Thornberrys	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons CC
SCIFI	55	Sliders "El Sid" (In Stereo) CC		★★ "Asteroid" (1997, Science Fiction)		Annabella Scorra CC		★★ "Asteroid" (1997, Science Fiction)		Annabella Scorra CC		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	37	Home Again	Home Again	Trauma Center		Trauma: Life in the ER		Curse of Tutankhamun		Ancient Autopsies (N)		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	45	ER "Last Rites" (In Stereo) CC		Pretender "Prison Story" CC		★★ "The Phantom" (1996, Suspense) Billy Zane CC		★★★ "Clueless" (1995, Comedy) Alicia Silverstone CC		Bull (N) CC		ER "Leave It to Weaver" CC
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger CC		LAG "Ghosts" (In Stereo) CC		Nash Bridges "Deliverance" CC		★★★ "Clueless" (1995, Comedy) Alicia Silverstone CC				Strip Poker	Martin CC
HBO	63	Mother-Ogths'		★★★½ "Dead Poets Society" (1989, Drama) Robin Williams. (In Stereo) PG CC				★★½ "Brokedown Palace" (1999, Drama) Claire Danes. PG-13 CC		Sex and the City CC			G-String Divas
MAX	65	★★ "Entrapment" (1999, Suspense) Sean Connery. PG-13 CC				★★½ "The Gauntlet" (1977, Drama) Clint Eastwood. R CC				★★ "Orgazmo" (1997) Trey Parker. NC-17 CC			"Toy Soldiers"
SHOW	66	★★★ "Carlow, Texas Pop. 81" (1998) Brendan Meyer. PG CC				★½ "Teaching Mrs. Tingle" (1999) Helen Mirren.		Filmmaker		Beggars and Choosers CC		★★★ "The Thief" (1997) R

Baldordash By Tim Dwyer

So you say we can tell the future?
Ya, something like that.
Mr. Tree, what does my future hold?
I see death, destruction, and some junk.
Wuss

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

Hey, you must be my roommate, Scott!
I uh...
Omigosh, my roommate is an alien!
Hi Chris, this is my robot, Pinball. I "liberated" him from the engineering building.
Well, I guess I'll choose what's for dinner, then...
By the way, do you mind if I keep some mutilated cattle in the fridge?

Dilbert By Scott Adams

UM...HOW WAS YOUR MEETING WITH MY BOSS?
WE EACH TOLD OUR FAVORITE STORIES ABOUT YOU. THEN WE LAUGHED AND LAUGHED.
HE HAS STORIES ABOUT ME?
HE THOUGHT THEY WERE URBAN LEGENDS

Dilbert By Scott Adams

ALICE, MAYBE WE SHOULDN'T DATE. I'M A VP AND YOU'RE AN ENGINEER IN MY DIVISION.
SHEESH. GET OVER YOURSELF. I'M JUST USING YOU TO DRIVE MY BOSS NUTS.
YOUR INDIFFERENCE AROUSES ME! I WILL MAKE YOU MINE!
VPs

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

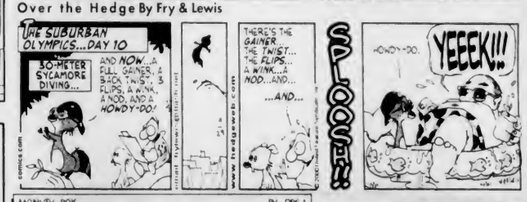
I'D JUST LIKE TO TELL YOU HOW OFFENDED I AM THAT THROUGHOUT THIS WHOLE "NO-HAIR" CREAM INCIDENT, NO ONE HAS EVER ASKED ME ABOUT MY FEELINGS.
I MEAN, IF YOU HADN'T USED MY NO-HAIR CREAM BY ACCIDENT, IT COULD BE THE BALD ONE HERE ME! THINK ABOUT IT
IT'S ALWAYS ABOUT YOU, ISN'T IT?
I DON'T FOLLOW YOU. AS OPPOSED TO WHAT?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHY ARE YOU WEARING THAT HAT, WILCO?
I HAD A SMALL ACCIDENT AT HOME. I, UM, LOST MY HAIR
I SEE. BUT DO YOU HAVE TO WEAR A RED SOX HAT? CLIENTS COME THROUGH HERE ALL THE TIME. WILCO. WE'RE TRYING TO CREATE AN ATMOSPHERE OF SUCCESS, MAN.
SORRY

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 10
50-METER SYCAMORE DIVING...
AND NOW...A FULL GAINER, A BACK TWIST, 3 FLIPS, A WINK, A NOD, AND A HOWDY-DO!
THERE'S THE GAINER. THE TWIST... THE FLIPS... A WINK... A NOD... AND...
...AND...
KNOCK-KNOCK.
YEEEK!!!
SLOOSH!!

PLEASED WITH HIS LATEST PURCHASE, ERIK PLACES "BOSTON CREME" NEXT TO "HONEY GLAZED" IN HIS DUNKIN' DONUTS SCRATCH N' SNIFF STICKER BOOK. © 2000

Horoscopes

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Today, you'll enjoy something quite eye-opening for the first time – but certainly not for the last!
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – What you think and what you do must be in careful alignment today, or your mood is likely to be affected to the point that other people begin to talk.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21) – Share with others freely and generously today, and all that you give will come back to you two- and three-fold in the days and weeks to come.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Someone close to you may refuse you a favor today, much to your surprise. Don't let it upset you. Turn to someone else who will help out.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone in authority may surprise you today by passing the torch directly to you. There will be little time for adjustment, so be ready.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Someone may be giving you a line today, but there is a bit of substance in what you hear. All you have to do is sort it out from the rest.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You don't want to miss out on anything that is free or otherwise complimentary today. Check your watch. Be sure that everything is on schedule.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You must be ready to change your mind today if all evidence points to a conclusion that is different from your own.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your outward image may not suit the role you have to play today – or at least, so it may seem. You can, however, prove your critics wrong.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It is a good day for the love and romance department – though a surprise waits for you which may cloud your judgment for a time after dark.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Looks can be deceiving today, and you must take care that you don't fall into the trap of believing the first thing you see at any moment.
LEO (July 23- Aug. 22) – Someone who knows may label you a "natural" today – and you'll have a chance to demonstrate just exactly what you know before long.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 78 LOW: 57	HIGH: 78 LOW: 57	HIGH: 78 LOW: 52

Quote of the Day

"Being human is an extremely dangerous occupation that should be prohibited by law."

by Dave Barry

ACROSS
1 Earliest occurrences
7 Wise one
10 Long lashes
14 Type of acid
15 Greek letter
16 Starr's instrument
17 Sagebrush State
18 None
19 Have supper
20 Kind of precision
23 Forger's need
26 Alphabet letters
27 Compassion
28 Downpour
29 Common vine
30 Cover
31 Debris carried by a glacier
33 Cinnamon —
34 Mrs. Nixon
37 Ostrich kin
38 Ran into
39 Assn
40 Line
41 Be rude, slang
42 In favor of 43 Motion
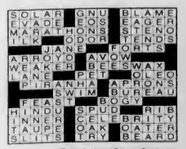
45 Chapeau
46 Harmful
47 Poker stake
48 Cleanse
51 Hockey Hall-of-Famer
52 Trepidation
53 Stand united
56 Fencing sword
57 Green parrot
58 Extraterrestrials
62 Time periods
63 Allow
64 Music-lover's buy
65 Slant
66 Blonde shade
67 Large quantity

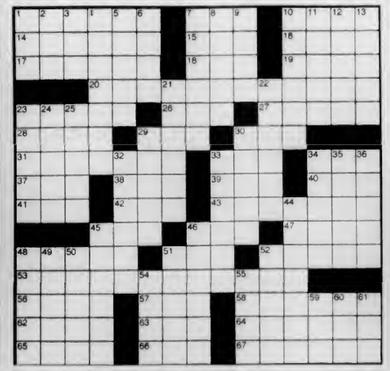
DOWN
1 Rooter
2 Frozen water
3 Place (an engine)
4 Endurance
5 Kind of pool
6 Hightail it
7 Clantankerous
8 Odd notions
9 Airtight of films
10 Swirled about
11 Novelist Jong
12 On the moon
13 Fuse (coes)
21 Must
22 Items
23 Like warlips
24 Singer Judd
25 Computer problem
29 Not active
30 Attracted
32 Revival
33 "Casablanca" star
34 Dried fruit
35 Major artery
36 Suit material
44 Lingers
45 Largest
46 Out of — gasping
48 Piece of paper
49 Blue Grotto site
50 Hoopster Shaquille
51 Curved moldings
52 Silt deposit
54 Tex. neighbor
55 Fastening
59 Ums' cousins
60 Once named
61 The sun

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

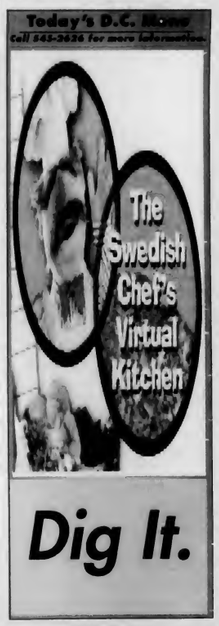


10.4.00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

WE SAW THE PATRIOTS SUNDAY. DID YOU? NFL SUNDAY TICKET. EVERY GAME. EVERY SUNDAY.
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Money
Call 545-3626 for more information



Dig It.

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Brian McDermott
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Jasmine Trabelsi, Jess Grair, Mike Kulas

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, September 19, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sarah Cook and the Massachusett's women's soccer team dropped a tough game to Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island on Sunday.

Rhode Island squeezes out 3-0 win

Rams snap 12-game losing streak against UMass in the A-10 opener

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, RI – The Rhode Island women's soccer team removed a large monkey off its back on Sunday afternoon at the URI Soccer Complex.

Twelve times in its history, the Rams took the field against their counterparts from UMass and came out on the losing end. However, Rhody finally got the best of the Minutewomen – on the scoreboard, anyway – this time around.

Ironically, UMass controlled the play for the entire second half and more than held its own in the opening 45 minutes. The only problem was that URI (6-0, 1-0 in the Atlantic 10) netted three goals in the first half off connections in the box.

That left the Minutewomen scrambling for goals in the second half. And, despite several chances, the Rams were able to preserve the shutout and the win.

"I thought that we were better than they were," Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "They had four balls in the box, and scored on three of them. It's pretty amazing."

"I'm disappointed for the kids because they put in a good effort," added Rudy. "We got a few good chances of inside six, eight yards, but hit the ball right at their keeper's hands. We needed to roll those in."

Rhode Island 3
UMass 0

Over on the URI sideline, the win represented more than just the end of a streak. It provided legitimacy to a Rams team that has jumped out to a perfect 6-0 start. In defeating a proven Atlantic 10 power in UMass, the Ocean State school sent a message out to the rest of the conference that it is ready to make a run for the league title this season.

"The big thing going into the game was that we were telling the team that history doesn't matter," URI women's soccer coach Shelley Smith said. "You take every game one game at a time. The players were up and they stayed focused. This was the first time this year that we put a full 90 minutes together."

"This was a great win for us," added Smith. "UMass is highly respected in our conference. That was something that we wanted to prove – that we could play with the top teams in our conference. We hope to see UMass again at the A-10's [tournament]."

Rhode Island opened the scoring at the 6:02 mark when Mary Drapetis converted on a pass from Catherine Zanni. Stephanie Botsvert would then double the Rams lead about 17 minutes later, when she pounced on a loose ball in the box and tipped the ball past Julie Podhrasky.

"I thought that we were focused," Rudy said. "The goals were just a product of two young kids making freshmen mistakes. But that's going to happen. It's a part of learning."

Rams midfielder Gina Rosen then added to the lead when she worked her way along the right sideline before cutting to the net and tiptoeing along the goal line. In the process, she beat a UMass defender and crossed a ball into the box that Shannon Kittleson tucked home.

UMass (3-4, 0-1 in Atlantic 10) dominated play in the second half, controlling the midfield at will. However, the Minutewomen failed to convert on several corner kicks and chances from in close.

Nevertheless, Rudy was still able to take away several positives from the game, even in defeat.

"The thing that gives me hope is that we never gave up," he said. "We fought to the last second trying to get a goal. That's the UMass spirit and tradition – to never give up. Even now [after the game], you have kids who only played a half who are running sprints on their own."

UMass will be back in action this Friday night when it plays San Diego State at Arizona State University. The Minutewomen will then face the host Sun Devils on Sunday night in Tempe, AZ.

V-ball team drops three on road

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team went into Fort Collins, CO with high hopes of improving on their overall record of 3-3 for the season. The Coors Classic was expected to be their toughest competition of the season thus far, and it certainly held true to its expectations as the Minutewomen dropped all three of their matches this past weekend.

In fact, things went so badly for UMass that they failed to win a single game in the entire three-match tourney. In the three sweeps, the Minutewomen, who now stand at 3-6, were outscored by nearly three-fold, 133-55.

LOYOLA-CHICAGO (15-4, 15-11, 15-10)

In the final match of the tournament the Minutewomen were defeated by the University of Loyola-Chicago. Rebecca Hasson led the Maroon and White, totaling eight kills and eight digs in the three games. Sophomore Claire Baxter once again made her way on to the leaderboard by killing six points in the match.

The Ramblers upped their record to 4-3 by virtue of the win, and were led by Sarah Poglitis, who notched 10 kills for the victors.

"Loyola-Chicago was just six kids on the floor that played very hard for the entire weekend," UMass volleyball coach Bonnie Kenny said.

GEORGIA TECH (15-3, 15-6, 15-11)

In the middle contest of this weekend's tourney, the Maroon and White fell to Georgia Tech in straight sets on Saturday morning. Despite a double-double from Lymarie Llovet, who recorded 15 kills and 10 digs, the Yellow Jackets (8-2) proved too much for the Minutewomen.

"Georgia Tech was good," Kenny said. "They were much more physical than we were."

Hasson turned in yet another solid performance with 15 kills of her own. Freshman Kuulei Kamanao provided nine digs, while Janeen DeMarte added eight digs.

COLORADO STATE (15-2, 15-3, 15-3)

The opening match of the weekend saw the Maroon and White crumble under the massive firepower of fourth-ranked Colorado State. Senior Jenni Drennan and junior Llovet each posted six digs and Hasson scored six kills, but it was far from enough for the dismally outmatched Minutewomen.

UMass was simply the ninth rung in a climb towards a number one ranking for the Rams, who finished the tourney with an 11-1 record and a consecutive home winning streak of 32 games. Leading the way for Colorado State was Courtney Cox, who tallied nine kills in the victory.

"I thought it was an incredible atmosphere to play in," Kenny said. "I was a little disappointed that we couldn't compete better."

Despite finishing their opening games with a record of 3-6, the Minutewomen will attempt to put their woes behind them as they open up their Atlantic 10 conference schedule with two matches this weekend, the opener being at Dayton on Friday night. After that, the Maroon and White will travel to Xavier for a match with the Musketeers on Saturday night.

Minutemen place third in lone home meet; Senior Pieck has strong outing

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Protect home field. It is an age-old sports adage that the Massachusetts men's cross country team very rarely gets an opportunity in which to practice. But on Saturday the Minutemen had the opportunity it had been waiting for, a chance to host a meet.

UMass hosted regional rivals Boston University, Maine, Central Connecticut State and Vermont and in the end placed third out of the five teams competing.

The race saw BU literally ran away from the pack nabbing the first five spots as well as six of the top 10. The most astonishing part of the race was the photo finish that took shape in the battle for first and second place. In the end Jason Borbet and Jochen Dieckfoss tied for first place with a time of 24:08.

BU placed first in the meet with 15 points followed by Maine (59), UMass (71), Vermont (96) and CCSU (169).

The next group of runners, although all were Terriers, were significantly off the pace that was set by Borbet and Dieckfoss. Dan Coval, Frederick Naalsund and Paul Morrice placed third through fifth respectively.

Leading the charge for the Maroon and White was Mike Pieck. The senior finished in seventh place with a time of 24:39.

Also having strong showings were senior Kevin Sumers, who placed 11th with a finishing time of 24:51. The native of Monson was followed by Ryan Corbett, who with a time of 24:58 found himself in 13th place.

Rounding out the pack for the Minutemen were junior Salvatore Nastasi and Brendan Sullivan who placed 19th (25:14) and 21st (25:21).

The Maroon and White will next he in action on Sept. 30 when they travel to the Bronx for the Meet of Champions.

Minutewomen protect home turf with second place finish in meet

By Regan McKendry
Collegian Staff

"You Can't Go Home Again."

The above is a saying that has been used many a time to describe that insatiable longing for a lost past that cannot be revisited.

The words are a bit more basic for the Massachusetts women's cross country team. Their home portion of the schedule ended this past weekend. They can't go home again. Literally.

For Coach Julie LaFreniere and her squad, this is indeed a shame. At their only home race of the season, the Minutewomen earned themselves a solid second place finish behind Boston University.

The Maroon and White were able to tally 56 points, well ahead of third place Maine, who ended with a score of 81, but still some distance behind the victors. When all was said and done, the Terriers had amassed a mere 15 points. Trailing towards the back was Vermont with 101 points and Central Connecticut with a final score of 107.

Again out in front for the Minutewomen was junior sensation Kristin Ciswoski. After a 15th place finish the previous weekend at New Hampshire, Ciswoski ended the race in 9th place overall.

Senior experience played a role in further UMass improvement. Abington native Melissa Henderson was the second member of the Maroon and White to cross the line, finishing in 12th place.

Rounding out the top five for the Minutewomen was a threesome of all ages helping each other throughout the race. First to finish in this group was senior Megan McCormick, breaking the tape in 14th place. Junior Katherine Blais was right behind, concluding the race in 15th place. Rounding out the trio was newcomer Molly Ketschek. After a 17th place finish at UNH, the freshman improved to 16th place overall.

After two solid races, UMass has the next weekend off. The Minutewomen return to action on Sept. 30, when they travel to the Bronx to compete in the Meet of Champions.

Aussie's surprise U.S. in the pool with Thorpe leading way

By Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the first installment in a seven part commentary on Sydney 2000

The games of the XXVII Olympiad are underway in Sydney, and although the marquee names are Marion Jones and Michael Johnson, the host country boasts an athlete whose name screams for inclusion in this list; who may soon become a household name across America.

In fact, when all is said and done, when the triumphs and the defeats have been committed to memory, his name may well be the most unforgettable name of Sydney 2000. The most refreshing aspect is that this athlete is only 17 years old. He's still just a kid, a kid proudly representing his country on the world's biggest stage. A figure larger than life, literally and figurative ly, his name down under is equivalent to Tiger Woods or Michael Jordan.

He embraces the support of his countrymen, exudes confidence and does not shun the spotlight, a true sign that he will not succumb to the pressure. Yet at the same time, he takes it all in stride, remaining unflappable and down to earth. The looming threat of egotism will not appear to tarnish his rising star. And if this weekend's results are any indication, swimmer Ian Thorpe will be the biggest story of the games.

With a pair of stunning, record-breaking performances on Saturday night that earned him two gold medals and thrilled the sellout crowd at the Sydney International Aquatic Center, Australian wonder boy Thorpe won the men's 400-meter freestyle final in three minutes, 40.59 seconds, breaking his own world record of 3:41.33 set in May at the Australian trials in the Olympic pool. Italy's Massimiliano Rosolino won silver (3:43.40), while American Klete Keller took the bronze (3:47.00).

An hour and 20 minutes later, Thorpe returned to the pool to lead the Australian men to gold in the 400-meter freestyle relay (3:13.67), broke another world record set by the U.S. (3:13.11) in 1995 and defeated the American men (3:13.86) for the first time in Olympic history. Brazil took the bronze (3:17.40).

The Australian upset became more notable due in large part to the American men having qualified for the final two seconds ahead of the men from down under. With this in mind there was a supposed bad blood between the two squads.

Before the games began, American Gary Hall, Jr., who anchored the 400-meter relay, was quoted as saying the American swimmers would smash the Australians like "guitars."

Hall and Thorpe went head-to-head on the last leg of the relay and it goes without saying who came out on top. Dubbed "The Thorpedo" by the press and "Thorpey" by his adoring fans, Thorpe again proved he was no fluke on Sunday, and broke yet another record in the 200-meter freestyle preliminaries in a time of 1:46.56.

He set an Olympic record his first time out in the pool on Saturday morning, and qualified for the men's 400-meter freestyle final in three minutes, 44.65 seconds and broke the mark of 3:45.00 set by Yevgeny Sadovyi of the Unified Team (formerly the U.S.S.R.) in 1992.

He may have seemed to come from nowhere, but Thorpe is no flash in the pan. He was primed for greatness at 15; he became the youngest male swimmer in history to hold a world title when he won the 400-meters at the 1998 World Championships.

Thorpe was not the only swimmer to break records on Saturday. In addition, Ukrainian Yana Klochkova set a world and Olympic record in the 400-meter individual medley final with a time of four minutes, 33.59 seconds, passing the 4:34.79 mark set by China's Chen Yan in 1997.

The American women, led by veterans Jenny Thompson, Dara Torres and Amy Van Dyken, took home a gold in the 400-meter freestyle relay, defeated the Netherlands and broke a world record in the process.

The U.S. posted 3:36.61, eclipsing the mark set by the Chinese in 1994 (3:37.91).

Thompson added another gold to her medal count, giving her six golds in relay events in the past three Olympics, surpassing speed skater Bonnie Blair for the most victories by an American woman. Still hungry for that elusive individual gold, Thompson's best shot will come in the 100-meter free-style.

Men's water polo team wins a pair

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Correspondent

Just three days after the new polls showed it climbing up a step on the ladder to the top of the national charts, the No. 15 ranked Massachusetts men's water polo team traveled to Brown University in Providence, RI on Saturday and played brilliantly in victories over Harvard (12-7) and the host Bears (12-4).

The Minutemen (7-2) were led by strong play from senior Brook O'Neill, juniors Adam Moore, J.R. VanderWall, Greg Trayer, Evan Iatz, Carlos Ramos and sophomore Ricardo Puig. Thanks to the effort of those athletes, the Maroon and White beat both No. 14 Harvard and Brown.

In the first game, UMass jumped out to a quick 4-0 lead in the opening quarter, which was just what Coach Russ Yarworth was aiming for.

"We wanted to get the defense jacked up and get the lead early," he said.

UMass dominated the Crimson and had a 10-2 lead after three quarters of action before Harvard picked up five goals against the second unit in the final frame to make the final score a more respectable 12-7.

Moore led the way with three goals and was complimented with a pair of goals by O'Neill, Puig, and Trayer. VanderWall was a force in net, racking up 12 saves for the Minutemen.

The second game pitted UMass against Brown in front of a hostile crowd in the Smith Swim Center. The Minutemen quickly became the hunters, chasing the Bears into a 6-1 hole after the first quarter. UMass kept its momentum and went into halftime with a 9-1 lead, taming the roaring crowd into a deafening silence in the process.

"It was great to quiet that big crowd by halftime with our play," Yarworth said.

The dominance continued after halftime as the Minutemen blanked the Bears for another quarter and scored three more goals, making the score 12-1. The fourth quarter gave Yarworth the opportunity to play some of the underclassmen, but the Bears scored three goals to make it a 12-4 final.

"We were able to get some of the younger kids some experience," Yarworth said. "It was something we did last year and it has certainly paid dividends for this season."

Moore led the team once again with three goals. Ramos and Lutz each scored a pair of goals and VanderWall had eight saves in another solid outing by the men in Maroon and White.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The Massachusetts men's water polo continued to drown the competition this weekend in a pair of wins over Harvard and Brown.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 11 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, September 20, 2000

Swedish thrash band Haunted took time out of their schedule to talk to the Collegian. See what they said in today's arts section.

ARTS p. 6

Brooke Bartlett has been one of the top players for the women's soccer team in the early stages of the season. Learn more about her on the back page.

SPORTS p. 10

Cover-up on Pine Street

"I told him that I wouldn't lie for him."
-Ricky Bellefleur, University carpenter

"I've always, with God as my witness, said it cannot be done on University time...I've done nothing illegal."
-Jim Coopee, Personnel Administrator

Jim Coopee's house, top, where the work in question was allegedly done.

Bill Hebert's time card, right, with possible suspension highlighted.

Sawed in half, the original joist from Coopee's house was put in a dumpster, far right, and later recovered by the Collegian.

PHOTOS BY JARET BARR
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WEEKLY [illegible] 40308 8322 HEBERT WILLIAM F

DATE	WO#	STEP	HRS	WO#	STEP
Sun.	R.D.O.
Mon. 7-31	00-20-01		8.0
Tue. 8-1	S.N.P.HC.		8.0
Wed. 8-2	Jury Duty		8.0
Thur. 8-3	Jury Duty		8.0
Fri. 8-4	Jury Duty		8.0
Sat.	R.D.O.
Employee Signature	Employee Absent?		Approved		Total Hours 40

UMass resource abuse alleged

By Sam Wilkinson and Adam White
Collegian Staff

Two employees of the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant have alleged that maintenance performed July 26 on Personnel Administrator Jim Coopee's residence utilized campus employees, equipment and supplies.

Arthur Warren and Ricky Bellefleur have corroborated allegations by at least two other internal sources that the replacement of a rotted joist in the front porch of Coopee's residence at 449 Pine Street involved substantial labor and material supplied by the Physical Plant. Further accusations have been leveled regarding the alteration of timecards to conceal work done and the subsequent suspension of one employee never being enforced.

The two employees who replaced the joist at the Coopee residence, Bill Hebert and Christopher Thornton, both refused to comment on the allegations. Howard Cleveland, who was Hebert's supervisor, allegedly changed Thornton's timecard after the repairs. He could not be reached for comment.

Coopee himself has denied any knowledge of wrongdoing in the maintenance, contending that he has employed University personnel to make various repairs on his house "for years."

"I've always, with God as my witness, said it cannot be done on University time," Coopee said. "I've done nothing illegal."

According to plant sources, the deteriorated condition of the joist and the suggestion to replace it were brought to Coopee's attention by workers power-washing the house. Coopee verified that he hired UMass employees to rebuild the joist "on their own time."

Hebert reportedly went to Coopee's house, removed the joist and brought it back to the plant. The joist was then handed over to Bellefleur, a carpenter working for the University.

"I didn't know who it belonged to," Bellefleur said. "I was told to make one just like it. Took me six hours before I realized what it was. I dropped it right away."

Bellefleur added that the new joist hadn't been completed when he ceased work on it. He surmised that the joist might have been finished at the job site, but said that he wasn't sure.

According to Warren, a communications dispatcher at the plant, Hebert and Thornton then went back to the worksite to complete the job. It was there that they were photographed by an unidentified individual, after which they returned to the plant.

The photographs in question were unavailable at press time.

"[Hebert] then huddled with Cleveland, who went upstairs and put in one hour of personal time on Chris Thornton's card. What should have happened if he was working off campus is to punch out and punch in again when he came back. The punch card was never touched," Warren said.

Hebert then allegedly ordered another Physical Plant employee, Alan Parker, to cut the original beam in half and throw it away. The joist was cut in half and taken to be thrown out, but was later recovered by plant personnel. The day after Hebert and Thornton were photographed, Bellefleur said that he was taken aside by Hebert and asked to say that he "hadn't seen anything."

"I told him that I wouldn't lie for him," Bellefleur said. According to Bellefleur, there was also a record kept describing the work he did to build the new joist as "a small repair" and the joist as "just being fixed."

"I built a new one," Bellefleur said.

Internal exposure of the incident has led to an investigation by Eric Ness, Assistant Director of Building Maintenance at the Physical Plant, into any possible wrongdoing. Ness' investigation has lasted three weeks to date, during which time he has interviewed 31

Turn to COOPEE, page 3

Orchard Hill is running out of steam

By Patrick D. O'Connor
Collegian Correspondent

This past summer, renovations in the dorms and other areas around campus have taken place. Further work, which is scheduled to begin in the next few months, will disrupt student life in Orchard Hill and Central areas.

Leaky roofs have been repaired or replaced in Thompson Hall, The Fine Arts Center, and Kennedy, Coolidge, Washington, and Melville dormitories. Certain rooms in Kennedy, which were out of service because of leaks, are now reopened. Also, construction on Mary Lion's roof is expected to get underway this summer, said John Findley, associate director for planning and operations.

Other projects, "which may go unnoticed," explained Findley have also been completed. The Physical plant and W.E.B Dubois have been given new fire protection systems; The Gossamer library has gotten ventilation upgrades; and the dorms around campus have gotten rewired.

Resulting from the "Walk for Light" last semester, trees and shrubbery around walkways have been cut back. Additional lights and call boxes have also been set up around campus.

A few projects that were carried over from the summer are to be completed this winter. One such job is an elevator being placed in The Fine Arts Center. "It's expected to be finished in February", said Marty Smith, planning and architecture manager. Also parking lots 64 and 32b have just been completed.

But the major project, which students have to look forward to, is the replacement of steam lines in the Orchard hill area.

"Students will be affected, but we will have provisions set up for them," said Smith.

The steam lines, which are being removed and replaced, run from the Durfy Conservatory up to the Orchard Hill area. The project will get underway in January and will be finished by June.

"It must be finished by June or the money is lost," said Smith.

State Supplemental Funds are being used for the work and they are scheduled to run out by the end of the school year.

Smith explained that the existing steam pipes are on the verge of collapsing. Smith described the pipes, which provide heat and hot water to the Orchard Hill area as, "Old and being corroded from inside and out." He added, "And, if one were to collapse, we would not have any heat in this area."

Already, certain condensate lines have collapsed, causing water to leak into electrical areas. This causes a serious threat to workers, and is another reason why the pipes must be removed immediately.

"For all the stuff we have above ground, we have as much or more below," says Smith. "These things must be attended to."

The Planning and development department is working in conjunction with the Landscaping department on this project. The workers will try to avoid as much damage as possible to Durfy Gardens, said Smith. "Trees will have to be removed," she explained, "but new ones will be replaced."

As for the students, Smith said "Students can expect back hoes, earth movers and dump trucks in the Orchard hill and Central area."

The work will run from 7 a.m. till 5 p.m. on weekdays. Marty Smith warned students, "Be careful, if there is fence up don't ignore it. And if you here a beeping sound that means a big truck is backing up."

Cevallos considering leaving University

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Javier Cevallos, the current interim Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs at the University of Massachusetts is a finalist for the position of First Campus Life Dean at Emory College.

Emory began looking for a replacement for Frances Lucas-Tauchar, the former Campus Life Dean, when he left to become president of Millsaps College in Mississippi in June. The college, a private school located about 15 minutes from downtown Atlanta, was founded with Methodist ideals in mind and has a total enrollment of about 11,300 students.

Following a selection process, the board at Emory College narrowed the selection of candidates down to four finalists; these finalists were then required to have an open question and answer session with faculty, staff and students. Cevallos explained that a friend suggested that he submit his name for the position, and he was simply interested in looking at new possibilities.

"I have been here for 16 years and I am very happy here," he said. "I just think that it is a good idea to look around and keep my options open."

During the question and answer session at Cevallos's meeting, he discussed issues of student life on campus, student conduct, health services, resident life, and dining at Emory. He also discussed issues surrounding the UMass campus at large.

Cevallos explained to the audience that he felt that his biggest blunder at the University was in allowing the beer-per-student limit to move from 24 to 30 cans. He commented to the Emory Wheel, the campus's publication, that he should have discussed the decision with other administrators before making the decision.

"I almost lost my job over a six-pack," Cevallos said in a statement to the press.

An employee at the University for 16 years, Cevallos has held a number of positions on campus since he arrived here in 1984. He has been a professor in the department of Spanish, and in the past a chair in the department of Spanish and Portuguese. Also, he served as Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs at UMass for the past two years.

Receiving a BA from the University of Puerto Rico and a PhD in Spanish at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Cevallos went on to author four books and more than 35 scholarly articles and chapters.

He was the recipient of a Lily Teaching Fellowship in 1987 and served as an American Council on Education Fellow at Wesleyan University.

The final decision has not been made in regards to filling the position, but the results are anticipated in the next few weeks.

"I think that it is very premature now," Cevallos said. "For the moment, I am staying at UMass."

Presidential polls cause much confusion

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Correspondent

With less than seven weeks left until the presidential electoral votes are cast, the question remains "who is going to come out on top?"

A tight race and constantly shifting electoral polls have made determining the outcome nearly impossible. With the race so closely tied to electoral polls, it leaves room for questioning the accuracy of the information being presented.

In recent polls, such as one done by the Wall Street Journal (Sept. 17) Republican nominee George W. Bush and Democratic nominee Al Gore were virtually even, while a Newsweek survey put out the week-end of Sept. 10 gave Gore an eight-point lead.

"You have to be very careful with what pole you're looking at," Jeffery Sedgwick, Political Science professor said, "whether your dealing with state run polls, young adults, likely voters and so on."

Questions have also arisen regarding Gore's overall lead in state electoral votes. With most of the major states like California, Florida and Texas considered decided, it leaves time to focus on some of the smaller but still undecided states. It is thought by many that these smaller states will decide the outcome of the election.

"Generally you want to pay more attention to the state-to-state electoral races. How they're doing state-to-state is of more importance, but you need to be careful of the technical aspects. Polls are telling you extremely volatile information especially with candidates moving around so frequently," said Sedgwick. "Every other poll is different and it's hard to tell what's going on because they're bouncing around so much."

Gore has moved his way up to the front running position according to a recent poll done, Sept. 18 in USA Today. Again though, this poll is contradictory to a poll presented the same day done on voter.com, which reported that Bush was back in the lead.

With so many misconceptions, the idea of knowing the full accuracy of any one poll is nearly impossible. So much focus on daily polls raises the question of what's really important: a poll of who's leading in electoral votes or the points and ideas of the two candidates?

"American citizens are interested in the candidate and what they have to say, not the analytical polls. I think people look to the polls because the media is constantly shoving them in our faces," said Political Science professor Laura Jensen.

Sedgwick agreed, "I think in the last year the polls have become the issue and not the issues being presented. The Media is taking these polls, running the polls and treating them like they're news."

Amherst smolders over fire issues

By Jason Trenkle and Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

In fact Today's private, closed meeting at the Amherst Town Hall, officials declared that the individual responsible for the dumpster fires at the Townhouse Apartment complex last week would be prosecuted for arson under the fullest extent of the Massachusetts law.

According to Police, there have been numerous disturbances involving fires around the student apartments in the last three weeks. These incidents have raised concern for safety.

Ryan Strong, a junior UMass student, reported to police at approximately 1 a.m. Sept. 9 that nearly 500 people were getting riotous in the parking lot of the Townhouse apartments and destroying property.

They were a bunch of drunk idiots," said Strong referring to the crowd. In addition to the dumpster fire, several lampposts were pulled from the car was flipped over and several were damaged, according to police.

A dumpster fire burned uncontrolled at the Townhouse Apartments because the fire department was called to another dumpster fire at Puffton Village and witnesses complained that the police did not respond quickly enough to the disturbances in the Townhouses last weekend.

"The fire patrol didn't do anything when I called," Strong said. "It took over 25 minutes for them to show up."

Town Manager Barry Del Castilho commented on the availability of the fire department and ambulances and their ability to respond to numerous calls.

"They may not sound serious, but the fire chief explained that the fire department runs both fire responses and ambulance service and when the fire department is tied up, there's possibly not an ambulance available so we could have serious consequences beyond any damage to the dumpsters," Del Castilho said.

However, according to Del Castilho, once the police and fire departments arrived at the scene, they couldn't get to the fire because more than 500 people were blocking the fire truck and ambulance.

Wanda Benoit, a security tenet for the Townhouses was witness to the incident last weekend. Benoit declined to comment on the incident, but expressed frustration over dealing with students.

"I'll tell you one thing," said Benoit, "these students have no respect."

Larry Farber, attorney representing the Townhouse landlords, said a more immediate concern of his clients was that during the incident people were destroying light pools, posing the immediate danger of electrocution.

"If that five wire had touched anybody, they would have been dead," Farber said. "We are concerned of people dying from this. The landlords are concerned of not wanting people to get hurt and die on their property."

At the meeting Friday, officials discussed what steps should be taken to thwart dumpster fires from occurring in the future. Some possible solutions included emptying the dumpsters before weekends, wetting down the dumpsters and the possibility of switching to trash compactors.

As to why students weren't allowed into the meeting, Farber said there was discussion by officials as to how enforcement would be instituted that was of little concern to students.

"I don't want to tip off people to understanding how they can get around policies and procedures we're instituting to address the problem," Farber said. "We believe that there's a good chance they're alcohol related."

Farber said any students at the meeting would have posed a threat to their discussion.

"I honored the request of the person who requested the meeting and he felt that having such large numbers would possibly hinder the free exchange of ideas."

A $5,000 dollar reward is being offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the individuals responsible for the incidents.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hitting the books

Junior Christen De Haas, a communications major, takes a book down from the library shelf yesterday afternoon

Prominent Harvard prof cancels course

By Lisa B. Schwartz
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. – Harvard University students hoping to enroll in the always popular Afro-American Studies 10 Introduction to Afro-American Studies – arrived at Lowell Lecture Hall Monday to find that it would not be offered this semester.

The course ordinarily taught by Fletcher University Professor Cornel West '74 was cancelled because West has taken a one-year leave of absence for medical and personal reasons.

But the change was not included in the Courses of Instruction supplement handed out to students at registration. Arlene Becella, the registrar, said that her office was "informed quite late about the cancellation and it was after the supplement had already gone to press."

The registrar's office posted the news of the cancellation on its Web site www.registrar.fas.harvard.edu.

There was no sign or notice posted outside the classroom, however, to inform students that the course nicknamed "Af-Am 10," would not be offered this semester.

The class was packed, and we were all sitting around waiting," said Kristen H. Day '01. "We didn't know what was going on."

The course usually enjoys widespread popularity. Last year, 314 students were enrolled in the class. Becella said

Becella said this type of cancellation is highly unusual.

"I have been here four years and this is the first time it has happened," she said.

Professor of Afro-American Studies and of Philosophy K. Anthony Appiah, who is the head tutor for the Afro-American studies department, said "the news was too late to organize the class for this semester, but we will make sure that it is taught next semester."

Appiah said that although the department has not decided who will be teaching the class in the spring, it will most likely be led collectively by several professors. Specific plans for the course will be discussed at the next meeting of department Faculty Sept. 26.

Seniors who were hoping to take the class with West said they were disappointed to hear that he will not be teaching the class this year.

"I was interested in the subject matter, but I was very excited about hearing Professor West lecture," said Royd Chung '01, one of the students who waited outside Lowell Lecture Hall Monday. "I heard that he really makes the class."

Day said she was also upset to hear that she would not be able to take the class with West.

"Professor West was definitely a big attraction to the class, and I am not sure if I will be able to take it next semester," she said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as the Index and became the College Signal in 1901, the Bradley Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1993. For advertising rates and information, call 413/545-3500, or fax 413/545-1592. Circulation is 20,000.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bonharrs Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schabe Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photographer Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Hamel Kirchner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Mazurowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Semanski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiulo Assistant Business Manager
Kate Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

CONGRATULATAIONS!

The Department of Biochemistry & Molecular Biology wishes to acknowledge the following students who were named to the Deans List- Spring, 2000. There were 419 honorees in Arts and Sciences -Natural Sciences and Mathematics -54 from Biochemisty and Molecular Biology!

ABERNETHY, Abraham D. 02 | FRIMPONG, Thomas 24 | MONIZ, RAYMOND J. 00
ANDREWS, Paul S. 02 | GABRIEL, Luke R. 02 | MOSSACK, KARIN E. 00
ANDRIOTAKIS, Manos S. 02 | GUDDEN, Emily J. 02 | O'DONNELL, CAROLYN M. 24
ARSENAULT, Danielle A. 24 | GORCZYCA, David A. 24 | OKUDA, HAJIME 00
BARTON, Kristy M. 24 | HALEY, Benjamin J. 02 | POLUMBO, KIMBERLY M. 01
BERQUIST, Brian R. 02 | HORAK, Helen M. 02 | PONG, WINNIE W. 02
BOWEN, Christopher D. 01 | KAELE, Binta 02 | QUYNH, ANNH G. 00
BURKE, Emily G. 02 | KITTOCK, Adam R. 24 | SANDHU, KULMEET K. 01
CABRERA, Michelle M. 02 | KING, Kristy M. 02 | SEARS, COURTNEY A. 00
CLARKE, Deanna L. 24 | LEVIN, Ilene 24 | SEELIG, ARTHUR W. 02
CORCORAN, Erin J. 24 | LEWIS, Matthew W. 02 | SMITKINSON, MARGERY G. 24
DANIELS, Robert D. 00 | LING, Hau Chung L. 02 | TERRELL, REBEKAH M. 01
DAVIS, Sarah M. 02 | LOWANG, Emilee A. 24 | TERRY, MARIE A. 01
DECOURCY, Patrick R. 24 | MACQUARRIE, Kelly L. 24 | TURAGA, DIWAKAR 01
DELL, Kolstin N. 24 | MATTHEW, Sheela L. 02 | VENSON, JULIA M. 00
DISTEFANO, Thomas M. 24 | MEWA, Mohammed 24 | WANG, JOANN 02
EARTELL, Jeremiah D. 24 | MCKEEN, Mark J. 24 | WARD, JOY E. 02
FRIEDMAN, Michael L. 24 | MCLARY, S. Christine PG | WHITIN, ANTHONY R. 01

INDIBATH HONORS

He who testifies to these things says, "Yes, I am coming soon"
Revelation 22.20

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH

35 North Main St, Florence, MA. Phone: (413) 586-3365

Bible Study 10:00 am
Worship Service 11:20 am - Saturdays

For directions, pastoral assistance or information during week days call 256-0368 or send a message to NSDAC@yahoo.com

Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

This space could be yours!
If you have a buisness in Amherst, Northampton, Hadley, Sunderland, or nationally, advertising in the Collegian can help you reach 17,000 students daily. For more information, call 545-3500 between 9:00 AM and 3:30 PM.

Awwwww

Kitten Mr. Bojangles enjoys a special visit on the UMass campus yesterday afternoon.

Two students assaulted on walk home

By David Osborne
Daily Egyptian (Southern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) CARBONDALE, Ill. – A sudden, vicious attack turned a quiet walk home into a trip to the hospital for two Southern Illinois University Carbondale students in the wee hours of Friday morning.

Kevin M. Gleeson and Matthew W. Burke were walking home from a friend's house between 1:30 and 2:00 a.m. Friday when they were attacked by three men wielding a baseball bat and rocks.

The attack took place by the railroad tracks near Sidetracks, 101 W. College St. Gleeson, a junior in physical education from Schaumburg, required 20 stitches to close lacerations to his face and head. Burke, an undecided sophomore from Schaumburg, suffered a lacerated lip and had two teeth knocked out.

Gleeson said they didn't know their attackers, and the pair had no idea what precipitated the attack.

"They just came up," Gleeson said. "Maybe they were drunk."

Gleeson said the trio began shouting obscenities and calling them names immediately before the attack.

The attackers began swinging the baseball bat and throwing rocks. Then, as swiftly and mysteriously as the attack began, it ended. Gleeson had no idea what may caused the attackers to suddenly flee.

"They just took off running," Gleeson said.

Gleeson and Burke walked back to their friend's house on East Hester Street to get a ride to the hospital. The police were contacted from the hospital.

Don Elliott, community resource officer for the Carbondale Police Department, said police have no suspects, and are continuing to investigate the incident.

■ Coopee

continued from page 1

people in preparation for a summary report that he will then submit to the University's Human Resources department. Ness said that while no official action has been taken as of yet, his research has uncovered both a history of such violations and a demand for justice from employees within the plant.

"Their long history at the plant has been one of similar situations of abuse going on for years, with nothing being done about it," Ness said. "But this kind of investigation has not involved a supervisor in a long time. If a supervisor is knowingly misusing state resources, that is a substantial situation."

Sources within the Physical plant contend that Hebert was to receive an immediate one-week suspension, which records indicate ended up being downgraded to a paid one-day suspension. Hebert has insisted that he has not been suspended in any way. His timecard for the week in question is marked "S.N.P." for the date of August 1 with the initials "HC" beside it. It is believed that S.N.P. corresponds to "Suspended, No Pay" and that the initials are Cleveland's, yet the card still indicates eight paid hours on that date.

The record also designates that Hebert had jury duty for the remainder of the week.

There has been no recourse visited upon Coopee, despite the fact that he didn't have a permit for the work to be done in the first place.

Bill Start, Amherst's Building Commissioner, said that any sort of work done on Coopee's house would have required a permit, adding that some people simply aren't aware of the need to obtain such authorization. No, tax would have been required on the work unless it had increased the value of the house.

Coopee, whose salary is $97,410 per year, said that he has known about the investigation but that he hasn't been contacted yet by anyone in regards to it. He acknowledged that the main areas of concern were whether the work was done on University time and where the materials used were obtained.

He said that he was at work when the maintenance was performed, so he wasn't sure if it those involved were on their own time or not. As for the materials, he said, "Honest to God, I don't know where the materials came from."

"I always said it should be done on their own time. He'd have to be a god damn fool to ... " he said, trailing off. He then commented on the relatively high traffic on Pine Street and added that he'd hate to be a jackass to tell someone to go work on my house at lunch time.

"But Bill's [Hebert] a smarter guy than that," he said.

University officials presented with a similar but hypothetical situation gave varying responses as to how it would be handled.

John Cunningham, the Deputy Provost of Academic Affairs, said, "If an employee has engaged in misconduct ... it's the supervisor who has to contact the correct vice chancellor in this case being Cora Marrett. If it's abuse of hundreds of thousands of dollars, we would expect legal recourse."

Nicholas Marshall, the Labor Relations Administrator, suggested that if University materials were being used, it could be an issue for the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

"If individuals are using University property for personal use, they should be disciplined appropriately," Marshall said. "Of course, accusations like these can be proven untrue after investigation."

Jason Trenkle and Adam Martignetti contributed to this article.

Hi-tech ND clubs bust IDs

By Jeff Achen
Dakota Student (U. North Dakota)

(U-WIRE) GRAND FORKS, N.D. – Underage drinking has concerned law enforcement officials and local, state and federal governments for years. Various steps have been taken to combat the problem of people under the legal drinking age obtaining alcohol, but most initiatives seem to have been taken from only one side. Only recently has there been a notable effort on the part of some North Dakota nightclub owners.

The problem has plagued nightclubs and businesses in many cities across the country, but a miner in the Grand Forks or Fargo area may find that the problem has seen little attention by those nightclubs with liquor licenses. That is until they visit Borrowed Bucks Road House.

Borrowed Bucks Road House is known for its strict enforcement of the drinking age laws. Its doormen and servers diligently check the IDs of anyone who looks like they may be close to the legal drinking age.

The owners, TMA Hospitality, have now instituted a new ID check system that may soon be seen in all of its nightclubs and perhaps may be picked up by other businesses as well.

"We wanted to be the leaders in this area," Kelly Lancaster Borrowed Bucks's Fargo general manager said. "Basically we're being proactive about not serving minors."

Borrowed Bucks nightclub in Fargo is one of the first to put to use an ID scanner which scans the magnetic strip or bar code on most any state driver's license. It can tell if the card is valid and if the person is underage.

TMA Hospitality owns eight nightclubs. Three of the nightclubs are in large Borrowed Bucks. The Rock and Old Broadway. TMA Hospitality also owns Borrowed Bucks in Grand Forks, which means that once the owners are satisfied with the system they may be installing it in Grand Forks.

"Ideally, we would like to have it in Grand Forks by the first of the year," Lancaster said. "We would like to have it there in December, so their employees can be used to it and have it there for New Year's Eve, not that that's the only night we're pinpointing."

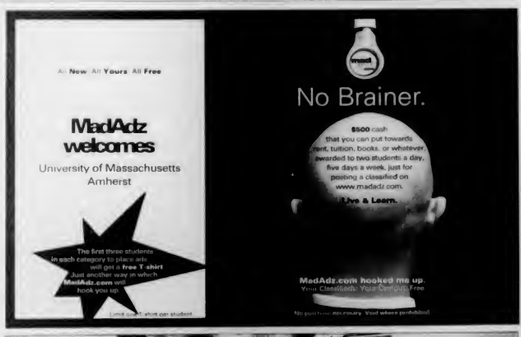
The system's most valuable feature for the managers will be the ability to share information. Managers will be able to input information on people they may have asked to leave the club for a given number of days or specify the reasons for having asked a person to leave the club in the past, such as fighting. This information will be shared by managers in close proximity to each other such as the clubs in the Fargo and Grand Forks area.

"In a sense we will call it a negative database," Lancaster said.

That's really one of the biggest concepts behind this.

The machines used to swipe the ID cards cost roughly $3,000 each. Currently TMA Hospitality is testing the use of the machines in two of its nightclubs, one in Fargo and one in Cedar Rapids. The testing is having a share of problems but Lancaster is optimistic about having the system up and running.

"Every time we think that we're getting to that point of having it right where we want it, there's some kind of little thing that comes up, although we haven't had any major problems with it," Lancaster said. "Every one of the clubs we hope has one going into the new year."



All New. All Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a Free T-shirt
Just another way in which MadAdz.com will kiss you up.
Limit one ad per student
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds. Your Own Site. Free.
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

confidence, pride,
[grit]
and plenty of time to shower before calculus.
In Army ROTC, you'll get to do some pretty challenging stuff. Stuff that builds character and discipline. Not to mention muscles. You'll also learn how to think on your feet and be a good leader. Talk to your Army ROTC advisor to find out more. And get ready to sweat a little.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.
(413) 545-2321

DRIVERS

Would you like to make $$$$$$$$MONEY$$$$$$$$
and have all your work done BEFORE Breakfast?
Have a car & Have Tuesday & Thursday from 7:30-9:30 am free? ..then come join the UMASS Daily Collegian Team as a delivery driver.
OR
Would you like to make money on your lunch break? If you have a pick-up truck & have just an hour free from 11 am to 1pm Monday through Friday ...then join the Collegian Team by picking up extra papers and driving them to Recycling (both are on campus locations).

If you are interested, please contact Shawn Ilinitch at the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus center, room 113, by phone 545-3500, or call Charlie Jacco at 256-8012.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Coopee uncovered:
dealing with scandal

It is the hope of the Collegian that anyone reading the editorial / opinion page of today's paper has already taken note of the sizeable fraud and abuse scandal broken on page one. We hope that you have read carefully through the evidence presented, and that you have come to your own conclusions as to the severity of the situation.

With that in mind, we hope you take a moment of time to consider just how significant this situation is and how much effort and perseverance it took to break this story. It is obviously not the duty of this newspaper to judge whether or not James Coopee knowingly exploited University funds, equipment or personnel for his own personal gain. It is, however, our responsibility to present the facts surrounding the incident and, in a forum such as this column, put these facts into context in terms of what they mean to our various readers.

No less than four employees of the UMass Physical Plant have verified to this publication, both on and off the record, that abuse of University resources did in fact take place in collaboration with repairs on Coopee's house. We currently have in our possession the rotted joist that was removed from under Coopee's porch, a joist that has been sawed in half in a move that further corroborates allegations that Plant personnel were ordered to destroy evidence of the repair. We have obtained copies of the pay slips of Plant employees accused of participating in these repairs, and they too support the theory that efforts were made to cover up the incident.

Of course, it would be irresponsible for the University's predominant news publication to foster an unfounded conspiracy on campus; we feel that in this case the evidence speaks for itself. Attempted destruction of that evidence, if it did indeed take place, seems as much a confession of guilt as anyone could possibly need. It could be argued that two of the incident's key participants, namely William Hebert and Chris Thornton, have implicated themselves through their silence on the issue.

Coopee himself was more than cooperative in his willingness to speak on the issue, yet hid behind a rather Ronald Reaganesque defense of plausible deniability ("I cannot tell you it was done on University time; I cannot tell you it wasn't…") even as he outlined several past incidents of Plant personnel "moonlighting," or doing extraneous jobs, at his residence on Pine Street in Amherst. The Personnel Administrator has insisted that nothing illegal has taken place in conjunction with that work.

Regardless of whether or not Coopee possessed knowledge of illegal activity occurring while his house was being repaired, strong evidence still exists that University funds and resources were abused to better the residence of one individual working for UMass. That alone should be enough to enrage not only students and faculty but also the taxpayers of this state. If our money has indeed been channeled away from the University's interests and toward those of one somewhat powerful figure within in this one incident, imagine how much abuse of this nature goes unchecked.

If not for the concern and integrity of the two employees of the Physical Plant who did come forward, this story would more than likely never have seen the light of day, in spite of a supposed "investigation" conducted by the Plant itself. That alone should serve as a wakeup call to both the school and the public: we need to better monitor exactly where and how funds are being used.

American Psycho

RYAN BENHARRIS

It is insanely obvious that everything Eminem says is right. "Hate fags? Answer's yes." "You think I won't choke no whore till her vocal chords in her throat don't work no more?" Words put together to make beautiful symmetrical poetry.

What the world really needs is more highly regarded officials telling it like it is. We need more interruption of the youth of America that screws up people who are already so incredibly deranged that they spew pea soup from pierced tongues in the revolving heads that sit on top of their trench coat covered bodies. Oh thank you Slim! Thank you for being the savior in a society that truly needed help.

Okay, so before you accuse me of being the bastard child of Pat Buchanan, I'll stop. I could barely write that without fearing for my life. In reality, I think Eminem is a complicated, confused and dangerous person who traveled further in a culture that can usually defeat its villains with relative ease.

Think about it. We hated Ice-T for talking about killing cops, and he disappeared from the scene. We despised Michael Jackson for molesting children, and trying to rationalize it his album History. Consequently, Jackson hasn't been seen in years. Amidst feud after feud, Tupac and Notorious B.I.G. finally saw the tragic reality in fighting. Somehow Eminem persistently stuck around. He has mingled in all sorts of trouble like the previously mentioned stars, but no one has been able to get in his way.

What if really important people did take after Eminem and his psychotic ideology? A perfect world to Eminem would be one with insane situations that make people look like complete imbeciles.

Could you imagine one of our Commander in Chief's advisors saying, "President Clinton is fed up with your shit and is going to kill you?" Instead of Charles Barkley demanding that he's not a role model, he could just flip everyone the middle finger and use a four-letter cuss that rhymes with "puck." When children want to rebel against their parents, they should say, "Bend over and take it like a slut, mom."

When men have marital difficulties, they should beat, rape and kill their wives to prove how great masculinity actually is. Most importantly, teach teenage boys to make light of tragedies, hurt people who are, by definition weaker than us, especially women. But you're just kidding, right Slim?

The first thing to realize is that Eminem is nothing more than a common enemy. He's no different than Darth Vader, Freddy Krueger or that guy with the big mustache, tight bulging jeans and enticing smile in the "don't do drugs" video we all watched in fourth grade. Eminem has been sent here to infiltrate our ways of life and manners of thinking. Not only has he annoyingly stood up to this challenge, but he's proven to be pretty good at it too.

Instead of firing out anti-everything statements, and waiting for the repercussions, Eminem covers his ground. He defends himself by saying, "A lot of people think that what I say on a record or what I talk about on a record that I actually do in real life or that I believe in it." He wants his fans and especially his critics to think that he doesn't mean what he says. He wants us to think that he stabs at people simply to get a reaction.

In reality, this is a cop-out that has fooled too many people. When you think about it, everything that he says is written perfectly to fit this defense. "You people act like you've never seen a white person before." "You knew I won't sign your autograph, you can call me an asshole. I'm glad." All of this is simply his way of trying to make us feel guilty for criticizing him. He has the given right to say what he wants, but then tries to justify his idea that critics have no right to be unhappy about it.

As a critic, Eminem puts me in a very weird position. It seems like every review of his new album, The Marshall Matthers LP has been similar. Everyone says that the music on the album is wonderful, while the lyrics are a pitiful embarrassment on American humanity. I certainly agree that he has every right to say whatever the hell he wants, but I certainly do not agree with what he is saying. As he constantly complains that every critic in the world is imposing upon his American right to free speech, he uses his right to stand on a platform, and deliver terrible misogynist messages.

Worst of all, his messages are being accepted into a world of teenage angst that truly has lost the ability to tell right from wrong. As Eminem spends all of his time calling people who believe what he says, "retards" and "faggots," fifteen-year old teenagers (and by teenagers, I mean teenage boys) are throwing their middle fingers in the air everywhere, and saying, "Hate fags? Answer's yes." Some how, I don't think that these teenagers get the "joke" that Eminem tries to present with this line to an adult audience.

Perhaps the reason that they don't understand the joke is because there is no joke. Maybe it's really not that funny. Maybe everything Eminem has to say is not right. Maybe critics of the world will grow a set of brass ones, and stand up to the man who has been pushing them around for the past year. We don't have to fall for Eminem's tricky attempts to confuse the public. The reality is that he is really too scared to be racist, sexist and homophobic without trying to justify himself as joking. Every time Eminem is accused of anything, he is able to talk his way out of it.

He needs to be talked back into it. We need to be able to hear what he has to say, without hiding behind Dr. Dre, and everyone else who feeds him lines to defend himself. If we could just put the real Marshal Matthers on trial in front of his adoring audience, it's quite possible that they could all realize how hazardous his words really are. Maybe they'll stop idolizing someone so malicious and fake.

Instead of being pressured into the perfect world that Eminem envisions, we could allow him to speak his mind, challenge him, and watch him lose pitifully. Unfortunately, no one has put up a good fight, and we're letting this horrible person win. Conceivably, if time has told us anything, someday people will realize one thing. You're a bad, bad man Marshal.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

Honor Guard

JASON TOCCI

Last semester, I attended a "Sophomore Recognition Ceremony." I'd been invited by a certain national honor society, and the ceremony basically turned out to be an advertisement for that society, complete with refreshments, speeches, and a little video presentation. The speakers went on at length about fellowship, giving back to the community, and "fun." This was all fine and dandy, but I still felt that something was missing. Something action-packed and exciting.

Like many of the people in that room, I'm sure, I grew up feeling like part of my life had already been planned out. I would graduate high school, go to college, join whatever I could that would look good on a résumé, and go get a job. I received pamphlets in the mail inviting me to join the army, the navy, and the marines, but I would always just toss them in the garbage. Sure, I'd love to become part of an unstoppable fighting force - who wouldn't like to be the ultimate human weapon? But that was never part of the plan.

Turning these thoughts around in my head after the ceremony, I realized what I really needed. I want something different in an honor society. I need it to appeal to another side of me. I want to find an honor society that is also an elite cadre of fighters. You want to talk to me about "fun"? Send me into battle against a two hundred pound, armed sociopath, or set me up against a small clan of ninjas. Now that's excitement. I'll join any society that promises to turn me into a killing machine, provided that I can get in based on my GPA and not on any innate physical prowess, as I have none of the latter. Let's face it: if I'm an honors student now, don't you think I got beat up a lot as a kid? If my honor society taught me to be a gung-ho super soldier, I could finally fulfill all those pre-adolescent fantasies and kick some ass.

As long as my honor society is helping fulfill pre-adolescent fantasies, I say it should appeal to the comic book reading kid within me and offer me super powers. Promise to unlock my hidden mutant abilities. Tell me the innocents of the world desperately need me to help combat the forces of evil. Convince me I can turn my body into steel, shoot laser beams from my eyes, crush my enemies with the force of my mind alone, all because I got decent grades last semester.

Perhaps, though, not all students would jump at the chance to destroy their foes with impunity. Or perhaps some students simply have a warmer grip on reality than I have. Whatever the case, an honor society can still appeal to both those of an adventurous nature and those who want recognition for their intellect. The society could simply make its members' feel and sound like the most hyper intelligent human beings on the face of the planet. All it would need is a convincing slogan: "Who can foil dangerous Criminal Masterminds and their Infernal Plots? … You can. Join the Golden Key National Honor Society."

I see many possibilities with this approach to honor society recruitment, like in naming such societies. Even if a society said nothing of super powers or mastery of fighting skills, I think I wouldn't hesitate to join a society called "The Avengers," "Justice League of America," or "X-Men." These names bring images of power and grandeur, and best of all, they sound really bad-ass.

Code names for members would be a must, of course. When I shake the hand of the honor society's president, I don't want him to be some undergraduate in a neck-tie and glasses named "Michael" or "William." I want to be greeted by the world's most powerful psychic, who goes by the name "Mindkill," or by a seven-foot tall commando named "Deathgrip." I'd need a name too, but I'd have to insist on not reusing any of the nicknames inherited in my youth. "Wussy" and "Punching Bag" simply won't inspire fear into the hearts of evildoers.

It would be an added bonus if an honor society offered rides on its supersonic stealth jet, or access to any other such equipment. New members could get unbreakable shields that return to their owners when thrown. The society's logo could be emblazoned on the front. Personally, I've always wanted to show up to class in a giant robot like the ones in "Voltron." I'd lock it to the bike rack.

Now tell me all of that wouldn't look good on a résumé.

I don't know if I'll ever see my ideal honor society, but I'll certainly keep my eyes open. I want to give back to my community as much as the next socially conscious honors student, but I prefer to do it by dishing out two-fisted justice.

Jason Tocci is a UMass student.

Write for Ed/Op!

Labor of Love

ANNA FAKTOROVITCH

This summer I finished, as far as anything can be finished, a short "unique" story. Just for the record, I love writing. With all its troubles in mind, it is still the most wonderful career I can think of. An author writes when he or she wants to, and gets to create something that didn't exist before. And, I can't make the decision to become a writer myself. I need you! Yes, you the reader, to help me decide between affirming or deleting writing from my list of possible things to do for the rest of my life. Sorry, about laying this burden on you. But, my way of deciding this type of things is to write "yes" on one piece of paper, and "no" on another piece of paper, and choose one with closed eyes.

I began writing for the Collegian, because, it seemed like something I should try while I'm in college. Thanks to your, the readers', responses, support and notice of my articles, at the beginning of this summer I decided to write a - novel. Not very long. but two hundred pages seemed like an appropriate length for my first novella. I figured I'd have enough time to finish it. I even made a schedule, which seemed realistic, at the time. According to it, I'd write about ten pages per day. Since, I had two months I was supposed to have plenty of time to proofread the work.

It was going to be about the struggles of a person moving from Russia to America. And finding that no matter where I live, I'm still a shlameal.

But, it wasn't meant to be. And, reality hit me over the head with its might and fury. The main barrier reality offered was working for Fleet bank. I spent weekdays in the Cambridge branch. Several customers expressed their anger with the bank in physical violence towards my colleagues and me. Others started chain riots. And, customers found it amusing to strip in the bank or relieve themselves in the managers' office. With all this excitement to deal with, I found myself coming home at night so exhausted that writing became an impossible dream. During the weekends, instead of writing, I tried to meditate and do other rituals to get myself into a positively stable mind frame.

While, I was in a yoga position, listening to classical meditative music I was suddenly struck with an idea. Those damned customers were killing my inspiration. They were sucking the creativity out of me. But, you see, I needed the money and the credits. So, I couldn't just quit.

As I was attempting to survive Fleet bank, I was hosting a friend in my house. She came over for a visit from New York City. She finished and was in the process of writing several scripts for movies. Seeing her success and her desire to succeed inspired me to write more vigorously. And, I finished about fifteen pages of the novel in the first month.

The first fifteen pages were good material. And I even got a few customers who ordered the book, still in progress. I hope that if you read those few pages, you'd be among them. But, at that point I assumed that all I could realistically finish before the end of the summer was a short story. It would have probably been quite a snack for you. But, I hope you'll be delighted to find that I did finish the short story. And in it I condensed all the heartache and struggles of this summer along with a great idea.

I wouldn't believe it until I tried it myself, but, the process of inspiring oneself to write takes a great deal of work. And the worst part is, it doesn't take time for all that work to pay of. Instead it takes luck. I couldn't believe all the aggravation I was going through. And I kept hoping that an apple from the sky or something would hit me over the head and the idea would just come to me. And in the end, I got the bulk of the idea for this story by one day waking up, looking out the window and seeing a red GTO in the outside. But, that wasn't the end of it. It took me an equal, if not greater, amount of time to take an idea out of my head and make it into something presentable to you, the readers.

And out of the previously listed inner misadventures a story, called The Drop of Inspiration, was born. It is about the irritable chubby Muse, who becomes sick of inspiring geniuses. To escape her job, she comes down to earth to inspire a simple bellow average being boy. They hit it of together. The ending is the only ending that could have happened with this unlikely couple.

I tried to fill this story with bizarre, unique and controversial characters. I'd love to hear your feedback on them in particular. The only way I'll ever get better is to hear your criticism – the good along with the bad. I tried to make the story relevant to your lives and interesting in its originality. If something in it isn't working for the readers I need to know about it to fix it. Please be sparing though. This is the first story I'm presenting to the public. I'm also a student, just like you, so don't be too harsh. I won't give up after this first short story and I'll try my hardest to improve my writing. If it keeps progressing, you might even be able to say you were among the first to read a story by Anna Faktorovich. Only time will tell.

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian Columnist.

Lost in the mix

MELISSA HAMMEL

Frankly, I am sick of the Presidential elections. I am sick of the candidates, of the issues and of the entire process at large. Granted the elections are far from getting underway yet, but it seems to be getting harder and harder to get a feel for the candidates.

Statistics claim that the younger generation is the least likely to vote in this election, and it is not difficult to assess why that would be true. This election seems more than others, to be consumerism at its finest. Except this time around the candidates are salesmen and the public at large is the buyer.

Maybe I just can't relate to either candidate. Raised in a middle class family my main concerns were buying clothes, food and other essentials. I attended a public high school. Neither Al Gore nor George W. Bush would have an idea what it is like to be an average American citizen. Both sons of career politicians, Gore spent his formative years attending a private boys' school in Washington D.C. while George W. toasted through adolescence at Andover Prep school. I doubt that either candidate learned the value of money never mind experienced what it would be like to go though life like the masses that both hope to represent. In most of his many interviews with the press, Bush was unable to quote even the price of a loaf of bread these days; one can only assume that it is because he has never done any actual grocery shopping for himself.

When both candidates went to college it was by legacy the entire way through, once again a measure likely limited by their political parental figures and not marked by hard work and dedication.

Dedication and the ability to stick with decisions seem to be traits that both Bush and Gore seem to lack. Both candidates who served in the Vietnam War managed to shirk their duties in a variety of ways.

While Gore asked for an early discharge from service to attend school, logging in under a full month of active duty. Bush was said to have literally disappeared from service for an entire year without penalty. Previous to that, many speculate that he literally got into the National Guard with political connections, managed to skip officer candidate school without any qualifications and was never forced to go to combat.

As consumers, the candidates leave us to wonder if past deeds are any indication of future choices and decisions. If these two men cannot defend our country during Vietnam, who is to say that they can represent our country during peacetime? Or, for that matter, represent us at all?

While Bush is spending his time trying to convince us that he can do the best thing for our country, he is refusing to give us a direct answer about his drug use in the past. In fact, he seems almost unwilling to give us a direct answer about anything at all, including upcoming policy choices. He simply comes across as a puppet, waiting for the higher-ups who run his campaign to give him advice on the proper way to field questions.

Gore is just as bad in his own way. Claiming that he "invented the Internet," he manages (in the typical manner of politicians) to blow his involvement in nearly everything out of proportion. His ever-changing image is nearly synonymous with the word politician, yet it makes him virtually impossible to trust. His glitz and glam campaign is nauseating at best, and at worst is simply a waste of money. His family values platform, emphasized for the most part as a way of distancing himself from President Clinton, has some large and unexplained holes. First and foremost is that his running mate, Joe Liberman, is happily married for the second time since the first ended in divorce, a stark contradiction to what the Gore campaign seemingly stands for.

Gore's wife Tipper also makes it her crusade to minimize the first amendment rights of recording artists everywhere, by forcing explicit lyric warnings on all releases that contain "questionable" material. Yet one thing she forgets to mention is that she is a diehard fan of the Grateful Dead, a band long associated with drug use and with whom she even played bongos once.

So not only am I unable to relate, I find that I am unable to even stomach the election process. I am a liberal at heart, but I don't feel that I am being represented when the vice presidential candidate for the Democratic party has a track record for not voting on party lines. And to vote Republican seems to be agreeing to endorse someone who is both dishonest and unintelligent. So honestly, I don't want to vote at all when I feel that neither candidate will do more good than harm to our political system. Until we find a candidate who can understand the American people, we will be forced to elect a man who simply makes us feel less disturbed than his opponent.

And supreme executive power should not be wielded by the lesser of two evils.

Melissa Hammel is a Collegian staff member.

Fun with Factoids

KATIE LANDERS

My roommate's boyfriend was just saying how he would like to write for Ed-Op to get his views out and say what he has to say. That made me think. Here I am writing this article and at the present moment I am just wasting your time because I don't have anything important to say. I suppose that I have views, and if at some point, they become relevant I will share them. For now, I am content just offering the happy wisdom I hold within my fairly large Irish head. Brainstorming has just not been working out for me this week and I've pulled a large amount of my floor on what to write. I have finally decided that I will contribute to the useless knowledge many college students already hold and give you random facts that can sit on the shelf with your pop top collection and gather dust. Who knows? Perhaps someday you too will be on "Hollywood Squares."

My first random fact for you is probably not so random and maybe you just don't care to know. Rob Schultz is my R.A.. Yes he is, and yes I did remove his laundry from the dryer and toss it around in an irritated state. When he found me doing so, my face turned twelve shades of red before I fumbled out an apology. I don't know that it was his wash. I am just really impatient when it comes to taking out laundry in the dryer. So here is my proper apology Rob, sorry.

Sit and do this in Chem. 101: A single piece of paper that is dry and square cannot be folded in half more than seven times. Go figure and I bet the person who discovered this was in fact a student of Chem. 101. At least, it will pass the forty-five minutes.

A cockroach can survive for weeks on end after being decapitated. Then they starve to death. Northeast is going to have to figure out another way to get rid of that pest problem they have. I saw hordes of roaches at an orientation a couple summers ago, and there is a possibility they could be mutant. They were about the size of my fist, crawling out of the sewers this way and that. Do roaches travel in packs, herds, or caravans? Something else to ponder in Chem. 101.

Here's a good one that I think a lot of my friends will appreciate and I just found it out today. In every single episode of "Seinfeld," there is a Superman represented in some form. I have no proof of this, but I wouldn't be surprised. "Seinfeld" has to be the funniest television series ever ("The Simpson's" doesn't even come close) and hidden humor like that makes it even better.

Clirophobia is the fear of beds. Since coming back to school this fall, I have succumbed to this. It's because I fall out of my bed like it's good for me. In fact, I think my bed may have given me a slight concussion last night. Don't ask me how, but at some point I slammed my temple into the side wall that my bed is against. I'm convinced that the only reason I fell back to sleep is that I knocked myself clear out. I don't want to go to bed tonight.

Left-handed people are freaks and it turns out this is not only by my own judgment. Every year some 2500 left-handed people die in accidents because products are set up for right-handed people. So, left handed people start being a little more cautious of what you do, especially after you have been up town. I wouldn't exactly call you a precious commodity, but you do make the campus more interesting.

My last useless piece of information for you today is probably something that you already knew. I am pretty sure that I have, but then again I am a wealth of useless knowledge. Ten percent of Russian government income comes from the sale of Vodka. UMass can probably hold responsibility for two percent of that.

Courtesy of the Internet, I was able to scrounge up those vital facts you will need to know when you debut on Whoopie Goldberg's successful game show. As I conclude what I know, my roommate Megan and her boyfriend Luke have decided that they have plenty to share with you as well.

Thanks to Megan's HRTA class, we now know that the Bacterain Camel can carry four to five hundred pounds of merchandise. Now that is something she will definitely use when she opens her restaurant in the Caribbean. Environmental biology has also taught her that the male seahorse gives birth to offspring.

Luke tells us that Phish played the Southwest horseshoe in 1985. Any chance that the Spring Concert Committee could reenact this? He would also like everyone to know that Pinocchio's is now accepting OCMP. Apparently this is "huge" news. Did you know that Earnest Hemingway's cat had six toes? I wonder how many toes the cat used in the football game had? I bet they didn't count. Megan claims that she knows where Jimmy Hoffa is buried, but she is afraid to share on account she may be killed. Okay, we can believe her, she's from New Jersey.

My brain is tapped out now. Megan and Luke have nothing left to share, well they do but it's becoming really pointless and I am not wasting ink on my printer. Besides I am becoming tired. David Letterman is coming to a close, and my laundry is done. I'm a little nervous to venture to the top bunk, but I am starting to become sleep deprived, so it's time to face my fear. Sorry to the left-handed people I offended. I didn't mean it. Sorry to the New Jersey residents I may have offended. I didn't mean it. I'm really sorry to left-handed people from New Jersey. That just sucks. Goodbye for now. If you used any of these trivial facts as a conversation piece at a party, may God help you. I'm off to bed.

Katie Landers is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor
It's a mad, mad world

For those who missed it, there was an incident a while back where a few of the truly mature and responsible adults that this University can be proud of having let attend this campus decided they would demonstrate their maturity (and perhaps impress their girlfriends) by playing football with a live kitten. Yes, a kitten.

And these noble representatives of the campus community took it upon themselves not to try to return the kitten to its home, nor to give it shelter for the night, nor to report it to the appropriate authorities, nor to simply leave it alone. Instead, they thought it appropriate to twirl it around by its tail, to throw it at passing cars, and to otherwise abuse it.

A representative of PETA said that she would not feel comfortable knowing that individuals like that resided in her dormitory. Well, this meat eating, run-toting, deer shooting, former lobsterman will take that one step further and state that I don't believe that they even belong in this institution. I have trouble believing that folks who would do this are completely human.

When I was twelve years old and first learning to handle a firearm, it was impressed upon me that animals which were neither bothering you nor needed for food should not be shot at. Simply stated, they should be left alone. I somehow doubt that these kitten-tossers intended to eat the kitten, and even with the twisted logic often found on this campus, I can't fathom how the kitten could have been a threat to them, their families, or their crops.

Yes, 200-pound men demonstrating (I am not quite sure what) by tossing around a four-pound kitten. This is sort of like a 1000-pound bull mouse tossing you around, except the mouse doesn't possess a human soul, and isn't bright enough to know that what he is doing is wrong. This far south, he probably also is suffering from brain worms.

And a quick word of advice to the women who like to date bullies like this – someone who would treat a kitten like this is equally likely to do the same to you. All of the RAD programs and 209A orders and EWC activists are not going to negate the fact that someone who would harm a defenseless kitten is quite likely to eventually do the same thing to you.

Ed Cutting
Graduate Student
School of Education

Defending the Protests

After reading Sam Wilkinson's column on Sept. 12 ("A Cause Divided") about the protests at the Republican Convention I'm not sure what to believe. Does Wilkinson believe people should even protest in the first place or does he think he is a superior organizer who has a better plan somewhere?

Wilkinson has a number of complaints about the protests: they had little chance of success, protestors' use of puppets undermined the seriousness of the issues, the actions should have targeted the convention center instead of the hotels, and lastly that an activist wasn't forthcoming with him when he asked what she was protesting against.

First, the Philadelphia protests were successful. The Unity 2000 March on Sunday and the Kensington Welfare Rights March on Monday did bring together, "wildly different people" to "effectively deliver a message." Neither the mainstream media nor Wilkinson have mentioned these demonstrations. The police also believed the protests are effective. After Seattle they have instituted virtual lock-downs of city streets (First Amendment rights be damned) so that demonstrators cannot even get within shouting distance of their targets. In addition, if you look at the rhetoric of both Al Gore and George Bush during the conventions, you can see evidence that they are trying to co-opt some of the issues that have driven people to the streets.

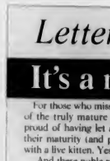
Second, puppets are an effective tool for spreading a political message. They can graphically illustrate an issue much better than a sign or a slogan. Just because some people use puppets for laughs doesn't reduce the seriousness of them in a political context. If that were true, then people would discredit the political cartoons in the newspaper because they are merely, "cartoons". Besides why did the Philly PD raid the Puppetista warehouse, seize their materials and destroy all their puppets if they didn't think puppets were effective?

Third, I think it is unfair for Wilkinson to criticize the demonstrators for targeting delegates' hotels and downtown streets instead of the FU Center, where the convention was held. What Wilkinson didn't mention was that the convention site was a downright armed fortress. There were hundreds of police surrounding the area, police helicopters flying overhead all day and high fences blocking public property. The activists were realistic in the expectation that police would not let them get anywhere near the facility. They didn't have much choice so they used whatever means were available to them to try to disrupt the convention.

Contrary to what Wilkinson believes, the actions in Philadelphia and Los Angeles this summer did not "end a movement" or divide the cause. These events were the building blocks of a social movement that is less than a year old. If Mr. Wilkinson thinks he can organize a better demonstration, his ideas are welcome, his unconstructive criticism is not.

Keith Hedlund
Sociology
Graduate Student

A hard look at the debates



JULIAN E. JOHANNESEN

As many of you are probably already aware, the first of three presidential debates is going to be held at UMass-Boston on Monday, Oct. 3. After doing his utmost to weasel out of the traditional debate format and prime time, cross-network coverage, Bush has finally caved into the demands of the bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates (CPD).

Many of you are probably thinking to yourselves, "Finally! After a shameless attempt to avoid serious debate of the issues in favor of informal chats sessions on "Larry King Live" and "Meet the Press," Bush has agreed to go head to head with Al Gore in front of what in '92 was an audience of 90 million viewers. Justice has been served. The American people will be given the opportunity to see where each candidate stands on the issues. The system works."

But wait a minute. Are we really getting an opportunity to see where every legitimate candidate stands on the issues? Will George Bush and Al Gore really represent the diversity of issues and positions on those issues that is so important to a vital democracy?

As you've probably guessed, I don't think so. If you knew me, this wouldn't come as any surprise. I'm a member of the Green Party and come November I intend to vote for Ralph Nader. But my objection to the exclusion from the debates of third party candidates isn't just partisan.

There are several reasons why I am outraged by the CPD's exclusion of major third party candidates like the Green Party's Ralph Nader, the Reform Party's Pat Buchanan, and the Libertarian Party's Harry Browne.

First off, as I've already mentioned, the exclusion of third party candidates from the debates cheats the American people out of an opportunity to hear about issues that don't get a lot of press. For example, both Bush and Gore support the death penalty. Nader opposes the death penalty. Both Bush and Gore support permanent normal trade relations with China, the WTO, IMF and World Bank. Nader opposes all of these things. On the issues of corporate power, corporate welfare, and corporate crime, and full public financing of public elections, Nader is outspoken. Bush and Gore are not.

Both Bush and Gore oppose comprehensive universal health care. Nader favors it. Issues like these just won't make it on the air.

Second, by excluding Nader and Buchanan from the debates the CPD is going against the will of the American people. In a July Fox News poll 64% of Americans said they would like to see Nader and Buchanan included in the debates.

Third, the CPD's exclusion of third party candidates is anti-democratic. It dampens public interest in the political process and undermines our democracy. Looking at recent debate history, it becomes obvious that participation by third-party candidates raises public interest and voter turnout. The 1992 presidential debates were watched by a record-breaking 90 million viewers. Why? Because third-party candidate Ross Perot was included in those debates. Presidential voter turnout went up in '92, reversing a 20-year downward trend. In 1996, the two parties learned their lesson and excluded Perot. Result? Only 41 million viewers watched and voter turnout dropped. In 1998, Minnesota third-party candidate Jesse Ventura's inclusion in the debates led to an incredible voter turnout of more than 60% and his election as Governor.

Some of you may be thinking, "Well if we let Nader, Buchanan and Browne participate who are we going to let in next? The Socialist Party? The Communist Party? The Silly Hats Party?" Currently the CPD demands that a candidate be polling 15% in order to be included in the debates. I think this requirement is too extreme, if it had been applied to John Anderson, Ross Perot and Jesse Ventura, they never would have gotten a chance to debate at all. On the other hand, I don't think we can allow just anyone into the debates. I don't think the Silly Hats Party should have the same opportunity to present their views that the Republican and Democratic Parties have. What I support is Congressman Jesse Jackson, Jr.'s recently introduced House Concurrent Resolution 573, which calls for invitations to the debates to be extended to any presidential candidate who has either five percent support in national polls or at least 50 percent of the American people favoring his or her inclusion.

Having said all of that, do I think there's any chance that the CPD will adopt Congressman Jackson's proposal? Nope. According to their web site (www.debates.org), the Commission on Presidential Debates was established in 1987 to ensure that debates, as a permanent part of every general election, "provide the best possible information to viewers and listeners." The Commission describes itself as "non-partisan" and "not affiliated with any political party." In fact, the Commission is rooted in the Republican and Democratic parties. Eight of the CPD's nine-members are either Democrats or Republicans and it's two chairpersons, Frank J. Fahrenkopf, Jr. and Paul G. Kirk, Jr., are the former chairpersons of the Republican National Committee and Democratic National Committee, respectively. I am confident that chairpersons Fahrenkopf and Kirk's dedication to democracy extends only to the point at which it comes into conflict with the interests of their parties.

After all, the CPD was created only after the League of Women Voters refused to allow the Republican and Democratic campaigns to dictate terms of the 1988 events. Here is what the League of Women Voters had to say in their October 3, 1988 press release: "The League of Women Voters is withdrawing its sponsorship of the presidential debates … because the demands of the two campaign organizations would perpetrate a fraud on the American voter. It has become clear to us that the candidates' organizations aim to add debates to their list of campaign-trail charades devoid of substance, spontaneity and answers to tough questions. The League has no intention of becoming an accessory to the hoodwinking of the American public."

I'll be in Boston on the 3rd but I won't be sitting in an auditorium watching the charade unfold. I'll be outside doing whatever little I can to raise awareness of the fact that the proceedings inside are an insult to democracy and the American people. If you share my concern, I encourage you to contact their local Green Party office in Amherst at 253-0851 or to the check out WWW.NADER2000.NET/DEBATES. A large number of activities are being planned in protest of the debates including everything from a mock wedding of Bush and Gore using giant puppets to alternative debates along the lines of the Shadow Conventions which took place during the Party conventions this past summer. I encourage everyone to get involved.

Julian E. Johannesen is a UMass student.

Another look at "the movement"

CHRIS MASTERJOHN

As an active participant in the recent burst of national activism and mass demonstrations this country has seen over the summer, I'd like to offer another perspective on "the movement" as an alternative to the criticisms recently levied by various sources. While I agree with some of the criticism, I believe that the recent mass demonstrations were very effective, and that the movement is growing, not dying.

I agree that the fear of "infiltrators" and "speaking to strangers about the cause" is irrational and counter-productive. While government infiltration of US social movements is well-documented, such as the famous COINTELPRO FBI program that played a large role in the destruction of the Black Panthers, such infiltration is made effective by playing into such fears. One of the main tactics of the COINTELPRO program was to accuse other people in the groups of being infiltrators, therefore destroying trust. I believe, and surely hope, that such behavior is an aberration and not the rule within this movement.

I'd like to offer this commentary both as a refutation of one critic's assertion that our tactics were ineffective and as an answer to his question that was unfortunately forsaken by the girl from Ithaca.

During November of 1999, most Americans had never heard of the World Trade Organization. By the first of December, that had all changed. The protests of the WTO meeting were on the front page of nearly every newspaper in the country, and many of the magazines. True, some newspapers chose to ignore the issues and focus on the violence, and nearly all printed mistruths of exactly what went down, explaining police violence as a response to rioting, without mentioning that the first can of tear gas was thrown around nine in the morning.

But most newspapers and magazines gave at least some voice to the issues, and many put primary focus on them. The New York Times had a huge section on the issues. Newsweek ran a special including a section "The New Radicals," and the list goes on. The fact is the protests forced an issue into the media that otherwise would have gone virtually unmentioned.

And in defense of puppets, we don't have to be boring to be serious. Puppets were involved since the beginning, and rather than leaving us dismissed, the phrase "Teamsters and Turtles" was used everywhere, demonstrating the powerful seriousness of a coalition between labor and environmentalists. If puppets will have us dismissed, then why did police raid the convergence centers in Philly and DC and confiscate hundreds of puppets? Perhaps because creativity is a livening morale-booster.

Of course, none of this should mean much if we can't broaden the embrace of our message—which is the whole point—and this requires explaining our positions. Here are some of the reasons folks demonstrated against both the Republicans and Democrats, which also include the reasons for the demonstrations against the WTO in Seattle and the International Monetary Fund and World Bank in DC.

Both parties support trade treaties such as the WTO and NAFTA that cause a "race to the bottom" for wages and environmental/labor standards, increase world poverty, and subordinate democratic rights to corporate rights.

Both parties support the current polices of the IMF and World Bank that have created a highly volatile global economy that has resulted recently in massive depressions in parts of the world that could someday spread to us, have locked poor countries into a never-ending cycle of debt-repayment with strings attached that pry open third world economies to Western exploitation, and in turn contribute to the "race to the bottom effect."

Both parties support a Federal Reserve policy of keeping wages down by keeping labor markets loose.

Both parties support the Drug War which has led to a quadrupling of the prison population over the last 20 years to the benefit of the private prison industry and the corporations such as Microsoft, Boeing, and a host of others that use prison labor at up to 80 percent below the minimum wage, depressing everyone else's wages.

Both parties support the most recent manifestation of the Drug War, the recent billion and a half dollars of military aid going to Columbia, no-strings attached. This aid will go to a corrupt military with close ties to paramilitary groups that both profit from the drug trade and have slaughtered thousands of activists trying to form a second political party, trade unionists, human rights activists, and so on. If the supposed goal of the aid—to destroy the coca plantations—is met, the result will be the destruction of the one means that poor Columbians have to secure some sort of minimal economic well-being by destroying the only price-stable crop available to them. This is the result of US policy of promoting "free" trade, and subsequently subsidizing the hell out of the US agribusiness industry.

I could go on and on. The two parties that have control are parties of the economic and political elite, not the people. They follow policies that are in the interest of the American elite, while forsaking the average American and destroying much of the world.

This movement is growing. In DC, there were less people than in Seattle, but DC was planned in several months, and the AFL-CIO didn't endorse it until last minute, whereas Seattle was planned for a year and the AFL-CIO themselves brought 40,000 people. But in DC, there were far more people willing to participate in civil disobedience, which is a sign of growth.

This movement is moving on to the next steps: the Nader campaign, which is active on campus and will build a viable third party alternative that encompasses the above concerns, and locally, an action on September 30 in solidarity with the anti-corporate globalization movements next stop: Prague.

This movement has its weaknesses, its faults, and its irrational nutcases, but overall it is a strong, growing movement. With your help, we can grow larger, and truly change the world.

Chris Masterjohn is a UMass student.

Write for Ed/Op! We'll give you candy!

Chatting with Haunted's drummer

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

The violence is returning. Hide.

Swedish thrash metal extremists The Haunted shook up the metal world with their insanely brutal self-titled release in 1998, and now they're set to do it all over again. The line up has been fine-tuned, with former Face-Down vocalist Marco Aro taking over the frontman slot and old-school Invocator drummer Per Moller Jensen stepping behind the kit. The songwriting core of the Bjorler brothers (formerly of the defunct and immortal At The Gates) on guitar and bass and double-timmy Witchery guitarist Jensen remains intact, ensuring continuity and bone-crushing heaviness. The band's second album, The Haunted Made Me Do It, is set to be released by Earache Records this October, and the anticipation is high. So extreme is the hype, in fact, that we were especially privileged when Jensen took some time out of his schedule to discuss the new album, tour, and even the death metal drink of choice.

Regarding The Haunted Made Me Do It, Jensen was nothing but enthusiastic. The lyrics were a group effort, with everyone but Anders Bjorler contributing, and the music was written by the Bjorlers and Jensen. Marco actually had never heard most of the music prior to the recording of the album, what with him living in Stockholm while the rest of the members were dwelling in Gothenburg, but when they all assembled to put the pieces together, the results were amazing.

"Marco adapts Peter's style of singing" the old songs, said Jensen, but without sacrificing his own unique style. (Peter Dolving is the former vocalist.) "We're very pleased with his performance."

Jensen says that the album is far more 'diversified' than the previous front-to-back thrash effort. Due to better production, better playing, and more tapping into the group's At The Gates-type melodic past, the album will include some more heavy-melodic songs ("Dark Intentions") in addition to the fast, heavy material ("Leech"). Look for the music to be broader, somewhat, but to lose none of the bone-crushing trademark lethality.

COURTESY EARACHE

Haunted is poised to overtake the Worcester Palladium with their signature Swedish thrash metal. As of yet, no date has been set.

As for a tour, The Haunted will definitely be playing the US soon (but not until a booked tour of Japan in November with In Flames is completed), but have no established plans. They will likely be playing with Slayer in Europe, because, as Jensen said, "they know our music well" and even (the compliment of compliments) "Kerry (King, Slayer guitarist) knows our songs." They would open for Slayer, but if those plans fall through The Haunted would prefer to open.

One thing that Jensen was quite adamant about was his desire to play, of all places, the Worcester Palladium. When the recent In Flames/Skinlab stop there was mentioned, it sparked memories of the last time Jensen played the Palladium with his other band, Witchery, and Emperor. Jensen just loves the "high ceiling, the doors above the stage," and emphasized that it is definitely one of his favorite places in the US to play. When asked if he was hoping to come back and play the Palladium with The Haunted, the reply was an emphatic "Oh, we have to."

Just a few notes of interest from the interview: The band pushed for Earache Records to release The Haunted Made Me Do It in a limited-edition vinyl printing, and succeeded – mail-order only. The record company felt it might hurt CD sales, but thankfully the band overrode this lack of common sense and you can contact the Earache Records mail order department or the websites (earache.com or the-haunted.com) for more info. "Hollow Ground," a song of the new album, will be featured on the soundtrack to the forthcoming Tales from the Crypt movie. And, lastly, a note to all aspiring musicians: the real metal beverage of choice is a Black Russian (1/2 Kahlua, 1/2 vodka), although on a European tour with Witchery and Kreator Jensen did admit to the wonders of Jim Beam and Coke.

So there it is: lethal drinks, thrash metal, a fantastic new album, a show at the Palladium. The future looks a little scarier and a little more violent already.

A glance at upcoming big name CD releases

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Correspondent

It seems like in the last few months there has been little activity in the Billboard Album charts. Few acts such as Eminem, Britney Spears, and 'N Sync have been able to stay continuously in the top 10 for more than 5 consecutive weeks. Things look ready to change, however, as Ricky Martin is back to shake his bon-bon, Limp Bizkit is ready once again to break stuff, and Madonna is ready to shine another ray of lucidity on an otherwise dull music landscape. Get ready for a season chock full of new releases that should take us right into the New Year and out of the music doldrums.

The teen pop phenomenon continues with a slew of albums from fan-friendly favorites such as Christina Aguilera who is venturing into the booming Latin market with Mi Reflejo (9/12) containing both new tracks and Spanish-language versions of her hits "Genie in a Bottle" and "I Turn to You." The Backstreet Boys and 98° are ready to put the heat on 'N Sync with new albums set to explode in the coming months. The Backstreet Boys are hoping for another 12x platinum follow-up to Millennium, and with the help of Cheiron, the Swedish production crew behind Millennium, they may just get it that way (still untitled, 11/21). 98°, whose first single "Give Me Just One Night (Una Noche)" has already been riding high on the Billboard Hot 100 chart, promise more strong up-tempo songs, instead of the regular ballads, on Revelation (9/26). The Spice Girls return with a third album titled Forever (11/17) in hopes of a comeback without the help of Ginger Spice.

Latin King and Queen respectively, Ricky Martin and Jennifer Lopez return this season in hopes of bringing Latin diversity to the US music scene again. Ricky Martin is hoping for another "Livin' La Vida Loca" mega-hit with his first single, "She Bangs," off his still untitled new album (11/14), which will also feature more dance tracks and ballads. Jennifer Lopez, hot off the success of her latest movie The Cell, promises to take us on A Passionate Journey (11/17) where she's enlisted supreme hit maker Rodney Jerkins (Brandy, Whitney Houston) and has penned much of the material herself.

The Barenaked Ladies are also returning two years after their album Stunt went quadruple-platinum. Look for their new single "Pinch Me," which has already been released to radio from their album Maroon (9/12). Other hit makers set to release albums include Fastball and Everclear. Fastball return with The Harsh Light of Day (9/19) hoping for another big hit like "The Way" in 1998. Everclear, who return with a more rock heavy album this time around, will release Songs From an American Movie Vol. Two: Good Times for a Bad Attitude (11/21) just five months after their last album was released.

Just when you thought Joan Osborne of "One of Us" fame had vanished for good, she's back with Righteous Love (9/12). Osborne's hoping for a righteous comeback since her last release was all the way back in 1995. The Wallflowers, with frontman Jacob Dylan, will release their third album titled Breach (10/10) with more personal and meditative tracks compared to their last album Bringing Down the Horses in 1996. The Dave Matthews Band also return after being on the road and sharing new tracks with fans (still untitled, 12/12).

The Rock and alternative scenes will also be well represented with a crop of new albums from returning bands. Green Day is back with Warning (10/3), perhaps an aptly titled disc after shocking fans with a tender ballad "Good Riddance (Time of Your Life)" two years ago. Orgy also return with Vapor Transmission (10/10) after their last album went platinum two years ago. Limp Bizkit enlisted rap producer Wizz Beatz and metal producer Terry Date to help create a rap-rock album titled Chocolate Starfish and the Hot Dog Flavored Water (10/17) catered for both metal heads and rappers alike. The Offspring hope for another multi-platinum album (still untitled, 11/14) follow up to 1998's Americana. Marilyn Manson also returns with Holy Wood (In the Shadow of the Valley of Death) (11/14) hoping, once again, to point the spotlight on Satanism.

Fatboy Slim returns, after his critically acclaimed '98 album, You've Come a Long Way, Baby turned into the dance album of the year, with Halfway Between the Gutter and the Stars (11/17). Finally, Madonna also returns, with the follow-up to her critically and commercially beloved '98 album Ray of Light, creating more electro-dance tunes ready to set the dance floor on fire. This time, however, French techno creator Mirwais is at the helm of producing her Music (9/19), instead of Ray of Light's William Orbit.

Looks like Eminem, Britney and 'N Sync are going to have some competition in a few weeks. And MTV's "Total Request Live" should get interesting as many TRL fan favorites get set to release videos from their hit ready albums.

UMass Transit Service Needs YOU!!!

UMass Transit Bus Drivers are needed now!!!! You can have fun, make excellent money, and have plenty of opportunities for advancement. Get in on one of the best jobs on campus.

Training sessions are forming now! Call us at 545-0056. Try it. You'll like it!

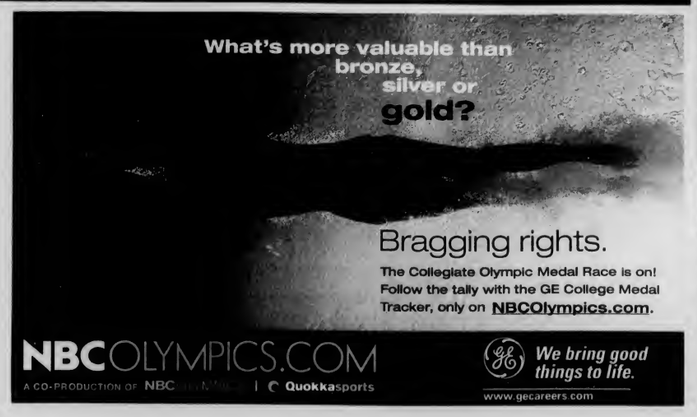
We offer you paid training, starting pay at $8.80 per hour with an increase every semester, and opportunity to get real management experience, a work schedule that fits your class schedule, and a marketable Class B Commercial Driver's License.

It's your bus service so help keep us rolling!!!

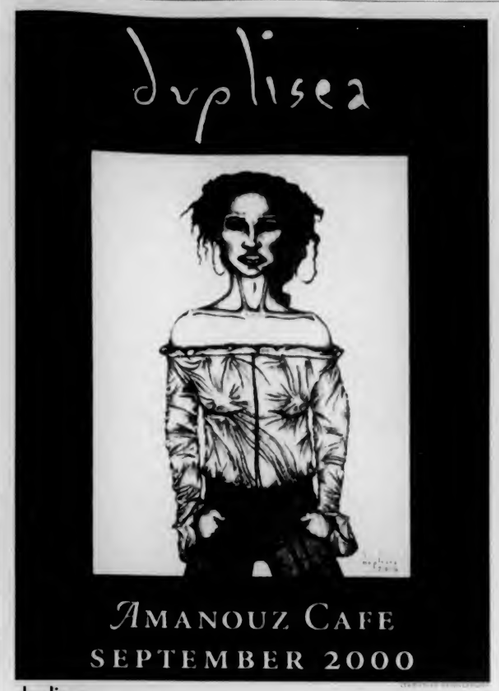
JOIN UMASS MEN'S CREW

A WINNING TRADITION SINCE 1871

NO PRIOR ROWING EXPERIENCE NEEDED
PLEASE COME TO THE INFORMATION MEETING:
Wednesday Sept. 20th at 6pm in front of the Totman Gymnasium or Call Coach Brian Mehr at 545-0487



What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBC
Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com



duplisea

Recent Drawings by Steven P. Duplisea are currently on display at the Amanouz Café, 44 Main Street, Northampton. The exhibit runs until September 30.

men's soccer

continued from page 10

utes of play.

Although before it can be said that the Maroon and White are officially on a winning streak, they will have to topple the University of New Hampshire this afternoon. The Wildcats are at 3-3 this season and are just coming off a 1-0 loss to soccer powerhouse Connecticut, the No. 4 ranked team in the country.

However, despite their recent loss, the UNH squad is still a solid team that is currently ranked as high as tenth in accordance with a New England Region poll that is conducted by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America.

The same poll ranked UConn as the top club in the New England region.

Helping the Wildcats earn such a respected position this season is a trio players that compose a large portion of the UNH offense.

Sophomore co-captain Doug Lawyer, has tallied one goal and five assists, which currently leads the America East Conference.

Teammates Drew Ferrigno and Andy Karam have both recorded two goals and two assists apiece.

On the other end of the field for UNH is junior goalkeeper Shaun O'Neil, who has been strong in net. In his four appearances, O'Neil has stopped nearly all perspective shooters.

Even with all the weapons UNH will bring to Totman today, they will still have to contend with a strong UMass defense fronted by junior and co-captain J.R. Pounces.

Yet, if the Wildcats do get an opportunity to score, keeping net for the Minutemen is junior Bryan O'Quinn who in the five regular season games for the Maroon and White this season has played every minute.

Doing it on the offensive end for the Minutemen is sophomore Derek Rhodes, who leads the Minutemen with a goal and an assist.

Junior Fred Kinateder is always a threat on the front line. Kinateder scored 10 goals with three assists last season and has put away one goal and two assists this season.

The Minutemen will take to Totman this afternoon with the hope of improving its mark in the series between these two border rivals. UMass leads the all-time meetings over UNH, 22-10-3.

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN

Totman Field will be the site of today's matchup between the UMass and UNH soccer teams. Game time is slated for 3:30 p.m.

HEY YOU! WRITE FOR ARTS

please?

AR
a
LIV
FU
W JC
t
FU
Co
s
Ry
f mor

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.

With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.

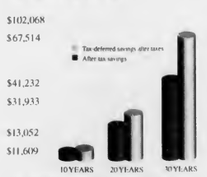
And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.* Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid history of investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.

So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan.†

*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.

IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL



In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.

TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™ 1.800.842.2776 www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. †You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a personalized calculation of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1 800 842-2776. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed.
© 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 549-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Bahai students to the Feast of Izzat-Might Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

CHILDCARE

Childcare needed for Weds 1:30-3:30pm experienced with references. Call 253-1655

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 for sale. For further information. 413-667-3084

Dell Dimension XPS-R450; mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Minutemen.com Internships Interested in working for an emerging dot-com? zMinutemen.com, has 3 paid internships available. Candidates should be Internet savvy and interested in marketing or technology. Duties include: online and offline marketing to students and alumni, building community websites, creating on-campus awareness. Send resume or letter of interest to: cdillon@zuniversity.com

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

EMPLOYMENT

STAGE HANDS WANTED At the Fine Arts Center. $8.75/HR. Applications at Production Services rm 146 F.A.C.

Work as an EMT Mullins, FAC, Bowker, Campus Events orientation 9/24, 1:00pm Morrill N406 Call 545-1885 for more info.

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apache are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Resturant Cashier. Speaking and writing Chinese and English part-time or full-time (413)582-7045

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 for Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pizza, 256-8911

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLY-WHEELS.NET

Minute Man phone cards. 1.9¢ a min. Domestic. In University Store.

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENT

Sororities/Fraternities: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

FREE KITTENS 2 cute kittens need loving homes 413-665-7315 Act quickly

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Foreign & Taiwan Students. DV2002 greencard program. Deadline Oct. 20 Info:20231 Stagg St. Winnetka, CA 91306 Tel. 818-998-4425

SPORTS

Attention Wrestlers, Boxers, anyone who likes to workout. Mixed Martial Arts Program located at local gym. Looking for interested athletes. Kirik 256-0080 www.mixedmartialarts.com kirik@mixedmartialarts.com

TRAVEL

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN Hampshire Satellite Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Govtl to Govtl
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WOCH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/ New Haven		35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 20, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Lost Treasures-Ancient World		Live From Lincoln Center: New York Philharmonic				Matisse	Global Village
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor (In Stereo)		44 Hours "Matchmaker"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor (In Stereo)		44 Hours "Matchmaker"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Behind the Scenes		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Hopkins 24/7 (N) (Part 5 of 6)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Final Answer"		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)	Seinfeld	Blind Date	Real TV	7 Days (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Life Line"		News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	"The Nutty Professor" (1996, Comedy) Eddie Murphy				News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Live From Lincoln Center: New York Philharmonic				Matisse	Artists of the West (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Behind the Scenes		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Hopkins 24/7 (N) (Part 5 of 6)	News		Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	7 Days (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Life Line"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	49	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	43	L.A. Law "El Sid"		Law & Order "Prisoner of Love"		Biography: Milosevic		American Justice (N)		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Double Down"
CNN	27	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	34	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Bartman" (1994, Comedy) Damon Wayans				South Park	Bettlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	48	Your New House		Wild Discovery: Tarantulas		On the Inside: U.S. Marshals		Surviving the Raging Planet		Raging Planet "Earthquake"		On the Inside: U.S. Marshals
ESPN	61	Sportscenter		Major League Baseball Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Major League Baseball Teams to Be Announced. (Live)
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	"A Matter of Justice" (1993, Drama) Martin Sheen, Patty Duke,								Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	29	Countdown	Makeover	To Be Announced		Say What Kriss	Say What Kriss	Say What Kriss	TRL Uncensored (In Stereo)			Makeover	Say What Kriss
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	CatDog	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	35	Sliders "Time Again and World"		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Exposure (N) (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	26	Home Again	Home Again	How'd They Do That?		Extreme Machines		Mavericks of Science		Science of Special Effects (N)		Extreme Machines
TNT	30	ER "Greene Win Envy"		Pretender "Bazooka Jarod"		"Murder in the First" (1995, Drama) Christian Slater, Kevin Bacon,						"Murder in the First" (1995) Christian Slater
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Ghost Ship" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Lost and Found"		Cover Me: FBI Family		Huntress "Kidnapped" (N)		Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	50	"The Prince of Egypt" (1998) PG			Making-Broke	Real Sports		Sex-and-City	Arliss	Oz "Legs" (In Stereo)		The Corner
MAX	40	(4:30)		"Cruel Intentions" (1999, Drama)				"Soldier" (1998, Science Fiction) Kurt Russell.		"Love Stinks" (1999) French Stewart.		"Creating Man"
SHOW	60	"The Odd Couple II" (1998, Comedy) Jack Lemmon. PG-13				"In Too Deep" (1999) Omar Epps.		Boxing		Soul Food		Resurrection Blvd. "Pilot" (In Stereo)

Dilbert By Scott Adams

THE EVIL H.R. DIRECTOR
WHAT NEW EVIL DO YOU BRING ME, UNION STEWARD STUART?
EMPLOYEES SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO MOVE COMPANY COMPUTERS. THAT'S UNION WORK.
THAT'S OLD EVIL.
IT'S NEW IF WE INCLUDE PDAS AND LAPTOPS.
I LIKE THE CUT OF YOUR GIBLETS.
www.dilbert.com

Dilbert By Scott Adams

VP STALKS ALICE
I BROUGHT YOU A BOUQUET, ALICE.
THAT'S A BUNCH OF PENCILS, NOT A FLOWER BOUQUET REALLY?
MAY I USE YOUR PHONE? I NEED TO FIRE MY SECRETARY.
www.dilbert.com

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT'S THAT?
IT'S A SOCK PUPPET WE'RE USING IT IN AN AD CAMPAIGN AT WORK. I THOUGHT IT WOULD BE FUNNY TO SEE HOW BUCKY REACTS TO IT
I'VE GOT A BAD FEELING ABOUT THIS
HEY, BUCKY! I WANT YOU TO MEET MY FRIEND COTTON B. GROSS
WELL, MAKE IT QUICK. I WAS ON MY WAY TO THE WINDOWSILL

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

STUPID SLOGAN! WHY DOES MY BOSS THINK IT'S "GET A HEADSTART ON THE LETTER U"?
MAYBE HE'LL BE FIRED TO HEAR THEM. THE FINISH WON'T SURPASS THE BEGINNING!
MAKE IT HAPPEN!
WE SHOULD FIND HIM BEFORE THE CENSUS POLICE DO!
AS IT'S SAID, HELP IS JUST A CALL AWAY. SOMEONE WANTS A SONG AND A BOX OF CAPN CRUNCH
AND THE CAP'N
MAKE IT HAPPEN!

Horoscopes

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)- Your vulnerability is your own business today. You'll have the chance to present yourself in the light of a confident and capable competitor.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)- Now is no time to try too hard with something that cannot win you tangible rewards. Instead, focus on things directly related to making profits.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)- You can enjoy a rare meeting of the minds today with a member of a conflicting sign. However, be warned, for a Cancerian may be difficult.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)- You're in the mood for something that may not be the most suitable for you, but you'll have to learn it the hard way.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20)- Don't be so quick to find fault and look for flaws in others. Such a critical perspective will blind you from seeing a suitable partner coming your way.

Aries (March 21-April 19)- You and a friend are going to realize today that both of you have more in common than you had thought. As a result you can raise the stakes.

Taurus (April 20-May 20)- Analyzing every little situation can slow you down today. You're going to have to trust that certain things are just right for you.

Gemini (May 21-June 20)- You may be intimidated by the approach someone else is taking with you, but it won't last long. You'll realize that he or she is quite insecure.

Cancer (June 21-July 22)- Optimism is a commodity that you cannot afford to waste, and a little will go a long way today. Keep your outlook bright and your spirits lifted.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22)- It's a good day to re-evalute and revise the true value of your own personal goals. Few changes are required. Focus on a special deal.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)- You'll have a great deal to talk about today, after all that occurs with and without your knowledge. For a few days you'll be in need of more information.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct.22)- You can be both analytical and instinctive today. Keeping your mind and spirit in balance will serve you well at this time and in the near future.

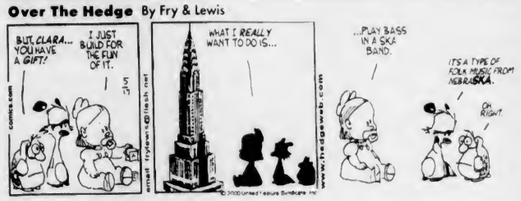
Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 83 LOW: 61	HIGH: 79 LOW: 49	HIGH: 67 LOW: 43

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

PETER! YOU'RE DRIVING ALMOST DOUBLE THE SPEED LIMIT!
PETER! THE CAR WAS ON TWO WHEELS BACK THERE!
PETER! YOU TOOK THAT BUMP SO HARD MY SHOES CAME UNTIED!
THOSE AREN'T MEANT AS COMPLIMENTS, BY THE WAY.
CHECK IT OUT! ZERO-G!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis



BUT, CLARA... YOU HAVE A GIFT!
I JUST BUILD FOR THE FUN OF IT.
WHAT I REALLY WANT TO DO IS...
...PLAY BASS IN A SKA BAND.
IT'S A TYPE OF FOLK MUSIC FROM NEBRASKA.
OH RIGHT.

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

YOU KNOW THAT SAYING, "WORSE THINGS HAPPEN AT SEA"? I WANTED TO KNOW IF THAT WAS TRUE, SO I WENT ON A LUXURY CRUISE.
I ENDED UP KILLING MY OWN MOM AND FEEDING HER TO SOME LADY'S DOG.
alternate punchline:
EVERYTHING WENT FINE, BUT WHEN WE GOT HOME THE UN-HAD BOARDED OUR HOUSE.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THE THIEF RUINED THE DOOR LOCK, BUT AT LEAST NOTHING WAS STOLEN.
I DON'T THINK MY STUFF IS SO BAD I DON'T UNDERSTAND WHY HE DIDN'T TAKE SOMETHING
OH, I'M SURE HE LIKED SOME OF YOUR STUFF. HE PROBABLY WAS JUST IN A RUSH.
C'MON! WHAT'S WRONG WITH THIS TV? OH, MAYBE THE FLESH TONE IS SLIGHTLY OFF, BUT IT'S A PERFECTLY FINE TV.
MAYBE HIS VAN WAS TOO FULL FROM OTHER ROBBERIES.
STILL, IF I WERE ROBBING SOMEONE, I'D ALWAYS TAKE A LITTLE SOMETHING JUST TO BE POLITE.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

AT FIRST IT WAS A STRUGGLE MANAGING THE FAMILY BUSINESS ON HER OWN, BUT ODDJOB'S DAUGHTER, SUE, FINALLY GOT INTO THE SWING OF IT. © 2000

www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"I breathe by your looks and you look right through me."

–Third Eye Blind "Deep Inside of You"

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Shepherd's Pie

Fish Munchies

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Falafel Burger (vegan)

Dinner

Stuffed Chicken with Broccoli

Tortellini with Ginger Crab Sauce

Cajun Lentil Stew (vegan)

Tortellini with Lime Sauce (vegetarian)

WE'RE POSESSED BY LEPRECHAUNS THURSDAY NITE 22 OZ KILLIANS 2 BUCKS

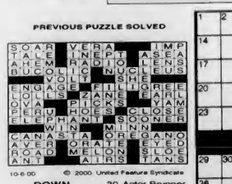
The HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE

ACROSS

1 Gourmet mushroom
6 Went over the limit
10 Kind of portrait
14 Licorice-like flavoring
15 Mata —
16 Spoken
17 — You Went Away
18 Heroic tale
19 Timber wolf
20 Roman garment
21 Dangerous spider
23 Swimmer's gear
25 Downy ducks
26 It's ordered with ignite
27 Tall tales
29 Highway cone
32 Pulled (a car)
35 Luau instrument
36 Business attire
37 Bleached
38 Garage-sale tag words
39 Under the weather
40 — with supported
41 Collector's item
42 Trimmer picture
43 "How terrific!"
44 Noose
46 Environment
51 Not relaxed
54 He and she
55 Pass slowly, as time
56 Eye in Quebec
57 Wading bird
58 Damsel
59 Church part
60 Ghostly
61 Other, across
62 Reach across
63 Sea eagles

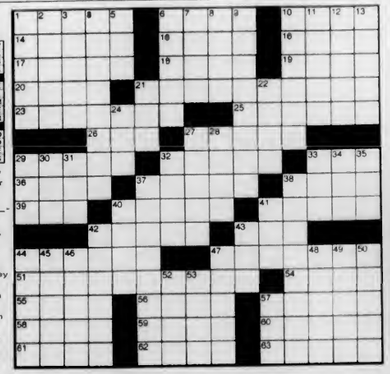
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-6-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Tall ship's features
2 Hamburger garnish
3 Beatle Starr
4 Edible snail
5 Malcolm X' director Spike
6 Sleeveless blouse
7 Hemingway nickname
8 Explorer — the Red
9 Bargained
10 Not liquids
11 Wear away
12 Work
13 Clothes
21 Jerry's partner
22 Quit
24 Relatives
27 Alpine song
28 Thunderstruck
29 Tire pressure abbr.
30 Actor Brynner
31 — Abner
32 Mock fanfare
33 "Born in the —"
34 Kipling novel
35 Sixth sense
37 Novels, tales, poems, etc.
38 Excited
40 Line of stitches
41 Wail
42 Wooded valley
43 Roll of bills
45 Sin
46 Spring month
48 Nurtures
47 Author
49 Surley Brown
48 Rose's defense
49 Cliffside nest
50 Little kids
52 A tide
53 Prima donna
57 Notice



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, Mike Kulak

Crafty Bartlett sparks UMass offense

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

For whatever reason, there are just some days that stick out in the minds of certain individuals.

Most people tend to put precedence on annual events such as birthdays, anniversaries or holidays. But in some cases a once-in-a-lifetime occurrence causes someone to bookmark a specific date.

For Brooke Bartlett, September 13, 1998 has turned out to be a day that she will not soon forget. It was during practice that Tuesday when Bartlett became entangled with a teammate during a drill. By the time she hit the ground, the crafty Empire State native had broken her collarbone from the impact of the collision.

Just like that, Bartlett's second season in Maroon and White was over. After a promising freshman year in which she tallied 11 points, No. 5 was relegated to the role of a spectator for the final 17 games of the year.

"That summer I worked harder than I'd ever worked before, and I came in even more fit than I did for my freshman year," Bartlett said. "In the first four games, I had a couple of assists, so I thought that everything would be alright. Then I broke my collarbone the day before the UConn game – September 15."

"It was one of those fluky things," said Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy of the incident. "We were doing a toughening up drill for UConn. It was ball wrestling for possession of the ball and there you really have to put skin on skin. I've never had something like that in my 25 years of coaching."

Luckily for Bartlett, the injury occurred prior to UConn game and not after it. Because she had not played in more than 20 percent of the team's games that season, the NCAA granted her a medical redshirt.

At the time, the setback seemed like a cruel punishment for the up-and-coming forward. But now, two years later, Bartlett can take some comfort in knowing that she still has one more full season remaining.

"People keep telling me that it's a blessing in disguise because now I have a fifth year," said Bartlett, who will pursue her masters degree in education next year. "It's nice knowing that I still have another year to get even better."

At the time, it was a struggle between getting better and coming back [for that season], and then for getting back and coming back [for the following season]," she added. "The injury didn't heal right away. It was a delayed process."

A last minute decision pays off

Several Division I programs were wooing Bartlett following a stellar career at Shenendehowa High School in Clifton Park, NY where she was a two-time All-State pick for the Lady Plainsmen.

Originally, it seemed like the creative forward was headed to George Mason University in Fairfax, VA. However, after some second thoughts and the urging of an assistant coach, Bartlett made the two-hour trip east to Amherst.

"I verbally committed to George Mason, but at the last minute I came on a recruiting trip to UMass," she said. "I was a little apprehensive about going to school eight hours away from home. I only came up for the day, and Robin Smith took me around, but right then I knew that I wanted to come here."

As a freshman, Bartlett stepped right into the mix for the Minutewomen, starting in all 22 games. Her first collegiate goal came in a 2-1 loss to UConn at Totman Field. The rookie closed out her inaugural campaign with 11 points, while also laying the foundation for a bright future in the process.

But that bright future dimmed a bit less than two weeks into her sophomore season. Instead, Bartlett was dealt a bit of adversity that forced her to focus in on her future goals in soccer.

"The collarbone incident made me realize that I needed to step it up," she said. "Either I had to come right back, or I would end up going down the hole."

Added Rudy: "It was a pretty traumatic deal, to go four games into the season and have to face something like that. In many ways, it's a wake-up call because you realize that you have to do more to come back. A lot of people start to go off in the other direction, but the ones who are really driven for success come back better than before."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

A skillful player who can wreck havoc in one-on-one situations, Brooke Bartlett has emerged as one of the top players for the UMass women's soccer team this year.

Getting back into the swing of things

After almost a full year of waiting, Bartlett was able to don the Maroon and White on September 1, 1999 in a season-opening win over Albany.

Despite a slow start to the season, she eventually made the transition to forward after a season-plus in the midfield. Bartlett went on to rally eight points last season, capping off her year with her selection to the Atlantic 10 All-Tournament team.

"My junior year was a stepping stone," Bartlett said. "Coach put me at forward to play with Emma [Kurowski] and Kara [Green]. I learned a lot from both of them, and making the All-Tournament team was a great way to end the season. It really boosted my confidence, knowing that I was able to play up top with people like Emma and Kara."

Over the summer, the Communications and Education double-major saw action with both the Massachusetts State team in the Amateur Select Festival and with the Eastern Regional Pool.

"I worked very hard for the Regional team because I knew that there would be a lot of scouts there from both the National B team and the new W-League," Bartlett said.

Ironically, Bartlett suffered a concussion and required stitches to close a gash on the top of her forehead just prior to returning the UMass for preseason. She missed a week and a half, but was back in the lineup for the season opener against Texas-El Paso, where she scored a goal.

However, there was more encouraging news for the junior forward in the early stages of this season, when Bartlett was tabbed as a member of the United State National 'B' Team Pool.

"It's a nice reward for all of the hard work that she put in," said Rudy of her selection to the club. "That's a hard group to make. All of the players in the Northeast United States are trying to get on that team. She bumped some pretty important players to get there."

So far this year, Bartlett is tied for the team lead in points with eight. She has also continued to showcase her skills in a variety of ways, including her nifty ability to create scoring opportunities from what sometimes might seem as virtually nothing at all.

"I feel more comfortable on the offensive side," Bartlett said. "My strength is attacking. I'm a one-on-one player who likes to get the ball forward when I see the opportunity. I'm not a pure goal scorer like some of the other people that we have on this team."

Said Rudy: "With her ability to beat players, that causes the [opposing] defense to shift. She's going to make it to the big time when she can find the open players that are a product of her ability to beat players one-on-one."

But for now, Bartlett and the rest of the Minutewomen are hoping to gain momentum for the second portion of the A-10 slate by virtue of a strong showing this weekend in Arizona. UMass will take on San Diego State and Arizona State on Friday and Sunday, respectively.

"We've been a second half team," Bartlett said. "We've been trying to feel out a team in the beginning of the game, which isn't good. We should be on them right away."

China's men's gymnastics team reaches Olympic pinnacle in Sydney

By Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the second installment in a seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000

China's wait is over. But for the United States, the wait for Athens in 2004 has just begun.

Overcoming a history of disappointment and inconsistency in Olympic finals, the Chinese men's gymnastics team rallied to win its first ever team gold Monday at the Sydney Superdome, upsetting defending Olympic champion Russia, who settled for the bronze. Ukraine took the silver, while the U.S. finished just out of the medal hunt, in fifth, equaling their result in 1996.

Second best was simply not good enough four years ago, and the Chinese came to Sydney with something to prove. In past Olympics, they had arrived as the reigning world champions, as well as the favorites to win it all.

Yet time after time, they faltered when it counted most. The absence of the Soviet Union in the boycotted games of 1984 ensured them as a lock for the gold. But it was an underdog U.S. team who upset them for the top trophy.

In 1988 and 1992, they could not claim the top step of the medal podium. And in Atlanta, they endured their most heartbreaking loss to the Russians, finishing just 1.239 points shy of first.

In 2000, the outspoken Chinese vowed, would change everything. The defending World Champions would be Olympic Champions. They would amend for all the times they fell short, erase the record of underachieving. Silver would be a bittersweet reminder of Olympic failure. Anything other than gold would not suffice.

For the American men, a bronze medal would be the ultimate redemption, after their disastrous finish in Atlanta. The U.S. was in fourth place after preliminaries, so it entered the finals with high expectations. Led by five-time national champion Blaine Wilson and three-time Olympian John Roethlisberger, they had the best chance at a team medal in a fully contested games since 1932.

But the Americans got off to a shaky start on floor exercise and were never able to fully recover. Remaining in sixth place through three events, the team improved to fifth after vault, despite a fall from Sean Townsend. They recorded the highest total on the parallel bars, with all four counting scores ranging from 9.700-9.787.

However, on high bar, their final event, Wilson and Paul Hamm both missed their release moves and their fate was sealed. Anchoring the event was the 30 year-old Roethlisberger, who scored a team-high 9.737 for the final routine of his career. The U.S. finished with 228.983 points, 0.448 out of third place. And, while the result may have been discouraging, this team showed a promising outlook for men's gymnastics in the future by the strong performance of the 17 year-old Hamm twins, Paul and Morgan.

Guided by four-time Olympic medalitt Alexei Nemov (who posted the highest all-around total in both preliminaries and finals), Russia began the night with a slim lead over China. But with the final six teams starting on a clean slate, the first rotation found the normally stalwart Russians unsteady on the high bar.

What followed was very uncharacteristic, causing evident displeasure in the face of Russian head coach, Leonid Arkayev. Making just enough mistakes to keep them behind the leaders all night, two errors each on the floor exercise and pommel horse made it impossible for Russia to catch China or Ukraine. Tallying 230.019 points, they were forced to salvage their night with bronze.

China took the lead after a solid first rotation on the parallel bars and never looked back. Paced by Yang Wei and Zheng Lihui, China posted the highest event totals on the floor exercise, pommel horse and rings, finishing with 231.919 points.

By the time they reached vault, their final rotation, the gold was virtually a lock. The gold was finally theirs. A history of Olympic futility had ended.

The women's team final will be contested Tuesday night and the old guard, Russia, looks to retake their Olympic title and atone for 1996's devastating loss to America's "Magnificent Seven." In the preliminaries, they were untouchable but it remains to be seen if they can repeat that performance.

Right on their heels is Romania, a perpetual model of consistency and the new and improved China, who have reasserted themselves on floor and vault, two events where they have not been traditionally strong.

The American women, though not nearly the invincible team they were in '96, still have a shot at a team medal. They have experience (Mag Seven members Dominique Dawes and Amy Chow), youth (Jamie Dantzscher and Tasha Schwikert) and potential all-around medalists (National Champion Elise Ray and two-time National Champion Kristen Maloney).

But if not for the ill-fate of the Australian women which stumbled badly in front of the home crowd, the Americans would not even be in the finals. It will be a night to make reparations, a night to show the world what they're made of. The Magnificent Seven they're not. But Sydney's Six Pack they could very well be.

Bids still up in the air for MLB

DAVID ROSE

Now the real stretch run begins.

The Major League Baseball season is into its last two weeks, and with no postseason berths clinched as of yet, the race for October is still wide open.

In the American League, the most intriguing race has been for the Wild Card position. The Cleveland Indians, who where left for dead in July, have the lead by a half a game over the Oakland Athletics and a three game lead over the Boston Red Sox.

However, as tough as it was for the Indians to get into a position to make the wild card, it doesn't come close to their stretch of 16 games in 13 days to end the season. They will play more than a cat with a ball of yarn in the next two weeks and it all starts with a five-game series at Fenway Park that began last night.

Right fielder Manny Ramirez, though his hair looks like something out of a horror film, has returned to his form of last year when he was a runs batted in machine. He has 110 RBI and has only played in 102 games this season.

He is the main reason for the resurgence of the Indians. Ramirez's return from a strained hamstring revitalized Cleveland's offense and he has just kept going.

The Cleveland pitching has also turned it around, led by Bartolo Colon, who just pitched a one hit shutout at Yankee Stadium on Monday night. He and fellow starter Dave Burba have combined to form the Indians 1-2 combination that they have been searching for.

As for the Red Sox, Carl Everett's ill-fated slide into second base might have been the perfect picture for last weekend at Comerica Park – a team who is falling flat on their face. After taking the first two games of the series, the Sox proceeded to throw away the last two games to fall further back of the Tribe.

Now as the two teams meet, it will be up to the pitching staff led by Cleveland killer Pedro Martinez to shut down Cleveland's high-powered attack. In this series, if either team can win four out of five, then it might do fatal damage to the other's post-season aspirations.

The other team involved in the race for the Joker in the deck is the Oakland A's, winners of 11 out of their last 14 games. This all correlates with Jason Giambi's return from an injury. Giambi has set an Oakland A's record for RBI's in a season with 125 going into last night's twin bill against the Orioles.

The A's also have gotten great pitching from Tim Hudson, who has won his last four starts, including two shutouts.

However, the A's also face a difficult task of playing seven games in six days, including an all-important four game battle at Seattle. Alex Rodriguez and the Mariners have a two and a half game lead over Oakland in the American League West. The M's can lower the boom on Oakland if they can win three out of four during the weekend.

The West is the only division in question as the Yankees and Chicago White Sox have comfortable sewn away their divisions and are preparing for postseason play.

As for the National league, the Braves are once again showing who is the cream of the crop in the NL East as they are enjoying a four-game lead over the Mets going into the team's showdown at Turner Field last night. Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine have returned to the 1-2 punch that the major leagues have grown accustomed to as they have 18 and 19 wins, respectively.

However, the Braves are now chasing two teams in the National League standings, as the San Francisco Giants and the St. Louis Cardinals have catapulted in front of the Braves in the chase for home field for the best record in baseball. The Giants are 89-60 while the Cards are 89-61.

As for the Mets, they are still holding a five-game lead over Arizona in the Wild Card standings. If they get into the playoffs, they will enter with a lot of question marks.

For example, has the wear and tear of the season finally caught up to catcher Mike Piazza? He went from the leading MVP candidate in August, to not even in the discussion in September. Also, with Robin Ventura and Derek Bell both struggling to find their stroke, who will step up for the Mets on the offensive side?

The pitching staff has been shaky over the last month as well. Mike Hampton did not help the cause by walking five in six innings on Monday night. Although lefty Al Leiter has been on top of his game in the last couple of weeks, he can't start every game. The Mets will need to straighten out a lot of issues or the answer to their World Series hopes will be a simple one. "Yo, forget 'bout it!"

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Men's soccer team to host Wildcats;

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Breaking out the whips and chains, the Massachusetts men's soccer team will attempt to tame the Wildcats that will attack Totman field this afternoon at 3:30 p.m.

Heading in today's game, the Minutemen have a 2-3 record and are in good spirits after snapping a two-game losing streak and a scoring draught this past weekend against Siena College.

In defeating the Saints 2-1, UMass dominated much of the second half delivering both of their goals during the 45 min-

Turn to MENS SOCCER, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts men's soccer team will look to get to the .500 mark with a win over New Hampshire this afternoon.

Check out our Teen Angst page on 5.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 12 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, September 21, 2000

Yuri Morales and the men's soccer team reached the .500 mark with a win over UNH yesterday afternoon.

SPORTS p. 16

UMass may change Gen-Eds

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

A proposal to change the University of Massachusetts General Education requirements is in the works, and many hope that the changes will be approved this academic year.

In December of 1996, The University Task Force on General Education was set up to review the current General Education requirements. They submitted a final proposal to the General Education Council, a committee on the Faculty Senate last February.

The Task Force was comprised of over fifty people from the campus community. Faculty, students, and administrators alike were involved in the process.

John Jenkins, Associate Director of the Fine Arts Center and Chair of the Task Force, said, "Students, faculty, and administration were equally outspoken and contentious."

The Task Force was "looking for students who really cared about undergraduate education," he continued.

Often the students were the first ones to the meetings, said Jenkins.

Rosa Kramer, an English major who graduated last spring, was one of the students on the Task Force.

"I absolutely felt that my opinion was not only taken seriously, but it was also sought out by the adults on the committee," Kramer commented.

The Task Force's final proposal stated, "The current [General Education] system is working in that the courses get taught [and] the students manage to find ones to take."

It was agreed upon by members of the Task Force, however, that the University "will fail in its mission unless we make a change" (quoted from the Final Proposal).

The Massachusetts Agricultural College was founded in 1863 as a Land Grant institution. The idea behind the land grant institutions was to make a curriculum that was both liberal and professionally accessible to a broad range of students.

Returning to those ideals is, according to Jenkins, at the core of the proposed changes.

Jenkins explained, "[The changes mean] coming back full circle to insist that students combine their major and their Gen. Ed. Requirements."

Though the Proposal will undoubtedly be altered some before the General Education Council approves it, there are aspects of it that are fairly certain to pass.

Students will be required to take two courses from each of the following areas: physical and biological sciences; social and behavioral sciences; and the humanities and arts. One interdisciplinary course must be taken, and a total of two courses must have a diversity designation.

Jenkins said he believes it is crucial that education have a "global perspective" in this day.

Seemingly contrary to this, however, is the fact that under the new proposal there is no University-wide foreign language requirement.

According to Jenkins, this was a point of much debate among the members of the Task Force.

Jenkins said many people involved in the Task Force strongly favored having a foreign language requirement, including Chancellor Scott, "but it did not have [full] support from students and faculty."

"For some students," he continued, "[the language requirement] becomes more of a blockade than an asset."

Students reinforced that statement.

Sophomore Chemical Engineering major Shana Duffy said she is glad that there is currently no foreign language requirement for Engineering majors.

"The requirements in the College of Engineering are so strict," said Duffy, "it's nice to have one less [requirement.]"

When senior Natural Resource Studies major Nelli Bovaird was asked what he thought about the current foreign language requirement, he gave the thumbs down sign. "What's the difference between the language requirement and a bucket of [expletive]?" asked Bovaird. "The bucket."

Jenkins said the Task Force decided that in the case of the foreign language requirement, it was better to "listen to students, [and] not always prescribe."

Other General Education requirements include courses in both analytic reasoning and writing. The current requirements in those areas remain the same under the Proposal, with one small exception. No one will exempt out of the College Writing requirement.

Currently only a small percentage of incoming students test out of the requirement. Under the new plan, all students would take the same writing test and be placed in an appropriate level course.

A greater level of importance will be placed on writing in all General Education courses, said Jenkins.

In addition, the proposed curriculum will put a greater emphasis on inquiry and critical thinking.

In any course, Jenkins said, "You have to start by learning factual material. [You] must also learn how to use [that] information in the course and in life."

The singular most important goal of the proposed plan is "to increase the activity and involvement of students in learning and decrease the level of passivity," stressed Jenkins.

In their Final Proposal, the Task Force has suggested to do this most effectively by "paying particular attention to first-year and lower-division students."

Turn to GENED page 3

COURTESY DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Agony of Defeat

As the University of Massachusetts Minutemen celebrate a goal, the University of New Hampshire goalkeeper can only stare at the ground.

NA elders to speak at UMass

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Today, Five College students will get the chance to see something they don't see every day; Native American elders from northeastern nations. The Five Colleges Native American Indian Studies Curriculum Committee will sponsor the event called "Listening to the Ancestors: Connecting Past and Present."

The Committee is an initiative formed in 1996. According to its mission statement, it "aims to include Native American elders and communities as partners in the process of developing philosophical approaches to the study of Native American culture and history." The statement continues, "the committee wishes to validate and incorporate Native history and Native ways of knowing, through programs in the academic setting, and develop collaborations with indigenous elders and communities, and Five College students and faculty." Among other services to the Five College area, the Committee has founded the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center here on campus.

This Thursday's event, according to spokesperson Marge Bruchac, is in keeping with the mission of the Committee. The event is an evening of lectures by three elders, and is part of a continuing goal of the Committee to "bring native elders from all around the country, and especially from northeastern communities," Bruchac said. She said the focus on northeastern communities is largely due to the fact that, today, "often when people think about Native American peoples, they're thinking about Western reservations" and not peoples Indigenous to New England and the Atlantic states, such as the Mowhawk and the Wampanoag. Bruchac said, "There's a perception, even among other Indians, that there are no native communities left in New England." As Bruchac contends, and as the speakers will demonstrate, there are still Native Americans alive and well in the New England states.

The three speakers this year form an impressive panel, according to Bruchac, and event co-spokesperson Marta Carlson. Carlson was heavily involved in selecting and inviting the speakers for the event. They will be Ramona Peters, a Mashpee Wampanoag, Chief Thomas Porter, a Mowhawk leader, and Dr. Ella W. Thomas Sekatau, a Narragansett elder.

Porter founded and developed a community of Mowhawk, which is now flourishing as the town of Fonda, in New York State. Bruchac said Porter has proven to be "a gentle and powerful leader of the Mohawk people, and other communities recognize him as well." Carlson recalled that she had once invited Porter as a speaker for a class in Contemporary Native American Issues. "The class was really influenced by him because he speaks from his heart, and a lot of the students were emotionally and intellectually challenged by him," Carlson reflected. "We're very lucky to have him on our panel this Thursday."

Peters serves as the executive director of the Aquinnah Cultural Center for the Wampanoag tribe. She has also done extensive work in repatriation, which is a newer trend in Native American cultural studies and community formation, in which Native Americans reclaim artifacts and sometimes even remains taken by whites from desecrated burial sites, according to a description by Bruchac. Though not yet an elder by virtue of age, Peters has taken on a leadership role in her tribe and serves as a medicine woman. Carlson said she admires Peters' determination and work ethic: "she's a very strong political and spiritual leader for the Wampanoag," Carlson said. "I'm very impressed by how determined she is—not only does she handle repatriation for the tribe, but she is executive director for the Aquinnah Cultural Center for her tribe, and she's also doing grad work, all at the same time. I'm at a loss as to how she does it."

According to Bruchac, more and more Native Americans are earning higher degrees, "to gain an academic recognition that makes their voices better heard," and creates networks among Native American communities through cultural studies. An exemplary case of such endeavors, according to Carlson and Bruchac, is Dr. Sekatau, who has used her academic voice to teach both inside and outside of her Narragansett community, and in consulting work all over the country. According to a biographical summary released to the Collegian by Bruchac, Sekatau was also "instrumental in re-establishing federal acknowledgement, as well as re-recognition of the Narragansett Indian Nation."

Such recognition is extremely important, Bruchac said. She cited the continuation of inaccurate media representation as one of the many threats to Native American communities today. Other threats, she said, are "a lack of recognition on basic community levels, as well as federal levels, a lack of respect, a lack of opportunities, a lack of basic resources for heath and welfare, a lack of accurate representation of history, grave robbing, all problems that come out of a lack of understanding, and a knowledge that [Native American] peoples are still here. There are all these lacks," she said. The goal of Thursday's panel is to bring Five College students in touch with Native Americans in their area, according to Bruchac. She said she hopes it will do so by weaving the past with contemporary issues, unlike the current Native American activism she said divides the past and present too much. Ultimately, she said, the goal of the program and the committee is to "work in partnership with schools and the media to accurately represent the Native peoples that still inhabit their native homelands, and still have the right to carry on their customs and traditions, even in the modern world."

The program will be held Thursday evening, at Franklin Patterson, West Lecture Hall, at Hampshire College, from 7 to 9 p.m.

Coopee could face possible legal recourse

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Fallout from the alleged resource abuse case at the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant may not be limited to internal ramifications.

If investigations prove that there was indeed a misallocation of campus resources in the maintenance of Personnel Administrator Jim Coopee's home, the effects could include legal repercussions.

According to Massachusetts state law, "municipal officers are prohibited from using or attempting to use their official positions to secure themselves or others unwarranted privileges."

In addition, the law prevents employers from hiring their own employees for outside work, even if a fair wage is agreed upon. Such an instance constitutes a civil offense.

Information from the website of the State Ethics Commission gave an example of a violation of Massachusetts State Law 268A: "You are doing substantial renovations on your home, and you know that your administrative assistant and his brother do roofing work on the side. You cannot ask your assistant to re-shingle your roof, even if you are willing to pay a fair market wage for the work."

Coopee has admittedly employed campus workers in extraneous moonlighting projects at his home "for years."

Turn to COOPEE, page 3

Annual Pow Wow this weekend

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Correspondent

A Community atmosphere will surround the University of Massachusetts the weekend of September 23-24 when traditional Native American dancing and drums from all over the Western Hemisphere gather for the 18th Annual Native American Pow Wow.

For many Native American people at UMass and beyond, the Pow Wow is a time to celebrate indigenous culture. Warren Griffin, 22, a member of the Native American Student Association (N.A.S.A.), said that the Pow Wow allows him the chance to feel a sense of unity.

"This is a place where my spirit can feel good when I hear the drums and see the dancers," said Griffin. "Community is very important to me. It gives me support."

Each day of the Pow Wow will begin at the Haigis Mall at 10 a.m. with Grand Entry beginning at 12 p.m., and closing at 6 p.m., with the retirement of the flags. Admission is $2 for Five College students and seniors, $5 for all others.

Joyce W. Vincent, director of the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center (J.W.E.C.C.) expresses that this event invites all to learn more about indigenous culture.

"We will have Native indigenous dancers, drummers, storytellers, arts, crafts and foods from many different nations across the Western Hemisphere," said Vincent. "We will show the difference between traditional and contemporary styles of dancing and singing, and the interaction of the beauty and diversity of Native American culture and a sense of community that crosses the generation lines."

Some of the specific performers attending is the host Inter-tribal drum group Youngblood, of the Shinnecock Nation of NY, and the invited drum groups, Red Hawk singers of the Wampanoag Nation of Mashpee, and the Mohawk singers of the Mohawk Nation from NY.

Griffin explains that the drum is one of the most important aspects of the Pow Wow. "The significance of the drum demonstrates who our people are," said Griffin, adding that, "It is the heartbeat of our people, and when I hear it, I get a rush."

Other performances are Tom Ohomsawin, from the Ahenaki Nation, Mwalim of Mashpee Wampanoag, and Joseph Fire Crow, of the Cheyenne Nation.

The Native American groups on campus involved in the process of this event are; the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center (J.W.E.C.C.), directed by Vincent, the Native American Student Support Services, directed by Aquilla Avanna McCants, the Certificate Program in Native American Indian Studies, directed by Dr. Ron Welburn, and N.A.S.A run by Native students and allies.

Cori Daddabbo, 19, a Native American student, expresses that all of these programs have helped her advance as a student. "Through the Certificate Program, I've learned

147 CURES. 27 HOLES. 34 OL' DIRTY BASTARDS.

Introducing Virgin MegaSearch.® You can search by artist, producer, session musician. By anything, by anybody. You'll see who played on whose record, who influenced who, who ripped who off. With Virgin MegaSearch, your search is over.

Get 25% off and a free CD.

From now until October 14th, you'll get 25% off your first purchase at virginmega.com. Just enter the code with-train when you check out. As if that weren't enough, we'll also include the Virgin Recommends II ECD with all purchases made before September 30th. We've loaded it up with 16 tracks of the best music out there, and it's absolutely free. Got all that? Good.

Virgin

THE VIRGIN MEGASTORE ONLINE AT VIRGINMEGA.COM

MegaSearch results based on Virginmega.com site search on August 30th, 2000. Results may vary based on item availability.

powwow

continued from page 1

about different Native issues and Native history," said Daddabbo.

"The support services have given me direction in terms of academics, and finances and the Cultural Center has given me a job, exposure, and a chance to get to help out my people."

Other groups on campus that have contributed to this event include Campus Activities, as well as the Office of ALANA Affairs, The Grass Memorial Library, Baker/Greenough/Chadbourne Cluster, Jose Tolson and Delphine Quarles.

R.J. Cruz, 22, a Native American student on campus anticipates the Pow Wow will continue to bring together the collective community and encourage spiritual unity.

"It's a time for family and friends to come together," said Cruz. "It's a time for me to escape society's harsh realities and go back to tradition, to go back home."

You ask me how I feel about the drum
You should ask me how I feel about myself
The drum is in me
This beat has been heard through out the ages
The same sound you hear now in this world
The drum is my life
The drum is my heartbeat
When I say ure, I mean my people
My people, my people, I'm back where I belong, with my people
Warren Griffen, UMass Native American Student

gened

continued from page 1

Many believe that Residential Academic Programs (RAP) are a good way to get students to think critically.

"Since RAP has small classes (between 24 and 35 students)," said Joe Battista, Director of RAP, "the faculty and teaching assistants who teach for us are already using inquiry." Battista went on to say that "it would be great" to increase the number of first year students involved in RAP.

Currently 1091 first year students, approximately 30 percent of the class, is part of the program.

Jenkins said he thinks special attention needs to be paid to incoming freshmen who are undeclared.

"[They] are less likely to succeed than those who came with a clear purpose," commented Jenkins.

Both Battista and Jenkins said they would like RAP to expand.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian agreed.

"By utilizing TAs to facilitate these learning communities," stated Avakian, "we can provide it to anyone who wants to participate."

RAP will not, under the proposed plan, become mandatory for first year students. The hope among members of the Task Force, however, is that as many General Education classes as possible be small and "inquiry-based."

"Students are too intelligent to simply be handed material," Jenkins said.

He also said he hopes that by having fewer General Education requirements, greater financial resources could be directed to those classes, hopefully improving them and having "fewer extremely large lecture courses."

Jenkins called this the "critical year" in this process, as the Proposal is being revised and refined.

Student involvement in the process is not over.

"The SGA is planning on holding several forums [regarding the Proposal] throughout the year," said Avakian.

I've got my eyes set on you

A UMass student is watched by Albert Einstein as he purchases posters.

coopee

continued from page 1

Officials from the Ethics Commission declined to comment on the University's case on the grounds that they may be called in to advise on the proceedings.

Charles DiMare, an attorney at Student Legal Services, discussed potential criminal consequences involved in the case.

"Obviously, if University employees were performing outside of their University duties on University time, it violates the law," he said.

"Utilizing University materials for private profit is unlawful."

He explained that the campus unions could become involved with the case because of the issue of the alleged doctoring of time cards.

"The unions on campus take progressive discipline unless they have been warned before," he said.

Howard Sasson, an attorney operating out of both Northampton and Springfield, commented that any criminal repercussions involved in the case would likely fall under the category of larceny.

"The definition of larceny is taking something that does not belong to you. It is not just stealing a wallet," he said.

He explained that there were different types of larceny, which include embezzlement, burglary and robbery.

Sergeant Mark Jaques of the UMass Police Department also made similar comments regarding potential criminal repercussions.

"We charge people who take items that do not belong to them with larceny," he said.

Jaques explained that in the case of grand larceny, a crime that involves over $250, sentencing is up to five years in prison or up to $25,000 in fines or not more than two and a half years in prison. A conviction of petty larceny, or a misdemeanor would be forced to pay fines.

Katie Landers and Chris Thompson contributed to this article.

AHORA has first meeting

By Marilyn Cardano
Collegian Correspondent

AHORA, a campus Latino organization held its first meeting of the year at the Campus Center last Tuesday. A group of about thirty people were warmly greeted by the organization's new president, sophomore, Alcides Santiago Jr.

Santiago presented the goals of AHORA: to celebrate, appreciate and share Latino culture among the members who come from a variety of Spanish speaking countries including Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, Mexico, Brazil, El Salvador, as well as those whose families have settled in the United States. He stressed that not only Latinos are invited to join and participate but non-Latinos are welcome as well.

Some of the ideas being entertained by AHORA include cooking parties to share each other's favorite ethnic dishes, inviting Latino bands to campus, holding dances and sponsoring dance classes. AHORA will also serve to inform members of any Latino events within the Five College community. Santiago stressed that AHORA is concerned that the richness of the Latino history and culture is being lost in the day-to-day struggles of some families to assimilate in the United States. AHORA also wishes to bring a sense of Latino history to the community especially schoolchildren.

To do so, they hope to visit grammar schools and reading Latino stories. AHORA is also proposing a mentoring program to help struggling Spanish language students learn the language.

AHORA has sponsored cultural events such as Latino plays at the Fine Arts Center, Latino bands, and cultural and historical lectures from local Latino professors from the Five College area.

According to a former president, senior Juan Suarez, AHORA was established in 1973 when seven Latino students approached UMass administration at Whitmore in hopes of having the college actively recruit Latino students, and also to provide a bilingual program. They asked for administration to act "now," which spoken in Spanish is "ahora."

Anyone interested in joining AHORA can stop by the office in the Student Union in room 416. Interested students can also call 545-2474.

BRIEFS

Final Exam Schedule Available Soon

The Fall 2000 Final Examination Schedule will be available beginning Friday, October 13. Copies will be delivered to students in the residence halls, and will be available to off-campus students in the Registrar's Office (215 Whitmore). The Fall 2000 Final Examination Schedule will also be available on the World Wide Web beginning October 5 at: http://www.umass.edu/registrar

Public Policy and Administration

The Center of Public Policy and Administration and the Department of Sociology welcomes Frances Fox Piven to the University of Massachusetts. A prominent scholar and activist whose work has influenced understandings of inequalities and public policy in the United States. Piven is currently a Distinguished Professor of Political Science and Sociology at the Graduate School, City University of New York. She has co-authored many books including Regulating the Poor and Poor People's Movements and is also a founder of the welfare rights movement and a board member of the ACLU. The talk is titled "The Rich, the Poor and American Public Policy," and is part of the ongoing speaker series in Social Inequality and Public Policy sponsored by the Center for Public Policy and Administration and the Sociology Department. Piven will speak Friday, September 22 at 12:10pm in 620 Thompson Hall. For details call CPPA at 545-3440. It is free and open to the public.

Golden Key National Honor Society

The Golden Key National Honor Society will be holding its weekly meetings on Tuesdays from 4:00-5:00pm in Herter 116. All members are encouraged to attend.

Also, the Golden Key National Honor Society is conducting its annual food drive. Please bring non-perishable foods to the office of the Dean of Students. If there are any questions, please call 546-4312.

—Jessica May

Smith College Rec Council presents

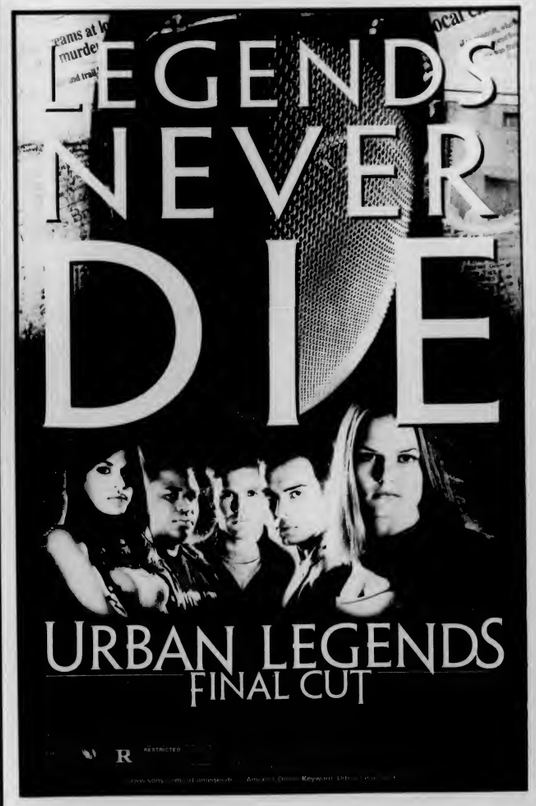
MACY GRAY with special guest

Sunday, September 24
8 pm
John M. Greene Hall
Doors Open @ 7:30 pm

Tickets: $24 General Public

Available @:
•Northampton Box Office
•B-side Records 586-9556
•For the Record 256-6134
•Ticketmaster Outlets
•Tickets Unlimited

586-8686 NBO NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE & THE TICK



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, September 21, 2000
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The death of justice; the abuse of power

With Robert Ray's announcement yesterday that he would not pursue criminal charges against the Clintons for their involvement in Whitewater, that family and this nation can finally begin to put behind it the national witch hunt that led, indirectly, to Clinton's impeachment.

Ray, the Independent counsel, agreed with those few others with remaining interests in this case, saying that there was insufficient evidence for him to pursue to criminal charges against Clinton and his wife.

Good.

Hopefully, the announcement of an Independent counsel that there are no more criminal charges to pursue in regard to Whitewater will soothe the rampant Republicans anxious to prove that our current President is nearly as misbehaving as their's were. When they got the opportunity, they chose to waste Federal funds to conduct lengthy investigations despite turning up little to nothing.

What Republicans never understood was that the abuses by their own leaders of power and stature were well documented, clearly there and spelled out. Long investigations may have occurred, but only because they continued to turn up new abuses.

Now, thankfully, the Whitewater segment of the Independent Counsel's work is done, thus leaving America and the Clinton's with only one more situation to deal with; Lewinsky.

Unfortunately, Republicans, and the office of the Independent Counsel, have refused to give up on this non-story. While the President's infidelity was clearly documented, it certainly didn't involve a commited crime. Yet, as par for the course of Republicans and now the Independent Counsel, refuse to give up, insisting that Clinton's sins are perhaps the greatest to ever be committed from the office of the President.

It is a ridiculous claim indeed, yet it is consistently pursued by rabid Republicans who have, as a result of their political rabies, hurt themselves and, arguably more important, the office of the Independent Counsel. Once a tool to bring justice to those who had been wronged by individuals with political power, it is now nothing more than a pitbull being used by angered political parties. As nothing more than a lawyer used to discredit the other side, the Independent Counsel has been completely and totally devalued after its abuse by Republicans.

With that office being destroyed, the ability of Americans to expect justice to be done has been shaken. And that just isn't acceptable.

Political parties need to realize that the ability to investigate one another should be reserved for serious situations. Parties investigating each other because the office paper clips does nothing but devalue the office of the investigator and make the party look silly.

And in this case, the Republican Party looks silly.

Hopefully, response to future situations won't involve the immediate involvement of the Independent Counsel, and this nation won't have to wait for years on end to hear simple answers to simple problems.

Goodbye, National Security

SIMON PONGRATZ

Less than a year ago, with little ceremony and even less media coverage in the United States, a huge foreign policy blunder was committed by the ethically challenged administration that sits in Washington. The Panama Canal, one of the three major "choke points" in the world, was handed over to the Panamanian Government, per a 1977 treaty made between Jimmy Carter and Gen. Omar Torrijos. Now, this would be all right, but the Panama Canal is vitally important to the security of the United States, with three quarters of its traffic bound for American ports. Also, the company that now has a controlling interest in the Canal, called Hutchison-Whampoa, is a Chinese company, run by the state, with direct ties to the Chinese military! With former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinburger having already acknowledged the certainty of a military conflict with China in the future, and with China having already stolen every piece of nuclear technology we have, one wonders how this could happen.

Unfortunately for the American people, money is President Clinton's God. If he'd sell the White House and the Presidency, why not a Canal? Clinton seems to have the nearsightedness of a bat when it comes to national interest, and Mr. Jiang is much, much smarter than he is.

Just after the announcement of the withdrawal of US troops, China extended to Panama a $120 million dollar loan. As the treaty states, China was given the right to take over the US Rodman Naval Station, and to deny ships access to the Canal if they were deemed to be interfering with the business of Hutchison-Whampoa. China can also base missiles, bombers, and whatever they please at Albrook Air Force Base, a comfortable 900 miles from Miami.

Admiral Thomas Moorer, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has acknowledged "a certainty of a future military clash between China and the United States." In 1998, he also stated, "My specific concern is that the company (Hutchison Whampoa) is controlled by the Communist Chinese. And they have virtually accomplished, without a single shot being fired, a stronghold on the Panama Canal, something which took our country so many years to accomplish." US Rep. Bob Barr added "I think the geopolitical significance of the Panama Canal...is the same as it has been for the last 85 years – critical." (World Tribune)

Indeed it is. It was Admiral Alfred Thayer Mahan in the early twentieth century who first outlined the theory that would become gospel for US naval strategy. In it, he observed that control of the "choke points" in the world was absolutely critical for a naval power. Choke points are places that can be easily defended, like Gibraltar, the Suez Canal, the Dardanelles, and, most important to us, the Panama Canal. It is no coincidence that wars have been fought over these points, and whoever controls them is in a position of considerable power.

Britain's control of Gibraltar and the Suez Canal allowed for the safe passage of naval and commercial ships through these points, and the security of the British Empire would have been in jeopardy had they been compromised. Likewise, control of the Dardanelles gave the Ottoman Empire tremendous economic and political clout, and Russia's goal for the past three hundred some-odd years has been their acquisition and subsequent access to a warm water port in the Black Sea.

Which brings us to that which is most important to our own security: the Panama Canal. The Canal was constructed during Teddy Roosevelt's administration to allow for quick passage of the US Navy from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it was the logical move following US naval thinking of the time, which had been developed along two lines: Number 1 was control of "choke points," and number 2 was the simple maxim: "Never divide your fleet."

The latter came as a result of the battle of Tsushima Strait in 1905, when the Russian navy was ignominiously defeated by the Japanese. The Russian fleet was divided into two battle groups stationed in the Atlantic and Pacific. The Pacific fleet was destroyed in a surprise attack, after which the Atlantic fleet was sent to "teach the Japanese a lesson." As it turned out, after a journey of more than six months, the second Russian fleet was also destroyed. Roosevelt, who mediated the peace treaty between Russia and Japan, learned from this. He decided that we would never divide our fleet, and a quick passage was needed to get from the Atlantic to the Pacific. So we built the Canal.

Now that tremendously important cornerstone of our national security has been compromised by the man who promised us "the most ethical administration in history." Instead, he has bequeathed to us a world that is far more dangerous than it was in 1992. This will be Clinton's legacy, for, if by some miracle we are able to get out of the desperate situation in which we now find ourselves, it will take decades. But we don't have decades.

The point of conflict between the United States and China is still, as always, Taiwan. Beijing wants the island, and Taiwan wants to remain free and independent. A senior member of Taiwan's National Security Council has stated that China will, by 2010, have the ability to destroy the island's defenses in a single strike. The Chinese are even developing, with the blessing, it seems, of the Clinton Administration, war plans against the United States! "China's military has raised the prospect of a military showdown with the United States as part of China's drive to capture Taiwan," according to the World Tribune. A Chinese Newspaper, the Haowangjiao Weekly, has ominously stated that, "The United States will not risk 200 million Americans for 20 million Taiwanese." China, who in 1992 had nuclear technology that was developed to the point of the United States' in the 1950's, in March had the ability to "strike US satellites and bases in the Pacific," and today can hit any city in the United States, including Boston. Does this have anything to do with the money coming into the White House from the Chinese Army? Of course it does. And doesn't it follow that, for China to win a war against Taiwan and the US, they would have to deal with the US navy? Suddenly, the Panama Canal becomes very, very important. We had better pray that this scenario does not arise, for we have been outmaneuvered and outsmarted.

How did this happen? The answer lies in the unprecedented ability of the Clinton/Gore administration to put a dollar sign on everything...nuclear technology, the Panama Canal, national security...pick one. They have all been sold to the highest bidder. As a result, the United States and all its citizens have been put in grave danger.

Simon Pongratz is a UMass student.

All the critics are wrong: Eminem isn't the problem

SAM WILKINSON

As I sit here writing this, I'm listening to a great album by the Dandy Warhols who play genuine poppy rock and roll music. I can listen, I can sit here, I can write and all I have to think about are the words I'm writing here, for this column, right now.

But two minutes ago, I finished transcribing the lyrics of the second verse of Eminem's "The Way I Am." His second record, the Marshall Mathers LP, is everything that the Dandy Warhols record isn't: it is hard to listen to, it is offensive, it is challenging, and it's very hard to use as background music.

I keep hearing vicious complaints about Eminem, about the person he is and the words he chooses to use, and, most prominently, his use of the word faggot. There's no doubting that the term in question is highly offensive, inappropriate, and downright rude.

The main crux of the arguments built against Eminem focus on his lyrics, as it's fairly easy to ignore the spaced out, crotch grabbing, blonde, white kid that Eminem tends to appear to be.

"His lyrics are naughty."

"His lyrics are offensive."

"His lyrics are unnecessary."

Thus chants his opposition, while simultaneously labeling his fans as "followers," "clones," "wiggers," "wannabes" and whatever else is popular at the moment.

Unfortunately, those with complaints about the occasional use of faggot means that they're missing some of the young rapper's major points, two of which are made the in-your face "The Way I Am." Not only does he cut an awesome promo against those who suggest that he need to change, but also against American media, and by extension, politicians, who are so hell-bent on stopping people like Eminem that they ignore society's serious issues.

"I Am/ Whatever I say I am/ If I wasn't, why would I say I am"

It's a hell of an observation. He's owning up, in those sixteen words, to every bigoted, sexist, or otherwise offensive statement. That's who he is, a bigoted, sexist, and otherwise offensive person. He's not suggesting for a minute that any critics are taking it incorrectly. He's agreeing with critics. He's nodding at critics when they say "god-damn, he's being offensive."

Would any of those critics believe him if he even tried to present himself in some other light than what he casts on himself in his music? Certainly not.

Critics have never believed it. Not when parents blamed Judas Priest for making their kids kill themselves and the English band stated that they meant for no such act to take place. Not when 2 Live Crew attempted to position themselves as First Amendment victims, even though they were clearly misogynists (not that, technically, they weren't totally protected by the First Amendment because they are and should be).

Eminem presenting himself to us by asking, "look, what I sing is what I think, and if it wasn't what I thought, why would I sing it?" is where most critics draw the line. They seem to sign off at his admitance of being a jerk. They aren't interested in the possible message contained within art made by jerks.

But to those who listen more closely, Eminem quite clearly makes one of the greatest arguments against "entertainment blame," the lowly tactic used by candidates like Joe Lieberman and such wives as Tipper Gore to win elections for themselves or spouses. Both of those two individuals, and countless more, have continuously suggested that cleaning up media will result in the cleaning up of society and all of its ills.

"Oh, It's his lyrical content"/ and his song "Guilty Conscience" has gotten such rotten responses/ and all of this controversy circles me/ and it seems like the media immediately points a finger at me/.../ When a dude gets bullied and shoots up his school/ and they blame it on Marilyn and heroin/ and where were the parents at/ look where it's at/ middle America/ now it's a tragedy/ now it's so sad to see/ in upper class cities having this happening/ then attack Eminem because I rap this way..."

Eminem's statement puts together, in so many lines, what I have tried to do over the course of a number of columns, and he makes it all rhyme. Certainly no easy feat, but to look past what he says is folly for his critics.

He accurately points out the tendency of the media to turn on itself when something the magnitude of Columbine happens. They suggest that it must have been the movies that did it, or the television shows, or the video games or the music. Again and again, media organizations put Doom on their magazine covers and spoke to concerned moms about the effect that music was having over their children. Again and again, what were we all fed?

That it actually was the media causing these things. Joe Lieberman is making a campaign out of it, and Tipper Gore is partially responsible for those damn "Parental Advisory: Explicit Lyrics" stickers that occasionally stymie children in their attempts to have total access to entertainment.

But what kind of ignorance does it take to blame the media for society's violence when a few isolated children do things like shoot up their schools? It sounds cold, I acknowledge, but never once was it considered a possible isolated incident, despite the fact that six happened within a year.

The interesting thing is, what happened a few weeks after Columbine? In Georgia, a man walked into his office after losing a lot of money on the stock market and started shooting.

–Now, broken down, the kids at Columbine were set off after a set of events (being picked on), flipped out, and responded (killing 15).

–In Georgia, a man was set off after a set of events (a sudden downturn in the market losing him hundreds of thousands of dollars), flipped out and responded (killing six).

If someone can explain the difference, I'd truly be interested. The only one that I can find is in the response to the shooting afterward. Nobody suggested that the man in Georgia couldn't handle the media coming his way, yet two children (or adults, depending on which legal system is consulted) are the apparent victims of the media.

That break down even comes without looking at the second, and yet equally accurate, second part of the lyrics, where he suggests that where the violence was taking place (read: not urban areas) and who it involved (read: not minorities) riled people up as much as anything.

Was rap causing violence amongst young black males in the 1980's and early 90's in inner city areas? Apparently not, as there was never a great movement against it. Is rap causing violence amongst white, middle-to-upper class males in suburban areas now? Apparently, but artistically, are we to believe that it changed that much?

Of course we aren't. The arguments against media and for its control and censoring are made by people who can't accept their own failure when it comes to the development of a non-violent society, rest assured, they did fail. Their only response now is to suggest that the media's messages and the kids who are too stupid to know any different are at fault.

It couldn't be them. No one can blame them or suggest they're lying. After all, "they are/ whatever they say they are/ and if they weren't/ why would they say they were?"

Or does that challenge them too much?

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Elder statesman

ROB SCHULZE

I feel old.

Now, I know, I'm really not old. Youth could probably be defined fairly accurately as "the time in one's life where one can paint one's fingernails and pierce one's face and have no one even blink," and that's pretty much were I am now. Even with all that, however, the feeling that my age is horribly advancing like some flippin' tide or whatnot is hard to suppress.

Let me give you some illustrations:

I was working at the DC the other day when this girl started talking with me and some of the other employees. She asked us what grade we were in; we were all juniors and seniors. It turned out that she was a freshman, whereupon she said these fateful words: "Wow, you're all big people."

I was at a party the other day with some truly annihilated people – also, as it absolutely had to be, freshman. They were puking in the bushes, falling down all over the place, talking about how wonderful it was to be living in Northeast – typical drunken stupidity. I thought they looked kind of, well, sad. You could just tell that they hadn't ever done anything like this before, that they were totally lost, and that they were to be more pitied than anything else. I was trying to help out a little – you know, encourage them to drink water, not to drive home; things like that. I was the voice of reason – tell me that isn't a horribly frightening scenario.

The problem is that it seems to me like it was only yesterday (Wednesday) that I, myself, was the stupid idiot skinny freshman tossing cookies all over my couch because I just didn't know any better. And, true, I'm still a fairly skinny (little bigger in the gut, perhaps) stupid idiot, but now I manage to toss my cookies exclusively in plastic bags, which can then be tied and placed neatly into the proper trash room receptacles.

You'd best be taking notes.

Of course, most of this old-age-feeling comes from turning twenty this weekend. Yep, the land of the teenager fades so very quickly. No longer will I be allowed to become angry for no specific reason, develop hard-ons without discernable cause, and pretend that my parents really don't like me. Instead, I'll have to do mature stuff, like play high-stakes canasta and vacuum. I'm not excited.

Two years of college definitely changes a person. Since I arrived at the Golden Gates of Webster Hall all those many moons ago, I've become a published writer, an RA, a dishwasher, a friend, a boyfriend, an ex-boyfriend, straightedge, drunk, and so many other things that it's hard to believe that my head hasn't exploded from the strain of remembering it all.

When I look back at me when I came here, I see a different person. It's kind of fun, and funny, to look at my license (age: 16), my UCard (age: 17), and my face now (age: almost 20); evolution in progress. Which brings to mind the obvious question: What the hell happened to me?

Well, I guess I've had some great times, some miserable times, and a bunch of stuff in the middle range. That's plenty to age a guy, sure enough. And I'm not done yet.

Getting old doesn't mean that your life has to stop. Yeah, I'm not a teenager anymore, and yeah, to that freshman girl in the DC me and my friends look really, really old. So what? Maybe now I'll stop getting zits.

The past month of my life I've kind of started over. I've moved to Southwest, a place I'd almost never been in my entire life, a place where I didn't know anybody. I'm glad I did; I've made some great new friends. I live alone now. For the first time in my life, the only person who's there when I come home at night is me. It's a strange sort of new experience. Living alone has its benefits and its drawbacks, and it's fun to try and deal with them. I have a new level of responsibility in my schoolwork and my various jobs – people really depend on me to come through now. I think I'm handling it fairly well. There's also been some other stuff that I already wrote about and won't bore you with again, but the point is that despite all the nostalgia and regret that goes along with a sort of milestone birthday and advancing age there's also the excitement for the present.

Yeah, I get all pissy and depressed sometimes about what went wrong and what's gone and how it isn't going to come back and all that happy horsepie garbage. I listen to horrible depressing music and bury my head in my arms and think bad thoughts. Then I realize that I'm just being stupid. What's over is over. Right now my life is good. I have good friends, good jobs, and good times. I've bought almost all my textbooks. Tomorrow may just be a hell of a lot worse than what I've got right now, so I may as well enjoy it.

Besides, just because I'm an old man doesn't mean I have to completely give up random hard-ons.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Teen Angst

Thursday, September 21, 2000

ARTS & F'N LIVING

"This is my last resort"

"I'm a loser and sooner or later I'll be dead"

Cutting their lives into little pieces

"School is jail"

"I never thought I'd die alone"

"Everybody's got friends who will back them up. People are usually all talk." – Matthew Kovach

"DON'T BLAME ME WHEN LITTLE ERIC JUMPS OFF THE TERRACE"

Additional angst, as Salad gets Angry; today in Significant Others

ENTRAIN
All One
Dolphin Safe Records

How do you satisfy a large fan-base that wants more of your unique hybrid of rock, blues, ska and jazz? Put out an album over flowing with all of the above, and offer a few new twists for them to discover along the way.

Boston based Entrain is at it again with the release of their fourth studio album All One. The album is what any Entrain fan would expect, and at the same time offers new fans a comfortable entry point into the band's world flavored catalog.

Entrain's one world message is evident on all the new tracks, most notably album opener "Letter to the World." As lead singer Brian Alex sings "The red man tried to teach us long ago/ we're just man and you're the Mother Earth," the dirty sing percussion section of Tom Major, Sam Holmstock and Hilari Noble keep things moving tightly in the background.

"Back in a Minute" is a reggae tinged track that spins the tale of a man unsympathetic musicians who wants to get off the road and spend time with his family while "2 Different Paradigms" a song that tackles the side of a relationship split in two, benefits greatly from the strong vocals of bassist Ned Nugent.

The album's strongest track is "Off This Train," whose syncopated beat and passionate vocals work perfectly off one another. The Latin-tinged guitar work plays out perfectly in the background, floating seamlessly in and out. Once again, it is the solid percussion section that wraps the package up and neatly sends it home.

Entrain's huge success on the East coast is entirely deserved. Their approach to music is honest and energetic, two qualities that most bands seem to have forsaken. Check these guys out. (Matthew Despres)

MARVELOUS 3
Readysexgo
Hi-Fi Elektra

This album isn't very good.

I mean, it isn't horrible. It's kind of fun, actually, in a guilty kind of way, with lyrics about waking up covered in semen ("Supernatural Blonde") and doing the nasty in every sort of way. It rocks sort-of hard, in a pops sort of way, and the pictures of the tattoo-covered band have them doing illicit things to mannequins while wearing Guns n Roses shirts. This all should add up to a good listen.

What you actually get is somewhat disappointing. The first Marvelous 3 song I ever heard was "Freak of the Week," and it was great. It was a cool fast heavy sort of thing that lasted about three minutes, had a solo, and a catchy chorus. It wasn't about anything in particular ("I spend a lot on all the clothes that I got, 'cuz all the geeks that I meet, they all look cooler than me"), but it was just so fun. Readysexgo should have been more of the same, but, sadly, the band refuses to deliver.

significant others

It's great to have a song called "Sugarbuzz," again about nothing ("I'll be getting real drunk and making fun of everybody, ain't nobody gonna get me down... you can stick that sign up your ass"), but this song shouldn't be a mid-paced ballad type thing with over-long musical wanderings. Songs like that shouldn't make you think, just make you rock a little while driving or attempting to study. Marvelous 3 seem to want you to pay attention to their lyrics, which are either meaningless or banal love odes, when what they should be doing is making the songs so cool-sounding that you don't have to listen to what they lyrics say, because it doesn't matter. That's what mainstream pop-rock is all about, and these guys have forgotten that.

Sure, It isn't all bad. "Little Head," the first song, actually got me excited for a little while because it is actually a fairly cool fast song, and "Better Off Alone" pulls of the 'please, listen to our socially conscious lyrics' thing better than any song on the album. These are, however, the few bright spots on an otherwise super-shady release that fails to deliver.

When all is said and done, Readysexgo is an album with a great name, great artwork, and music that just can't live up. Trying to straddle the line between pop and serious rock, it just falls short of both. While not a truly deplorable effort, there are simply better purchases to be had in this genre. Marvelous is not the word I'd use. (Rob Schulze)

MOCEAN WORKER
Aural & Hearty
PLMS Records

The following sound byte from Mixer, "At last we finally see what can really happen when a genius goes crazy with freedom. Long live the insane," can be seen traipsing on the front cover of Mocean Worker's new album Aural & Hearty.

I'm assuming Mixer meant "crazy with freedom" as in "expanding his musical horizons," and not "crazy with freedom" as in "the record label was actually crazy enough to release an album like this." The latter isn't supposed to sound harsh. It just means that Mocean Worker's sound is different than some of the other bands out there today.

There's also a problem when one uses the word "genius" to describe an artist's work. It can mean that his or her work is the best thing since sliced bread. Or it can also mean that it's a little too good and the effect might be lost on the target audience or appeal only to a small percentage of the listening population upon the time of release.

The first song on the album, "Hey Baby" is reminiscent of a night at a retro 80's bar, complete with the most unsuccessful pickup line ever, the aforementioned "hey baby," being repeated over and over again. Other songs on the album, including "Air Suspension" and "Into Thin Air" contain late night dance party sounding mixes.

The songs "Velvet Black Sky," "Waiting for Verdeaux," and "Step" are hard to place in a category people might recognize, since they combine techno aspects, such as one line being repeated over and over, to what could very well be a non-techno song. Because of the different styles of music used, these songs are the most enjoyable ones on the album.

Mocean Worker's biggest drawback is the lack of innovation in each song. A song starts out great, but the listener gets the same sound for the remainder of the song. The listener could get the full effect by listening to the first thirty seconds and fast forwarding through the rest of the album.

Did Mixer go too far when they called Mocean Worker a genius? No. There are a few songs on the CD that are enjoyable and innovative. There are also a few that may take more than one listen to warm up to them, which is a problem because most artists like this don't get radio airplay.

The best scenario in which I can see this CD being a success is for those who are familiar with the dance scene or for those who crave a different type of sound. (Andrew Johnson)

ANGRY SALAD
Angry Salad
The Blackbird Recording Company

It takes all of five seconds for the deja vu to kick in, that creepy feeling that leaves you asking, "Where have I heard this before?"

The answer? Everywhere.

Angry Salad, who emerged from Brown University in 1993, sounds like every other band on Modern Rock radio, relying on stock riffs and sophomoric lyrics to carry their album past the 40-minute mark. That's not to say they are entirely void of talent; they play their instruments well, but fail in their attempt to forge new voices from them.

Opening track "The Milkshake Song" has been the bands meal ticket thus far, scoring the band both substantial radio play in New England and prime TV gigs like the "Sexy Teens" episode of the Jenny Jones show. The song's refrain of "She gave me a milkshake and a kiss/I don't need a whole lot more than this" is typical pop fare that has easily slipped into radio play lists without disrupting the Top 40 formula.

The band eases into a brooding persona on songs like "Rico" (whose opening riff you've surely heard if own Metallica's black album) and "Saturday Girl," opting for slow and moody verses that culminate in reflective choruses that, frankly, we've all heard before. On the track "How does it feel to kill," lead singer Bob Whelan tries to channel U2's Bono on the last verse, a near fatal mistake for any singer trying to carve a niche of his own. Lead guitarist Alex Grossi manages to be the group's saving grace, drawing many a song out of the shadows with his capable guitar work.

Too much of the album, however, suffers from a lack of originality that seems to be the demon of most new bands. Music should challenge the listener, yielding both enjoyment and a reason to listen again. This album does neither. (Matthew Despres)

We Sell
BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS
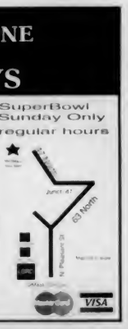
12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours
MONTAGUE MINI MART
We accept Visa & Mastercard
367-9551
60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus



Attention All New Students:
For your convenience
Meningitis Vaccine Clinic
University Health Services
Tuesday, October 3, 2000
Tuesday, October 10, 2000
Students under the age of 30 who would like to receive the vaccine should call the University Health Services at 577-5101 and ask for an appointment with the Meningitis Clinic. The cost of immunization is $75. Cash, check or credit card accepted. For additional information, call the Public Health Line at 577-5044.

■ angst

continued from page 5

One young woman said that the instance was racially provoked, but in the same sense was racially covered. She acknowledged that the shooter's targets were minorities, but also felt that if the story took place in a "black school," then people would not have cared.

Another student said he thought that the students were misunderstood, and that the students were desperately trying to be heard. "The world needs the individualized and not grouped," he said.

When asked if the media had any influence on the situation, they responded with a very different take on how the story has previously been studied. One student said, "It was definitely the media's fault. The principal watches '20/20' and gets all paranoid, so he changes the rules. They got cops all over the property now." One student had the quote of the day when he said, "School is jail."

Not everyone agreed with that theory, though. One student who withdrew from school said, "You don't know how good you have it. In my old school [it was not specified where that was] we didn't have shit. Here you have full science labs and stuff like that."

Though the students recognized the issues in schools, they denied any fear of other students. Kouach said, "Everybody's got friends who will back them up. People are usually all talk."

If people are "all talk," then what are they talking about? The students showed discontent for diversity and being politically correct. One student went far enough to say, "Marches piss me off!"

In today's world of music, one of the least politically correct entertainers is rapper Eminem. His new album The Marshall Mathers LP has brought him quite a bit of scrutiny, and this is something that is very recognized in high schools all over the country.

When asked what Eminem means by "Hate fags? Answer's yes," one student put his middle finger in the air and smiled, denoting approval. The student said, "[Eminem says] what he says to piss you off." One student also noted, "He doesn't mean 'gay'. He's an artist who's saying what he feels."

What was immediately clear is that the students completely ignored their abhorrence of diversity and political correctness, but did not acknowledge that Eminem had the same opinion. They thought Eminem was just trying to shock people. His words are meaningless, and what is important is the approach he used.

Again, the students blamed parents for the controversy surrounding Eminem. One student said, "Parents should know what you're doing. Music does influence people, and people who listen to violent music are more violent people." This brought criticism from one boy, who asked, "Just because I listen to metal, does that mean that I'm going to kill someone?"

When asked about a line about teen suicide in Eminem's song, "Who Knew," one person even suggested that the public "stop being so touchy, and Eminem "just doesn't care."

After discussing that line, the students were asked if they found a similarity in the songs, "Last Resort" by Papa Roach, "Loser" by Three Doors Down and Blink-182's "Adam's Song." One student said, "They all sound like suicide music, but they're good."

All three songs deal with suicide and depression. When the students were asked why these songs are so popular, one said, "They've had enough. They're not saying, go out there and do this,' but they're telling you that it (suicide) is out there, and it needs to be dealt with."

We chatted about the lyrics in Papa Roach's "Last resort" that follow; "Cut my life into pieces/ I've reached my last resort/ Suffocation no breathing/ Don't give a fuck if I cut my arm bleeding/ Would it be wrong? Would it be right/ If I took my life tonight/ Chances are that I might/ Mutilation out of sight/ And I'm contemplating suicide."

The students agreed that other people their age think like this, and that it is not uncommon to consider suicide on an individual basis. However, when I asked them what types of people commit suicide, one said, "crazy individuals who feel like there's nothing left for them anymore." Another person said, "You look at your life and realize you got shitty parents, shitty school, shitty friends and think there must be better."

When asked if suicide was fashionable, they all said no. On the other hand, when asked if suicide sells, they all agreed that it definitely does. Kouach said that suicide was an "attention grabber," and then alluded to the movie Pump Up the Volume starring Christian Slater.

Though all of the students could appear happy on the surface, it only takes a ten-minute conversation with them to realize that there are real problems that engulf youth in today's society. Teenagers are filled with emotion and angst. The saddest part is that they seem to be ignored. Everyone wants to hear what the experts have to say on such important matters, but it is much too common that people forget who the most important members of the controversy actually are.

When asked what makes them mad, the students did not hesitate in changing the question. Their answers were not in the form of "what," but in the form of "whom." "Teachers, principles, cops and authority," were all blatant responses to the question. It was summed up best when one person said, "Anyone who has to show that they're better than me. That's what makes me angry!"

COURTESY JONATHAN MANNION

Eminem has the expression that truly represents frustration and anger in today's youthful society.

COURTESY AREA PUBLICITY

The Matrix is one of the films criticized for glorifying violence.

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow London Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong
Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zurich Istanbul
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

DRIVERS WANTED
Would you like to make $$$$$$$$MONEY$$$$$$$$
and have all your work done BEFORE Breakfast?
Have a car & Have Tuesday & Thursday from 7:30-9:30 am free?
..then come join the UMASS Daily Collegian Team as a delivery driver.
OR
Would you like to make money on your lunch break? If you have a pick-up truck & have just an hour free from 11am to 1pm Monday through Friday ...then join the Collegian Team by picking up extra papers and driving them to Recycling (both are on campus locations).

If you are interested, please contact Shawn Ilinitch at the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus center, room 113, by phone 545-3500, or call Charlie Jacco at 256-8012.

Pizza Party at the CAM!
Antonio's
Meet Us At Antonio's Pizza!
31 N Pleasant St Amherst
Sept. 23
3-6pm
Be an Internet Star!
mass LIVE
www.masslive.com
Be one of the 1st 50 people to show up at MassLive.com's Pizza Party, say "Pizza Party on the cam!" and get a Free Slice of Antonio's Cheese Pizza!
Win Prizes!
Broadcast Live over the World Wide Web!
Watch it live at www.masslive.com/campuscam

Eminem hates people who don t write for Arts, too. So, uh, you should probably come down here to the Campus Center Basementand get started...

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

Sauza Gold Tequila 750	$11.99
Absolute 750	$14.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack	$9.99 +Dep
Beck's , Beck's Dark 12 Pack	$9.99 +Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$10.99 +Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack	$9.99 +Dep
Spaten Lager 6 Pack	$5.49 +Dep

Visit the Two for $9.99 International Wine Section

THE ASIAN DANCE AND MUSIC PROGRAM PRESENTS
Shashank and the Carnatic Music Ensemble
Sunday, September 24
Bowker Auditorium at 8pm
"Playing several flutes of varying lengths, Shashank manifested an ineffable sweetness of tone throughout even the most briskly florid embellishments, and inspired his colleagues to some ecstatic flights of improvisation."
–Thomas May
The Washington Post
Professor Indira Peterson will give a pre-concert talk on Carnatic music at 7:30pm.
www.indiaartist.com

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS 1969
UMASS Transit Service Needs YOU!!!
UMass Transit Bus Drivers are needed now!!!! You can have fun, make excellent money, and have plenty of opportunities for advancement. Get in on one of the best jobs on campus.
Training sessions are forming now! Call us at 545-0056. Try it. You'll like it!
We offer you paid training, starting pay at $8.80 per hour with an increase every semester, and opportunity to get real management experience, a work schedule that fits your class schedule, and a marketable Class B Commercial Driver's License.
It's your bus service so help keep us rolling!!!

Castaway Lounge
Routes 5 & 10, Whately, MA • (413) 665-8733
(North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & 10 North 2 miles, South of 91 Exit 24 take route 5 & 10 South 2 miles)
Open to all students over 21 years old
We are now hiring girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business
We are now open for Monday Night Football @ 4pm
• 6 Dancers • Food • Prizes
VIP room always open for private parties

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

On September 26-29 the New WORLD Theater will present Intersections II, a three and a half day international, interdisciplinary artistic conference. Highlighted performances are Antigona (9/26), Somewhere in the Dream (9/27) and Uttar Priyadarshi (9/28). The conference will also feature keynote speakers from the theatre, music, and literary communities. Registration is required for admittance to all lectures and performances and although it does cost money, it's more than worth the price of entry. Call the New WORLD Theater for more info (545-1972) or visit their website at www.newworldtheater.org.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct. 28.
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Abstract Notions: thru Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Scatterlings: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Paul Stopforth
Opening reception: Sept. 17, 2-5 p.m.
Hampden Gallery, UMass

UMass Summer in France 2000: thru 22
Work by UMass art students
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Student Union Art Gallery, UMass

Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community: thru Oct. 17
Work by various artists
Opening reception Sept. 19, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House, UMass

New Abstraction: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Benjamin Shohan
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Central Gallery, UMass

MUSIC

Matchbox Twenty
Sept. 22, 7:30 p.m.
Mullins Center

Chris Barron (Spin Doctors) and the Good Daddy Five, The Winefield, plus Fire Engine Red
Sept. 22, 8:30 p.m.
Skybox

Riverfest, featuring Ben Harper Juliana Hatfield, Entrain, etc.
Sept. 24, 12 p.m - 8 p.m.
Three County Fair Grounds, Northampton

Shashank and the Carnatic Music Ensemble
Sept. 24, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

Macy Gray
Sept. 24, 8 p.m.
John M. Green Hall, Smith College

Angie Apara
Sept. 24, 8:30
Skybox

THEATRE/DANCE

Triple Espresso
Now through Sept. 24, 8 p.m.
CityStage, Springfield

Theater Dept. Auditions
House of Wives
Sept. 21 & 22, 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.
Fine Arts Center, Room 204

Chaos Theory: Turbulence
The Valley's Professional Dance Company
Sept. 21-23, 8 p.m.
Rand Theater

Grupo Cultural's Antigona
Sept. 26, 7:30 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

Somewhere in the Dream
Sept. 27, 7:30 p.m.
Rand Theater

Ratan Thiyam's Chorus Repertory Theater
Uttar-Priyadarshi: The Final Beautitude
Sept. 28, 7:30 p.m.
Concert Hall

FILM

Eight Annual Short Attention Span Film Festival
Sept. 22, 7 p.m.
Franklin Patterson Main Lecture Hall
Hampshire College

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Sept. 21, 9 p.m.
Skybox

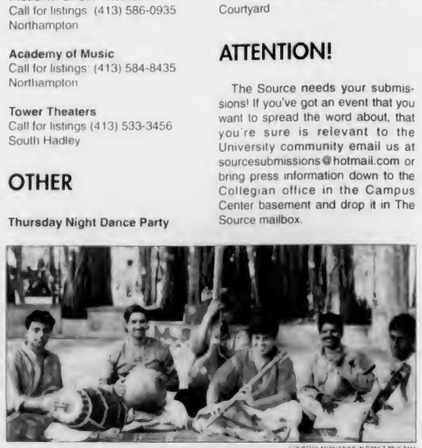
Upright Citizens Brigade
Sept. 22, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

Annual UMass Pow Wow
Sept. 23-24, 10 a.m. – 6 p.m.
Haigis Mall Common

Multilinguai Poetry Fest
Sept. 26, 4:30 p.m.
WEB DuBois Library, Garden Courtyard

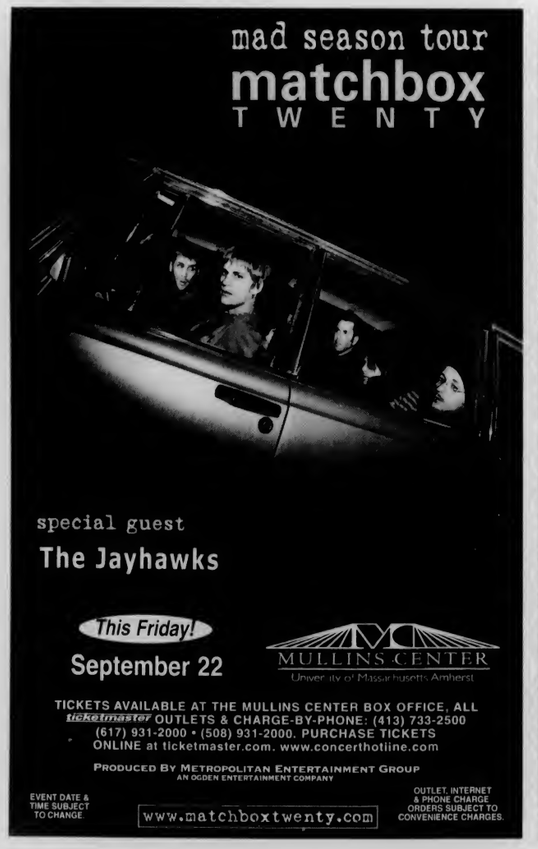
ATTENTION!

The Source needs your submissions! If you've got an event that you want to spread the word about, that you're sure is relevant to the University community email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com or bring press information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement and drop it in The Source mailbox.



COURTESY ASIAN MUSIC & DANCE PROGRAM

Shashank and the Carnatic Music Ensemble come to UMass this Sunday at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium



mad season tour
matchbox
TWENTY
special guest
The Jayhawks
This Friday!
September 22
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE, ALL ticketmaster OUTLETS & CHARGE-BY-PHONE: (413) 733-2500 (617) 931-2000 • (508) 931-2000. PURCHASE TICKETS ONLINE at ticketmaster.com. www.concerthotline.com
PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP AN OGDEN ENTERTAINMENT COMPANY
EVENT DATE & TIME SUBJECT TO CHANGE
www.matchboxtwenty.com
OUTLET, INTERNET & PHONE CHARGE ORDERS SUBJECT TO CONVENIENCE CHARGES.

SUNDAY
true to the music
SEPTEMBER 24
THE RIVERFEST
NOON-8 PM • THREE COUNTY FAIRGROUNDS • NORTHAMPTON, MA
BEN HARPER
AND THE INNOCENT CRIMINALS
SONIC YOUTH
TOOTS & THE MAYTALS
GALACTIC
SLEATER-KINNEY
MARTIN SEXTON
GROOVE COLLECTIVE JULIANA HATFIELD
RAHZEL
THE GODFATHER OF NOYZE
PLUS... others on the collgemusic.com developing artists stage
FOOD VENDORS • ARTS & CRAFTS VENDORS
Tix: $30 adv. $35 at the gate. On sale at all tickets.com outlets (located in Strawberries record stores), 8-Side Records in Northampton and For The Record in Amherst. On line at tickets.com. By phone at 800-477-6849 presented by MassConcerts Advocate
www.massconcerts.com

E! TV, Spring Break and Hugh Hefner

Hello all. Welcome to Scott Newport's television column. It's not exactly what you are used to. This won't be an in depth tryst into Ross and Rachel's love life on "Friends." This isn't the Ryan Benharris era. Its Scott's time. So what are we going to talk about? The E! Entertainment Network of course. Well that and my newly found desire to be a smut lord.

As your average UMass student, I was as excited as any returning individual with the prospect of a slight diversification in our morbid TV line-up. Who can deny that the additions of MTV, ESPN and Sci-Fi have made UMass dorm life just that much more exciting? However E!, come on, was the University serious? Personally I really didn't see this network exactly making a big splash with either the learned college community or me. However as time has passed I have found myself having a strange sense of respect for this new channel.

For example, the Howard Stern show as made it into my watching schedule at least bi weekly now, no mean feat. Some might contend that it's just the same show that failed to make a big splash on the mainstream scene. This isn't true. The E! version has a public access feel that has made it one of that network's most popular shows for several years. Few people can deny that this show is one of the funniest shows on television, especially given its Wayne's World-esque budget. Lesbians with nun-chucks? A band called The Jesus Twins? It doesn't get any better than that.

Alright, Howard Stern, he's a personality. Maybe he's the one who made Scott want to go from mild mannered Econ student to Larry Flynt. Maybe it's this network's "Spring Break" series. Damn, just damn !Thanks Cara and Jackie!. I haven't seen this much skin since late night Cinemax. However, I have decided to go on spring break, so we'll leave it at that.

It wasn't this show that caught me, as some may be thinking. It didn't start my conversion. As a college man, it was the documentaries that did the job. What documentary could do this? There is only one man, only one house up to the task. Hugh Hefner and The Playboy Mansion. I mean look who we're talking about here – the man himself! I am no match. I don't even know what to tell you, the reader, about this guy's house. The fact that he has multiple chefs depending on his mood, or that he has a pool that empties into an artificial cave, I just have no idea what to say.

With the good comes the bad. The E! Network is not without fault. I can't take any more Joan Rivers. On how many carpets can this woman harass "B" celebrities? There is just something about her voice. I think I hear it in my nightmares. If she's your bag, however, I apologize. Does anyone really care about "who" Kevin Costner is wearing to "For Love of the Game 2, Revenge of the Kipper"? No! I except E! Oh well, no one is perfect. I think they are trying to get the Oprah crowd, but who can really tell?

I am in no way saying that E! is my favorite network (bless you Fox!), I don't want to go out and "get a room" with the E! Network, but for cable it's not half bad, give it a shot before condemning it to TV hell. Just avoid the fashion extravaganzas like the black death. Seriously!

Given all its faults however, E! still made me want to be Hugh Hefner. The man is just so slick. I think being a smut peddler would work for me, or a disc jockey. I'll forget it, I want to be a firestarter!

Ben Harper, Sonic Youth headline The River's annual music festival

The River 95.3, in conjunction with MassConcerts, is sponsoring quite a show this Sunday at Northampton's Three County Fair Grounds with the first annual Riverfest, the Northampton Music Festival, joining headlining artist Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals are Sonic Youth, Juliana Hatfield, Rahzel, and Entrain—to name a few.

Harper has been enjoying Top 40 adoration since the summer with "Steal My Kisses" off his spring release Burn to Shine. Harper's known and loved for his fusion of folk, funk and Delta blues. He's been building a steady fan base since the early 90's with the release of Welcome to the Cruel World. His follow up albums, Fight For Your Mind and The Will to Live have made him one of the foremost predecessors of names like Bob Marley, Cat Stevens and Jimi Hendrix.

While performers like Galactic, Sleater-Kinney, Martin Sexton, and Toots & Maytals play the mainstage with other headlining bands, the Riverfest will also feature local musicians on a smaller, develop artists stage.

Progressive food and crafts stands will also come together to celebrate the coming of the fall harvest during this full day event.

Tickets are still on sale online at tickets.com, by phone 1800-477-6849 or in person at B-Side Records in Northampton and For The Record in Amherst. Gates open at the fairgrounds at 11:30 a.m. and the music begins at noon.

Kristi Cervantes

Beloved Seuss comes to life

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Just recently, while sitting in my podiatrist's waiting room, I spied among the magazines on the coffee table before me Dr. Seuss' The Foot Book. Reading a few pages, this nineteen year old, college sophomore reacquired his youth, however briefly. It did my heart good to know that even nine years after the death of Theodore Geisel (Seuss' real name) his spellbinding stories chockful of quirky characters are still ever-present in today's society.

Take for example the upcoming film adaptation of How the Grinch Stole Christmas (abbreviated to The Grinch) with rubberface Jim Carrey in the role of Seuss' most infamous character.

Yet the most recent buzz is over Seussical The Musical, a staged adaptation of the good doctor's most well known stories, weaved into one plot. If you are among the throng of those out there who are scratching their head in perpanderance as to how Seuss's zany worlds can transend from the page to the stage, look be not alone.

Pace Productions, the same folks who brought you Ragtime and the revival of Chicago, knew from the get-go what a large undertaking they had before them, but that did not daunt them. Instead, they brought in the big guns of Broadway to make Seussical The Musical the hottest ticket in town.

As the show begins we meet the Cat In The Hat (David Shiner), who is not only the show's narrator, but also takes part in the scenes are various comical characters. As the performance begins, the cast immediately reels the audience in with the show stopper, "Oh, The Things You Can Think!" in which we're transported from the theatre in which we sit to a magical jungle home to Horton the Elephant (Kevin Chamberlain). Believing that he hears a voice on a speck of dust that has landed on a clover, Horton is ridiculed as the world's biggest fool. Despite this, Horton befriends the people of Whoville who reside on the speck, especially young Jojo (Andrew Keenan Bolger). Much like Horton, Jojo fails to be recognized for his great ideas. The two bond over the rousing ballad "Alone In the Universe."

Someone who has not shrunken Horton of attention is Gertrude McFuzz (Janine LaManna) who's head over beak in love with him, but he does not seem to notice. She thinks it's her pattrs, one-feathered tail that causes Horton's aversion, but as she soon discovers, it's not the physical qualities that matter most.

Jojo's "thinks" have gotten out of hand, and sent him to military school under the tutilage of General Genghis Khan Schmitz (Erick Devine). It's not long before a war erupts, and our tiny protagonist is feared to be a goner.

Meanwhile, Horton has been persuaded by sexy Mayzie LaBird (Michelle Pawk) to nest her egg while she goes out and has some fun. Instead of returning to her matriarchal responsibilities, she takes up in Palm Beach, leaving Horton to be captured by hunters and sold to The Circus McGurkus.

It's midway through Act Two that we again find on war refugee Jojo this time in the company of The Estrax (Alice Ripley), who teaches a lesson about taking care of the environment. As important as this subject is in our society, it arrives too far along in the show to have the effect and punch it is meant to impart. This vignette appears as the other subplots are approaching their conclusion and instead of lifting the show up, it in turn brings it down.

Somehow, a happy ending occurs shortly thereafter as Jojo is reunited with his family. Whoville is saved, Horton is vindicated, and Gertrude finally gets the attention she so rightly deserves. The moral lessons are simple: Believe in yourself, don't give up and always stick to them.

If Seussical The Musical has any faults, it's trying to cram too much Seuss into one show. The attention span of the average nine year-olds for whom his books were written does not last the show's two and a half hour running time. In addition, Chamberlain's obsessive portrayal of Horton lacks any depth to the character, and it is a bore to watch him make his way through the scenes.

However, more can be said for the show's high points than its low ones. Namely, David Shiner in the role of The Cat In The Hat is marvelous, and truly Tony Award-worthy. Be sure to make it back before intermission to see how he plays with the audience, all in pantomime. Throughout, he'll break into refrains of the show's most memorable and amusing ditds. "How Lucky You Are" The supporting cast is terrific, as well. LaManna is loveable as McFuzz, and Keenan Bolger is most certainly an upcoming star in the making.

The line between Seussical The Musical being only a good show and being the fabulous one that it is due to the never-disappointing collaboration of Stephen Flaherty and Lynn Ahrens as composer and lyricist respectively. Like their previous works, Ragtime, Once On This Island, and the film Anastasia, the team has a knack for nailing the genre of music that best fits the show. And since Seuss's stories have so many emotions, Flaherty's music follows that to a tee. There's gospel, rock, country, ballads, rag, folk and so on. Furthermore, Ahrens' clever lyrics liven up the melodies and are intriguing to listen to and see what come next.

Director Frank Galatti (Ragtime) has adorned the stage with bright and vivid sets and lights, each fitting for a Dr. Seuss play. The script was cleverly written, and stays true to Seuss's form. The costumes were detail and dull, but that is no matter, since they will be totally revamped for their Broadway debut in November.

Seussical The Musical is a fitting tribute to one of America's most loved and popular authors, and much like his stories, will live on in children's and adults' hearts for years to come.

Four Seasons
CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS
WINE & LIQUOR

SMUTTYNOSE Case 24 btls $18.99+ dep	MOLSON Case 24 btls $16.99+ dep	ROLLING ROCK Case 24 btls $14.99+ dep	Tailgating Special! Saturday Only! FREE 10 lbs ICE With every case.
BUSCH Case 24 btls $9.99+ dep	PABST Case 24 btls $9.49+ dep	THE BEAST 30pk cans $10.49+ dep	FREE 5 lbs ICE With every 12 pack.
BASS ALE 12 pack btls $11.99+ dep	MIKE'S 12 pack btls $9.99+ dep	SAM ADAMS 12 pack btls $9.99+ dep	Sale ends 9/25/00

333 Russell St. (RTE 9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon.-Sat. 9am-11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. I.D.s checked by Legal Age Software.

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

resources
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

Silver Fimo Plaster Beads Leather Silkpainting Copper Tie-dye Screenprinting Brass Photo Marbling Buttonmaking Stained Glass AND MORE
STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER
WE OFFER: FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FROM THE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE. $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR.
AS A MEMBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS

Monday	CLOSED
Tuesday - Thursday	11:00-5:00
Friday	11:00-6:00
Saturday-Sunday	1:00-6:00

WE OFFER: SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER, THESE WORKSHOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES
PHONE 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr
THE CRAFT CENTER IS LOCATED IN THE BASEMENT OF THE STUDENT UNION HIRING SKILLED STUDENTS

The Smashing Pumpkins release final Internet-only LP for fans

David Troupes
Collegian Staff

THE SMASHING PUMPKINS
MACHINA II/Friends and Enemies of Modern Music

despite all my rage/
I am still just a rat in a cage/then someone will save/
what is lost can never be saved

Once merely a pithy angst-rock anthem chorus, these lines, spit out by the nasal, broken-glass vocals of one Billy Corgan, take on a new significance in light of this summer's announcement that by the end of the year the Chicago rock group Smashing Pumpkins will be no more. The announcement comes on the heels of the Pumpkins' February release, MACHINA/The Machines of God, which met with lukewarm critical acceptance and disappointing sales figures (following 1998's equally unenthusiastically-received Adore).

"It's difficult to compete with the Britney Spears of the world," Corgan said during the radio interview in which he made the announcement, indicating that the changing face of mainstream music may have something to do with the band's decision to pull the plug; in a market dominated by cookie-cutter pop and metal acts, the Pumpkins have certainly had a hard time finding an audience for the left-of-center nature of their recent releases.

Corgan and co. made their debut with 1991's psychedelic Gish, but didn't catch the world's attention until their 1993 sophomore release, Siamese Dream, which helped invent the wall-of-guitars production approach and, with such hits singles as "Today" and "Disarm," spoke on behalf of a generation of alienated suburban teens. The album went triple-platinum, and was followed by their 1995 sweeping double-disc opus Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness, which eventually sold five million copies and established the Pumpkins as a leader of the post-grunge alternative rock community. After such success, the relative commercial failures of Adore and MACHINA must come as a slap in the face.

Before their final bow-out, however, the Pumpkins found time to put together one final album, a 25-track collection of MACHINA-era recordings. When the band approached their label (Virgin Records) about releasing the album, however, they weren't interested, feeling that MACHINA's poor sales record did nothing to justify another album, especially so soon.

And so, as a final gesture of contempt for a record label that refused to support a project seen as an inevitable commercial failure, the band produced 25 individually-numbered vinyl copies of MACHINA II/The Friends and Enemies of Modern Music, handed them out to key players in the realm of on-line Smashing Pumpkins fandom, and watched as the album was bootlegged, digitized, and disseminated, free of charge.

A romantic and appealing vision of a band's devotion to their fans? Certainly, in a way, but what about fans who don't have the sort of high-speed internet access needed to download a 25-track album? No doubt that someone, somewhere, is being forced to pay through the nose to some unscrupulous bootleg dealer to hear this album. And why vinyl? Having to rip mp3s from a record is sure to produce more hiss than from a digital source. It's difficult not to see this as an unfortunately low-key and half-inflated end to one of modern alternative rock & roll's founding bands.

Amplifying the sting of MACHINA II's inadequate distribution is the fact that much of this music is astounding, both within and without the context of the Pumpkins' existing catalogue. The album opens with "Slow Dawn," a rolling song of moderated force, punctuated by a howling guitar solo the likes of which haven't been heard since the days of Mellon Collie. Gone are Corgan's borderline-cliché lyrics of teen angst, and he sings instead about the subtle points of hope visible amid masses of people struggling to forget their own lives, surviving through the fleeting respite of night.

Following this is "Vanity," which, despite its electric heaviness, has a frank and mature beauty, both musically and lyrically. Its simple arrangement, featuring a scratchy, ringing rhythm guitar and a few layers of tasteful lead work, is a pleasant departure from the band's growing fondness of soupier musical textures and novel production techniques, as seen on MACHINA and Adore.

This is not to say, however, that such heavily- (perhaps over-) produced songs do not exist on MACHINA II. Following "Vanity" is "Saturnine," a plodding, gloomy song built upon effects-driven static and generally unable to erupt into the sort of seething broth of anger it clearly wishes it were. The Adore-era live gem "Let Me Give The World To You" is nearly buried by all of the layered acoustic and clean electric guitars playing the same basic rhythm figure, and "Home," played frequently live during the pre-MACHINA club tour, lost a lot of its momentum and charm in its studio translation, instead relying on drifting keyboard atmospherics to carry the song. The new version works well enough, but the "1979"-esque energy of the live performance is missed.

Other softer numbers include the remarkably under-produced "Innosense," the charming and short "If There Is a God" (appearing in two versions), and the James Iha-penned "Go." Anyone who's heard one Iha song has heard them all, but the inclusion one more of his wounded-love ballads is still appreciated.

And then came the rock. If there's one thing MACHINA II cannot be accused of, it's balking at the chance to kick the listener's ass one last time. Top among the new crop of rockers is "Cash Car Star," which was originally written in time to be included on Adore, but was left off (much to the record company's frustration) because the band didn't feel it fit stylistically with the rest of the album. Two versions appear on MACHINA II, with differences in lyrics and musical arrangement, although both versions succeed in pulling out all of the stops for a "Bullet With Butterfly Wings"-style balls-out parade of self-effacing rock star angst. You can read as much as you want into lines such as "yeah, we hope you'll understand/yeah, we've got a master plan/yeah, we're an American band for you," but in the face of the band's announced breakup, the furious riffing found in so many of MACHINA II's songs does

Turn to PUMPKINS, page 11

Your mom is going to hate our low fares.

southwest.com

$99 OR LESS

One-way with 7-day advance purchase when you purchase at southwest.com

You can now fly home anytime you want, even if it's just to do laundry. Just log on to southwest.com and you can get flights for $99 or less one-way. Be sure to purchase your tickets at least seven days in advance and by September 28, 2000. Seats are limited and won't be available on some flights that operate during very busy travel times and holiday periods like Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's. You can only take advantage of this deal online, so visit southwest.com for low fares. And don't forget to warn Mom.

The Fastest Way To Free Travel

Receive free travel twice as fast as a Rapid Rewards Member when you purchase Ticketless Travel on our web site. That means you earn a free ticket after only four roundtrips! To become a Member, sign up on southwest.com after purchasing and start enjoying Rapid Rewards.

southwest.com
a symbol of e-freedom™

©2000 Southwest Airlines Co.

FROM BRADLEY INTERNATIONAL TO:
(One-way with 7-day advance purchase)

Austin	$99
Baltimore/Washington (BWI) (29 miles to downtown Washington, D.C.)	$42
Birmingham	$99
Chicago (Midway)	$95
Cleveland	$88
Detroit	$99
Ft. Lauderdale (22 miles to downtown Miami)	$99
Houston (Hobby)	$99
Indianapolis	$99
Jackson	$99
Jacksonville	$99
Kansas City	$99
Las Vegas	$99
Louisville	$99
Miami (See Ft. Lauderdale)
Nashville	$95
New Orleans	$99
Omaha	$99
Ontario (Easy access to Southern California)	$99
Orlando	$99
Phoenix	$99
Raleigh-Durham	$70
St. Louis	$99
San Antonio	$99
Tampa Bay	$99
Washington, D.C. (See Baltimore/Washington)

Fares do not include federal excise tax of up to $2.75 that will be imposed on each flight segment of your itinerary. A flight segment is defined as a takeoff and a landing.

Offer applies to published, scheduled service and includes nonstop, direct (same plane), and connecting service.

Fares do not include airport taxes of up to $12 roundtrip. Fares are combinable with other Southwest fares. If combining with other fares, the most restrictive fare's rules apply. Tickets are nonrefundable but (except for tickets purchased through our Group Tickets program) may be applied toward future travel on Southwest Airlines. Travel through January 7, 2001. Fares are subject to change until ticketed. Any change in itinerary may result in an increase in fare.

FREE TICKET OFFER: Double credit offer requires purchase and travel through June 30, 2001. Changes to your itinerary may eliminate the double credit offer. After enrolling online, your plastic membership card will be mailed within 14–21 days and you must present it at the gate upon check-in each time you fly to receive credit toward a free ticket. All Rapid Rewards rules apply.

CLICKRADIO
Don't listen. Choose.

Paid Internships

for college students to promote ClickRadio on and around campus. Passion for music, marketing & cool technology necessary.

Send resume to interns@clickradio.com

www.clickradio.com

shop savor explore
THORNES MARKETPLACE
150 Main Street • Downtown Northampton

■ pumpkins

continued from page 10

a wonderful job of reminding us why we loved the Smashing Pumpkins in the first place, and why they'll be so sorely missed.

Sandwiching the second "Cash Car Star" are the punk-fast "Glass' Theme" and the more sledgehammer-ish "Dross," two more explosive rockers illustrating the Pumpkins' often-overlooked talent for poking fun at their own rock star status. ("Dross" opens with the deliciously self-mocking lines, "you say I'm beautiful/well I can't help it/you say I'm empty/we all know I'm full of shit.") Other heavy tracks on MACHINA II include a cover of James Brown's "Soul Power," the viciously fast and crunchy "White Spyder," and the angular, metallic "Lucky 13."

MACHINA II also contains different versions of several previously released songs from MACHINA. These include "Try, Try, Try" (featuring different lyrics and a more playful acoustic guitar/keyboard arrangement), "Heavy Metal Machine" (a monumentally awful remix which has no place on any album), and "Blue Skies Bring Tears" (excellently reworked with a much faster pace and higher rock quotient than the original). There're also alternate versions of "Speed Kills" (originally a b-side to "Stand Inside Your Love") and "Here's to the Atom Bomb" (b-side to "Try, Try, Try").

MACHINA II/The Friends and Enemies of Modern Music has difficulty stacking up as a coherent album because of the number of alternate and multiple versions of songs, but in the company of fellow bits-and-pieces collections Pisces Iscariot and The Aeroplane Flies High, it does a good job of footnoting the musical landscape of MACHINA/The Machines of God and, to a lesser extent, Adore. With few exceptions the songs are excellent, if at times for fans only.

MACHINA II makes its greatest impact, however, in demonstrating that the Smashing Pumpkins were innovators to the last, refusing to sit still musically, even when staring their own self-induced mortality in the face. Say what you will about the decision to pull the band's plug coinciding with evaporating record sales and media attention; their music stands as a testament to the evolution of art irregardless of commercial environment. The Smashing Pumpkins' career begins as it ended: a small group of musical outsiders, led by Billy Corgan, preaching their art to whoever will listen. I, for one, will forever be grateful for the ride.

The album can be downloaded from numerous internet websites, including http://www.billy-corgan.net and http://nspaa-student.utwente.nl.

COURTESY SAM SHELKRAD

Do I amuse You?

Along with Andy Dick, Janeane Garofalo is part of the iCast.com College Comedy Bake-Off Tour that hits the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday, October 3rd. Students interested in competing can call Wendy Zhu at 545-1278

Mike's Amaizing 4 Acre Massachusetts Minuteman Corn Maze
665-8331
Weekends 11am-5pm
Warner Farm, 23 So. Main St. Sunderland (across from the Millstone Market)

Made in USA

Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

Ain't no woman like the Daily Collegian.

Low Student Airfares

Eurailpasses

More Than 100 Departure Cities

Study Abroad

studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.

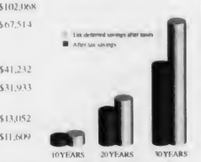
With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.

And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.* Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid history of investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.

So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan†

IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL



In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance or predict future results of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.

*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.

TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1.800.842.2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. †You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a personalized calculation of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1.800.842.2776. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc., distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2000 TIAA-CREF 08/03

Atlantis

WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL 6 NIGHTS A WEEK

HIP HOP W/ DJ SEMANTIK 9/21 $2

GROWROOM RECORDS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/ DJs BON BONS, HUSH, SIMI AND SALTY 9/22 $2

DRESS CODE IN EFFECT NO HATS, COLORS, SPORTS JERSEYS, HOODIES, BOOTS OR BAGGY JEANS

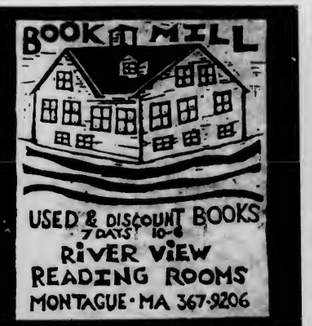
LIVE HIP HOP MASPYKE AND MASTERMINDS WITH DJ TRENDZ TWO NIGHTS SAT. & SUN. 9/23 & 9/24 $5

B-SKI'S BIN: UNDERGROUND HIP HOP AND SOU FREE

THE MELLOW EDGE OF ELECTRONIC MUSIC WITH BENNY T. AND SPECIAL GUESTS FREE

41 BOLTWOOD WALK, AMHERST
DOWN THE ALLEY BEHIND ANTONIOS

BOOK MILL



USED & DISCOUNT BOOKS
7 DAYS! 10-6
RIVER VIEW READING ROOMS
MONTAGUE · MA 367-9206

"Books you Don't Need In A Place You Can't Find"

GREAT

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4. Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5. Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
6. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Pedro brings "A" game, Sox bats fail against Tribe

Another start for Pedro Martinez, another night off for the Boston bats. Taking into consideration the lack of intensity and urgency in the play of the Red Sox lately, they must be thinking about something else besides the playoff race...say the golf course.

Going into Wednesday's doubleheader against the Indians, the Red Sox were ready to gain ground on Cleveland and the A's in the wild card race. The cards were in Beantown's favor as they had Cy Young favorite Martinez (9-0 career against Cleveland) going up against the less than dominant Steve Woodard, who by this point in the season was boasting a 2-10 record with a 6.34 ERA. One would think that the Sox would find a way to pull this one out with the crucial nature of this game in mind. Alas "The Curse" seems to be alive and flourishing.

MATTHEW F. SACCO

The first inning did not start off in usual Pedro style as Kenny Lofton, Omar Vizquel and Roberto Alomar all singled, giving Cleveland a 1-0 lead after the first inning. After the somewhat rough start, the seventeen game winner became his dominant self again, striking out nine on his way to an eight inning, one run, five hit gem. He did everything he could, he did what he always does, Martinez gave Boston a chance to win the game and unfortunately, following suit the Red Sox did not respond. As happens all too often, the bats were dead and soon maybe their playoff hopes will be as well.

The Red Sox were going up against Woodard, not exactly an ace. He pitched well but he lacks a nasty go to pitch. In fact, his stuff wasn't even that good, but Boston's bats just never came alive. The Sox managed to make Woodard a hero for going six innings, allowing three hits, with four strikeouts.

It's not that the Red Sox lack the talent, but there was no heart in their game, no pride in their efforts on the field. If Boston was a championship team, there would be uproar in the locker room the first time they let down Pedro, but instead they lack a vocal leader, so it continues.

The Sox and Indians went into the ninth inning tied at one run apiece, with Derek Lowe on the mound for Boston. Lowe, who is second in the American League in saves with thirty-seven, was quoted as saying "that's not a good feeling" after giving up Kenny Lofton's fourteenth home run of the year, which proved to be the game winner. Bob Wickman came in and worked the ninth for Cleveland, earning his eleventh save of the season.

It is amazing how the ball almost never has a Boston bounce to it. With Oakland losing to the lowly Orioles and the Red Sox facing the only other Wild Card contender, they let a magnificent chance fall by the wayside. Every loss brings the Sox closer and closer to sitting out October, as well as making those who picked them to win the series collectively kick themselves.

Maybe it is Carl Everett missing his second consecutive game with a strained left quadriceps, but this team has no swagger. There's something missing in the way they play the game, something that all championship teams possess, including pride. In the locker room and on the field, all out effort by every single player on the team. It isn't enough to have Nomar, Pedro, and Everett carrying the load in every game; baseball teams need role players as well. Jason Varitek, Troy O'Leary and Brian Daubach have to be the Jim Leyritz or Scott Brosius for Boston. They have to step up for the team when needed just like what Woodard did tonight. He couldn't be more below .500 and he came out and won the biggest game of the year against the best pitcher in the world.

Intangibles are the key to good baseball; Good defense, good pitching, good hitting and the all-important heart. Teams that play fundamentally well: the Braves, Yankees and Mets all know what it means to take failure personally. To become an elite team, the Red Sox must emulate the traits of those teams. As much as it hurts to say, the Yankees are where the Sox want to be and to get there they must take something from them. They shouldn't take their spending habits but take the work ethic, the pride and the will to win, and good things will happen.

The Red Sox can spend all the money that they want in the off season just like those Yankees, but until they instill pride in the organization again, until the players start taking it personally when they lose, the rings and the pennants will not come to Boston.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian correspondent.

Freshmen aid V-Ball squad

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's early. A month of school hasn't yet passed and the Massachusetts Women's volleyball team hasn't played an in-conference opponent yet, but enough days have come and gone to check out how the V-ball team is developing nine games into their young season.

Answers are arising to questions that were posed at the beginning of the season, and four of those answers have proven to be big elements in the mix of Head Coach Bonnie Kenny's formula for success. The quartet of freshwomen who have come from all parts of the world are already making an impact on the Maroon and White squad.

Kenny met today at the UMass Athletics Luncheon at the top of the Campus Center to speak about her team, and the first people she mentioned were the newcomers on the court.

Lindsay Bailey, a 5'11" outside hitter, has made the trek all the way from North Vancouver, British Columbia, to represent UM in competition. Bailey brings a volleyball resume with her that boasts Canadian Junior National Team play.

"Lindsay is getting better every practice. By the end of the year, she should be a big contributor."

Coming from the other hemisphere, setter Kuulei Kamanao makes the trip to the Pioneer Valley from Honolulu, HI. Standing as the shortest front row at 5'9", she brings with her the experience of playing on the No. 1 ranked team in the nation in 1999. Obviously, she knows what it takes to be successful.

"She knows the game very, very well," said Kenny.

Kelly Lewis comes to the team as a walk-on from the other side of the country, Leucidia, CA. She can fill the role of outside hitter, but brings a versatile game to the court that adds depth at several positions, especially at setter.

"She definitely has a specific role and she's contributing already. She's the best walk on I've had." Kenny went on to say that there could possibly be a scholarship in the cards for Lewis in the future.

It was 97 degrees in Crystal Kirk's hometown of Sacramento, CA, yesterday, but she wasn't there. She, like Lewis and Kamanao, has left warmer weather to sweat her butt off practicing in Curry Hicks Cage. Playing as a middle blocker, Kirk is listed at 6'2" and has shown potential in her short UM career.

"Crystal's going to be a great player", said Kenny. "She's got the best tools with no training."

"This is the most athletic team we've ever put on the court", added the head coach. Add a handful of hard-working juniors and a couple of promising sophomores and a team that is unpredictable and promising comes into view.

Kenny said it best: "We're a team that's exciting to watch."

JOHN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Rain, rain go away

The Massachusetts women's tennis team will resume its match with Amherst College tomorrow afternoon. The match started Tuesday, but was stopped due to rain with UMass leading 4-2.

■ soccer

continued from page 16

Two minutes later, a twenty-yard free kick blast off the foot of senior midfielder Benny Hoffman beat the wall but did not elude the diving efforts of the UNH keeper.

At the thirty-minute mark, the Minutemen found the net again on a beautiful string off passes. The play started as Yuri Morales (1 Goal 1 Assist) sent a long ball down the right flank to Kinateder (1 Assist), who played the ball well with his right foot, controlling it in traffic. He proceeded to embarrass one Wildcat defender before placing a ball in the box behind another defender and on to the foot of number 13 Jeff Deren, who right footed a shot into the side netting, beating the keeper and giving UMass their first lead of the game.

New Hampshire managed to stage a counter attack, and a meaningless one at that, as the 'Cat strikers were tamed by the physical Minuteman backs. Moments later, the ball would take another UMass bounce as a Minuteman shot from outside the box deflected off a defender right onto the foot of Jeff Deren for his second goal and third in two games.

The nail was in the coffin. With a two-goal edge and a physical defense the Maroon and White had taken control of the pitch, the momentum and the game. Defending their home turf and the lead, the Minuteman defense tightened their grip on the Wildcat strikers, frustrating them into bad shots and stray crosses. The defense drew the battle lines, seemingly not letting any blue jerseys into the box unchecked. The team played together, buckling down and playing fundamentally sound soccer for the remaining twenty-five minutes of the game.

The midfield controlled the pitch, using fresh substitutes to keep the UNH attack off balance. The visitors were worn down by the previous flurry of shots, so much so that they could not hope to mount a significant attack on the Maroon and White's line of defense. Shell shocked by the ferocity of the UMass comeback, New Hampshire would leave the field battered and defeated, as Massachusetts would celebrate their victory looking forward to Friday and pushing their winning streak to three.

■ olympics

continued from page 16

bers of the team were part of the gold-medal winning squad in Atlanta and fifteen members were part of last year's World Cup team that propelled the popularity of U.S. women's soccer to astonishing heights and featured team leaders in countless advertisements, appearances and promotions.

Led by Mia Hamm, Julie Foudy and Kristine Lilly, the team advanced to the semi-finals on Wednesday night, staving off a feisty Nigerian squad, 3-1. They finished the first round with a 2-0-1 record and will play Brazil in Canberra on Saturday.

Competition began on Sept. 14 and the U.S. took its first match with a hard-fought win over Norway, 2-0. The Norwegians, consistently presenting a challenge, hold the best record against the Americans. In 29 matches, they are 14-13-2, and they were bronze medalists in 1996.

On Sunday night, the women battled China to a 1-1 tie in the first rematch of last year's World Cup final. Chinese goalie Gao Hong's successful attempt to stop Lilly's penalty kick in the 74th minute was reminiscent of U.S. and former UMass goalkeeper Brianna Scurry's final save a year ago in the World Cup final. Gao paid the Americans back, preserving the 1-1 tie.

There will be no final rematch, however. China, runners-up in Atlanta, was eliminated by Norway, 2-1 on Wednesday night. The much anticipated showdown will have to wait. Norway will play undefeated Germany in the other semi-final.

Collegian Sports: "8-Ball, Corner pocket"

GET YOUR FOOT IN THE DOOR.

You're about to graduate and put your education to work. You've got your whole future ahead of you and you're ready to get started. Here's how:

Gap Inc. needs talented, enthusiastic people to help take our business to the next level. That's why we're looking for recent college graduates for entry-level positions in:

• College Manager-in-Training

Gap Inc. has come a long way since we started as a single jeans store in 1969 in San Francisco. Today our three distinct brands—Gap, Banana Republic and Old Navy—are leading retail brands and have revenues topping $11.6 billion.

We offer unlimited career opportunities, thousands of locations and excellent benefits. Take a step in the right direction. Watch your career grow at Gap Inc.

We will be hosting on-campus interviews on October 26th, 2000. Interested? Drop off your résumé to your campus career center by October 12th, 2000.

GAP INC.
WHERE TO WORK.

Gap Inc.
Gap
Banana Republic
Old Navy

EOE

Tyson a continuing media nightmare

Although the upcoming Oct. 20 Mike Tyson/Andrew Golata boxing match promises plenty of fireworks, the main event may have been Tyson's remarks during his nationally televised press conference last Thursday. Those viewing the ESPN telecast were treated to a profanity-laced tirade that would make just about any sailor blush.

Strangely enough, the majority of Tyson's insults were not directed toward his upcoming opponent. Instead, Tyson's remarks were directed at both the media in the room and English powerhouse Lennox Lewis. Speaking with his uncomfortably high-pitched voice and lisp, Tyson addressed the media. "I gotta take this stuff to keep me from killin' y'all," Tyson said with reference to his use of the medicine Zoloft. Following that comment, Tyson clued the world in on his faulty genitalia through his use of the drug.

JOHN FORSBERG

This is not the first time that Tyson has delivered controversial remarks to the media. Following his fight with Lou Savarese on June 24, Tyson delivered one of the most horrifying comments ever by an individual in professional sports. In reference to Lennox Lewis, Tyson remarked, "I'm going to eat his children! He's afraid to fight me! Everyone is afraid of me."

Lewis responded by calling Tyson a crazy idiot who is just running off at the mouth. Whether Tyson succeeds at baiting Lewis into the ring remains to be seen, but Lewis has shown little fear when asked about Tyson.

Born on June 30, 1966 in Southington, OH, Tyson was often told by critics that his 5'11" frame was too small for heavyweight competition. His reach (71 inches) was also a huge question mark. Ignoring his critics, Tyson reeled off victory after victory, eventually leading Mike to his shot at the WBC Heavyweight Belt. At the time, Trevor Berbick held the belt, but he wouldn't for long.

With the striking of the opening bell, Tyson leapt upon Berbick, pummeling him with a series of hooks and uppercuts that left Berbick's face looking like ground hamburg. With the end of the first round, Tyson knew Berbick was putty in his hands. Smelling blood, Tyson unleashed a series of uppercuts, forcing his opponent to his knees. The WBC Heavyweight belt was now his.

From that time on, Tyson was nearly unstoppable within the heavyweight ranks, claiming the WBA Championship from James Smith in 1987, and the Undisputed Heavyweight Championship of the world with a solid victory over the aging Michael Spinks. Tyson remained undefeated until he met Buster Douglas, a hulking fighter who dwarfed Tyson in the ring.

Undaunted by Buster's superior size, Tyson chose to charge him. However, Tyson could not work his way in because of Douglas' piston-like jab, and eventually lost the fight. It was one of Tyson's most forgettable performances, but it certainly was not his last.

You can forget Tyson's unspeakable actions on June 28, 1997. Squaring up against Evander Holyfield presented Tyson with a boatload of problems. Holyfield is a boxer. Tyson a slugger. Holyfield was known for his vicious combinations and boxing skills. One thing that Holyfield had was his heart, something Tyson could not match up with. Still, when the fight started, Holyfield was the underdog.

Throughout the first three rounds, Tyson barreled in with his usual blend of uppercuts and hooks, but Holyfield remained cool. Evander peppered and grappled with the enraged Tyson, who was becoming increasingly frustrated with his opponent. Then, seemingly out of the blue, Tyson latched his incisors around Holyfield's ear and bit down, sending shockwaves through the spines of millions watching worldwide. Judge Mills Lane issued Tyson a warning to stop, but Tyson ignored him. In the third round, frustration got the better of Tyson, and he again bit. This time, the top of Holyfield's ear was completely gnarled apart by Tyson. Amid a chorus of boos, Iron Mike was disqualified.

There is little doubt that Tyson's ferocious brute strength and determination combine to make him one of the greatest fighters of all time. His in-your-face style is a throwback to fighters like Jake LaRaging Bull LaMotta and Rocky Marciano, both of whom took massive amounts of punishment in order to deliver the knockout punch.

However, Tyson is different. He lacks the heart of these fighters. He will fight dirty, as the fight with Holyfield showed. He is also a time bomb, unstable in the ring as well as at press conferences. For these reasons, Tyson may be the most feared athlete in the world of sports. Tyson has succeeded in embarrassing the sport that made him into an overnight multi-millionaire.

Although his comments were extremely comical and entertaining, they only helped to cripple a sport already marred by controversial decisions and money hungry promoters. With his upcoming matchup with Andrew Golata (himself a controversial fighter), what will happen when Golata delivers one of his trademark low blows to Tyson's damaged genitalia? One can only wonder.

John Forsberg is a Collegian correspondent

Come down and write for Sports!

Don't Fall For The Rest ...Our Prices Are The Best!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB LITE, MICHELOB LIGHT, KODIAK, BUD ICE $41.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $34.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS MILLER BREWING CO. ALL FLAVORS $82.99 + DEP
LITE & LITE ICE 30 PACK $16.49 + DEP
ICEHOUSE 30 PACK $12.49 + DEP
OTTER CREEK 12 PACK ALL TYPES $9.99 + DEP
SPATEN OCTOBERFEST 6 PACK $5.99 + DEP
NATURAL LIGHT & NATURAL ICE CASE $8.99 + DEP
SUBLIME HARD LEMONADE 6 PACK $4.99 + DEP
WINES OF THE MONTH
HARDY'S NOTTAGE HILL CHARDONNAY, CABERNET/SHIRAZ, MERLOT/SHIRAZ $5.99 $6.99
3 Imadeen $6.99
RENE JUNOT WINES $5.99
JOLIESSE WINES $8.99
BOGLE MERLOT $7.99
Beringer WHITE ZINFANDEL $3.99
EMERALD SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM $18.99
TANQUERAY GIN $14.99
CANADIAN CLUB $17.49
ABSOLUT MANDRIN VODKA $15.49
JOHNNIE WALKER RED SCOTCH $15.99
Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 9/21/00 THRU WEDS. 9/27/00

New York, New York; It's all NY going into week four

4th and inches with David Rose

Start spreading the news; the New York teams are off to a flying start in the NFL's first three weeks.

The Jets and Giants are both 3-0. It is the first time ever that both teams are at that particular record simultaneously.

The Jets have used the big play to get to their living start. Case in point: this past weekend against the Bills. Kevin Williams returned a kickoff 97 yards for one score, and cornerback Marcus Coleman caught Vinny Testaverde's hail mary at the end of the first half to turn the entire momentum of the game.

The special teams also forced two fumble on Sunday and the D shut down bills quarterback Rob Johnson and the Bills attack. On Sunday it was the Bills who felt the wrath of the Jets high-flying attack.

The Jets get a huge early season match-up this weekend against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Correct me if I am wrong, but doesn't Tampa have a receiver that used to play for the Jets? I couldn't tell you, there hasn't been a lot of talk about that.

As for the Giants they have done their damage with the number one running attack in the NFL. They are led by "Thunder and Lightning." Ron Dayne and Tiki Barber have made the difference in the Giants offense, especially for quarterback Kerry Collins who has completed 71 percent of his passes in the first three weeks. This has helped the Giants control the ball and control the out comes of their ball games.

This is of extra value, considering their defense is number one against the rush in the league. This makes it easier for Michael Strahan to eat quarterbacks for breakfast lunch and dinner.

The Giants also face a test this weekend when they host the Washington Redskins.

Speaking of the 'Skins, the only Thunder and Lightning coming for the nations capitol might be the sounds of a whole lot of shake up for Washington if they do not win this week end. The "Best team money can buy", has turned into a new promising title, "The best team in last place in the NFC East." It got worse when the 'Skins suffered a humiliating loss on Monday Night to their most hated rivals the Dallas Cowboys.

Out of all the mixes that Daniel Snyder made during the off-season, the worst one came with the 18 million dollar signing of Jeff George. He immediately caused a controversy at the quarterback position.

How would you feel if you are current quarterback Brad Johnson? You just had the best season of your NFL career. You made the postseason and led your team to a division title. So Washington repays him by bringing in George as a back up. That is because George won't complain about being the backup. "Yeah, right!" Johnson has had to look over his shoulder this season as George waits on the bench. This is something that he did not have to do last season, and results did not having that type of pressure shown. Now at 1-2, Johnson might be on the verge of, unfairly, I might add, finding himself on the bench watching George lead this team.

The St. Louis Rams don't have such problems. This past weekend, they played the 49ers and to be honest, the 49ers did a good job of not allowing the Rams to get too many big plays. I say that and then tell you the Rams scored 42 points and amassed 529 yards of total offense. Kurt Warner has 1221 yards passing in three games. On this pace he could throw for about 1 million yards. (More like 6,000 yards). Although the defense has proven that anybody can score on them, they have made the big plays when they have needed to and are 3-0.

On the flip side of 3-0, there are some teams that are 0-3 that were considered to be playoff contenders this season. Case in point. The Chicago Bears and the New England Patriots.

The Bears were on everyones hot list after a strong finish to the 1999 season. Cade McNown and Marcus Robertson had turned into one of the most lethal quarterback to wide receiver combinations in the league. This is a different year, and an entirely different story. The Bears offense has not gotten itself on track scoring just 34 in the season's first three games including 7 points in the last two games. McNown has turned into "McNothing" after his week one explosion against the Vikings, and Robertson has been held to just over 70 yards per catch. The running game for the Bears has been, well, McNown. He leads the team in rushing, forget it.

As for the Pats, they have started a new and exciting game. Its title is, "How can we get sacked on the last play this week." They are 0-3 and the three losses have been by a grand total of 14 points. Drew Bledsoe was sacked three times last week. Actually, considering that he had been sacked 12 times in the seasons first two weeks, the offensive had a stellar performance on Sunday. The Patriots, in between the twenties on the field have a tremendous offensive attack. However, in the red zone, the Patriots look like actually nothing looks worse than they do in the red zone.

The 0-3 start overshadows the fact that Kevin Faulk has actually done a nice job coming out of the back field as he has had 80 plus yards in each of the last two games. As they go to Miami this weekend the possibilities of going 0-4 are not too far fetched.

Last week I did not make any picks in this part of the article due to my poor showing in week two. However, I have decided to give it another go at it this week. Let's start off with the Patriots and Dolphins. I smell a close game. This game looks exactly like a set-up of the Cowboys-Redskins game. This is a perfect set-up for the Pats- except that Miami has given up just 19 points in three games. The Pats keep it close, but still like the fish in Miami.

The Tampa Bay-New York Jets match up has a lot of intrigue. Two 3-0 teams, two teams at the top of their respected divisions, and two wide receivers. Keyshaun Johnson and Wayne Chrebet who don't like each other. Both teams come in with certainly running high and very strong defenses. However home turf will come into play so I like the Bucs.

In the other games, I like Chicago over Detroit, New Orleans over Philadelphia, Tennessee over Pittsburgh, Baltimore over Cincinnati, San Francisco over Dallas, Arizona over Green Bay, Denver over Kansas City, Oakland over Cleveland, Seattle over San Diego. The Giants over the Skins, and the Colts over the Jags on Monday night.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

All New All Yours All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds. Your Dollars. Free
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

13 new songs. 13 new reasons to smile.
The Jayhawks SMILE
The new album featuring I'm Gonna Make You Love Me.
Produced by Bob Ezrin
www.thejayhawks.com
www.columbiarecords.com
Available at a record store near you!

who said there are no good [bars] on campus?
The best bars on campus don't serve drinks, they serve their country. You see, when you complete Army ROTC and graduate, you'll be an officer and get a set of gold bars. Register for an Army ROTC class today. Because there's no better buzz than the sense of accomplishment.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC Unlike any other college course you can take.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID

Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, em! Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas: Administrative Support Data Entry Operator Entry Level Management Front Office Support Customer Service Representative CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com Corporate Staffing Solutions 126 Northampton Street, Suite G Easthampton, MA 01027 (413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM

Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free! Lowest Rates to Jamaica, Cancun & Florida! Group Discounts for 6+. Call Toll Free 1-800-426-7710 or www.leisuretours.com

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise?

You Found the Place!

It is Easy!

Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because

you can use jock font too!!!

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govet to Govet
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	Cable Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 21, 2000

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Rockies by Rail (In Stereo)		Mystery! "Cadfael" "The Pilgrim of Hate" (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 3)				Wait for God	Late Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Udder Revenge"		48 Hours "What's Your Gripe?"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Udder Revenge"		48 Hours "What's Your Gripe?"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Who Wanta to Be a Millionaire (In Stereo)			Vanished		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Charmed (In Stereo)		Charmed "Witch Trial"		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX		4	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Major League Baseball: Cleveland Indians at Boston Red Sox.						News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		16	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	"Home Alone 2: Lost in New York" (1992) Macaulay Culkin.		News				Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Dra. on Call	Mystery! "Cadfael" "The Pilgrim of Hate"			Inside the Box	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	12	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Who Wanta to Be a Millionaire (In Stereo)			Vanished		News	Nightline
WSBK	13		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Star Trek: Voyager "Aliances"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Crocodile Dundee" (1986, Comedy) Paul Hogan.				"The Rescue" (1988, Adventure) Kevin Dillon, Marc Price.
A&E	10		L.A. Law		Law & Order	The Troubles	Biography: Ceausescu		Murder One "Chapter Two"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order	Silence
CNN	20	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour			World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"How to Be a Player" (1997, Comedy) Bill Bellamy.				Stein's Money	Turn Ben	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	23		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Polar Bear		On the Inside: Crocodile		Extreme Australia		Into the Unknown		On the Inside: Crocodile
ESPN	31		Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Georgia Tech at North Carolina State. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	17		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	"Dead by Sunset" (1995, Drama) Ken Olin, Lindsay Frost.								Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33		Countdown	Makeover	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Fear (Series Premiere) (In Stereo)			Say Whet Krke
NICK	32		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Facte of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	15		Slidera "In Dino Veritas"		"Life in a Day" (1999, Science Fiction) Michael Goorjian.				"Gattaca" (1997, Science Fiction) Ethan Hawke.				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	27	28	Home Again	Home Again	Secret World of Sitcoms		Nature's Fury		Into the Flames II: Fire at Sea		Into the Flames II		Nature's Fury
TNT	25		ER "Sins of the Fathers"		Pretender "Ranger Jarod"		"Tightrope" (1984, Suspense) Clint Eastwood, Genevieve Bujold.				"Tightrope" (1984) Clint Eastwood.
USA	17		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Vanished" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Payback"		"Cass of 1998 II: The Substitute" (1993) Sasha Mitchell.				Strip Pokar	Martin
HBO	30		"Police Academy 5: Assignment Miami Beach" (1988) PG				Inside the NFL (N)		"Devil in the Flesh" (1967) Rose McGowan.		Almost		G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	35		"Milk Money" (1994, Comedy) Melanie Griffith. PG-13				"Cat's Eye" (1985, Horror) James Woods. PG-13				"Goodbye Lover" (1998) Patricia Arquette.		"Dark Flash"
SHOW	39		"The Man in the Moon" (1991) Sam Waterston. PG-13				"Got the Hook-Up" (1998) Master P.		QuickFlick Mn		Rude Awakening (In Stereo)		"Asteroid" (1999)

Dilbert By Scott Adams

OUR NEW OFFICE BUILDING WILL BE AN ARCHITECTURAL MASTERPIECE!
THE VOICES IN MY HEAD ARE SHOUTING "NO STORAGE SPACE! NO STORAGE SPACE!"
WHAT IS HAPPENING TO ME?
IT'S CALLED EXPERIENCE.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

PERFORMANCE REVIEW
YOU DIDN'T SHOW ANY INITIATIVE THIS YEAR.
THAT'S YOUR FAULT FOR CREATING AN ATMOSPHERE OF FEAR AND DISTRUST.
YOU, YOU, YOU.
NOTE TO SELF INCREASE FEAR.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

ROBBO, WE HAVE TO TALK. MY CAT INSTINCTS TELL ME THAT THIS "COTTON & GROSS" GUY IS NO GOOD. SO HERE'S THE DEAL. EITHER YOU GET RID OF HIM OR I DO... AND THEN I'D COME FOR YOU. "GET" YOU. OR WHATEVER. UM. YOU KNOW WHAT I MEAN, RIGHT?
IS THAT A "THREAT"? ARE YOU TRYING TO INTIMIDATE ME?
THANK YOU. YES, THAT'S THE WORD. I'M LOOKING FOR.
GET OUT OF MY ROOM, BUCKY.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, THIS IS MY NEW FRIEND, COTTON & GROSS.
HI, BUCKY! IT'S SO NICE TO MEET YOU!
BOB, I REALLY DON'T THINK THIS IS SUCH A GOOD IDEA.
OH, WHAT COULD POSSIBLY—

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

WHY IS IT THAT PEOPLE WHO ARE REALLY GOOD AT ONE THING, IGNORE IT IN FAVOR OF ANOTHER THING THEY'RE REALLY BAD AT?
LIKE...I KNOW I COULD EAT RIGHT, EXERCISE, PRETEND TO CARE ABOUT ANYONE OTHER THAN MYSELF... BUT WHERE'S THE CHALLENGE IN THAT?
BEING A TWINKIE-BLOATED, SEDENTARY JERK IS A CHALLENGE.
YOU HAVE NO IDEA...
COULD YOU SWITCH CHANNELS? I'M SITTING ON THE REMOTE.

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

R.J...CLARA CAN'T THROW AWAY HER GIFT FOR CONSTRUCTING ARCHITECTURAL WONDERS OUT OF BLOCKS!
COOL IT, VERNE
...IF SHE WANTS TO GROW UP TO PLAY BASS IN A SKA BAND JUST LET HER LIVE HER DREAM...
DUNKA... CHUNKA... DUNKA... ZREEEE EEEE!!!
READY?...
FLIP THE SWITCH.

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

MAD'S RANCH
I BOUGHT MAD SELF A RANCH HA!
HEY MAD THE COW.
HEY BLIP, LIKE MOO RANCH. HA!
WHERE ARE ALL THE ANIMALS?
I RECKON YOU BE STEPPIN' ON MOO PROPERTY.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

WELCOME TO IFRUIT. HUG ME. NEVER
I SHOULD REMIND YOU THAT I HAVE ALL OF YOUR DOOMATHON III SAVED GAMES ON MY HARD DISK AND NO FLOPPY DRIVE TO MAKE BACK-UPS.
I'D BE A SHAME IF SOMEHOW SOME CRITICAL BITS GOT FLIPPED IN THE DATA.
MMM. A LITTLE FIRMER, PLEASE.
SUDDENLY IT'S CLEAR TO ME WHY YOU'RE MADE WITH BULLET-PROOF PLASTICS.

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

"IT HAD BEEN FIFTEEN YEARS, BUT SURE ENOUGH MY SISTER WAS STILL HIDING UNDER THE SINK..."

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22) – You've been spending far too much time arranging things for others, and not nearly enough on your own complex affairs. Be a little selfish today!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A social engagement is likely to require a good deal of organization on your part – even though you may not be in charge. Be detailed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You know how to use words to your advantage, and today, almost everything you say will have some kind of lasting impact.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec.21) – You may be confused by certain events that seem to point to nowhere in particular. Later, however, a clear significance will be revealed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19) – You may be wondering if you've been here before – and today, it may seem as though you are repeating yourself again and again.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You will have to compromise your principles today in order to satisfy that unusual craving. Is it really worth it?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – An order handed down from above may not be the best plan of action – but it is not your place to change things without prior discussion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Money matters may seem confusing to you today, but if you're honest with someone close to you, he or she will be able to show you the way.

TAURUS (April 20-May20) – This is a good day to concentrate on that which is usually unnoticed and unsung. Pay special attention to messages that seem mundane and routine.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – What begins today as a lark is likely to become a serious, ongoing, concern before very long. You may be surprise at the reactions you get.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may have to sift through some remnants of your past today before you come to the one thing that can get you going in a new, exciting direction.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're getting a little far-removed from your original goals these days, and now is the time for you to settle back into a regimen of basics.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 80 LOW: 54	HIGH: 65 LOW: 42	HIGH: 67 LOW: 47

Quote of the Day

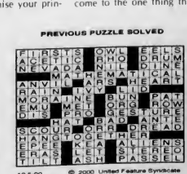
"Since his death in 1996, Mitterand has been remembered mainly as a Machiavellian without principle, driven by personal ambitions alone."

–Amherst College Notes

ACROSS
1 Fly high
5 Norm's wife, on "Cheers"
9 Mischief-maker
12 Fable
13 Clumsy
15 On the briny
16 Throat-clearing sound
17 Marconi's invention
18 Telescope part
19 Caustic
20 Center
21 Electrical unit
24 The lady
25 Hire
26 Intricate ornamental work
33 Loots (around)
34 Writer Grey
35 British nobleman
36 Eggs
37 Chooses
38 Edible root
39 Chile's neighbor
43 Garden tools
44 Intimate
44 Zoo denizen
46 Heifer
47 Take home a trophy
48 Gopher St.
49 Card game
53 Kitchen herb
57 Assert
58 Deliver a speech
61 Stared at rumpless
62 Frustrated item
63 Blackthorn
64 Ironic past
65 Freshens
66 Sundaes

DOWN
1 Attempt
2 Waikiki location
3 Actor Guinness
4 Extraction

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-5-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

5 Potent
6 Make into law
7 Cincinnati baseball player — Hear —
8 drop
9 Medium's board
10 Water-skiing
11 Pull ahead of 14 Musses
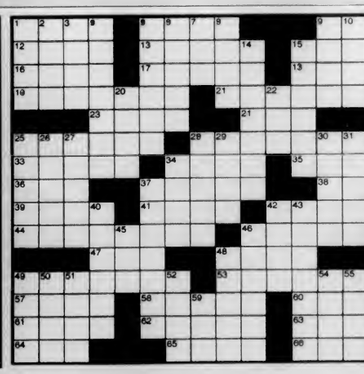
15 Charge without proof
20 Journals
22 Greek letter
23 Marry secretly
26 "Winter Solstice," e g
27 Fierce stare
28 Aspect
29 Pens' contents
30 Synthetic fabric
31 Wipe out, as a computer file
32 — Fudd
34 Utah's national park
37 Opera resident?
40 Toward a higher position
42 Ice-cream holder
43 Lengthiest
45 Towel inscription
46 Warning signals
48 Engine
49 Dear, in Italy
50 Shakespeare's river
51 "Cool!"
52 Expanse
54 "Clan of the Cave Bear" heroine
55 Glue used in fixing
56 Some poems
59 Actress MacGraw

1/2 WAY TO ST. PAT'S DAY BASH TONITE 22 OZ KILLIANS 2 BUCKS

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Steak and Cheese Sub

Buffalo Wings

Garden Chili (Vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire and Worcester)

Squash Bake (vegeterian) (Berkshire, Hampshire and Worcester)

Dinner

Hot Wrap Bar:

Grilled Chicken

Grilled Beef

Grilled Tofu (Vegan)

California Chili (Vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician — Jaret Barr
Copy Editor — Dave Troupes
Production Supervisor — Alan Basque
Production Staff — Sarah Wingardner, Adi Husenovic

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, September 21, 2000 16

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen Tame Wildcats

Deren, Morales Spur Comeback

By Matthew F. Socco
Collegian Correspondent

Coming off a 2-1 victory at Siena on Sunday, the Massachusetts men's soccer team stood but one victory from a .500 record for the season. That was until New Hampshire traveled to Totman Field for a mid-week matchup with the

UMass 3
UNH 1

Minutemen. They came, they saw, and their story conquered, and with the impending assault by the UMass offense it could have been a lot worse than the actual UNH score.

"Everybody knew this was a big game, we needed to win to get back to .500," said Head Coach Sam Koch after his Minutemen netted their second straight win.

UMass jumped out of the gates with their offense running on all cylinders. UNH goalkeeper Sean O'Neill was more than up to the task, disrupting the Massachusetts attack and jumpstarting the Wildcat counter.

Less than fourteen minutes into the first half, UMass sent a well-placed free kick into the box, but the aggressive New Hampshire keeper was able to come off his line and intercept the long ball. A series of athletic saves followed, frustrating the Minutemen attack. O'Neill punched out crosses and played such a sound fundamental game that UMass strikers were forced to pick corners and often times send the ball wide in an attempt to be pinpoint accurate.

After almost fifteen minutes of solid UMass pressure, New Hampshire got a shot in the arm from their own offense as midfielder Drew Ferrigno was left unmarked in the box, free to head a long throw past keeper Brian O'Quinn and into the back of the net.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Yuri Morales had a goal and an assist in the UMass men's soccer team's 3-1 win over New Hampshire yesterday afternoon.

The scoring strike did not faze the Maroon and White attack as they unleashed a flurry of chances on the Wildcat defense. The UNH goalie stood tall, though, deflecting a free kick over the bar and batting away the ensuing corner kick. Less than a minute later, he deflected an eighteen-yard blast and also managed to intercept the following corner kick.

New Hampshire then managed another counter attack in the few remaining minutes of the half. They sent numerous long throws into the box, but to no avail. The UMass defense, led by veteran back Patrik Beattie and keeper O'Quinn, was able to stave off the onslaught and enter halftime down only one score.

The second half, as compared to the first, was more visibly distinct than night and day. The Massachusetts offense continued to move the ball well but they played with a sense of urgency that could not be matched by their counterparts from Durham. Coach Koch had said that it was a huge game and the whole team played that way as the intensity was evidently raised a notch for the second half.

UMass came out with a fire lit under them as junior standout Fred Kinateder set up two scoring chances in the eighteen-yard box within the first six minutes of play. Both opportunities were turned back by the 'Cats to keep the shutout intact.

Finally, the Maroon and White would find the net in a somewhat unorthodox fashion. In the thirty-fourth minute Massachusetts gave up possession in the offensive zone but persistent junior fullback Shawn Green (1 Assist) challenged the visitors clearing attempt by taking a shot to the face, triggering the expected response from the crowd. The Minutemen were not mesmerized by the event as the ball found Californian Yuri Morales eight yards out on the short side. Morales drilled a shot passed the outstretched hands of the keeper to tie the game at one goal apiece. Green's sacrifice did not go unnoticed as he recorded an assist on the play.

Turn to SOCCER, page 12

"Young guns" key to UMass' success

By Matthew F. Socco
Collegian Correspondent

Through the first four games of the season the Massachusetts men's soccer team was 1-3. Going into a matchup with Hartford on Friday in the UMass classic, the Minutemen are on a two game winning streak. The reason for such a drastic turnaround is one word: offense.

The Maroon and White have played solid defense throughout the season allowing a total of eight goals in six games. The offense, though, sputtered to start the year.

In the first four games, against South Carolina, Hartford, Maine and Boston, the Minutemen only managed to net four goals. In their two most recent matches (Siena and UNH), UMass has put five goals over the line. It's no coincidence that the last two have been wins for coach Koch and his team.

The proprietors of the recent offensive surge have been one familiar name and a couple that are not so recognizable. As usual, Fred Kinateder, last years second leading scorer, has done his job, pitching in with a goal and an assist for three points in the season's opening games. What is not so usual is the scoring prowess resonating from a pair of super sophomores trying to earn playing time by working hard and honing their natural skills. Yuri Morales and Jeff Deren come from vastly different backgrounds, but they are producing similar results on the pitch.

Morales is a Californian who has a goal and three helpers for the year, but has been particularly explosive in the last two wins, with three points. Deren, on the other hand, is a Massachusetts native as well as a pure goal scorer. Coach Koch said recently that Deren "couldn't buy a goal" at the beginning of the year, but all of a sudden, after three goals in his last two matches he is the leading goal scorer as well as the point leader on the team with six.

Morales and Deren are just two of a young core of offensively gifted players patrolling the opposing zone for UMass this season. Derek Rhodes, who is tied for third on the team in points with three, is only a sophomore. This speedster will be twice as dangerous once his skills are developed and should be a danger to opposing defenses for the next three years. The Wisconsin native can burn up the pitch with his speed and is lethal when making quick overlapping runs through the defense. He has a good field sense and he can slash towards the goal with his quickness and ball handling.

Ptah Myers is an absolutely gifted ball handler who has the ability to create chances in close quarters like no other. This striker hailing from Ohio can change speeds very quickly. That, paired with his handle on the ball, will make this freshman a weapon for the rest of the season as well as the next three years.

Offense is the key to success for this team, a fact that is evident when analyzing the statistics for the first six matches. The defense is always stalwart, solid and physical, so UMass will always be in the game. Coach Koch will rely heavily on Kinateder as well as his young group of scorers to carry the offensive load. If the "young guns" can step up, then UMass will be very dangerous this season and for years to come.

Minutewomen look to keep Danes in doghouse

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Like a swordsman, it dueled heartily.

And although defeat was the upshot, it armaments weren't destroyed, and its wounds will heal quickly. Just maybe, the Massachusetts field hockey team will meet up with Maryland again later this season.

But for now, that possibility lies cavernous in the back of the Minutewomen's minds.

"The Maryland game is over and done with," coach Patty Shea said. "The only thing we can control now is our performance against the University of Albany."

And that performance will come tonight at 7 p.m. under the lights of Richard J. Garber field. Albany travels to Amherst with a record of 3-4. UMass enters the contest with a 3-2 mark.

Last weekend, the Maroon and White played, and lost (2-0) a game that will almost certainly prove to be its toughest regular season match-up this year. Its opponent, of course, The defending national champion Maryland Terrapins.

"It's a measuring stick, but it won't mean anything if we don't bring that performance to play [tonight]," Shea said. "And that, I think, is critical."

UMass, as a team, is looking toward tonight as a springboard into the rest of its schedule. The Minutewomen offense, however, will be focused on creating a much needed spark. That spark evidently is scoring goals.

Anke Breummer, Lindsay Abbot and Kristen Schmidt know this. And they plan to get back on track.

"We definitely had opportunities to score [against Maryland]," Shea said. "We had a penalty corner, and we had three shots from that penalty corner ... a couple open nets from it, and we also had a penalty stroke. We just need to make smarter decisions at the offensive end of the field."

Albany will be the weakest opponent UMass has faced so far this season. Coming in at a game under .500, the Great Danes will need to play better than they ever have if they want to put up a winning number on Maroon and White goalie Zowie Tucker. Tucker has been outstanding this season, stopping 53 out of the 60 strikes that have come her way.

Let this be a warning to Albany. The Minutewomen are eager. And after a tough loss to the best team in the country, it's rather clear how bad they need, and want a victory.

"The team themselves felt better about their performance after this loss against Maryland than they did the weekend prior with two victories," Shea said. "I think that's just an indication of truly a true performance that really matters more than the outcome, and that's where are focus is. We have to bring it every single day."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jill Fantasia and the Massachusetts field hockey host Albany tonight at 7 p.m. at Garber Field.

UMass looks to up streak to nine on Saturday

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass men's water polo team will ride a tidal wave of momentum into Cambridge, MA this Saturday, along with Northern Division rivals Boston College, MIT, and Harvard for the CWPA tournament.

The 12th ranked Minutemen [8-2] have been an unstoppable force the last two weeks going 6-0 during that time period. Most of the wins have been by a substantial margin of victory. Five of UMass' eight triumphs this season have been against teams competing in this weekend's tournament, with two each over Harvard and MIT.

In the first match-up of the weekend, the Minutemen will take on Boston College in MIT's pool. UMass previously faced the Eagles on September 9th and steamrolled them by the score of 15-3. Chad Arnold and Mike Foley led the way, each netting three goals in the landslide victory.

MIT will then host the Maroon and White in the second game of the afternoon. In two previous games against MIT, UMass has outscored the Engineers 26-8 behind strong performances by Adam Moore (five total goals), Greg Trayer (four goals in the first meeting) and Evan Lutz (three goals in the second meeting).

"MIT has a couple of young solid players and a decent young coach," said junior Greg Trayer, "but I think we just out-talent them."

With MIT and Boston College looking like easy match-ups, Coach Russ Yarworth is focusing on his team's third game this season against the 20th ranked Harvard. The Crimson have had their problems with the Minutemen, losing both contests by a combined total of 24-11, numbers that make the games seem closer than the dominating performances they really were.

"Harvard is the one I worry about," Yarworth said. "We have beaten them already. I need to keep the guys up for the game."

"We can't overlook Harvard," said Trayer. "They have a good team and are in their home pool with a hometown crowd. They will be focusing on this one."

Adam Moore has scored seven goals in the two games against Harvard. Moore leads the team in goals (20) and total points (29). He is one of a handful of juniors that have taken a needed leadership role on a team with a single senior.

"Adam is playing some great ball for us," said Yarworth. "He is really stepping up as a team leader."

Goalie J.R. VanderWal has also been a thorn in the Crimson's side, racking up a total of 21 saves against Harvard in two games. The goalie's stellar defense has been key to the Maroon and White's success this season. The Minutemen will be looking for another big weekend in the net from the junior co-captain.

Senior co-captain Brook O'Neill and Sophomore Ricardo Puig have also played solid ball in previous games against the Crimson of Cambridge and will look to continue to do so.

Coach Yarworth has made the chance of a letdown clear to his players. Trayer is aware of the possibilities, but believes there is no reason to worry about a letdown. He feels that getting the victories is too important to the team for them to allow that to happen.

"We need these three wins," he said. "We have two tough trips coming up in the next few weeks, one to Princeton and one to California. We want these three wins."

America's soccer squads moving on in Sydney

By Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the third installment in a seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000.

To say there exists in the athletic world a presence comparable to the underdog is to slight the annals of sport. For the favored one is the chosen-the one whom hopes are pinned on and faith is instilled in. The nonentity that is the underdog is largely overlooked. But how often does the favorite fail in the quest? How often does the immense pressure cause the leader to buckle? The fickle fashion found in all sports places this in the realm of feasibility, endowing the overshadowed their time in the sun.

The underdog comes out of relative obscurity to deliver the knockout punch-the blow that shocks the world, and catapults the labeled "weakling" to the zenith and instant idolatry. The U.S. men's hockey team in the 1980 Winter Olympics is the epitome of the underdog. Twenty years later, America's "Miracle on Ice" remains one of our most cherished moments in sports. Never underestimate the power of the underdog.

And never underestimate the U.S. men's Olympic soccer team. Heading into Sydney, not much was expected of the American men. Unlike their celebrated female counterparts, the men had a dismal Olympic history. Since 1924, the U.S. had made 11 Olympic appearances, for a less than inspiring combined record of 4-12-6. They had never advanced beyond the first round of an Olympic tournament, and with all the attention showered on the women's team, the rank of the men's team positioned them as an afterthought.

However, this is a team almost entirely comprised of professionals, a result of the growth of Major League Soccer since its onset four years ago. They have much more experience and it makes all the difference. There has never been a men's Olympic squad anywhere near their caliber, and the men proved their aptitude by advancing to Saturday's quarterfinals in Adelaide.

In their group's first two matches, the men tied both the Czech Republic (2-2) and Cameroon (1-1). On Monday, they defeated an all-amateur Kuwait team, 3-1, on a wet, rainy night at the Melbourne Cricket Ground to earn a first-time berth in the quarterfinals. The team they will play there has yet to be decided-it will come down to Brazil, Japan or South Africa. A win there would put the Americans in a good position for their first ever Olympic medal. Needless to say, it would be a great triumph and would silence all their critics.

The key to the victory over Kuwait was the replacement of Conor Casey with quicker midfielder Landon Donovan, whose 88th minute goal clinched the win for the U.S. Ten minutes after Donovan entered the game, the Americans scored. Defender Jeff Agoos (of the D.C. United) delivered a perfect corner kick from the right and Danny Califf, the rookie central defender for the Los Angeles Galaxy, sprung to crash a header into the back of Kuwait's net in the 40th minute.

In the 63rd minute, Chris Albright followed with a goal of his own- after receiving a timely pass from John O'Brien. Kuwait showed its tenacity but the players were noticeably disturbed by the unfavorable weather and appeared to lose their concentration. They scored once in the 83rd minute when substitute Bader Najem beat goalkeeper Brad Friedel on a counterattack, but it was not enough. Soon after, Josh Wolff and Donovan exchanged passes on a fast break up the middle of the field and Donovan kicked the ball into the net. Overall, the Americans dominated the match. They outshot Kuwait 17-8, and took 10 corner kicks to Kuwait's one.

If the men advance to finals, they will most likely face defending Olympic champion Nigeria, Chile, Japan or 1992 Olympic champion Spain. Brazil, if it moves forward, will look to improve on its third-place finish in Atlanta, and claim the one major title it does not have.

It is important to note, however, that the men's tournament is very different from the women's event, mainly because of the actions of FIFA, the sport's international governing body. FIFA does not want the Olympic tournament to overshadow the World Cup, and the end result is that the men's tournament is basically an under-23 event (meaning all players must be 23 or younger), although each team is allowed to bring three overage players. However, the top international clubs did not want to release their top players for the games. Yet another reason for the watered down men's field is that the games are taking place when many of the major European leagues have already started their seasons.

The American women stand in the opposite position of the men. As the heavy favorite, they came to Sydney both current Olympic champions and World Cup champions. Eleven mem-

Turn to OLYMPICS, page 12

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 13 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, September 22, 2000

Arts previews a huge concert weekend for the valley including Matchbox 20 at the Mullins Center tonight.

ARTS p. 5

Get info on UMass vs. the New Haven Chargers in Sports today.

UMass

SPORTS p. 7

Local Green Party for more than just the next presidency

Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

What does it mean to be Green? The Green's at Valley Green headquarters in Amherst say there is a lot more to it than supporting Ralph Nader and Winona LaDuke as the Green party candidates in the 2000 presidential election.

"I see the Green Party not so much a political party as a people's movement," said Kate Harris, Valley Green Party coordinator and longtime environmental activist. Harris joined the Nader Campaign when the Green Party opened and office in Amherst this summer.

If you spent an evening at the Valley Green's downtown office you'd find a hub of grassroots activism unparalleled in the U.S since the 1960's, not only in the diversity of ideologies found there, but also in the ability to mobilize those ideologies using the power of the internet around an unequivocally shared goal-making all politics local.

The activist resurgence of the past year is made up of innumerable causes, slogans, and coalition groups, and although criticism over the their apparent lack of organization abounds, it is their de-centralized structure that holds them together. At the core of this movement, the Green Party offers an umbrella of values and ideals that many of these movements embrace. From the crusade against globalization to the abolition of the death penalty, the Green Party hopes to harness these movements in a common goal to elect Ralph Nader president.

"For Nader and LaDuke to get into office it would take an enormous uprising of the people," Harris said.

The way to connect these movements with the Green Party is to look at where the system doesn't work. For Nader, that has been his life's work.

A lifelong consumer advocate, Nader started attacking corporations for putting the bottom line before human safety, accusing the auto industry of recklessly engineering cars without regards to consumer safety. Nader's book "Unsafe at any speed" helped spur consumer activism as we know it today. Most young voters might not remember Nader's earlier campaigns, but the groups he founded, like the Public Interest Research Group and Center for Responsive Law and Citizens Consumer Action Group, as well as his push for numerous legislation to protect the environment and consumers, contributed to a cleaner and safer world.

It's Nader's outspoken condemnation of the corporate world that most closely ties him to the anti-globalization movements that grew out of the WTO protests in Seattle last November. The same concerns over corporate greed and the local impact of unrestrained free trade that activists, students and labor movements have been vocally protesting are also long time concerns of the Green Party, and Nader. Nader's campaign platform calls for the end of corporate welfare bailouts, and the restructuring of the WTO and World Bank lending practices to third world countries. And according to Green Party advocates, corporate power is the defining issue between Nader and the Democrat and Republican presidential candidates.

"This is the foundation of our campaign," Nader is quoted in a Green Party flyer, "to create fresh political movements that will displace the control of the Democratic and Republican parties, two apparently distinct political entities that feed at the same corporate trough. They are in fact simply the two heads of one political duopoly, the DemRep Party."

Nader attacks the current political structure that he considers beholden to corporate interests and funding. Both Democratic and Republican candidates receive contributions from the same corporations and Nader supporters believe both candidates stand for the same issues when it comes to corporate interest.

"The fundamental similarities between Bush and Gore are that they are both corporate whores," said Neil Nugent, a former engineering student at UMass and the campus Green Party coordinator. Nugent started volunteering for Nader last May, collecting signatures to get Nader on the ballot in Massachusetts.

"Nader is a man of conscience," said Nugent, "whose record has proven that he is beholden to the people and fights corporate interests."

These corporate interests, Nader supporters contend, are working to Turn to NADER, page 2

Representative Ellen Story addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday.

National Day of Solidarity for the cause of Vieques

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Hundreds of people gathered in front of the White House in Washington today to honor the National Day of Solidarity and demand that the U.S. Navy end bombing in Vieques, Puerto Rico.

Covering only 33 square miles, the island of Vieques is set six miles off the coast of the mainland. The population extends to approximately 10,000 inhabitants.

Evan Ferguson, Houston, Texas, remembers Vieques as "a peaceful place to relax and enjoy nature's beauty".

"There are dozens of secluded beaches, shell grounds, coral reefs, archeological digs, horseback trails in the inland hill and mangrove lagoons that serve as gathering places for 125 species of birds," Ferguson said.

He describes the people of Vieques as "easygoing, slow to anger, friendly, and tolerant."

Mr. Howard Wiarda, professor of political studies of Latin America described the deep-rooted history of the people. According to him, during the War of 1898 the US acquired Puerto Rico from the Spanish. Since then, the country has remained under US control. It has never been initiated into statehood and the US has long treated the people as second-class citizens and a second-class territory. From a strategic military point of view, Wiarda said it has only been thought of as a long series of military bases.

Its relationship with the Puerto Rican government has always been a question of US statehood, independence from the US altogether, or somewhere in-between. Currently, as a US territory, Puerto Rico is somewhere in-between. Although it falls under US control, culturally, socially, politically, and racially speaking, Puerto Rico is very different from the US, Wiarda said.

The US Department of Defense, particularly the Navy, uses the island of Vieques as a target area to train troops in the latest defense technology and to serve as testing ground for new weapons. Navy officials claim that residents of Vieques have not been in danger from the training activities conducted by the military, as the weapons range.

The training complex, located on the island's far eastern tip, is more than 8 miles from the nearest town. Officials say that the weapons range comprises approximately 900 acres, less than 3 percent of the total land mass of the island and other communities in the US have residential areas close to a weapons range than that of the residents of Vieques.

"We like to say in the Navy, 'No one likes to fight, but someone has to know how,'" Wiarda said. "To know how, we must have a place for rest, for combat training. The ideal place is Vieques for geographical, topographical, and logistical reasons."

Wiarda explained that the Navy's obligation is to train and be prepared when needed in battle. Puerto Rican citizens have never been comfortable with these actions. In fact, many live ammunitions and grenades that have malfunctioned and did not explode during training exercises have been buried in the sands of Vieques' beaches. People who venture to the beach run the risk of stepping on one of these weapons and triggering an explosion, Wiarda stated.

Tensions on this issue skyrocketed on April 19, 1989 when a US Marine Corps fighter jet dropped two 500-pound bombs off target and killed a civilian security guard, David Sonia Rodriguez, who was working on the range.

Turn to PUERTO RICO, page 2

Commuter interest rises

Nominations for the University of Massachusetts Student Senate elections are closed. Elections will occur next Tuesday, Sept. 26 in the Dining Common and Campus Center.

A total of 46 Senate seats are up for election from residential areas on campus. Approximately 38 more seats are open for commuters. The exact number has yet to be determined, as the total number of commuter students is still being calculated.

Jim Ethringham, Speaker of the Senate, said commuters have shown a much larger interest in the Senate elections this year than in the recent past.

Last year there were 18 commuter seats left vacant. And most of the commuter Senators were elected with fewer than five votes.

The most votes a commuter Senator got last year," said Ethringham, "was nine."

This year there are 46 commuters on the ballot for fewer than forty seats.

Ethringham said he is excited that there are more commuters running for Senate than there are seats open.

"This is going to be a competitive election," he commented. "And that's good. It means the people are being represented, ... and it forces policy debate."

Orchard Hill also promises to be a competitive race, as there are six seats open and 16 students running.

Given the large number of candidates for Senate elections, the Student Government Association will not coordinate debates.

"Candidates are free to hold their own debates, though," stated Elections Commissioner Jeremy Rouille.

-Michal Lumsden

U.S. passes landmark bill with China

Senate's decision causes debate

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The United States Senate met Tuesday to vote on a controversial bill which will normalize trade relations with China. In a landslide vote, 83-15, the Senate passed the bill, putting an end to decades of political and economic tension between the People's Republic of China and the U.S. The decision has also put an end to a lengthy domestic struggle. Both inside and outside Washington, supporters of the bill and its protesters are taking sides across political, cultural, and some say, ideological lines.

The passing of the bill marks a victory for President Clinton in the final months of his presidency. President Clinton seemed jubilant at a news meeting following the passage of the bill, it was reported in the New York Times, which quoted him as saying: "This landmark agreement will extend economic prosperity at home and promote economic freedom in China, increasing the prospects for openness in China and a more peaceful future for all of us."

A large and fierce national opposition disagrees. According to a Sept. 15 editorial in the Denver Post, written by columnist E. J. Dionne, the Senate pushed the bill through, letting "amendments to [the bill which would] improve human rights, religious freedom and labor standards in China [fall] by lopsided votes." Dionne stated in her column. She also said she felt that the ignoring of possible amendments to the bill occurred "not because senators opposed them on merit but because of their potential harm to the underlying bill."

This rushing of the bill through the Senate, many say, was the product of corporate control over government in

Turn to CHINA, page 3

Umass faculty responds

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The controversy over normalizing trade with China stirred up strong debate at the University of Massachusetts after Senators voted on the issue Tuesday.

Professor of History Bruce Laurie joined the ranks of the dissenters to the bill commenting on its distaste towards labor rights.

"I think the vote [in favor of the bill] is a terrible idea, not only because it's a human rights issue but [because of] the equally basic issue of labor rights," Laurie said. Laurie cited the same record of poor labor conditions for Chinese workers touted by the opposition on Capitol Hill. Chinese workers, according to many, are subjected to long hours, and low wages in order to drive down prices and increase China's competitiveness in the international market.

According to Laurie, such practices decrease the power of the U.S. economy.

"Free labor can't compete with slave labor. I think they [the Chinese] should be boycotted," Laurie said.

UMass Professor of Economics Richard Woll disagrees and said that the U.S. has long since traded and is currently trading with an immense array of countries regardless of the foreign country's view.

"Many of those countries have leaderships and governments with whom we disagree, and that has never played any role whatsoever in whether we trade with them," Woll said.

He cited the recent corrupt elections in Peru, which he calls "a grotesque abortion of democratic rights." He said that the United States continues to trade freely with

Turn to RESPONSE, page 3

COURTESY RALPH NADER ORG

Ralph Nader, Green Party Candidate for President, has been well supported by the local Green Party affiliate.

COURTESY THEDONKEY.COM

■ Puerto Rico

continued from page 1

Two days after his death, protesters led by fishermen such as Carlos Ventura, set out to close down the training complex by camping out on the weapon's range. On January 31, President Clinton and Puerto Rico Governor Pedro Rossello came to an agreement in which the Navy could resume its bombing exercises with "dummy" bombs and give Vieques residents an opportunity to vote on whether the Navy should leave the island by 2003.

In May, the Navy removed protesters from the range by federal law enforcement authorities and resumed it training practices using warplanes that dropped the "dummy" bombs. On September 1, Navy officials launched a $40 million goodwill campaign offering jobs and other economic benefits to island residents who would vote on whether the Navy could keep its bombing range on the island.

Protesters at today's demonstration believe that the Navy's bombing is not only a danger to Vieques' residents, as was the case in the death of Rodriguez, but it also is harmful to the island's ecosystem and resident's physical health.

Underlining these concerns is the fact that US actions are "demeaning to Puerto Ricans," Wiarda stated.

"Many people suspect that it has to do with racism or anti-cultural feelings toward Puerto Rican citizens," Wiarda said. "The Defense Department would never use live weaponry on the US mainland, but yet they feel it's alright to target Puerto Rico."

Today's demonstration is not the first time that the people of Vieques have staged such a protest due to these concerns. On April 19, the one-year anniversary of the security guard's death, a similar demonstration took place in front of the White House.

During both of these protests, demonstrators marched while carrying signs and vocalizing their wishes for President Clinton to order the Navy to leave the island at once. This sensitive issue, based on both political and moral concerns, is kept alive by these vocal protesters. As long as the demonstrators continue to do activities that will keep the issue out in the open, the US cannot forget about it, and their story will stay in the conscious minds of people, especially US officials who can make a difference, Wiarda stated.

However, Teaching Assistant Enrique Garcia, a native of western Puerto Rico, feels that protesting will not help the Vieques situation because of Puerto Ricans inability to vote for US leaders.

"We do not have enough, if any, representation in Congress," Garcia said. "We're a territory, and therefore, we're not equal to citizens of mainland US – we have fewer rights. That is why the Navy base was positioned on Vieques in the first place."

Still, Garcia has not lost all hope and explained that depending on how long Puerto Ricans continue to drag out these issues will force the Navy to leave in a few years. However, if people forget about them, the Navy could stay for many more.

According to Garcia, the US does have a feasible basis for staying on the island, "only because the people of the island have voted for the Navy base to stay for the time being."

However, Wiarda added that since the Cold War ended, the Defense Department's argument for staying on Vieques has become much weaker.

"During the Cold War, they could justify their presence because we [US] were faced with another super power [Soviet Union] that also had use of Nuclear weapons," Wiarda said.

"However, now that we [US] don't have that emanate threat to the nation, they can't justify using live ammunition where people are living.

"Also, we, as a nation, are more sensitive now of racial and cultural issues," he added. "I believe that the US Defense Department is obligated to give up their weapons range at Vieques and find another place to continue their training where there are no people around."

Unofficially, the Navy has already begun to prepare for the future by starting a search for a new location for a training complex where they will be able to use live ammunition. An uninhabited island near the Hawaii islands is currently being considered as the replacement site. However, strategically preparing for any use of Navy forces on the European side of the nation would become rather difficult, considering how far away this base would be.

It is indeed complicated to locate a place on the east coast that is not highly populated and would allow for enough space for a weapons range to be constructed, Wiarda stated. The solution is to either refrain from using live ammunition wherever the Navy may go or to seek out somewhere with less oppressing, sensitive issues, such as that in Vieques. The first of these two choices appears less likely, for when training soldiers in the art of combat, eventually, the Navy will need to train them, using real weapons to insure that the recruits become as skilled as possible.

Also, if the Navy does vacate Vieques within the next few years, Wiarda is concerned about whether the island's environment will be restored to its original condition. According to him, live ammunition, grenades, and storage depots that contain poison chemicals have been used and placed around their base. For the Navy to simply leave without cleaning up the area first would prove just as harmful to the environment and wildlife as if they would have stayed.

Furthermore, cleaning the environment would not be a quick, easy, or cheap process by any means, costing billions of dollars to complete a thorough job, Wiarda stated.

"To me, it seems inevitable that the Navy will leave Vieques," Wiarda said. "When that happens, the Defense Department would rather use their money for something other than cleaning the island's environment, but the Puerto Rican government will want to use their tax dollars for something else as well."

"In some ways, it Is the Navy's responsibility to clean up the area," Wiarda said. "My guess is that our Defense Department will be forced to pay for most of the clean-up, but the Puerto Rican government will pay for a small portion of it. The truth is, only time will tell for certain."

■ Nader

continued from page 1

exclude Nader from the televised presidential debates this October. Whether or not that's true, the Commission on Presidential Debates insures that only the two mainstream candidates have access to the debates by setting the standard of entry at 15% approval, measured in five separate national polls. That is three times higher than the 5% needed to be recognized as a political party and receive federal matching funds.

"It's particularly exclusive," said Nugent, "because the polls don't ask if people want to see Nader, they just ask who would you vote for if the election was tomorrow."

Nader averages between 1-9% in polls. The Green Party claims that 64% of Americans polled want to see Nader in the debate, and activist groups plan to protest the exclusion of third party candidates during the first debate in Boston, Oct. 3. Their message is to resist the corporatization of the presidential debates and protest the exclusion of third party voices. Several thousand protesters plan to attend rallies around the debates, addressing issues ranging from the death penalty to sweatshop labor.

The Green Party is hosting an official rally Oct. 1 at the Fleet Center in Boston featuring Ralph Nader. Nader will speak on his exclusion from the debates, but his campaign has not endorsed the protests. Last months rally in Portland drew over 10,000 supporters, considerably more than appearances by both Bush and Gore. The Green Party hopes to draw 13,000 to the event in Boston. Tickets are 10 dollars at the Amherst Valley Greens Office, 42 N. Pleasant St., above ABC's restaurant. For information call 247-0851 or check www.westerminasygreens.org.

Women's history conference at Smith

"A series of workshops will be held with leaders of the women's movement on hand to spark excitement."

By Marilyn Cardano
Collegian Correspondent

Smith College, Northampton will be abuzz with women's issues, then future and history as it sponsors a conference titled "Agents for Social Change," this weekend starting on Friday at 4 p.m. Kicking off the conference will be the keynote address "Invisible/Outsider: A Historian Looks at Social Movements," given by Linda Gordon, a New York University historian.

A series of workshops will be held with leaders of the women's movement on hand to spark excitement. Gloria Steinem, renowned feminist and co-founder of Ms magazine, and Brenda Feigen Fasteau, of the Women's Action Alliance, WAA, will be participants in a 3 p.m. Saturday workshop entitled Persistence and Transformation." Also at 3 p.m. Frances Fox Piven, welfare rights advocate and Ian Peterson, founder of the National Congress of Neighborhood Women will share their expertise on grassroots organization. At 4:30 p.m. "Feminism Wars: The Next Generation," Alice Walker and Ann Richards, Co-founder of the Third Wave Foundation will be on hand. Also participating in this conference is Erin Howe, a Smith College student activist.

At 8 p.m. Sage Hall will be the setting for "Another Century of Struggle," a roundtable discussion that will be open to the public. Audience participation will be encouraged to discuss the future of women in the arena of research and activism. Betty Trendan, Smith college historian and Dan Horowitz, biographer, moderate this session.

The Suphia Smith Collection (SSC) a repository of women's history and the feminist movement, will sponsor this event. The SSC holds over 400 collections that include photographs, audiovisual items as well as written documentation of women's history manifested in news items, speeches, and court testimonies. Included in this collection are works from Steinem, Piven, civil rights attorney and activist Constance Baker Motley, as well as Dorothy Benson, a feminist judge, civil rights and labor attorney Mary Metlay Kaufman, and Jessie Lloyd O'Connor, a labor journalist.

An exhibit titled "Agents of Social Change: Women and Progressive Activism Across the 20th Century," will be shown in the Neilson Library and the Alumnae Gymnasium. This exhibit will run until December 31. Anyone interesting in more information or attending this conference should call 585-2970 or go to www.smith.edu/libraries/ssc.

Read Collegian news

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as "Aggie Life" became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkivsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderowich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tremble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siriawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Carganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Pizza Party at the CAM!
Antonio's
Meet Us At ANTONIO'S PIZZA!
31 N Pleasant St Amherst
Sept. 23
3-6pm
mass LIVE
Be an Internet Star!
www.masslive.com
Be one of the 1st 50 people to show up at MassLive.com's Pizza Party, say "Pizza Party on the cam!" and get a Free Slice of Antonio's Cheese Pizza!
Win Prizes!
Broadcast Live over the World Wide Web!
Watch it live at www.masslive.com/campuscam

Bet you can carry this car.

The Volkswagen College Graduate Program makes it easy to finance a car right out of school. You don't need a co-signer. You don't need a credit history. All you need is proof that you graduated from college within the last 24 months (or will within the next 4), and proof that you have (or will have) a job. We want to put you in the driver's seat. Of course, if you'd rather position yourself under the engine block, it's a free country.

Drivers wanted.

©2000 Volkswagen 1-800 DRIVE VW or VW.com

Dana Automotive • 968 Bridge Road • North Hampton, MA 01062

■ response

continued from page 1

Peru, despite its supposed moral opposition to such an event.

However, Laurie said he feels there's no way to compare the powers of two countries like Peru and China and argues that Peru doesn't have much say when it comes to labor markets, whereas China does.

Wolf said he feels that many Americans opposed to the bill are guilty of what he says is "deep phoniness" in speaking about the Chinese labor record as a means of protesting the passage of the bill. According to Wolf, "there is no consistent moral position that the U.S. has taken" on issues of international human rights. He argued that human rights violations also occur within U.S. borders, and commented that almost all European nations are "horrified" by the United States' continued use of the death penalty in some states. But they do not discontinue trade with us, he stated, adding that their economic and moral interests remain separate.

In regards to European nation's oversea interests, Laurie said they tend to have an amoral view of the world.

"They didn't want to do anything about Bosnia either," Laurie said. "We [Americans] like to think we have a more moral view of the world."

Wolf said he finds discussion of human rights or "those opposed to the law" as being unappealing. "I find it rather revolting, because it's so phony," Wolf said. "If you were truly concerned about human rights, there'd be a list of about twenty countries that you wouldn't trade with, not just China."

Laurie also pointed out the implications that the pushing of the bill through Congress had for the state of American government.

"As it's currently structured, it seems like just a huge subsidy to the most rapacious American corporations," Laurie said. "...The real outrage is that this is a case in which private concentrations of power are much more powerful than government. That's the problem here."

Wolf also admitted that big business has played a large factor in the decision. In fact, most large American corporations are drooling right now over the prospect of trading with China, he said. According to him, he anticipates that American companies would threaten senators' reelection in their respective districts if they didn't vote in favor of the law. He said he had also predicted that many senators would speak about human rights, and then vote "under the table" according to the interests of business.

"Go to any store and ask them how many products they sell that are made in China," he said.

American companies already make large amounts of money by reselling cheap Chinese goods, which include "dirt-cheap clothing and appliances," according to Wolf. He responded to the concerns of trade unions about worldwide labor conditions by saying that though the purchasing power of the American worker has decreased drastically since the mid-70's the low prices of clothing bearing the famous label 'Made in China' have been part of several lucky trends letting underpaid American workers maintain their standard of living. He also criticized the protest groups themselves, who he claimed were a conglomerate of political conservatives, and trade unions whom made "strange bedfellows."

Though national critics like Wolf characterize unionists as universally against the bill, the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), a subchapter of the United Auto Workers and one of the more prominent workers' unions on campus, has seen as much division over the issue among its members as the Senate has.

One GEO member, Duong Van Thanh, a Vietnamese graduate student studying Educational Policy, said she feels differently from many unionists who protest normalization of Chinese trade. She pointed out that globalization, though objected to by many, is inevitable and said, "we only limit our thinking by trying to protect only the jobs of American workers."

She said she sees those opposed to overseas labor as self-centered, saying that we should share work with other countries in the world. She said she feels the exportation of labor to Asia would not weaken U.S. influence as many fear. According to Thanh, workers in other countries could give U.S. companies the advantage of controlling other sectors. As a result, the U.S. will remain dominant in technical and service-related industries.

She seemed to agree with the statement made by President Clinton stating that the normalization of trade would promote freer thinking and peace.

"I do think that it has become a cultural economy," she said. "If we import products from China, Latin America, or Africa, the culture [of those countries] is also imparted in the consumption of the goods."

She said she feels that the United States has been culturally and politically biased against the Chinese by imposing trade restrictions on them. Ultimately, she said, if trade is restricted, "we're limited."

GEO member James Shaw, a doctoral student in the Sociology department said he doesn't just see the problem as a U.S. and China issue.

"It's talking about the global economy in which corporate actors are drowning out the voices of ordinary citizens in every country," Shaw said. "China is only one slice in the debate ... as a workers' organization, we [GEO] are going to take a stand on this issue."

He said that he sees globalization as anything but a positive trend. Shaw then referred to what he called the economic "race to the bottom" – more and more countries he said are calling for "structural adjustments" to be made in the law of different countries seeking entry to international trade organizations. These adjustments, he said, often involve the paring down of legislative provisions for environmental safeguards and workers' rights within industry.

He said the whole world is racing to see how far they can pare down such provisions, and how far they can drive down the price of goods. According to Shaw this means that the world is trying to prevent the voiceless from having a voice.

"The free market is given free reign, and they are trying to eliminate democratic conditions in which workers have any say about what goes on," Shaw said. "They're trying to take away the voices of ordinary people in how the economy should be structured."

Shaw responded to Wolf's criticism that protesters have been selective in opposing the Chinese and "pointing out hypocrisy is important, but you don't want to lower your standards to match that hypocrisy." He said that those opposed to the law were "taking a strategic stand" in opposing the bill, hoping that its defeat would pave the way for future moral victories.

Five college library rep's discuss shared digital plan

By Jamie Loo
Collegian Correspondent

Staff from the five UMass libraries met recently to discuss a plan for a shared UMass digital library. Representatives from the President's Office, University Information Systems and the I-495 Center for Professional Education met at UMass Worcester to discuss the project.

In May 2000 a proposal was drafted for a shared digital library. A digital library system would remove geographical and time barriers to the collections and services of all the libraries as well as providing easy access for distance education students and for citizens in the Commonwealth. The plan will also link the campus library and information resources with the I-495 Center for Professional Education. The digital library will contain images, videos, archival materials, journals and newspapers. Another feature is real-time online reference librarians to support information literacy and online instruction.

Emily Silverman, Communications Specialist and Reference Librarian at the DuBois Library commented that having a digital library will equal financial savings for the library system.

However, she did stress that, as of yet, there was no time-frame in place for the creation of the library and the funding necessary to create it was as of yet unavailable.

"But we only developed the proposal at the beginning of the summer, so we're making pretty good headway," she said.

But Silverman also feels that, beyond financial savings, that the creation of the digital library would help to provide easy access "to everyone" of the unique collections offered at each library.

"If we're sharing physical collections and digitizing our unique collections, we can make new things available to the community electronically," Silverman said. She emphasized that the development of the digital library would be a significant boon to the local community, be they "distance learners or interested members of the community."

There are already successful, cost-effective statewide digital libraries in Connecticut, Ohio, Virginia, and Kentucky. The directors of the five campus libraries are continuing to seek funding for this project as they are real-locating existing resources. Once implemented, Massachusetts will hopefully become a leader in information resources for public higher education for state citizens.

Sam Wilkinson contributed to this article.

Faculty Senate considers reconstruction, class size, bus routes and campus safety

Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Correspondent

Promises of campus reconstruction, safety and classes were just some of the focuses of this year's first Faculty Senate meeting.

On September 21, senate members, faculty and students gathered to discuss issues that would be issues throughout this school year. Representative Ellen Story addressed the meeting, beginning with news of a $400 million dollar allowance given by the Board of Higher Education to be split between the Five Colleges for building improvements and maintenance. Although improvements have been made throughout the campus, including classrooms 102 and 106 in Thompson, others wondered what is next to come.

"How might we marshal a continuing process of restoration throughout the campus," asked Joshua Donohue, an English Professor.

Story responded to Donohue, suggesting ways for Donohue to make good on his question.

"Make noise when you want things and people will listen. Talk to your students about these issues and the more you talk to them about the rain coming through the ceiling and the broken chairs the more they will want to make a difference."

Chancellor David K. Scott also expressed his opinion on the issues of the deferred maintenance around the campus.

"We've been pushing this issue of receiving 400 million dollars for three years, we know have the Board of Trustees and the Board of Higher Education pushing for these figures, and because of this it is now on the front burner," the Chancellor said.

Story also expressed her concerns with people wanting different changes within the University, but not acting upon them.

"One of the problems with the House, is the fact that many things don't make it to the floor. Talk to your students and let them know what they can do, write letters to your representatives so that they can make these problems or ideas their main focus."

Building restorations and budgets where not the only topics of discussion for the Senate, issues involving student run programs also came into play. Scott spoke on issues concerning the continuation of student safety throughout the campus.

"We need to continue to heighten our awareness of violence, particularly sexual violence and that against women," said Scott.

Admissions into the University are also an issue on the table, as this year's freshman undergraduate class is down by 536 in attempts to accommodate the lack of professors throughout the University. Along with a decrease in the number of students, the average requirements to get accepted should as well. The average grade point average increased, while the average SAT scores decreased. Interim Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos announced the recent decision to put the undergraduate course catalog on the Internet for the first time.

Other issues touched were budget cuts and increases amongst the university, along with general announcements by fellow senate members. Issues at large were the PVTA bus situation, which was stated as "an issue we're working diligently on, but until we get it running the way we want it's going to be different."

Along with the issues at hand, a vote was taken as to who the new, two At-Large Rules Committee Members were going to be. Jerry Mileur of the Political Science and Roland Chilton of the Sociology department were voted in as its two newest members.

www.dailycollegian.com

■ China

continued from page 1

this country. Said Dionne, "business salivates ...at the prospect of 1.3 billion [new consumers in China] — and they threw themselves into the China fight with . . . ferocity." Dionne seems disgusted at such corporate politics. Arguing that the passing of the bill was a travesty of the Senate's political autonomy. Dionne commented, "neither faith nor national security could be allowed to get in the way of speedy passage of the trade bill. . . You could almost hear a voice on a megaphone outside the Capitol [saying] 'Resistance is futile.'"

Dionne also cites Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., as saying, of the Senate, "' The world's greatest deliberative body has become the world's biggest rubber stamp [for powerful businesses].'"

At the news conference reported on by the New York Times, President Clinton dismissed such an idea, saying, "there's much more at stake here than our economic self-interest. It's about building a world in which more human beings have more freedom, more control over their lives, more contact with others than ever before; a world in which countries are tied more closely together, and the prospects for peace are strengthened."

SOUPer BOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANNA EAT?
CAN'T FIND A MENU?
DON'T WANNA PICK UP THE PHONE?
LOG ON TO
WWW.MASSMUNCHIES.COM
Point, Click, Eat!
Browse menus and order food for delivery with a few clicks of the mouse!

EARN $3,300
SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
TEACHING POSITIONS • RESIDENTIAL LIFE
SPORTS & ATHLETICS • EXTRACURRICULARS
ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT
EXPLORATION SUMMER PROGRAMS
This summer affect the minds and hearts of students from across the country and around the world by working and teaching at the Exploration* Summer Programs. Exploration offers three summer enrichment programs: the Senior Program at Yale University for grades 10 -12; the Intermediate Program at Wellesley College for grades 8-9; and the Junior Program at St. Mark's School for grades 4-7. Our students enroll in over 120 different workshops ranging from Lego Engineering and Fiction Writing to Mock Trials and Web Page Design. In addition to designing and teaching workshops, our staff leads in a variety of activities, sports, discussions, and field trips. If you are a college or graduate student interested in finding out more, attend one of our informational meetings, visit our web site, or contact us.
WWW.EXPLO.ORG
Dates of Employment:
June 26 - August 12, 2001
SALARIES
Residence Directors $4,100*
Instructors & Office Staff $3,300*
Program Assistants $2,300*
*In addition to salary, staff receive free room and board.
INFORMATION SESSION
@ AMHERST COLLEGE
SEPTEMBER 26TH 7PM
CONVERSE HALL ROOM 207
470 Washington Street • PO Box 368 • Norwood, Mass 02062
☎ 781 762 7400 f 781 762 7425 e summer@explo.org

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Paying for peace:
Big mistakes in Bogota

Columbian president Camilo Gomez's top peace negotiator announced yesterday that the government there is considering paying off guerillas in an effort to curb the country's alarming kidnap epidemic. The announcement came four days after the abduction of 80 people by the Cuban-inspired National Liberation Army (ELN) outside of Cali, Columbia's second-largest city.

The Collegian feels that Gomez is making a serious mistake in even considering such a reaction in a public forum and that if he does indeed cave in to terrorism, he will only serve to guarantee a future of terror for his people.

Perhaps the biggest problem facing Gomez and his country is the precedent that has been set there regarding intimidation through violence; most of the nearly 3,000 reported kidnappings that took place in Columbia last year were blamed on groups such as the ELN and the FARC (Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia). These insurgent organizations have, for years, funded their warfare rather successfully through ransoms and other forms of extortion.

The concept of paying for peace in Columbia is not a new one, nor is it an idea of governmental origin. Several influential citizens of Bogota first proposed such an action last year to then-President Ernesto Samper, who voiced considerable agreement over its merit. The city's highly regarded newspaper, El Espectador, has also endorsed such action in the wake of the ongoing epidemic of terrorism.

The single largest proponent of the concept may be the one that finally swayed Gomez this week; the Roman Catholic Church. Thursday's announcement followed a meeting in Bogota between Gomez and various religious leaders, including Monsignor Jaime Prieto from the Columbian town of Barrancabermeja. Prieto told reporters after the meeting that he was in favor of negotiations with the revolutionary groups, provided an agreement could be reached that would actually curtail future kidnappings.

What Gomez failed to realize in his weighing of advice from Prieto and others is that regardless of the situation, the religious sector almost always endorses the most immediate and humanitarian solution without regard for future ramifications. It goes against the very fundamentals of Catholicism to concede that human beings are greedy and that individuals with a propensity toward violence cannot typically be converted through reason or enlightenment.

But others more familiar with the tendencies of terrorists believe that paying them off will only tighten their hold on the embattled country. Defense Minister Luis Fernando Ramirez has been an adamant opponent of dealing with terrorists since the issue first arose, claiming that such activity "would mean letting the state and society be blackmailed."

Ramirez is absolutely right in that regard. Is putting terrorists on the government payroll going to earn their respect or compliance? Or will it simply validate the concept that violent intimidation pays serious dividends? The latter seems much more realistic.

Perhaps it was a former president of ours who said it best: "We are not in the business of negotiating with terrorists." Quite simply, the government of Columbia is doing nothing more than ensuring that its problems will continue. It is, in a nutshell, making terrorism an official occupation.

Information from Reuters was used in this editorial.

The art of space hunting

NATHAN COATES

It all begins when you return from the Holyoke Mall, or your off-campus friends' house, or the college of your significant other, or whatever exciting destination in Western Mass. or beyond that you have visited. The conditions: twilight over Southwest. The competition: people like you, returning to UMass. The prey: the one empty spot in the purple lot.

It won't be easy, oh no. To think that it will be can only result in failure. You don't want to face failure, to tuck your tail between your legs and park in the yellow lot, or worse, the other purple lot that lies somewhere on the other side of campus. You know, the part that's uphill. No, you have not paid an exorbitant amount of money to park in a lot that lies three quarters of a mile away from your dorm, a lot that sticks halfway into the next town. To do so would mean disgrace and a long, cold walk back to campus.

It wasn't like this last year. No, no, weekly spaces were a guarantee, as ubiquitous as the five towers that appear to be further and further away. You must act, and soon.

You enter from the north, sneering at the blue lot that is always empty. Who uses that lot? How dare they take up valuable space in Southwest! Wouldn't it be nice to just park there? But no, then you would face the ultimate terror of the purple lot hunter: the tow truck. They are the inexorable jackals let loose by a vengeful Parking Services, just waiting for you to screw up, to take the easy path that surely leads to your own demise.

Blast! Someone has pulled out of the first row ahead of you! You grimly check their plates. New Jersey. Enough said. Time to pull into the first row.

Unsurprisingly, there are no spaces in the first row. That's fine -- it's a big lot. You are sure that there is an empty spot somewhere. You see New Jersey drive off to the farthest row down. Fool! He has made a fatal mistake in passing by all those rows. Let him look down there, far away. It's time to take the initiative up here. There is a danger though; he may start moving back towards you. You must get to the center before he does, to the "sweet" row that is right next to the crosswalk. Oh, a spot there would be triumph indeed.

You whip around the corner, determined to get there first. No luck in this row. Time to move to the next one.

Yes! There it lies, smack in the middle of the row: a space. Not too shabby, you tell yourself as you drive to get a closer look. Your triumphal shout dies in your throat and your heart fills with dismay. for it upon closer inspection the space is indeed taken by a tiny Plymouth Horizon with various bumper stickers: one for the Dave Matthews Band, one with "Mean People Suck", and (of course) the dancing bears.

Pull yourself together: distraction can only lead to trouble. Somewhere out there New Jersey is on the prowl, looking for a space that is yours by right. It's time to look in the next row.

No spaces here. Straight ahead you see another car pass you! It is a brand new Jetta. The girl on the inside uses a cell phone. A new adversary and a dangerous one: you know from experience that daddy cars maneuver easily and can pull into a space faster than you.

The next two rows contain no spaces either. You are now in the sweet row, and car after car appears ahead of you. No luck. Still, keep your spirits up, there's half the lot left, and only three competitors.

The next row contains a large pickup taking up two spaces. It has two stickers: one of Calvin urinating on the Chevrolet logo, the other endorsing George W. Bush. You are not surprised.

You are getting close to the far end now. Where is New Jersey? He appears to be waiting on something. He sits in the last row, idling. No! A car is backing out. Someone is leaving! He has taken the space.

Meanwhile, daddy car has left for the yellow lot. You shake your head at the driver's lack of resolve.

The last row contain a new phenomenon: people parking on the grass facing University Drive. This might be a good idea, but then you remember your friend who was towed for such practice. No. Better parking in the yellow lot than in the Amherst Towing compound. Your friend yelled at Parking Services, demanding compensation. They would have had better luck getting blood from a stone.

New Jersey walks by you. He wears a yellow visor and an Abercrombie T-shirt. He smirks at you as he walks toward Southwest. If only you had been in front of him! It's too late for that now.

Curse this lot! Why did Parking Services give out so many stickers? There are too many cars. Freshmen, you are now convinced, should not have them. Your friends back home inform you that their colleges do not let freshmen have cars on campus. At least they should not have purple stickers, you think. But then you are at UMass. Everything done here defies logic and/or reason.

Shake yourself out of this complacency! Though there are no free spaces in the lot, people are walking to their cars from Southwest. Now is the time to act!

It must be done carefully. You don't want to space vulture. This is Southwest. If someone sees you taking their space they might throw a brick through your car. It's happened before to people you know. Windows broken, air out of tires. You once saw people urinating in someone's gas tank. Therefore, you circle the outer perimeter of the lot like a shark, not appearing too eager, but on the alert.

The first pedestrians are five girls singing/screaming "Like A Virgin" at the top of their lungs. They stumble through the lot. This is the moment. No. It is not. They pass through to the yellow lot. Back to circling.

A bearded old man with a stick walks into the lot. Probably not a student, but you have hopes. No, he uses the call box for something and trundles off into the night.

For the next five minutes you are wracked with despair. Have you lost the hunt? You sadly start to turn your car in the direction of the yellow lot when salvation comes: out of the corner of your eye you see someone backing out.

You wait for them to leave. Every moment is an eternity. At last, they are gone and you have pulled into their row, which is incidentally right next to the sweet row. But someone else is coming! Quickly, you pull into the space and get out of your car. You have won!

Head held high, you walk back to the dorms. The battle has been won this day. Your triumph is tempered with the knowledge that there will be other battles to fight, but for now the moment is yours. Savor it.

Nathan Coates is a UMass student.

Check out our Anna Factorovich's first short story at www.angelfire.com/ma3/inspirationdrop/index.html and e-mail comments to factorovich@netscape.net.

Let's Play The Feud

VINCENT PULLIA

Picture this if you will: A wintery weekend night uptown. Student-by-day, jabroni-by-every-minute, Ben D. Waggin pulls his shiny new Yankees cap tightly over his oil-slicked greasy hair. With his buddies in tow, he stumbles out of everyone's favorite watering hole, McMurphy's, in an inebriated haze. As he reaches the bottom of the ramp, he is greeted by the Kielbasi cart but no, tonight is certainly not a night to eat a sausage. Instantly, Ben is grasped by the potent aroma of chicken and blue cheese pizza coming from Antonio's. He is mesmerized by the scent as his buddies tag along, darting and weaving through packs of people like that dancing monkey in that E*Trade commercial. Somehow, beneath all of the Guinness, the Cuervo, and J.D., they are starving and need to grab that late night slice. In an euphoric state, Ben floats into the line inside Antonio's. In the distance, the trumpets of war begin to play.

Wrecked Wilbur, the respectable kid who wears his crispy clean wife-beater out in the dead of winter, sees Ben walk into the place. Wilbur is a tad bit sloshed from drinking Pabst Blue Ribbon in a paper bag behind a DC in Southwest. From the packed corner of the room, he sees the big "NY" on the back of Ben's hat, and he drops his slice on to the plate.

Wilbur grabs his buddy's sleeve and says, "Dude, see that kid's hat?!"

Wilbur's buddy, Fly, is preoccupied watching a pile of napkins.

"Listen to me Fly, I know that kid is making fun of me. Of us man! He thinks we suck!"

Wilbur's buddies, now too caught up in hooting and hollering at the smashed freshmen girls dancing up on chairs in the adjacent corner of the place.

"Take it off...Take it off!" They incessantly chant as Ben forms a wide, lokeresque grin upon his face. He too is now caught up in the festivities. In line, he does the Cabbage Patch dance to the cheers.

Wilbur notices the grin on Ben's face and he grits his teeth. The kid with the Yankees cap is smiling at him. He knows it! Wilbur knows his friends are too enamored with the girls dancing to get some backup. Time is running out.

As the clock ticks 1:00, all of the lights turn on across the strip of bars. Momentarily, the rest of the hungry, drunk, restless people will be pouring out into the streets looking for that coveted slice.

The girls have scampered off of the chairs as some more people start to filter into Antonio's as Wilbur sees Ben and his buddies, with their slices in hand, begin to walk towards the door. Before they get the best of him and the Boston, he does the only thing he knows he can do. He declares war.

Slowly and silently, he raises his fist into the air. Softly it starts: "Yankees suck...Yankees suck...Yankees suck. YANKEES SUCK!"

Wilbur's buddies follow his lead and as they slobber and splatter, they merrily chant along, fresh, warm cheese outlining their mouths. In the corner, Ben and his buddies whip their heads back. They know they have been attacked.

"YANKEES SUCK...YANKEES SUCK..." A majority of Bostonian and Massachusetts people chant inside Antonio's. Suddenly, in a jovial tribute, the Sox fans behind the counter in Antonio's join in on the battle cries and start doing the "Running Man." Ben seems to be surrounded.

Ben and his fellow gang of preferred Natty Ice consumers, raise their voices in disbelief as the chant continues. They counter with the "RED SOX SUCK" chants as more Tri-State area troops file into the pizza place looking for a coveted slice. Suddenly, the evil New Yorker, Sully, jumps into the place and yells, "Hey...who just won the series and beat the crap out of Boastun?" The venom he spews from his lungs is something obscene.

The record player loudly scratches and all gets silent...or at least until Antonio's regular, Marc, releases a loud, tension-relieving beer fart. The low blow. It was only a matter of time before someone said it. On the street, Murph and other Mass natives get enraged. In the distance, explosions rattle through the chilly night. Yup it's war once again. On this particular night, Boston may have started the battle but New York certainly drew first blood.

After a wacky evening of (probably drunken) shenanigans, nothing has served as a better nightcap than a war of words with Tri-State area Yanks fans. For my four years here at UMass, this war has served as a fun, chill, intellectual discussion to even a full-fledged asses-getting-kicked brawl. Sail with the Captain or even add any other drink into the foray and words are gonna fly. Is anything more intense than the Yanks/Sox battle? Last semester, dudes were overturning cars after Sox wins! I mean, all sports get tossed into the foray depending upon the season, but C'mon. Who's kidding whom? Who's gonna get loud and drunk and call some Boston kid's girlfriend a "whour" cause he made fun of a Rangers/Islanders player? To this day, I never see anyone rocking any Jets gear. Are there any Jets fans? The Sox and Yanks are where it's at. Everyone wants a piece of that feud.

"As the clock ticks 1:00, all of the lights turn on across the strip of bars. Momentarily, the rest of the hungry, drunk, restless people will be pouring out into the streets looking for that coveted slice."

Don't you just love the profound Garciaparra/Jeter debates?

"Nomah's got all the powah'!" Kevin, a Mass native, will bellow.

"No way. Nomah's ouwful'! He's gut no D and has no championships!" Sinister Sharon, the New Yorker will counter.

"Yeah well, uh, you suck!" Kevin the Bostonian will merrily retort.

Counter by Sharon, the conniving New Yorker, "So, Jeter told me to tell you, your mowm's a piece of trash!"

Just remember, next time someone disses you're respected team, don that hat and let's rock. Next year is just around the corner. In the words of acclaimed boxing referee Mills Lane, "Let's get it on!"

Vincent Pullia is a UMass student.

Okay...let's hear it. -Write for Ed/Op

Alf, OJ, and the bomb

D. MICHAEL TRUE

Before I begin writing, and you begin getting hot and bothered, let us get a few things straight. If you are offended by someone who speaks the truth, but it's a truth that you don't want to hear, read this. If you're offended by someone who tells outrageous lies, but tells them clearly, read this. Please, avoid nasty vibrations and unnecessary spitefulness; it doesn't look good on anyone except Nixon, and he's dead now. This is clarification for future reference: If I say, "computer investigation," I mean "late night porn hunt". When I say, "I was playing baseball the other day," I mean, "I was watching baseball the other day," and if I say I'm "watching baseball," I'm actually drinking. A "glass of O.J." is a screwdriver, and O.J. is the guy who killed his ex-wife and some unlucky bastard who got off scott-free, and probably "watches too much baseball." As you read this, he is looking for the real killers with some top notch "computer investigating." Ah, the sweet 90's nostalgia. This article will never contain the usual fair of small minded swill found in particular abundance in the editorial section of daily college newspapers. Those articles are, without exception, the product of de-sexed fascists, and those pigs who write so feverishly about convictions they don't even have and will never understand should pay for their crimes. And they will.

This article is rapidly losing continuity, and is not going in the direction I planned. Maybe that's for the better. I mean, a major television network actually planned out the show Alf. I know, it is frightening. They spent thousands of dollars putting together a show based entirely and shamelessly on one gimmick...and we bought it. We scarfed down Alf and giggled for more like the half-wild Neanderthals we all are but don't tell anyone. And the reason we don't confess this dirty secret? All I know is that I don't trust anyone in a society that produced and gobbled up Alf. We put a man on the moon but we can't get over the fact that we put a man on the moon. The baby boomer generation uses the moon line like a generation of jocks that all played in the big 1969 bowl game and peaked right there. On the field in front of their TV sets, throwing the game winning pass and crying their bloodshot eyes to Neil Armstrong, their hometown boy making the catch in the end zone. At least the false modesty was still there. Even in that turbulent, twisted era, our society still had some fake dignity. I hate to think what would happen if we went to the moon now. We'd probably embarrass ourselves. When people start blathering about the possibility of alien life, I usually hope there isn't any. I wish to spare them the embarrassment of being stuck in the backseat of the universe with is, god driving and the devil next to Him giving him bad directions and farting loudly. Like being stuck in the back seat with your fat uncle too drunk to drive himself with gak on his shoes, and there you are trying to remain well, with him gibbering obscenities out the window like a demented talking monkey.

This brings us crazily to a totally unrelated point; the monolith in the movie 2001 is the final scapegoat of this worthless pleasure lusting race. That bastard hunk of stone turned perfectly ignorant monkeys into us. Doomed to walk the earth, and any other planets we can get our hot little hands on, in search of poon-tang. And, along the way, we crud up and defecate on anything that ever meant anything in this universe, like the rain forests, the Alaskan frontier, and the jersey shore, two of which were very beautiful to begin with. We are devouring this planet with such gusto and blind arrogance that is only matched in intensity by playoff baseball and a holy crusade, which are pretty much the same thing. But what does it really matter? Are we that self-aggrandizing that we think that we actually make in a difference in the universe? And knowing how we've fouled up this planet would make the universe let us? That's enough of these foolish questions. Domesticated animals shouldn't have to bother their brains with such trivial bunk. Our enlightened, educated minds should be themselves useful, spewing out gobs of information and opinions on the MTV Music Awards. Sinning fact after endless fact like sparkling gilded tops, careening towards each other, ricocheting off the boundaries of our consciousness, and as we are mesmerized by their beautiful opulence, we almost forget that they are utterly useless. Almost.

What we need to do is grasp for that old human glory, and bring everyone onto the same page as where we "are" and where we "ought" to be. We should go for one more glorious mad dash to the moon before we forget it's there. Get one of the old Titan rockets, and load it up with O.J., Alf, and Neil "golden boy" Armstrong. Film everything on board and sell it pay-per-view at $200 a wack. When they land on the moon, Neil can jump down and scream, "Damn! I'm the ballz!," then plant a flag that's got the MTV logo on one side, and an ad for mullets.com on the other. O.J. can then do some heavy scouring of the moon for the "real killers", and complain about the cut-rate tailoring job on his space gloves. After the mission known as Apollo 69, the "final rape of dignity" reaches its climatic cacophony of commercialism the President of the United States of America will press a button, detonating the 200 lbs. of weapons grade plutonium distributed between the command module, the landing module, Neil Armstrong's pants, and the Whitmore Administration Building. Welcome Back.

D. Michael True is a UMass student.

Matchbox Twenty at Mullins

COURTESY VALORIE MACPHERSON

Matchbox Twenty stops by the Mullins Center tonight as part of their Mad Season tour.

Yourself or someone like you likely in attendance

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Matchbox Twenty continues its promotional North American tour for the multi-platinum album Mad Season by Matchbox Twenty tonight at the Mullins Center at 7 p.m. The Amherst stop comes right in the middle of a fifteen-city trek which began in New Orleans two weeks ago, and continues until Oct. 2.

When Matchbox Twenty first played the Mullins Center two years ago, they were riding high on the success of their incredible debut Yourself or Someone Like You. Since then, the band has taken on several different endeavors and been able to develop together.

Matchbox Twenty has found its own market amongst the flashy popular music that engulfs our culture today. Whether it is the emotionally charged "Push" or the highly energetic "Real World," the band has been able to consistently deliver an appealing beat to a wide array of people through out the world. Their first album sold over ten million copies, making it one of the most triumphant records of the 1990's.

Though the new album has not flourished quite as fast, it certainly does not indicate failure. Mad Season by Matchbox Twenty may be much different from its predecessor, but in many ways it is better. The album has received an enormous amount of critical acclaim, and "Bent," the first single reached number one on both the modern adult contemporary and adult contemporary charts.

In between the first and second album, Matchbox Twenty lead singer Rob Thomas joined legendary guitarist Santana for the song "Smooth" on his album Supernatural. The conjunction earned both men several Grammy awards.

The new album sounds much more eclectically diverse, and more experienced than anything they have done in the past. The band is very excited about the tour. The entertaining style that brought them so much attention with the first album is still there, but Mad Season by Matchbox Twenty has so much more than that. The album is a result of a two-year effort to truly enhance the best qualities of the band, while improving upon the things that they felt kept them down before.

Opening for Matchbox Twenty will be rock act The Jayhawks. The members of the band came together almost fifteen years ago, and they have been touring ever since. Unlike Matchbox Twenty, The Jayhawks have more than two albums, and will bring an extreme amount of seniority with them.

Tonight's show with Matchbox Twenty and The Jayhawks begins at 7:00 p.m. There are still tickets available, and they can be purchased online at www.ticketmaster.com or at the Mullins Center box office.

The Jayhawks fly into Amherst

The Jayhawks open up the Matchbox Twenty show tonight at the Mullins Center.

Aparo's Spaceship landing at Skybox

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

The cover of Angie Aparo's The American depicts a faceless, shadowy figure planting the Stars and Stripes atop a massive pile of waste and debris. The background is a drab gray sky drained of color with oppressive clouds almost forcing the figure to hunch over. An expressive picture about the beauty and ugliness of American society further detailed throughout the album - twelve tracks. This scene could just as well be a statement of Aparo's role in the current popular music landscape. The forecast has been cloudy for quite some time in pop music, and many of the true musicians to swallow their pride hunch over and support the latest package to fall off the assembly line. Aparo is certainly among these figures planted firmly above the heap, but not without distinction from having one foot on the line for the music. Lawyers, managers, even label heads often debut earlier this year (he signed a five schedule that earned him a record deal and now continues to support on it will no doubt be essential in reaching the intended what Atlanta audience have known for some time. Angie Aparo is for real.

Of course success often brings strange bedfellows and somewhere along the line Aparo crossed paths with Matt Serletic, the super producer that many would credit with capturing much of the crap in the late Aparo stands upon Matchbox Twenty, Edwin McCain, Serletic is known for aligning himself among such acts whose questionable talent is overshadowed by his glossy radio-friendly production. Many of Aparo's fans will be surprised to find that his latest album would be home to such less Top-40 numbers.

Equally unsurprising are the songs Aparo covered in his set at Skybox Sunday. Aparo covered [illegible] and sang a [illegible] example of [illegible] almost 5 o'clock [illegible] Over the [illegible] and [illegible] Aparo [illegible] recited [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a commentary [illegible] between spirituality and [illegible] reality.

The music, which has [illegible] classics planted in [illegible] [illegible] never lacking a super [illegible] pop sense it never [illegible] [illegible] lyrics that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] debut earlier this year [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Collegian's Video Pick of the Week is Dirty Work, Bob Saget's finest hour

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

When you come home from Matchbox Twenty tonight when you start to sober up, when you're ready to order pizza and you don't want to watch the same Real World marathon you've seen five times too many, stop by your local video store. But with so many options, your natural tendencies towards indecision may be a challenge. It's difficult for you to choose what to bring home. Where can you turn?

The collegian of course. This week's video pick: Dirty Work.

I'm not sure if this movie ran for more than two weeks in the theaters. But I do know the critical acclaim that it deserved never came as every film featuring a Saturday Night Live cast member is destined for failure. But if you haven't caught the diamond in the rough now's the time.

Dirty Work admittedly is a cinematic abomination. But it's a lot of fun. Mitch Weaver (Norm MacDonald) after losing several thousand jobs and girlfriends moves in with his best friend from childhood, Sam (Artie Lange) and Sam's dad (Jack Warden). Sam and Mitch decide to open a revenge for hire business in order to raise the $50,000 they need to pay for the heart transplant that will save Sam's dad's life. The $50,000 will actually pay a Dr. Farthing (Chevy Chase) who has an obsessive gambling problem. Farthing admits to betting for Mr. T in Rocky III, Chase plays philosopher in the film. He questions the long losses: "You know what I don't get?" he asks. "When you owe a bookie a lot of money, and he has blows one of your toes off. You still owe him the money. It doesn't seem fair to me."

The plot becomes more complicated with an obligatory love interest (Taylor Howard), a one-dimensional, evil, capitalistic mogul (Christopher McDonald), and a Vietnam vet (Chris Farley) who had his nose bitten off by a Saigon whore.

As with all of the Saturday Night Live films, the hated enemy is both disgustingly wicked and stupid. Chris McDonald, who also played Shooter McGavin in the Adam Sandler film Happy Gilmore, does a terrific job as Travis Cole.

But these details are unimportant because it is not the compelling dynamics of this story of two friends that make Dirty Work. They just serve as a framework for Norm MacDonald's penchant to overstate the obvious—but in a funny way. For example: Mitch and Sam spend a night in jail and Mitch is taken into a corner by some of the bigger boys in the cell. When he comes back a few moments later, pulling up his pants, he tells them he has a good mind to see the Warden about what they just did to him; what bothered him most about it was the "lack of respect."

Making this film even more appealing are cameos by Don Rickles, Adam Sandler, John Goodman, and—if you can believe it—Gary Coleman. One scene includes Coleman being knocked out in a boxing ring. On top of that it was written and directed by Bob Saget (yes, Saget of Full House and America's Funniest Home Videos fame), who reveals the darker, tragicomic side of himself in this art. Saget's humor comes fully equipped with jokes about "dead hookers" and "crazy homeless people."

Dirty Work has no intellectual or aesthetic value and I'd recommend lots of other ways to use the hours you'll spend watching it. Still, it's earned a spot in the leagues of films that should be seen. When you have absolutely nothing else to do.

Ryan Benhartra contributed to this article

Galactic Spreads Love

Catch Galactic at this weekend's massive RiverFest festival.

Revs douse Fire, hold their breath

CHRIS GAFFNEY

Much as Mrs. O'Leary's ill-tempered cow caused a spot of trouble on the shores of Lake Michigan in 1871, the Revolution kicked to a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Fire on Tuesday night. The third, and decisive, game of the series will be played in Chicago tonight.

The victory, in front of 11,000 soaking wet Revs supporters, sends the eastern Massachusetts disestablishmentarians further into the playoffs than they have ever been. All credit should be given to first year Revs coach Fernando Clavijo who has continued to squeeze blood out of pebbles, and snatch victory from the gaping maw of defeat. Clavijo's switch to a 4-4-2 with captain John Harkes filling in at right back for the injured Rusty Pierce was just the tactic on the day. Defensive central midfielders Leonel Alvarez and Joey Franchino played an effective conspiratory role in the center of the park and Jamaican international forward Wolde Harris was in prime form throughout the game. Even the ever-pouting Eric Wynalda was able to make his coach look good with the first goal of the match.

Clavijo has been able to construct a team which should have no chance against a side like Chicago, but yet, the Fire were played off the pitch for long periods of the match. Perhaps Chicago's attacking triumverate of Stoitchkov, Novak, and Kovalenko were disorientated by the obtrusive American football markings on the field. Or it could have been the intrusion of extra Patriots seating which narrowed the field by several yards on either side.

From my vantage point, however, and I'll admit it's a small TV, the Revolution played solid, organized, predictably uncreative soccer over 90 minutes and deserved the three points they came away with.

If the Revs had scored a third goal, all New England fans would have had righteous indignation rising like gas prices. The MLS format for playoffs treats each game of a three game series like a regular season game, awarding three points for a win and one for a tie. In the rest of the world, such encounters are done on a home and home schedule with the critical factor being total goals scored. Thus if the Revs had won 3-1, they would have won on aggregate 4-3, sending them to the semi-finals. As it is they didn't, and righteous indignation can take a rest. The series is tied at three points each, never mind the goals. One game left and everything to play for. The game will be shown live on FSNE at 8pm Friday night.

In other MLS news, the NY/NJ Metrostars booked a spot in the semi-finals by beating the Dallas Burn twice by a score of 2-1. My prediction of this series lasting for three games to boost the TV ratings was dead wrong because absolutely none of the games could be seen on TV. The Colorado Rapids soaked the spirit out of the Kansas City Wizards in their second game, 0-0, and have forced a third game at Arrowhead Stadium on Sunday. The Wizards only need to draw to go through. Five different players scored for the Los Angeles Galaxy as they quelched the Tampa Bay Mutiny, 5-2. Los Angeles has been in the MLS Cup semi-finals four of the last five years.

Other MLS scores (as predicted): Kansas City 1, Colorado 0; New York 2, Dallas 1; Los Angeles 1, Tampa Bay 0.

Chris Gaffney is a Collegian correspondent.

Nothing new: Boston fans bitter

DAN LAMOTHE

Well, it's that time of the year again. The leaves will be changing color soon, and the temperature is dropping daily. As the temperature drops, though, pennant fever is beginning to heat up in baseball land. Pennant fever means one thing to me, a poor, helpless Red Sox fan...I hate the Yankees!

I need to share the reasons why I hate them with as many people as possible. All you Yankee fans will probably hunt me down and lynch me out the window of one of the Southwest towers, but I need to say what I need to say. Somebody has too. Many of these reasons are old hat and are used all the time, but they bear being said again. After all, the Yankees suck.

The Yankees suck because their payroll is so much higher than all of the other teams. Year after year, they buy themselves into the playoffs with a team of superstars, each of whom has a salary that costs more than the Expos' infield. It's disgusting, really.

George (My-Way-or-the-Highway-Uncle-Moneybags) Steinbrenner buys himself whatever he wants, year after year. This year he even started signing players that his manager doesn't want (Jose Canseco) so that other teams can't have him. How's that for a kick in the teeth, Boston fans?

Which brings us to another reason--George Steinbrenner himself. Face it folks, the man is nuts. Never has a man been on an ego trip for so many years in a row. "The Boss" is almost like a mob leader, calling the shots from his soft leather chair in the luxury box while others do the dirty work for him. Ugh.

Then, of course, we've got the current bunch of Yankees. Don't get me wrong; there are some wonderful stories on this team. Anyone with a heart has to admire Joe Torre's successful battle with cancer and the professionalism of players like Bernie Williams. But a lot of the players on the team just rile me up.

Take Chuck Knoblauch, for example. The dude is A – N – N – O – Y – I – N – G. He's a little whiny no good excuse for a second baseman. Anyone who watched him in the playoffs arguing with the umpire instead of picking up the live ball that hit the baserunner knows what I'm talking about.

Then we have the Roger-factor. Now, Roger Clemens is still a great pitcher, but the man had and always will have an ENORMOUS ego. We just didn't notice as much in Massachusetts before, because he was on our side, pitching for the Sox.

Perhaps the number one reason why I hate the Yankees is because of the other New York teams. While the Jets, Giants, and Mets fight for first place in their divisions, the Massachusetts teams stink. The Knicks play into the conference finals every year it seems, while the Celtics have stunk since they had that tall white dude shooting three-pointers. The Bruins played themselves into last place, too.

New York fans kill me though. Every time. It's hilarious. They just don't get it because they haven't lost in like, ten years. Everyone knows whom I'm talking about. You probably have a die-hard Yankee fan in your hall right now screaming at the top of their lungs about how the "Yankees got screwed last night!" even if they still did win by three runs.

New York and its fans just don't know what it is to lose anymore. Even when they don't win it all, they're still in the hunt. Never ever do they have a cellar dweller. So it seems that many of them have forgotten what its like to be a humble fan of a bad team, and they rub our faces in it. Like that Jets fan across the hall that ran around with his boxers tied to his head after they beat the Patriots on Monday Night Football. Or the Yankees fan that put the Yankees bumper stick on top of a Red Sox poster. Oh yeah. The New York sports attitude is everywhere. I guess we better get used of it though, because it's not changing anytime soon. The Yankees may suck in my heart, but they still seem to rule the rest of the world.

Dan Lamothe is a UMass student.

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

Exactly 2:07 later, she belted another of her monster hits off of the goalie, right to Erika Whiston, who calmly whacked in the third and final goal of the game.

For the rest of the game, neither team played well although the Minutewomen certainly had their chances down the stretch to increase their lead even more.

"We need to execute the details of the game better, and concentrate on the simple things," Shea said. "Repetition, repetition, repetition, that is the key. Our level of reaction should be to the point where we don't even think about it."

Coming off a good showing last weekend against the defending national champions and #1 ranked Maryland Terrapins, Shea expected more out of her team despite the fact that the Maroon and White ended up losing in College Park 2-0.

"It was a poor performance coming off the Maryland game," said Shea. "We are not where we need to be."

Still, it is impossible to argue with a win, and UMass is now standing at 6-2 on the year. The Minutewomen return to action on Sept. 27 when they travel across the state to Cambridge to take on Harvard.

■ tennis

continued from page 10

marked another spectacular day for the Italian product freshman number one Francesca Mancini, who won her match in straight sets, 6-2, 6-0. The victory was particularly sweet because she defeated last year's Division III singles champion Jamie Cohen.

She also was responsible – along with her doubles teammate Depontes – for the only doubles win on the day, defeating the Amherst team of Heather Cole and Stephanie Fong, 8-5.

Her performance versus Amherst capped off a tremendous week for Mancini. After winning four consecutive matches at the Eastern Tennis Championships in West Point, NY over the weekend, she was awarded with the UMass/WMHP Athlete of the Week on Wednesday at the UMass weekly sports luncheon.

"Francesca is very mature in all aspects of the game," head coach Judy Dixon said. "She has great promise as a freshman."

WRITE SPORTS.

Bucci
HAIRCUTS $10.
25 n pleasant st amherst 256 0733
145 main st northampton 586 0155

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Made in USA
CARPE DIEM !!!
The ALWAYS CALENDAR
PERPETUAL FOR DESK OR WALL
Stencil www.stencil.com #15
Available at the CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE & BOOKSTORE

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

First Baptist Church
YOUR CAMPUS CHURCH
Address: Corner of Massachusetts Ave. & North Pleasant St.
INFORMATION: Email: Campus@fbcamherst.org Telephone: 549-3596
Sun 9:15 am College Class
Sun 10:45 am Contemporary Service
Sun 12:00 pm College Lunch! (Free food!)
Fri 7:30 pm International Bible Study

NFL Week 4 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	8-5-1 (17-10-2)	6-7-1 (14-13-2)	5-8-1 (12-15-2)	8-5-1 (12-15-2)	9-4-1 (14-13-2)
New England @ Miami	Miami by 4 1/2	Miami	Miami	New England	New England	New England
San Francisco @ Dallas	Dallas by 6 1/2	San Francisco	Dallas	San Francisco	Dallas	San Francisco
Philadelphia @ New Orleans	New Orleans by 1 1/2	Philadelphia	New Orleans	New Orleans	Phildedelphia	New Orleans
St. Louis @ Atlanta	St. Louis by 7	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	Atlanta
Tennessee @ Pittsburgh	Tennessee by 7	Tennessee	Tennessee	Pittsburgh	Tennessee	Tennessee
Detroit @ Chicago	Chicago by 1 1/2	Chicago	Chicago	Detroit	Chicago	Chicago
Cincinnati @ Baltimore	Baltimore by 11 1/2	Cincinnati	Cincinnati	Baltimore	Cincinnati	Baltimore
Green Bay @ Arizona	Arizona by 1	Green Bay	Arizona	Arizona	Green Bay	Arizona
Kansas City @ Denver	Denver by 7	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Denver
NY Jets @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 7	Tampa Bay	NY Jets	Tampa Bay	NY Jets	Tampa Bay
Seattle @ San Diego	Seattle by 2 1/2	Seattle	Seattle	San Diego	Seattle	Seattle
Cleveland @ Oakland	Oakland by 10 1/2	Cleveland	Cleveland	Oakland	Cleveland	Oakland
Washington @ NY Giants	NY Giants by 1	Washington	NY Giants	Washington	NY Giants	NY Giants
Jacksonville @ Indianapolis	Indianapolis by 3 1/2	Jacksonville	Indianapolis	Jacksonville	Indianapolis	Jacksonville

Minutemen aim to make house pets out of Bearcats and Bulldogs

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Correspondent

UMass has been shown the door to success; now they must walk through it. The Massachusetts soccer team goes into this weekend eyeing a possible four-game winning streak, with Bearcats and Bulldogs in the cross hairs.

UMass' come from behind victory over New Hampshire on Wednesday led Coach Sam Koch to say, "This team doesn't give up." The Maroon and White now look to extend its record above .500 in the UMass Classic.

On Friday the Minutemen will play the Binghamton Bearcats (1-4-1) and then they will take the pitch Sunday against the Fresno State Bulldogs (4-1). The fourth participant in the two game tournament will be the Hartford Hawks (3-2), who earlier in the season defeated UMass by a score of 2-1.

In the first game UMass faces a Binghamton squad that it should handle easily. The Bearcats are three games under .500 for the year, coming off a 2-0 loss to Philadelphia. Massachusetts will look to sophomore scoring talents Yuri Morales and Jeff Deren to continue their strong play. Morales and Deren have combined for four goals and nine points in the last two contests, supporting marquee striker Fred Kinateder up front.

Finding the net may not be as easy as the Bearcats bring an experienced defense into Amherst on Friday. Led by senior captain Matt Ryan, Binghamton will look to have a sound defensive effort while using physical play to offset the UMass talent edge. Green and White coach Hristos Dimitrou will have his work cut out for him in containing the Massachusetts attack, especially considering its lack of success against less talented teams.

The key to victory for the Maroon and White will be playing a strong fundamental game as well as capitalizing on its scoring chances. The bigger test will come on Sunday when Fresno State brings a potent scoring attack to Totman Field.

UMass goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn will have to be on top of his game to contain a Bulldog attack that returns two of its strikers from the '99 campaign. Junior sweeper J.R. Pouncey and senior fullback Patrik Beattie lead the defense that must be a stalwart in order to give UMass a chance to win and the offense a chance to counter.

Fresno has scored eleven goals in five games en route to a 4-1 record but they are by no means unstoppable. San Diego used a physical back four to hold the Cardinal and Blue attack to only one goal in its only loss of the season. If the fullbacks can repel the Bulldog attack then the Maroon and White should be able to take control of the game.

Fresno can be scored upon as Atlantic 10 member Xavier put two on the board against the 'Dogs defense. It will be important for the UMass frontrunners such as Deren and Kinateder to finish off the scoring chances they have as this match could turn into a shootout. If the defense holds up and the offense continues rolling along then UMass will have a chance to leave the weekend with a four game winning streak.

Victory in this game will lie in O'Quinn and his ability to organize the defense and make big saves when needed, as well as the strength of the defense in front of him. The defense will need help from the midfielders coming back to pick up unmarked players sent forward on the bulldog attack.

Offensively the Minutemen have to create chances with strong midfield play from Derek Rhodes, Benny Hoffman and company. The middy's can now have confidence in the finishing ability of the strikers, so scoring opportunities should come early and often. If all the pieces come together for UMass then it will have a good chance to come out of the weekend with a four game winning streak.

After a difficult start, A-10 schedule begins

www.dailycollegian.com

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

After nine games in its 2000 campaign, the Massachusetts women's volleyball team has much like what it had to work with at the beginning of the season–a clean slate. True, the Minutewomen have a 3-6 record under their belts, but now they have an opportunity to start fresh as they open Atlantic 10 conference action this weekend with matches at Dayton and at Xavier.

The first game of the weekend sees the Maroon and White going nose to nose with the Flyers. Dayton compiled a 6-4 record this preseason, its last match being a three game sweep of cross-town rival Wright State this past Thursday. The Flyers are led by senior Sierra Ashley and sophomore Susan Westbrock, who are first and second on the team in scoring.

"Dayton has a great balanced attack," UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "They have a great setter in Carla Muntz. And I don't think it is a team we can out-hit, but a team we need to out-defend."

The last time the Minutewomen met up with the Flyers, it resulted in a 3-1 defeat for UMass in Dayton last Oct. 23. Departed senior Jill Meyers led the team in both kills and digs, with 19 and 20 respectively. Current star Rebecca Hasson led the Maroon and White with five blocks in the match.

As for Xavier, it too stands at 6-4 on the season, and is coming off a 2-1 performance in the Wyoming Tournament. The Musketeers downed Wisconsin and Wisconsin-Green Bay before falling 3-0 to Pittsburgh in the final game of the tournament. Sara Bachus is the big gunner, as she leads the team in kills and is among the leaders in digs.

"The key to Xavier is its right-side player Sara Bachus. The team goes where she goes. She's dynamic and is their leading attacker," Kenny said.

Xavier swept UMass in the teams' two matches last year, sweeping the Maroon and White in October in Cincinnati and downing them 3-1 in September at Curry Hicks Cage.

The Minutewomen's last action was in the Coors Classic, where they were swept by highly competitive Colorado State, Georgia Tech and Loyola-Chicago.

"We can use the strong competition from last weekend, and hope that it carries over into this weekend," Kenny said. "There is a sense of urgency right now because we are starting conference play."

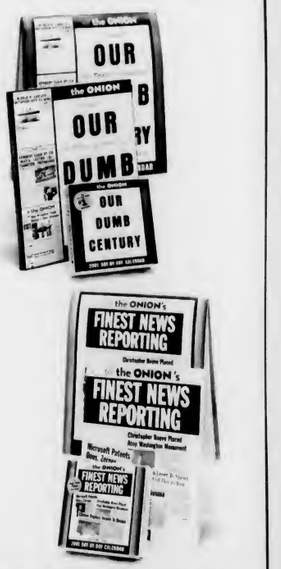
The Minutewomen are led by senior Rebecca Hasson, who is leading the team by virtue of a 4.13 kill per game average on the season. Junior Lymarie Llovet leads the team in digs, averaging 2.50 per game.

Kenny put everything in perspective when she said, "Hopefully, we will have a good weekend, and with the tough preseason we played, we should be ready for anything that comes at us."

YANKEE CANDLE
If you're looking for a
SEASONAL or PART-TIME
position, we want to meet you!
Come meet us at the UMASS Campus Center
Tuesday, September 26, 2000
8:30am to 5:00pm
Flexible schedules, including Seasonal and Part-Time Weekend hours, are available to fit your unique scheduling needs. We are currently looking for help in the following areas:
• SEASONAL SALES ASSOCIATES
• SEASONAL RESTAURANT STAFF
• SHIPPERS (year round)
We are a progressive company offering our Seasonal and Part-Time associates many extras including: competitive wages, generous discount on candles, as well as use of our fitness center. We compensate all employees required to work on Sundays with time-and-a-half pay.
If you are unable to attend, please stop by our Corporate Headquarters, YCI, at 102 Chrisitan Lane in Whately, MA. Directions: Route 115 North to Route 5 & 10 intersection, take left onto Route 5 & 10 South, left onto Christian Lane.
No phone calls please; EOE
YCC Listed NYSE
www.yankeecandle.com
For a complete listing of current job openings, please call the Yankee Candle jobline at 800-839-6038 and select menu option 4.

WELCOME BACK!
BIG GUY LIQUORS
North Amherst 549-3555
Sunderland 665-5030
We Sell Steam Dogs!
BIG ON FRIENDLY SERVICE

Allow Us to Be the First to Drain Your Disposable Income, College Student.



Treat yourself to some fine Onion products. Besides, it's Daddy's money anyway.
AT BOOKSTORES EVERYWHERE
www.theonion.com Three Rivers Press www.randomhouse.com
Listen to The Onion's Finest News Reporting, Volume I, available on audio cassette and CD from Random House AudioBooks.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 558 Hills South For more information Call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker $1500 obo 413-665-3630

CHILDCARE

Childcare needed for Weds 1:30-3:30pm experienced with references. Call 253-1655

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 for sale. For further information. 413-667-3084

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

EMPLOYMENT

The Fine Arts Center is hiring ushers for the 2000-2001 season! For more information, please contact: Cheryl at 545-0190 (after October 1 - 545-0192)

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pizza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

Work as an EMT Mullins, FAC, Bowker, Campus Events orientation 9/24, 1:00pm Morrill N406 Call 545-1885 for more info.

STAGE HANDS WANTED At the Fine Arts Center. $6.75/HR. Applications at Production Services rm 146 F.A.C.

EMPLOYMENT

Resturant Cashier. Speaking and writing Chinese and English part-time or full-time (413)582-7045

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com zMinutemen.com Internships Interested in working for an emerging dot-com? zMinutemen.com, has 3 paid internships available. Candidates should be Internet savvy and interested in marketing or technology. Duties include: online and offline marketing to students and alumni, building community websites, creating on-campus awareness. Send resume or letter of interest to: cdillon@zuniversity.com

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Dorm size refrigerator $100 obo 6mos old, only used for 2! Call 253-2455

FLYWHEELS SKATES & ACCESORIES Roller and Inline 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sororities/Fraternities : SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Alva Happy 20th Some mistakes shouldn't be forever. You're my heart I'd never want to loose you

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing Retired pro Dajata Bumpus 253-0364

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

LOST & FOUND

Ladies Ring In Whitmore ladies room. Aug 24th 545-5046

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

FREE KITTENS 2 cute kittens need loving homes 413-665-7315 Act quickly

ROOMMATE WATNED

Roommate needed ASAP Mill Valley. Prefer male, on bus route, washer/dryer 253-7026

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SPORTS

Attention Wrestlers, Boxers, anyone who likes to workout. Mixed Martial Arts Program located at local gym. Looking for interested athletes. Kirik 256-0080 www.mixedmartialarts.com kirik@mixedmartialarts.com

TRAVEL

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Cancun, Jamaica, Florida, Bahamas, Mazatlan Now Hiring Campus Reps, Earn Free Trips, Cash & Parties! Group discounts for 6+ Book trips at our online reservations system! www.sunsplashtours.com 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WANTED!! 30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 30LBS IN 30 DAYS FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO MassMunchies.com

What are you waiting for?? Need to Advertise? Call 545-3500 or Come down to The Daily Collegian located in the Campus Center Basement TODAY!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE..... because you can use jock font too!!!

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	Informational
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Clovel to Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 22, 2000

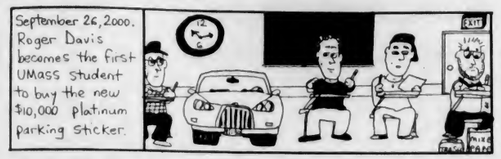
		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lahrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		The Grand (In Stereo)		Nova: Escape!	Accidents
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Backer	Survivor "The Merger"		JAG "Surface Warfare"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Backer	Survivor "The Merger"		JAG "Surface Warfare"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Two Guys-Girl	Norm	Norm	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular "Timberl" (N)		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "The Color of God"		Blind Date	Real TV	The Strip (In Stereo)		Secret Agent Man (In Stereo)		News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	★★½ "Money Talks" (1997, Comedy) Chris Tucker. (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lahrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Two Guys-Girl	Norm	Norm	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	The Strip (In Stereo)		Secret Agent Man (In Stereo)		Star Trak: Voyager "Threshold"		Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Major League Baseball: Atlanta Braves at Montreal Expos. (Live)						★★ "Straight Talk" (1992, Comedy) Dolly Parton, James Woods.
A&E	10		L.A. Law		Law & Order "Heaven"		Biography: Pol Pot		Poirot "The Underdog"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Asylum"
CNN	50	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	06	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Penn & Teller	Penn & Teller	Penn & Teller	Penn & Teller	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live
DISC	42		Your New House		Wild Discovery: Rats		On the Inside "U.S. Men"		News	Discover Mag.	Storm Warning!		On the Inside "U.S. Men"
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		Great Outdoor Games		Auto Racing: NASCAR Craftsman Truck -- E-commerce.com 200				Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	49		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	★★½ "A Season in Purgatory" (1996, Drama) Patrick Dempsey, Craig Sheffer.								Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	33		Countdown	Fear (In Stereo)			Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World
NICK	45		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	U Pick Nicktoons (In Stereo)				I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	43		Sliders (In Stereo)		Quantum Leap (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Beholder"		Farscape "Vitas Mortis"		Lexx: The Series "Gondola"		Invisible Man "Beholder"
TLC	44	24	Home Again	Home Again	Extreme Machines		Camera's Eye: Emergency		Atlantis: The Lost Continent		Lost Ships: White Gold (N)		Camera's Eye: Emergency
TNT	48		ER "Truth & Consequences"		Pretender "Jaroldo!" (In Stereo)		★★½ "Leaving Las Vegas" (1995, Drama) Nicolas Cage				"Twisted Desire" (1996, Drama)		Melissa Joan Hart.
USA	32		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Psychic Warrior"		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		★★★ "Jacob's Ladder" (1990, Suspense) Tim Robbins.				Strip Poker	Manhattan, AZ
HBO	53		(5:00) "You've Got Mail" (1998)		Inside the NFL		★★★ "Die Hard 2" (1990, Drama) Bruce Willis. (In Stereo) R				Sex and-City		★ "Simon Sez" (1999) Dennis Rodman. PG-13
MAX	54		4:35)		★★★ "Daybreak" (1993) Cuba Gooding Jr.. R		★★ "A Murder of Crows" (1998, Suspense) R		Fatch		★½ "Chill Factor" (1999) Cuba Gooding Jr.. R		Pleasure Zone
SHOW	55		★★★½ "Arthur" (1981, Comedy) Dudley Moore. (In Stereo) PG		★★ "Runaway Bride" (1999, Comedy) Julia Roberts. PG						Stargate SG-1		Outer Limits "Inner Child"	Beggars

Dilbert By Scott Adams

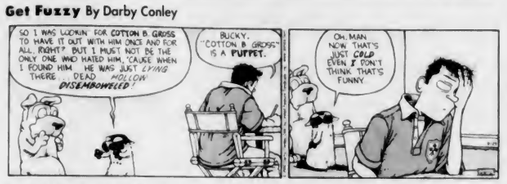
DOGBERT CONSULTS
YOU NEED TO REORGANIZE BY CUSTOMER TYPE.
ONE DIVISION WOULD FOCUS ON SELLING TO FEEBLE-MINDED PEOPLE.
ARE YOU GESTURING AT ME BECAUSE I WOULD WORK IN THAT DIVISION?
WHAT'S YOUR SECOND GUESS?

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



SO I WAS LOOKIN FOR COTTON B. GROSS TO HAVE IT OUT WITH HIM ONCE AND FOR ALL. RIGHT? BUT I MUST NOT BE THE ONLY ONE WHO HATED HIM, 'CAUSE WHEN I FOUND HIM HE WAS JUST LYING THERE... DEAD. MOLLON DISEMBOWELED!
BUCKY: "COTTON B. GROSS IS A PUPPET."
OH MAN. NOW THAT'S JUST GOLD EVEN I DON'T THINK THAT'S FUNNY.

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

TELL US RJ... TELL US THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.
THERE IS NO ONE SECRET... THERE ARE MANY, MANY, MANY PATHS TO EN...
MMM!
...HEAVYMENT.
OOOOOOO.... AHHHHHH....

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO THE ROBOT ENTRY OCCURRED SOMETIME BETWEEN 12 NOON AND APPROXIMATELY 2:35 P.M.
THAT'S CORRECT, OFFICER.
AND HAVE YOU MADE A LIST OF THE STOLEN ITEMS?
UH, WELL THERE WERE NO STOLEN ITEMS.
THERE WERE NO STOLEN ITEMS
NO BUT WHOEVER DID IT LEFT A NOTE
HEY MAN, COULDN'T YOU AT LEAST BUY A FOUR HEAD VCR?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SO YOU AGREE WE NEED A BSS NEED PLAN, OVER?
I DO. I ONLY TO AT TRACT BABES.
BSS NEEDS PLANS ATTRACT BABES?
WHY AND I COULD DEFINITELY USE A MAJOR BABE IN MY LIFE!
YOU KNOW, WHAT WOULD BE EVEN COOLER THAN A MAJOR BABE?
I CAN'T IMAGINE
A MAJOR BABE WITH A BUSINESS PLAN
YEAH, THAT IS DEFINITELY BEYOND US.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

Butter Cup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

WALLACE STEVENS WROTE, "WHEN THE BLACKBIRD FLEW OUT OF SIGHT, IT MARKED THE EDGE OF ONE OF MANY CIRCLES."
THAT'S INEXPRESSIBLY COOL.
SPEAKING OF WHICH, I SHAMPOOED MY KITTEN IN HONEY THIS MORNING.

Horoscopes

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Today you will find money under your pillow. It's for that tooth you gave me when you were 4 and I forgot to give you money back for it. I'm sorry about that. I'm a much better tooth fairy now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You're so lucky you're a star. But you cry, cry, cry on your lonely heart. You think if there's nothing missing in my life, why do these tears come at night? Amen, amen.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Don't eat all your nuts at once today. Save some for later tonight. And remember to never crawl down the tree backwards. Oh sorry, that's a bad recipe for squirrels.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you live in John Adams, 11th floor, room 1109 ... I used to live there freshman year, and you better be keeping it clean. If you check under the mattress, on the bottom bunk, you might find something.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You've stared long enough. Why don't you just wait for her after class and ask her out? Pay no attention to her friend ... he's just jealous.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Please vote for George W. Bush. He is a good candidate and he will serve this country well. His dad was the best president ever, so why not his son? He's a cool guy, and he's down with college kids. Sincerely, George Bush.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20) — Don't waddle in the pond today. It's dirty water, and you need a change. Break free, flap your wings, and fly. Oh, sorry, that's a horoscope for ducks.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Watch the Cosmos today and practice your bubble-ball ile. You never know when a professor will ask for that on a test.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — It would probably be a good idea to avoid Southwest tonight. The students will be drunk and bored. And you might get thrown at a Domino's Pizza delivery guy. Oh, sorry. That's a horoscope for a cat.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You know that guy that always wears a hat? Well, don't ask him why he always wears a hat while you pull it off his head. You'll feel really uncomfortable after you realize he wears it because he's bald.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Three days from now, a handsome stranger will ask you for your phone number. Do not give it to him. He's a telemarketer from Cut Co. who will attempt to sell you $500 knives every night for the rest of your life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Today you will be tempted to be feed a swan the leftovers from your lunch. Before you do, you should know that swan is not a real swan. It is an animatronic spy sent here in the 50's by Russia.

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 71 LOW: 58	HIGH: 72 LOW: 64	HIGH: 76 LOW: 65

MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

FERAL BOY TAKES A QUICK BREAK FROM KILLING SUPERMARKET CUSTOMERS

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"Consistency is the last refuge of the unimaginative."

—Oscar Wilde

ACROSS
1 Gourmet mushroom
6 Went over the limit
10 Kind of portrait
14 Licorice-like flavoring
15 Mata —
16 Spoken
17 "— You Went Away"
18 Heroic tale
19 Timber wolf
20 Roman garment
21 Dangerous spider
23 Swimmer's gear
25 Downy ducks
26 It's ordered with tonic
27 Tall tales
29 Highway cone
32 Pulled (a car)
33 Luau instrument
36 Business attire
37 Bleached
38 Garage-sale tag words
39 Under the weather
40 — with supported
41 Collector's item
42 Transfer picture
43 "How terrific!"
44 Noose
47 Environment
51 Not biased
54 He and she
55 Pass slowly, as time
56 Eye in Quebec
57 Wading bird
58 Damsel
59 Church part
60 Ghastly
61 Other
62 Reach across
63 Sea eagles

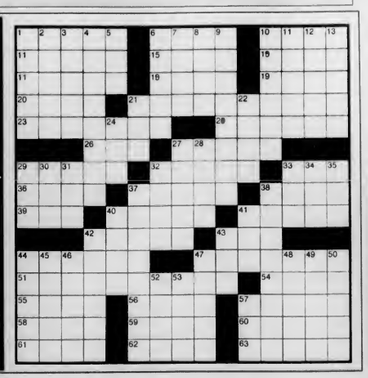
DOWN
1 Tall ship's features
2 Hamburger garnish
3 Beatie Starr
4 Edible snail
5 "Malcolm X" director Spike
6 Sleeveless blouse
7 Hemingway nickname
8 Explorer — the Red
9 Bargained
10 Not liquids
11 Wear away
12 Work
13 Gushes
21 Jerry's partner
22 Guilt
24 Relatives
27 Alpine song
28 Thunderstruck
29 Tire pressure abbr.
30 Actor Brynner
31 "— Abner"
32 Mock fanfare
33 "Born in the —"
34 Kipling novel
35 Sixth sense
37 Novels, tales, poems, etc.
38 Excited
40 Line of stitches
41 Wail
42 Wooded valley
43 Roll of bills
44 Inn
45 Spring month
46 Nurtures
47 Author — Gurley Brown
48 Rose's defense
49 Cliffside nest
50 Little kids
52 A tide
53 Prima donna
57 Notice

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	O	A	R		V	E	R	A		T		I	M	P
T	A	L	E		I	N	E	P	T		A	S	E	A
A	H	E	M		R	A	D	I	O		L	E	N	S
B	U	C	O	L	I	C		N	U	C	L	E	U	S
			V	O	L	T		S	H	E
E	N	G	A	G	E		F	I	L	I	G	R	E	E
L	O	L	L	S		Z	A	N	E		E	A	R	L
O	V	A	L		P	I	C	K	S		Y	A	M
P	E	R	U		H	O	E	S		C	L	O	S	E
E	L	E	P	H	A	N	T		S	O	O	N	E	R
			W	I	N			M	I	N	N
C	A	N	A	S	T	A		O	R	E		G	A	I	N	O
A	V	E	R		O	R	A	T	E		E	Y	E	D
R	O	A	D		M	E	L	O	N		S	L	O	E
A	N	T			A	I	R	S			T	A	I	N	S

10-5-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

THE ONLY GAME AFTER THE GAME
The HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Hoagie Sandwich

Italian Sausage with Peppers

Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

Grilled Cheese on Whole Wheat (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Dinner

Chicken with Pecan Dijon Sauce

Beef &Shrimp Lo Mein

Vegetable Lo Mein (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Black Eyed Peas Jambalaya (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Krish Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauli Davey

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, September 22, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Duel at McGuirk: UMass looks to rebound

UMass (1 - 1) VS. New Haven Chargers (2- 1)

Free safety Jeremy Robinson will try and help anchor the Massachusetts football team's defense who takes the field against New Haven tomorrow at 1 p.m. Robinson earned first team All-America honors from the Associated Press last season.

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

It will were to sum up how the Massachusetts football team was—Boston last Saturday in Richmond, VA, the answer would not be difficult. Over the top.

Now the Minutemen's dreams of an unbeaten season are over and they stand in the same place they have in the last two seasons, at .500 after two games. Last year UMass had a disastrous stretch in which it lost three consecutive games after winning the season opener. This year the Maroon and White (1-1, 1-1 Atlantic 10) want to avoid the same performance that transpired on the field last September.

A home game with the University of New Haven might be just what the Minutemen need to get over the hump. A Div. II opponent.

The Chargers come into Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium on a bit of a down note as well. New Haven won its first two games of the year over West Chester, 7-0, and Clarion State, 37-7, before falling last week to No. 5 Indiana University of Pennsylvania, 14-9.

"It's about us getting better," UMass head coach Mark Whipple said. "We've been in the same position the last two years."

If the Minutemen's success over the last two years is any indication, then Whipple will have his team prepared for tomorrow's game.

"We are not going to do our thing," Whipple said. "Preparation has been good, preparation has been good all year."

"We need to get back into our rhythm," Whipple continued.

If there has been a problem with the Maroon and White thus far it has been the lack of performance by the secondary. This could present a major problem for UMass as the Chargers like to air the ball out. Senior quarterback Jason Barnett has put up impressive numbers in his three starts this season. Barnett, who started his career at former I-AA school Boston University is 58-85 for 520 yards with two touchdowns and two interceptions.

"They'll throw the ball 50 or 60 times," Whipple said at the Weekly Sports Luncheon.

The rest of the defense has been solid, especially the line backing core of Kole Ayi and Joe Ferrer. Ayi led the team in tackles at Richmond while Ferrer showed what he could do making numerous tackles for a loss on Spider running backs.

The defensive line, after being abused on Richmond's first drive showed just how good they were as they held the Spiders to a meager 160 yards (180 came on the first drive of the game).

With the secondary not performing as expected, the Minutemen offense has had to step it up a notch. With Richard Lucero leading the charge UMass is averaging 30 points per game to go along with 340.5 yards per game.

The junior college transfer has put up outstanding numbers in his first two starts since joining the Maroon and White. The native of Phoenix, AZ is 36-52 for an astounding 668 yards. No. 11 has seemed to develop a great bond with All-America candidate Adrian Zullo. The two have combined for 10 receptions and three touchdowns. Zullo caught one in the season opener against the Tribe and two in the loss to Richmond.

Not to be overshadowed on the offensive side of the ball is Walter Payton Award candidate Marcel Shipp. The senior has broken the century mark in both games this season.

Whipple is no stranger to the Chargers. The Minutemen general coached New Haven from 1988-93 where he compiled a 48-17 record and led the Chargers to consecutive Div. II playoff appearances in 1992 and 1993.

FOOTBALL
UMASS @ NEW HAVEN
SATURDAY, 1 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
MATT FEATO-PLAY
REGAN MCKENDRY-COLOR
PREGAME - 12:30
WEEKEND PREVIEW

Bruemmer fires UMass past Danes

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

After the Massachusetts field hockey team pulled out a 5-0 win yesterday at home against Albany, nobody was happy.

The Great Danes from NY certainly weren't happy. They had just lost 3-0. However, the Minutewomen were not thrilled with this win either, because they know that they can and must play better if they are going to stick around as one of the country's premier powerhouses.

"We didn't stick to our game plan and we didn't keep attacking," UMass standout goalie Zowie Tucker said. "We thought we would come in and beat them without breaking a sweat, and that wasn't the case. We have a lot of work to do."

Despite the negatives, a win is a win, and nobody knows that more then head coach Patty Shea.

"We'll take it," Shea said. "We will always except a result like that, but we need a better performance."

In the first half, under the lights of Garber field, the Maroon and White got on the scoreboard first when forward Kristen Schmidt drove a shot by the Albany goalie at the 28:52 mark. It was her sixth goal of the season, and started the Minutewomen off on the right foot.

For the rest of the half, though, UMass could not put anything past Great Danes' goalie Cathi Burek, despite controlling play for the most part, and out shooting its opponent, 9-2.

When the second half began, Albany had yet to mount a significant scoring chance against Tucker and the rest of the defense, but all that changed in the first five minutes of the second frame. In that time period, the ball never seemed to leave the UMass zone, and it took a few great saves by Tucker to keep the Great Danes off the scoreboard.

One save in particular stood out, in which Tucker made a sliding kick save of a hard shot to her right that deflected clear of the cage and back up field. It was enough to pull the momentum back in the Minutewomen's favor, and from that point on it seemed clear that they were going to control the game.

"Zowie Tucker made some great, game saving plays at the beginning of the second half," Shea said. "She gave us the momentum we needed."

Tucker put a slightly different spin on it. "I'm lucky enough that I'm 5'9" and I can get to those," she joked after the game.

Still, however you look at it, that one play was as pivotal to this game as the Battle of Saratoga was to the Revolutionary War.

With her third shutout of the year, Tucker now posts a stunning 0.88 goals against average.

From then on, it was really the Anke Bruemmer show.

While the Maroon and White were still struggling to execute on their normal offensive game plan, Bruemmer came up on a penalty corner at the 25:54 mark of the second half, and blasted what looked to be about a 200 m.p.h. slapshot past the stunned Albany goalie.

Erika Whiston scored a goal for UMass in the second half of yesterday's 3-0 win over Albany. The goal came from a successful rebound off Anke Bruemmer's penalty corner attempt.

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 6

Rival Amherst trounced; Mancini, UMass superb

By Glen Straub
Collegian Correspondent

A little rain never hurt anybody.

After play was suspended on September 19th due to a downpour, the UMass women's tennis team completed a 6-3 victory over arch-rival and defending Division III national champion Amherst College on Thursday at Amherst. Despite losing two out of the three doubles matches, the Minutewomen were able to pull out the victory by dominating in the singles matches – winning five out of the six matches played. The victory marked only the second time in school history that the UMass women's tennis team has beaten Amherst in a meet (the first time came last year).

Number four singles player, junior Helena Horak breezed through the first set of her match versus Amherst's Stephanie Fong, winning 6-0. However, she received a scare when Fong came back in the second set playing much stronger. Despite the shift in momentum, Horak was able to finish off the match in straight sets, 6-0, 6-4.

Unlike her teammate, freshman Iulia Deporites had her way with her opponent. Deporites, who played in the number three match, displayed dominance by winning in straight sets over Carolyn Pastel, 6-1, 6-3.

Number five singles player, freshman Susan Hyams played a fine match as well – defeating her opponent, Paige Lawrence, 6-4, 6-2.

The inter-area matchup also

Turn to TENNIS, page 6

Junior Helena Horak won her match at the number three position yesterday, 6-0, 6-4, over Amherst's Stephanie Fong. Horak is one of four returnees this year for the Minutewomen.

The annual Mixfest hit Boston this weekend. Check out the reviews of all the bands today in arts.

ARTS p. 5

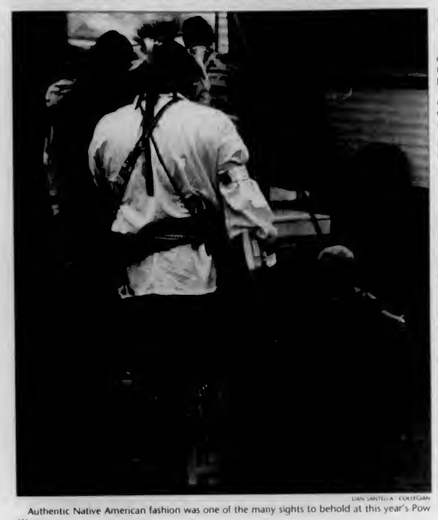
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Jimmie Howard hauled in a big touchdown pass late in the game to help propel the Minutemen to a 39-29 victory over New Haven.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 14 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, September 25, 2000

Pride resounds at Pow Wow



Authentic Native American fashion was one of the many sights to behold at this year's Pow Wow.

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Correspondent

The jingle of bells, the beating of drums and the sound of singing rang through the University of Massachusetts as the 18th Annual UMass Native American Pow Wow took place this past weekend.

Although the weather did not cooperate on Saturday and Sunday, spectators from the Pioneer Valley and beyond came to show their support and curiosity about Native American Culture.

"The dancers have a spirit that shows that they're dancing from the heart," said Dehlia Gregorio, 43. "I see passion and tradition."

The UMass Native American Community also expressed its pleasure at seeing how this year's Pow Wow came together.

"I got to get to be a part of this and make it happen," said Andrew Leonard, a Native American student ally. "To bring a cultural event to UMass for others to learn from, is a great feeling."

Native American tacos, buffalo ribs and burgers, beef stew, chili and fry bread were just some of the traditional dishes available this weekend, which corresponded with crafts such as bead work, hand made flutes, blankets, jewelry, leather goods, sweet grass and sage. Some of the crafts came from as far away as Arizona, El Salvador, and Ecuador. Aquila Ayanna McCants, the director of the Native American Student Support Services said that all aspects of the Pow Wow were important for tradition.

"This Pow Wow has been a great renewing experience," said McCants. "Both the food and other craft vendors offer a variety of items that we can all appreciate."

Native American freshman Robert Dias, 18, contributed much of his time to the Pow Wow this year, and revealed that he learned a lot about friendship and community.

"I liked it because it gave me more experience working with people," said Dias. "I had a chance to bond with the older students, and really get to meet new people."

R.J. Cruz, a Native student on campus, expressed his pride in his community this weekend for their balance of hard work and a good time.

"The simple fact that we came together as a community, and allowed ourselves to get through the trouble makes me proud," said Cruz. "It turned out to be the best UMass Pow Wow I've attended."

WOCLN program celebrates women of color

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Correspondent

Beautiful music and dance, rich with culture, helped the Women of Color Leadership Network (WOCLN) hold its eighth annual Women of Color Reception Thursday, Sept. 21 with the theme of "Pathways, Celebrating Ourselves."

The WOCLN program stems from the Every Woman's Center, which was established at the University of Massachusetts in 1972. The center provides women with information, resources, advocacy, counseling and referral services within a multi-cultural environment through a five-branch system.

Jaqueline Pinn, the director of the WOCLN branch, said that the organization in particular focuses on women of color.

"We are the only program out of the five that concentrates on AHANA women," said Pinn. "We invest much energy into nurturing the lives of women of color in the Pioneer Valley and Five College Community."

While their goal is to provide refuge and community for women of color, they support in many other aspects as well.

"We are a network and support group and a resource that comes together," said WOCLN staff member, Nancy DiPena. "We also cover health, career, finances, a lot of different things. We have education on any issue that concerns you."

According to Pinn, 150 women from the Pioneer Valley and five-college area attend their Women of Color Reception program yearly.

"This is one of the few occasions that a large group of women of color are in the same room," said Pinn. "All are here to connect and acknowledge social change, and advocacy in our community."

Performances featured music by Ekene Nwokoye and Band, storytelling by Millicent Jackson, poetry readings from Lily Lopez, a play by Magdalena Gomez, Cape Verdean dance by the Sem Mentchoncha Dance group and Funga traditional dance of the Yoruba people of Southern Nigeria as well as opening and closing remarks by director Pinn and Assistant director Judy Al-Bilali.

Already planning future events, the WOCLN looks forward to programs such as their Mentor Series starting Oct. 21, the Retreat for Renewal on Oct. 27-29, and speaker Sonia Sanchez on Nov.15.

Many women have benefited from the visions of the WOCLN, which include making women of color feel stronger and more confident about who they are and what they can do.

